And although, the saints have been commanded since, to build Temples, and to do other necessary work, in other places, Preparetory, for the redemption of that Place; there has been no other place appointed, for their gathering, in any revelation published before Joseph's death. [Are you beside yourself? or do you think your assertion is good against the word of God? God said in reference to Zion, there is no other place appointed, &c., until there is no more room, "and then I HAVE OTHER PLACES WHICH I WILL APPOINT unto them, and they shall be called stakes for the curtains of the strength of Zion." As you say no such place has been appointed by any revelation published previous to the death of Joseph, I ask, was not Far West a place of gathering? And Nauvoo? was not that a "STAKE?" The revelation establishing it (D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 32) says: "I have APPOINTED UNTO YOU the city of Nauvoo." Paragraph one calls it a "STAKE," and says God has planted it to be a CORNER STONE of Zion. At par. 12, after commanding the saints to build a house at Nauvoo for the purpose of baptizing for the dead therein, God says: "For it is ordained that in Zion and in her STAKES, and in Jerusalem, those PLACES which I have appointed FOR REFUGE, shall be the places for your baptisms for your dead;" and in the command, par. 10, the saints are required to "COME" in the very same line which requires them to furnish the means of building the Temple. And in par. 18 Joseph is required to get an inheritance there for his posterity from generation to generation, forever and ever, and the saints are required to build the Nauvoo house, "to be a resting place for the weary traveler, that he may contemplate the glory of Zion and of this corner stone thereof," and receive counsel from those whom God has there set as plants of renown and watchmen upon the walls of Zion. If here is not every characteristic which should mark a STAKE of ZION, a PLACE of GATHERING, we should like to know what the other is. Saints were required to come there and to get an everlasting inheritance there. It was named a stake of Zion and a corner stone thereof. It is called a place of refuge, and the saints are required to administer those ordinances there which can be administered only in Zion and her stakes which God has appointed for his saints to gather to.—And it had also the full organization of a stake in all its quorums and councils, none of which was a preparatory work to leaving Nauvoo for another place, but all a work of permanent occupation "from generation to generation forever and ever." D. & C. sec. ciii, p. 18.]

The appointment of voree therefore, cannot be of god. We next, come to speak of the develupments of the spirit, in your Ordination. I suppose I have been correctly informed, that you held Only the Office of an Elder in the church, at the time of Joseph's death; at which time, you say, that the angel of god came unto you, and saluted you, and stretched forth his hand and touched your head, and put Oil upon you, † † † and said unto you, God blesseth thee with the greatness of the Everlasting Priesthood: † † † and hath anointed thee with Oil, and set thee above all thy fellows.—The angel did not inform you, what Priesthood he conferred upon you, the Aaronic, or the melchisedek; [He did, and that fact is shown by the record of which you speak. True, the word Melchisedec was not used, neither should it be. He conferred, by expressive and apt words, the prerogatives which belong to the Melchisedec priesthood. We here insert from that ordination the words conferring authority peculiar to the Melchisedec priesthood, and which the Aaronic never did and never can hold:—

"God blesseth thee with the greatness of the Everlasting Priesthood. He putteth might, and glory, and majesty upon thee. Thou shalt save his people from their enemies when there is no arm to deliver, and shall bring salvation when destruction walketh in the house of thy God. Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity; therefore thy God hath anointed thee with oil and set thee above all thy fellows. Before my people shalt thou go to lead them into my ways, for unto thee has the Lord thy God given salvation. In righteousness shalt thou rule. Thou shalt redeem the poor and the needy from suffering and violence, and to thee God giveth judgment for them. Thou shalt deliver the prey from the spoiler, for God, thy God, hath put them in thy hand. Thou shalt rule among his people. Thou shalt break in pieces the rod of the oppressor, and the yoke of the unjust ruler."

Both priesthoods have relative greatness within themselves, and in one sense both are everlasting. But taking the priesthood in the follies and by all their abominations, which they practiced before the Lord.]

But now Voree is to be a strong hold of safety, for the church.—Now, If the church was not reJected, at that time: this commandment, if Obeyed by the saints, would effectually secure the reJection of it. Because, by it, they are reQuired to postpone the work, on which their acceptance depended, at the End of a sufficient time, if they should labour with all their mights. Therefore, this command is in opposition, and violation of the one given 19th Jan. 1841. [It would have kept them in a situation to pay tithing and removed all obstacles to their laying out the entire disposable funds on that edifice.]

But Again, if the church was reJected, as I have stated above; the whole church was reJected, as an Organization; and it Only needed to be Disorganized, to Blott it out of existance as a church. Therefore, your appointment was uncalled for, and unnecessary; [But the whole church not being rejected, it was both called for and necessary. Moreover, had it been rejected it would still be called for and necessary, because there is a great work which the church must do before everlasting righteousness can be brought in, the rest of God established, and all curse taken away from the earth.] For, if it had been ackoleged by the church, it could have served no othar purpose, than to perpetuate the existance of a reJected church, to whome god would not condecend to speak, or give a revelation. Hence your appointment could not be of god. [Do you mean that because some men have sinned, and God has rejected them and the organization to which they belong, therefore he will not reveal himself to the rest of the saints who are not found in the sin? That a man shall be cut off from all communication with God for the sins of others?]

But again, the appointment of voree, as a place of getharing for the saints, is in violation, and contradiction, to a revelations given Dec. 1833. contained in the Doc. cov. sec. 98, Par 4, which says. "Behold there is none other place appointed, than that which I have appointed, neither shall there be any other place appointed, than that which I have appointed, for the work of the gathering of my Saints; until the Day cometh, when there is found no more room for them: and then I have other places, which I will appoint unto them. and they shall be called stakes, for the curtains, or the strength of Zion. (For the Place appointed, as refered to in the above quotation, see Doc. cov. 27 Sec. 1 Par.) [This place of gathering is at Independence in Missouri, and in the region adjoining. Is there room found for the saints there? Has not the time come years gone by that there was no room for them there? Have they not been driven from there by violence, robbed of their possessions, treated with indignity and personal violence and many of them slain? There is scarcely room found for their burial. The one who should attempt to settle there at any time for a dozen years past, is more likely to be devoured by swine above ground than to find a winding sheet and six feet of ground for a grave; and yet Charles B. Thompson will found an argument in the assumption that there is plenty of room for them yet.]

And although, the saints have been commanded since, to build Temples, and to do other necessary work, in other places, Preparetory, for the redemption of that Place; there has been no other place appointed, for their gathering, in any revelation published before Joseph's death. [Are you beside yourself? or do you think your assertion is good against the word of God? God said in reference to Zion, there is no other place appointed, &c., until there is no more room, "and then I HAVE OTHER PLACES WHICH I WILL APPOINT unto them, and they shall be called stakes for the curtains of the strength of Zion." As you say no such place has been appointed by any revelation published previous to the death of Joseph, I ask, was not Far West a place of gathering? And Nauvoo? was not that a "STAKE?" The revelation establishing it (D. & C. sec, ciii. p. 32) says: "I have APPOINTED UNTO YOU the city of Nauvoo." Paragraph one calls it a "STAKE," and says God has planted it to be a CORNER STONE of Zion. At par. 12, after commanding the saints to build a house at Nauvoo for the purpose of baptizing for the dead therein, God says: "For it is ordained that in Zion and in her STAKES, and in Jerusalem, those PLACES which I have appointed FOR REFUGE, shall be the places for your baptisms for your dead;" and in the command, par. 10, the saints are required to "COME" in the very same line which requires them to furnish the means of building the Temple. And in par. 18 Joseph is required to get an inheritance there for his posterity from generation to generation, forever and ever, and the saints are required to build the Nauvoo house, "to be a resting place for the weary traveler, that he may contemplate the glory of Zion and of this corner stone thereof," and receive counsel from those whom God has there set as plants of renown and watchmen upon the walls of Zion. If here is not every characteristic which should mark a STAKE of ZION, a PLACE of GATHERING, we should like to know what the other is. Saints were required to come there and to get an everlasting inheritance there. It was named a stake of Zion and a corner stone thereof. It is called a place of refuge, and the saints are required to administer those ordinances there which can be administered only in Zion and her stakes which God has appointed for his saints to gather to.—And it had also the full organization of a stake in all its quorums and councils, none of which was a preparatory work to leaving Nauvoo for another place, but all a work of permanent occupation "from generation to generation forever and ever." D. & C. sec. ciii. p. 18.]

The appointment of voree therefore, cannot be of god. We next, come to speak of the develupments of the spirit, in your Ordination. I suppose I have been correctly informed, that you held Only the Office of an Elder in the church, at the time of Joseph's death; at which time, you say, that the angel of god came unto you, and saluted you, and stretched forth his hand and touched your head, and put Oil upon you, † † † and said unto you, God blesseth thee with the greatness of the Everlasting Priesthood: † † † and hath anointed thee with Oil, and set thee above all thy fellows.—The angel did not inform you, what Priesthood he conferred upon you, the Aaronic, or the melchisedek; [He did, and that fact is shown by the record of which you speak. True, the word Melchisedec was not used, neither should it be. He conferred, by expressive and apt words, the prerogatives which belong to the Melchisedec priesthood. We here insert from that ordination the words conferring authority peculiar to the Melchisedec priesthood, and which the Aaronic never did and never can hold:—

"God blesseth thee with the greatness of the Everlasting Priesthood. He putteth might, and glory, and majesty upon thee. Thou shalt save his people from their enemies when there is no arm to deliver, and shall bring salvation when destruction walketh in the house of thy God. Thou hast loved righteousness and hated iniquity; therefore thy God hath anointed thee with oil and set thee above all thy fellows. Before my people shalt thou go to lead them into my ways, for unto thee has the Lord thy God given salvation. In righteousness shalt thou rule. Thou shalt redeem the poor and the needy from suffering and violence, and to thee God giveth judgment for them. Thou shalt deliver the prey from the spoiler, for God, thy God, hath put them in thy hand. Thou shalt rule among his people. Thou shalt break in pieces the rod of the oppressor, and the yoke of the unjust ruler."

Both priesthoods have relative greatness within themselves, and in one sense both are everlasting. But taking the priesthood in the mass and not separately greatness belongs only to the superior ranks of the Melchisedec, and the greatness pre-eminently belongs only to the highest, or that which presides over all other. If there could be a doubt on these words, the following ones, "might, glory and majesty," would remove it. There was neither "might, glory or majesty" in the Aaronic priesthood. It is a mere ministerial office in external ceremonies, and the word. More especially, delivey from danger, &c., judgment and salvation are functions that never were, and never could be, exercised by the Aaronic priesthood. All sacred history shows that the Melchisedec priesthood governed always, the Aaronic NEVER; and Paul, writing to the Hebrews, is express that salvation cannot come by the ordinances of that priesthood. And if this objection of yours has any point in it, it is equally strong against Joseph's ordination; for the record of that does not show to what priesthood he was ordained, except by expressing its prerogatives.]

as they both are Everlasting Priesthood, See Doc. cov. sec. 4, Par. 3, and seperatly considered have greatness attached to them. And as the Angel did not give his name, we can only Judge, what Priesthood he intended to confer, by the expression, "set the above all thy fellows"—the word fellow signifies an eQual, or associate, your equals and associates in the Priesthood, ware those of the office of Elder, [My "associates" in the priesthood were all ranks of priesthood from the highest to the lowest. Your logomachy is quite unfortunate. Fellow is either "an EQUAL or an ASSOCIATE." Two may be fellows by being equals without being associates; or, they may be fellows by being associates, without being equals. Consequently my fellows are both my equals and my associates. Therefore if placed above them all, I have the presiding authority over all, and not as you foolishly and ignorantly say.]

therefore when he set thee above them all, he must have made thee a High Priest of the melchisedek Priesthood. And the Angel gave you no key word, neither Ordained you to the Presidency of any Priesthood; [this is mere assumption, and is false.] if he was a true Angel, and had authority, thus to ordain and anoint, (which is very questionable,) he only confered on you, what I myself had recived before, and perhaps hundreds of others Who are still living, which fact, made it unnecessary for an Angel to come to you on such an erand. [Who made you a judge of the necessity of angels' visits? It is well to be a little careful how you exalt yourself above God and all that is worshipped, to sit in judgment on his doings. The necessity was that prophet Strang should come in at the door and be ordained as God had told Joseph, D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2, by the ministration of angels, who held that priesthood, D. & C. sec. I. p. 3, so that he should be lawfully in the priesthood.]

The annointing, received from the Angel, is Anomalous. [You may not be the best judge of anomalies in this. Can you tell how a single one of all who held the priesthood at the head of a dispensation got his anointing? If out of some hundred instances you cannot tell the mode in a single one, and will not attempt to in but one, you must know mighty little what mode is anomalous. Can you tell who anointed Jesus Christ, or Moses, or Elijah?]

No other record of the kind, existing upon the earth. And as that is an ordinance, belonging to the Temple of God, and to the Powers of the Priesthood therein Organized: I Question the Authority of an Angel from heaven, to administer it; [Will you please tell us by what rule you judge that an angel from heaven is authorized to partly ordain a man by laying on hands, but cannot finish by anointing? You are for once safe however in saying, "there is no record of the kind existing on earth" except this. Nor is there any record of a different mode, and that for the best of reasons.—There is no record existing earlier than this showing who was the ANOINTER in ANY SUCH CASE, though the fact of anointing is often enough mentioned.]

more especially, while there is men on earth who hold the same Priesthood, and anointing, as in this case. [But there were no such on earth. Prophet Strang was ordained to authority ABOVE ALL his fellows.]

I will now compare Joseph's ordination, with yours, First, the Angels visiting Joseph, invaribly gave their names, which being on record, together with the Priesthood which they held, gave assurence that they ware Angels of God. But, those visiting you, never gave their names: Therefore, we have know assurance that they ware Angels of God. [It is not true that the angels who visited Joseph always gave their names. The Lord gave him by revelation the names of the angels that ordained him, more than a year afterwards. Nor is it true, as you assert, that the angels who visited me NEVER gave me their names. Nor is it true that when the angels who visited Joseph gave their names their priesthood was also given and recorded. In less than one instance in twenty is the priesthood of an angel recorded. Moreover if they had given their names in all cases, their giving their names was no proof that they were true angels. The naming of such an idea is ridiculous.—What? a being giving his own name any evidence that he is what he pretends to be? Should you meet an unknown being, and find yourself in doubt whether he was an angel or a fallen spirit, do you pretend that his saying his name was Michael or Peter is any evidence that he is truly an angel of God? Then indeed Satan himself can give you all needed revelations and a priesthood perfectly satisfactory to yourself, simply by assuming such names as angels are known to hold and ordaining you. Do you indeed imagine that every being going about the universe and calling himself Peter is indeed the old apostle, and that every one calling himself Elijah may be truly depended on as that great prophet? Then no one would wonder that you imagine yourself the Agent of Baneemy and Baurak Ale. The only surprise is that his Satanic Majesty did not just call himself Moses, and ordain you the veritable Baurak Ale himself. Thank you for this test of angels. We are sorry to think Charles B. Thompson green enough to believe every fallen spirit just what saint he pleases to call himself. But this is not as unpleasant as to think (as we otherwise must) that he is a mere hypocrite, an undeceived impostor.]

2ly, the Angels that came to Joseph to confer Priesthood upon him; merely confered it, by a touch, or Ordination, without multiplying word, reletive to his future work: and they did not anointed him with Oil, but left that Ordenance, to be administered by his fellow Oliver Cowdery: Who recixed the Priesthood, also, under the hand of the Angel. [By what authority do you tell how much or how long the angels spoke who confirmed the prieshood on Joseph? All authority shows that they used full and expressive language for that purpose, and my ordination contains no more.—Will you undertake to say what part of it is surplusage? Is it not full as brief as is usually used by the ablest and soundest elders? Do you mean that they use useless words and vain repetitions? or that angels say too little? Your assertion that the angels did not anoint him is simply false, and that Oliver did is equally so. The angel did anoint him, and Oliver did not. How could Oliver anoint him, who had received no anointing himself?]

3ly, Joseph never received instruction by Angels, after he recived the melchisedek Priesthood; for that Priesthood, hold keys above the ministering of Angels. See Doc. cov. sec. 3, Par. 9, & 10. [Folly of follies! Because the Melchisedec priesthood holds keys above the ministration of angels, then it cannot have their ministration! So you in order to make my priesthood void, are ready to disfranchise

mass and not separately greatness belongs only to the superior ranks of the Melchisedec, and the greatness pre-eminently belongs only to the highest, or that which presides over all other. If there could be a doubt on these words, the following ones, "might, glory and majesty," would remove it. There was neither "might, glory or majesty" in the Aaronic priesthood. It is a mere ministerial office in external ceremonies, and the word. More especially, delivey from danger, &c., judgment and salvation are functions that never were, and never could be, exercised by the Aaronic priesthood. All sacred history shows that the Melchisedec priesthood governed always, the Aaronic NEVER; and Paul, writing to the Hebrews, is express that salvation cannot come by the ordinances of that priesthood. And if this objection of yours has any point in it, it is equally strong against Joseph's ordination; for the record of that does not show to what priesthood he was ordained, except by expressing its prerogatives.]

as they both are Everlasting Priesthood, See Doc. cov. sec. 4, Par. 3, and seperatly considered have greatness attached to them. And as the Angel did not give his name, we can only Judge, what Priesthood he intended to confer, by the expression, "set the above all thy fellows"—the word fellow signifies an eQual, or associate, your equals and associates in the Priesthood, ware those of the office of Elder, [My "associates" in the priesthood were all ranks of priesthood from the highest to the lowest. Your logomachy is quite unfortunate. Fellow is either "an EQUAL or an ASSOCIATE." Two may be fellows by being equals without being associates; or, they may be fellows by being associates, without being equals. Consequently my fellows are both my equals and my associates. Therefore if placed above them all, I have the presiding authority over all, and not as you foolishly and ignorantly say.]

therefore when he set thee above them all, he must have made thee a High Priest of the melchisedek Priesthood. And the Angel gave you no key word, neither Ordained you to the Presidency of any Priesthood; [this is mere assumption, and is false.] if he was a true Angel, and had authority, thus to ordain and anoint, (which is very questionable,) he only confered on you, what I myself had recived before, and perhaps hundreds of others Who are still living, which fact, made it unnecessary for an Angel to come to you on such an erand. [Who made you a judge of the necessity of angels' visits? It is well to be a little careful how you exalt yourself above God and all that is worshipped, to sit in judgment on his doings. The necessity was that prophet Strang should come in at the door and be ordained as God had told Joseph, D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 2, by the ministration of angels, who held that priesthood, D. & C. sec. l. p. 3, so that he should be lawfully in the priesthood.]

The annointing, received from the Angel, is Anomalous. [You may not be the best judge of anomalies in this. Can you tell how a single one of all who held the priesthood at the head of a dispensation got his anointing? If out of some hundred instances you cannot tell the mode in a single one, and will not attempt to in but one, you must know mighty little what mode is anomalous. Can you tell who anointed Jesus Christ, or Moses, or Elijah?]

No other record of the kind, existing upon the earth. And as that is an ordinance, belonging to the Temple of God, and to the Powers of the Priesthood therein Organized: I Question the Authority of an Angel from heaven, to administer it; [Will you please tell us by what rule you judge that an angel from heaven is authorized to partly ordain a man by laying on hands, but cannot finish by anointing? You are for once safe however in saying, "there is no record of the kind existing on earth" except this. Nor is there any record of a different mode, and that for the best of reasons.—There is no record existing earlier than this showing who was the ANOINTER in ANY SUCH CASE, though the fact of anointing is often enough mentioned.]

more especially, while there is men on earth who hold the same Priesthood, and anointing, as in this case. [But there were no such on earth. Prophet Strang was ordained to authority ABOVE ALL his fellows.]

I will now comparo Joseph's ordination, with yours, First, the Angels visiting Joseph, invaribly gave their names, which being on record, together with the Priesthood which they held, gave assurence that they ware Angels of God. But, those visiting you, never gave their names: Therefore, we have know assurance that they ware Angels of God. [It is not true that the angels who visited Joseph always gave their names. The Lord gave him by revelation the names of the angels that ordained him, more than a year afterwards. Nor is it true, as you assert, that the angels who visited me NEVER gave me their names. Nor is it true that when the angels who visited Joseph gave their names their priesthood was also given and recorded. In less than one instance in twenty is the priesthood of an angel recorded. Moreover if they had given their names in all cases, their giving their names was no proof that they were true angels. The naming of such an idea is ridiculous.—What! a being giving his own name any evidence that he is what he pretends to be? Should you meet an unknown being, and find yourself in doubt whether he was an angel or a fallen spirit, do you pretend that his saying his name was Michael or Peter is any evidence that he is truly an angel of God? Then indeed Satan himself can give you all needed revelations and a priesthood perfectly satisfactory to yourself, simply by assuming such names as angels are known to hold and ordaining you. Do you indeed imagine that every being going about the universe and calling himself Peter is indeed the old apostle, and that every one calling himself Elijah may be truly depended on as that great prophet? Then no one would wonder that you imagine yourself the Agent of Baneemy and Baurak Ale. The only surprise is that his Satanic Majesty did not just call himself Moses, and ordain you the veritable Baurak Ale himself. Thank you for this test of angels. We are sorry to think Charles B. Thompson green enough to believe every fallen spirit just what saint he pleases to call himself. But this is not as unpleasant as to think (as we otherwise must) that he is a mere hypocrite, an undeceived impostor.]

2ly, the Angels that came to Joseph to confer Priesthood upon him; merely confered it, by a touch, or Ordination, without multiplying word, reletive to his future work: and they did not anoint him with Oil, but left that Ordenance, to be administered by his fellow Oliver Cowdery: Who recived the Priesthood, also, under the hand of the Angel. [By what authority do you tell how much or how long the angels spoke who confirmed the prieshood on Joseph? All authority shows that they used full and expressive language for that purpose, and my ordination contains no more.—Will you undertake to say what part of it is surplusage? Is it not full as brief as is usually used by the ablest and soundest elders? Do you mean that they use useless words and vain repetitions? or that angels say too little? Your assertion that the angels did not anoint him is simply false, and that Oliver did is equally so. The angel did anoint him, and Oliver did not. How could Oliver anoint him, who had received no anointing himself?]

3ly, Joseph never received instruction by Angels, after he recived the melchisedek Priesthood; for that Priesthood, hold keys above the ministering of Angels. See Doc. cov. sec. 3, Par. 9, & 10. [Folly of follies! Because the Melchisedec priesthood holds keys above the ministration of angels, then it cannot have their ministration! So you in order to make my priesthood void, are ready to disfranchise

Moses, Elijah, Jesus Christ, Peter, and John the Revelator. The substance of your assertion is simply that my priesthood is not after the order of Melchisedec, because I receive the ministration of angels. The angel accompanied Moses and the children of Israel through the wilderness. The angel ministered toElijah after the Lord answered him with fire from heaven. 1st Kings xix. 5, 7. Christ received his priesthood at the hands of the Spirit on the day of his baptism. Matt. iii. 17. Heb. i. 5. Yet after this the angels ministred to him. Matt. iv. 11. Peter had the ministration of an angel to reveal to him that the gospel should go to the Gentiles. John the Revelator received the revelations by the ministration of an angel. Rev. i 1. The revelations and visions of Ezekiel and Daniel were many of them interpreted by angels,sent to them for that purpose. Are you so anxious to oppose prophet Strang that in order to do it you will declare that no one who has the ministration of angels has the Melchisedec priesthood? That Moses had only the Aaronic priesthood? That Christ did not arise another priest after the order of Melchisedec? Heb. vii., &c. And that the whole history of the intercourse between angels and the priesthood as contained in the scriptures is a fabrication? We do not wonder that he who denies the faith should also deny the scriptures.]

But the Angel who visited you, after confering the Priesthood, gave you a long lesson of instruction, and Predictions of future work. [Will you give an example from all the sacred records where authority has been conferred by God, angels or men in briefer or more comprehensive language? You cannot.]

Also, on the 1st of september, 1845. more than a year after, another Angel came to you, revealing the existance, and place of deposite, of som brass plates, giving you the urim and thummim, to translate them &c. [This is a mere lie. The revelation was given by the voice of the Lord speaking from a pillar of light while angels attended, one of whom gave me the Urim and Thummim.]

All of which was unnecessary, if you had the keys that Joseph held, for he was a Prophet, Seer, Translator and Revelator by the gifts of god, and keys of the Priesthood; without the aid of the Urim and Thummim. See Doc. cov. sec. 3, Par. 42. [Yes, and he was a Prophet, Seer, Revelator and Translator, having the priesthood after the order of Melchisedec, long before he finished the translation of the Book of Mormon, yet he continued to use the Urim and Thummim. Are you so blind that you cannot perceive your own blindness? or are you ignorant that Joseph had his ordination before be finished translating?]

I might pursue the subject, much further, but lett the above suffise at Present.

P. S. But you might ask, what is to become of the work of God, if the church was reJected, and disorganized as above stated? I answer, the Priesthood remains, and it must be clensed, and Organized for the accomplishment of the work. But who shall Organized it? Ans. Him that is Promaced, in the 387 Page of Doc. cov. A man who shall be raised up, to lead the People of God, like Moses led the children of Israel, by Power, &c. [Bah! A priesthood without a church! Men authorized of God to administer the ordinances by which men are brought into the church, exalted and advanced in it and commissioned to rule over the whole flock of God, and by the same God forbidden to do any such thing! Protestants have perpetrated the folly of a church without a priesthood, but it was left to Charles B. Thompson to perpetrate that of a shepherd without a flock, a pastor forbidden to feed the lambs, authority to be exercised on no body! You doubtless intend to have a First President to preside over the church non-existent; twelve apostles to regulate the same throughout the world; high priests and elders to preside in the various branches of the same. When this priesthood ministered in word and doctrine, what should they do with their converts? The moment they baptized them they would be members of the church defacto, and there would be a church in spite of you. Now Charles you know such talk as yours is all nonsense. You know that if there were no members of the church on earth, but a priesthood, that priesthood would be a church. You know that if a priesthood are on earth they are bound to give baptism to the penitent, and that doing so would make a church. The power and duty to do this is their priesthood. Taking away this power is taking away their priesthood.]

N. B. I have written these few thouts, for publication in your Paper, believing it due to myself, to you, and to the saints, that I should state to them, the evedences that have coresponded, to effect the change in my sentiments; reletive to your claims, and appointment, you will Please therefore, publish this letter entire.

I am as ever, CHARLES B. THOMPSON.

Concluding note.—We have waded through this long mass of folly with as much patience as possible. If it does not explain itself to the reader he will understand its purpose by knowing Charles professes that Baurak Ale is somewhere in some unknown place preparing to redeem Zion, but for some reason will not show himself. So he has appointed his friend Baneemy to do the work, but as Baneemy has objections to showing his sacred person to this crooked and perverse generation, he has made this same Charles his agent to bare his brow to the wicked and persecuting world.—Charles has issued his proclamation, but catching the fearfulness of his superiors he only signed it C. Yet putting on a little bravery he shows himself among the Missourians who have taken so much pains to reject the church, that they are rather pleased to hear that God has done what they endeavored in vain to do.

The reader will perceive that argument, if argument it can be called, is founded almost entirely on the pretense that the church was rejected for not building the Temple at Nauvoo.—As we have shown this pretense to be without the shadow of foundation, all the subsequent arguments would have fallen to the ground by the premises on which they are founded being destroyed. Nevertheless we have separately examined them and shown them to be alike rotten. As we were wading through Thompson's pretensions the impression was continually on our minds that we never saw any thing so foolish. But this is a mistake. Apostacy and imposture is all very much alike. An examination of the foundations of any other sect would doubtless produce similar impressions. They all appear insiped just in proportion to our knowledge of them. We presume that by this time Thompson is on the list of false pretenders, who have not a follower on earth.

☞ Deaf mutes are now taught in France not only to speak correctly, but to understand the words of others, by watching the motions of the lips. We believe that this plan has been adopted in some instances in this country, and that it has met with good success. It certainly is a great improvement in the method of instructing deaf mutes, as after proper training conversation may be carried on with mankind in general, and not alone with those initiated in the digital alphabet.—Boston Bee.

☞ We perceive by our exchanges that disease is widely prevalent in the land, especially in the eastern States. The season here has been eminently healthy. Very little disease has existed, and that little in an exceedingly mild form.

☞ Our thanks are due to the editor of the Wisconsin Argus for very politely furnishing us with a file of his valuable papers, which we were in want of.

Moses, Elijah, Jesus Christ, Peter, and John the Revelator. The substance of your assertion is simply that my priesthood is not after the order of Melchisedec, because I receive the ministration of angels. The angel accompanied Moses and the children of Israel through the wilderness. The angel ministered toElijah after the Lord answered him with fire from heaven. 1st Kings xix. 5, 7. Christ received his priesthood at the hands of the Spirit on the day of his baptism. Matt. iii. 17. Heb. i. 5. Yet after this the angels ministred to him. Matt. iv. 11. Peter had the ministration of an angel to reveal to him that the gospel should go to the Gentiles. John the Revelator received the revelations by the ministration of an angel. Rev. i 1. The revelations and visions of Ezekiel and Daniel were many of them interpreted by angels, sent to them for that purpose. Are you so anxious to oppose prophet Strang that in order to do it you will declare that no one who has the ministration of angels has the Melchisedec priesthood? That Moses had only the Aaronic priesthood? That Christ did not arise another priest after the order of Melchisedec? Heb. vii., &c. And that the whole history of the intercourse between angels and the priesthood as contained in the scriptures is a fabrication? We do not wonder that he who denies the faith should also deny the scriptures.]

But the Angel who visited you, after confering the Priesthood, gave you a long lesson of instruction, and Predictions of future work. [Will you give an example from all the sacred records where authority has been conferred by God, angels or men in briefer or more comprehensive language? You cannot.]

Also, on the 1st of september, 1845. more than a year after, another Angel came to you, revealing the existance, and place of deposite, of som brass plates, giving you the urim and thummim, to translate them &c. [This is a mere lie. The revelation was given by the voice of the Lord speaking from a pillar of light while angels attended, one of whom gave me the Urim and Thummim.]

All of which was unnecessary, if you had the keys that Joseph held, for he was a Prophet, Seer, Translator and Revelator by the gifts of god, and keys of the Priesthood; without the aid of the Urim and Thummim. See Doc. cov. sec. 3, Par. 42. [Yes, and he was a Prophet, Seer, Revelator and Translator, having the priesthood after the order of Melchisedec, long before he finished the translation of the Book of Mormon, yet he continued to use the Urim and Thummim. Are you so blind that you cannot perceive your own blindness? or are you ignorant that Joseph had his ordination before be finished translating?]

I might pursue the subject, much further, but lett the above suffise at Present.

P. S. But you might ask, what is to become of the work of God, if the church was reJected, and disorganized as above stated? I answer, the Priesthood remains, and it must be clensed, and Organized for the accomplishment of the work. But who shall Organized it? Ans. Him that is Promaced, in the 387 Page of Doc. cov. A man who shall be raised up, to lead the People of God, like Moses led the children of Israel, by Power, &c. [Bah! A priesthood without a church! Men authorized of God to administer the ordinances by which men are brought into the church, exalted and advanced in it and commissioned to rule over the whole flock of God, and by the same God forbidden to do any such thing! Protestants have perpetrated the folly of a church without a priesthood, but it was left to Charles B. Thompson to perpetrate that of a shepherd without a flock, a pastor forbidden to feed the lambs, authority to be exercised on no body! You doubtless intend to have a First President to preside over the church non-existent; twelve apostles to regulate the same throughout the world; high priests and elders to preside in the various branches of the same. When this priesthood ministered in word and doctrine, what should they do with their converts? The moment they baptized them they would be members of the church defacto, and there would be a church in spite of you. Now Charles you know such talk as yours is all nonsense. You know that if there were no members of the church on earth, but a priesthood, that priesthood would be a church. [You know that if a priesthood are on earth they are bound to give baptism to the penitent, and that doing so would make a church. The power and duty to do this is their priesthood. Taking away this power is taking away their priesthood.]

N. B. I have written these few thouts, for publication in your Paper, believing it due to myself, to you, and to the saints, that I should state to them, the evedences that have coresponded, to effect the change in my sentiments; reletive to your claims, and appointment, you will Please therefore, publish this letter entire.

I am as ever, CHARLES B. THOMPSON.

Concluding note.—We have waded through this long mass of folly with as much patience as possible. If it does not explain itself to the reader he will understand its purpose by knowing Charles professes that Baurak Ale is somewhere in some unknown place preparing to redeem Zion, but for some reason will not show himself. So he has appointed his friend Baneemy to do the work, but as Baneemy has objections to showing his sacred person to this crooked and perverse generation, he has made this same Charles his agent to bare his brow to the wicked and persecuting world.—Charles has issued his proclamation, but catching the fearfulness of his superiors he only signed it C. Yet putting on a little bravery he shows himself among the Missourians who have taken so much pains to reject the church, that they are rather pleased to hear that God has done what they endeavored in vain to do.

The reader will perceive that argument, if argument it can be called, is founded almost entirely on the pretense that the church was rejected for not building the Temple at Nauvoo.—As we have shown this pretense to be without the shadow of foundation, all the subsequent arguments would have fallen to the ground by the premises on which they are founded being destroyed. Nevertheless we have separately examined them and shown them to be alike rotten. As we were wading through Thompson's pretensions the impression was continually on our minds that we never saw any thing so foolish. But this is a mistake. Apostacy and imposture is all very much alike. An examination of the foundations of any other sect would doubtless produce similar impressions. They all appear insiped just in proportion to our knowledge of them. We presume that by this time Thompson is on the list of false pretenders, who have not a follower on earth.

☞ Deaf mutes are now taught in France not only to speak correctly, but to understand the words of others, by watching the motions of the lips. We believe that this plan has been adopted in some instances in this country, and that it has met with good success. It certainly is a great improvement in the method of instructing deaf mutes, as after proper training conversation may be carried on with mankind in general, and not alone with those initiated in the digital alphabet.—Boston Bee.

☞ We perceive by our exchanges that disease is widely prevalent in the land, especially in the eastern States. The season here has been eminently healthy. Very little disease has existed, and that little in an exceedingly mild form.

☞ Our thanks are due to the editor of the Wisconsin Argus for very politely furnishing us with a file of his valuable papers, which we were in want of.

THE ANGLO-SAXON RACE.

The Rev. Theodore Parker, of Boston, recently preached a sermon, in the course of which he thus alludes to the Anglo-Saxon race:—

"This Anglo-Saxon race, inhabiting England and America, has a strong nationality. It has a dreadful genius for material activity; I mean activity in all industrial pursuits and all that relates to politics. In these matters, industry and politics, it far surpasses any other former nation. This race has more practical sense, it seems to me, than any other race has had. It has not the sublime reverence for God which so wonderfully marks the Hebrew nation, and so adorns every page of this blessed book. It has not the love of beauty which appeared in the Greeks! It has not terrible passion and genius for war which marked the Romans. It has not the profound thought of the Germans, nor that mercurial brilliancy, love of glory and martial spirit of the French; but in plain and practical sense, in industrial activity and political sagacity, it is superior to any or all of these. This race is industrial and commercial more than military. Look at its ships all over the world; its railroads that cover England, making it as it were a gridiron. Look at its mills and manufactories that turn out materials enough to clothe the whole race. In war this race has always been able to hold its own and more. Yet it has a good temper, and takes to trade rather than fighting. When you consider the position it occupies, you will see that the goodness of temper and abstinence from war is an important characteristic. It conquers by trade. The army goes before to make a market for the merchant and manufacturer. Its energy is terrible. It never turns back. It is the most terrific and energetic people ever developed on the earth. In 1548 there were not three millions of Anglo-Saxons in all England and Wales, which was all the land they possessed. There are now 20,000,000 in England, 20,000,000 in America, possessing all the northern continent and increasing with terrible rapidity. In England the territory is small, and therefore they are more remarkable than those here. England, with its 20,000,000 of men rules one-eighth part of the inhabitants of the globe. 125,000,000 are subject to her to-day. This shows the power and energy of the race. There is no race in the world to equal it in war, thought, industry or politics, because it is by nature fitted for that work.

"Let every one mind his own business."

The foregoing is said to be the first article in the Mormon creed. Be that as it may, it is worthy of the attention of the saints. It is short but comprehensive. It applies to all, whether high or low, rich or poor. What a happy world it would be were mankind in general to put it in practice. Men would cease to speak evil of their neighbors, for it is only those who are dilatory in attending to their own business that speak evil of others. The saints would give heed unto those whom God has placed in authority over them, that they might come to the unity of the faith, and be no more tossed about with every wind of doctrine, and observe the commandmens of the Lord to do them. Misery, the fruit of disobedience, would vanish like dew before the morning sun, and the earth become a paradise.

G. W.

WONDERS OF THE TELEGRAPH.—It is a difficult matter to overcome old habits and teachings sufficiently to accommodate the truths of the magnetic telegraph. Here is one, for instance: Last Saturday morning about nine o'clock the Boston and Liverpool mail steamer Brittania was seen entering Boston Harbor. Before she got up to the wharf and moored the fact of her arrival was known in Galena. So we are informed by Mr Chadwick, the accomplished operator of the Telegraph.—Galena Gazette.

RELIGION IN RUSSIA.—It is officially stated that there are in Russia, 2,770,000 Romanist, 2,400,000 Mahommedans, 1,200,000 Jews, 1,750,000 Lutherans, and 14,360 Reformed or Calvanistic. Number of the Greek clergy in Russia 35,944, and 11,380 churches.—Western Continent.

☞ The rumor that the crickets had destroyed the wheat crops in the valley of the Salt Lake is partially confirmed. Brighamites recently from there say they have done extensive damage, but that part of the crop did nevertheless survive.

THE MOTHER'S FAITH.

Cried a pale one, Give me joy:
I have borne a cherub boy.

Borne a boy? The world is full,
Crammed its game of push and pull;
You have given that cherub life
For a gaunlet race of strife.
If his heart be large and tender,
Sadly will his means be slender;
Everlasting duns will push him,
Poverty will cramp and crush him.
If his heart be small and stony,
It will canker with his money;
Rust will gnaw it through and through,
Care will vex it black and blue;
And the wretch, O hapless mother,
In his wealth will starve and smother!

Cried the mother: God is living,
Blest the boon is of his giving;
I will trust Him that the boy,
Living, shall be full of joy.
Truth and justice—self-denial—
Shall prepare him for the trial
Into which he must be hurled,
Of a scuffling, brutal world.
Watch will I his opening soul,
Kindling with the living coal—
Love to God and love to man—
Working out his Maker's plan.
Who shall say this boy of mine
Shall not as an angel shine;
Winning to the heavenly state
Hearts now filled with strife and hate;
Calling down that better day,
When the good will bear the sway,
And the brutal slink away.

Ceased she, and her deep blue eye
Flashed the glories of the sky.
From her faith not to be driven,
With a love to angels given,
Kissed she then that gift of heaven.

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

BOOKS OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE & COVENANTS.

James Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has constantly on hand a large supply of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, common and pocket binding, for sale cheap, either in quantities or by the single copy.

THE ANGLO-SAXON RACE.

The Rev. Theodore Parker, of Boston, recently preached a sermon, in the course of which he thus alludes to the Anglo-Saxon race:—

"This Anglo-Saxon race, inhabiting England and America, has a strong nationality. It has a dreadful genius for material activity; I mean activity in all industrial pursuits and all that relates to politics. In these matters, industry and politics, it far surpasses any other former nation. This race has more practical sense, it seems to me, than any other race has had. It has not the sublime reverence for God which so wonderfully marks the Hebrew nation, and so adorns every page of this blessed book. It has not the love of beauty which appeared in the Greeks! It has not terrible passion and genius for war which marked the Romans. It has not the profound thought of the Germans, nor that mercurial brilliancy, love of glory and martial spirit of the French; but in plain and practical sense, in industrial activity and political sagacity, it is superior to any or all of these. This race is industrial and commercial more than military. Look at its ships all over the world; its railroads that cover England, making it as it were a gridiron. Look at its mills and manufactories that turn out materials enough to clothe the whole race. In war this race has always been able to hold its own and more. Yet it has a good temper, and takes to trade rather than fighting. When you consider the position it occupies, you will see that the goodness of temper and abstinence from war is an important characteristic. It conquers by trade. The army goes before to make a market for the merchant and manufacturer. Its energy is terrible. It never turns back. It is the most terrific and energetic people ever developed on the earth. In 1548 there were not three millions of Anglo-Saxons in all England and Wales, which was all the land they possessed. There are now 20,000,000 in England, 20,000,000 in America, possessing all the northern continent and increasing with terrible rapidity. In England the territory is small, and therefore they are more remarkable than those here. England, with its 20,000,000 of men rules one-eighth part of the inhabitants of the globe. 125,000,000 are subject to her to-day. This shows the power and energy of the race. There is no race in the world to equal it in war, thought, industry or politics, because it is by nature fitted for that work.

"Let every one mind his own business."

The foregoing is said to be the first article in the Mormon creed. Be that as it may, it is worthy of the attention of the saints. It is short but comprehensive. It applies to all, whether high or low, rich or poor. What a happy world it would be were mankind in general to put it in practice. Men would cease to speak evil of their neighbors, for it is only those who are dilatory in attending to their own business that speak evil of others. The saints would give heed unto those whom God has placed in authority over them, that they might come to the unity of the faith, and be no more tossed about with every wind of doctrine, and observe the commandmens of the Lord to do them. Misery, the fruit of disobedience, would vanish like dew before the morning sun, and the earth become a paradise.

G. W.

WONDERS OF THE TELEGRAPH.—It is a difficult matter to overcome old habits and teachings sufficiently to accommodate the truths of the magnetic telegraph. Here is one, for instance: Last Saturday morning about nine o'clock the Boston and Liverpool mail steamer Britannia was seen entering Boston Harbor. Before she got up to the wharf and moored the fact of her arrival was known in Galena. So we are informed by Mr Chadwick, the accomplished operator of the Telegraph.—Galena Gazette.

RELIGION IN RUSSIA.—It is officially stated that there are in Russia, 2,770,000 Romanist, 2,400,000 Mahommedans, 1,200,000 Jews, 1,750,000 Lutherans, and 14,360 Reformed or Calvanistic. Number of the Greek clergy in Russia 35,944, and 11,380 churches.—Western Continent.

☞ The rumor that the crickets had destroyed the wheat crops in the valley of the Salt Lake is partially confirmed. Brighamites recently from there say they have done extensive damage, but that part of the crop did nevertheless survive.

THE MOTHER'S FAITH.

Cried a pale one, Give me joy:
I have borne a cherub boy.

Borne a boy? The world is full,
Crammed its game of push and pull;
You have given that cherub life
For a gaunlet race of strife.
If his heart be large and tender,
Sadly will his means be slender;
Everlasting duns will push him,
Poverty will cramp and crush him.
If his heart be small and stony,
It will canker with his money;
Rust will gnaw it through and through,
Care will vex it black and blue;
And the wretch, O hapless mother,
In his wealth will starve and smother!

Cried the mother: God is living,
Blest the boon is of his giving;
I will trust Him that the boy,
Living, shall be full of joy.
Truth and justice—self-denial—
Shall prepare him for the trial
Into which he must be hurled,
Of a scuffling, brutal world.
Watch will I his opening soul,
Kindling with the living coal—
Love to God and love to man—
Working out his Maker's plan.
Who shall say this boy of mine
Shall not as an angel shine;
Winning to the heavenly state
Hearts now filled with strife and hate;
Calling down that better day,
When the good will bear the sway,
And the brutal slink away.

Ceased she, and her deep blue eye
Flashed the glories of the sky.
From her faith not to be driven,
With a love to angels given,
Kissed she then that gift of heaven.

ELIZUR WRIGHT.

BOOKS OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE & COVENANTS.

James Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has constantly on hand a large supply of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, common and pocket binding, for sale cheap, either in quantities or by the single copy.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 31.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, OCT. 19, 1848. [WHOLE No. 95.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

WAS JOSEPH SMITH A PROPHET OF GOD?

BROTHER STRANG:—There are many people who say, that if they could be convinced that Joseph was a prophet called of God, they would obey the gospel with cheerfulness. I wish to examine a few facts demonstating the great and important fact that he was a prophet, and, if possible, put a quietus on the fears of the fearful. His first work was translating the Book of Mormon, which in itself contains many prophecies, some of which have already been fulfilled; but we shall not notice them at present, as the Lord saw fit to establish the fact by living witnesses, who testify to the truth of the Book of Mormon, and whose testimony stands unimpeached.

His next work was preaching the gospel and laying the foundation of the church by calling men by commandment through the Urim and Thummim and by the voice of the gospel to save themselves from this untoward generation. Now what did he teach? He professed to be inspired from on high and to have been administered unto by an angel from heaven. Paul said of old, "though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." Now Paul classes himself with the rest of the disciples, and they preached by inspiration of God. If Joseph preaches by inspiration their doctrines will be analagous, and the laws of analogy are arbitrary in respect to the things of God, and incontrovertible. If God inspired the apostles to preach the doctrine that they preached, he never inspired any other man to preach any other doctrine for gospel.—We will now bring a few parallel passages, and see how they agree together:—

JOSEPH'S.	THE APOSTLES'.
"Hearken and listen to the voice of him who is from all eternity to all eternity, the Great I AM, even Jesus Christ, the life and light of the world; a light which shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehendeth it not: the same which came in the meridian of time unto my own, and my own received me not; but as many as received me, gave I power to become my sons, even so will I give unto as many as will receive me, power to become my sons." D. & C. sec. lix. p. 2.	"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the word was God. In him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehendeth it not. He came unto his own and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." John i. 1, 4, 5, 11, 12.
2. "And verily, verily I say unto you, he that receiveth my gospel, receiveth me; and he that receiveth not my gospel, receiveth not me. And this is my gospel: Repentanance and baptism by water, and then cometh the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, even the Comforter, which showeth all things, and teacheth of the peaceable things of the kingdom."	"Thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations." Luke xxiv. 46, 47. "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."
3. "Arise and be baptized, and wash away your sins, calling on my (the Lord's) name, and you shall receive my spirit."	"Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord. Acts xxii. 16.
"And again, it shall come to pass, that on as many as ye shall baptize with water ye shall lay your hands, and they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, and shall be looking forth for the signs of my coming, and shall know me." D. & C. sec. lix. p. 6.	"When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues and prophecied." Acts xix. 5, 6.

We might extend parallel doctrines to a great length, but forbear for the present, and say that in order that the apostles might effectually preach the gospel and be witnesses of the power of his name, Jesus instructed them to tarry at Jerusalam until they were endued with power from on high, which was fulfilled on the day of pentecost. When they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and spake in other tongues as the spirit gave them utterance.—Joseph also called upon the saints to assemble themselves together, and God would endue them with power from on high. Now if this was accomplished according to the word of the Lord by Joseph the prophet, it is one of the strongest points of analogy between this church and the apostolic, and shows, beyond successful controversy, that the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" is the true church of Christ, having a heaven qualified ministry to testify of Jesus Christ, and preach his gospel. I make a few extracts from the revelations of Jesus Christ without reference to place in D. & C. Search these commandments, saith the Lord, for they are true and faithful, and the promises in them shall all be fulfilled: "Thou art called to go to the Ohio, and inasmuch as my people shall assemble themselves to the Ohio, I have kept in store a blessing such as is not known among the children of men, and it shall be poured forth upon their heads."

"Tarry ye in this place and call a solemn assembly, even of those who are the first laborers in this last kingdom. Sanctify yourselves and you shall be endowed with power. Wherefore, for this cause I gave unto you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio and there I will give unto you my law, and there you shall be endowed with power from on high, and from thence, whomsoever I will, shall go forth among all nations, and it shall be told them what they shall do: for I have a great work laid up in store, for Israel shall be saved, and I will lead them whithersoever I will, and no

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 31.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, OCT. 19, 1848. [WHOLE No. 95.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

WAS JOSEPH SMITH A PROPHET OF GOD?

BROTHER STRANG:—There are many people who say, that if they could be convinced that Joseph was a prophet called of God, they would obey the gospel with cheerfulness. I wish to examine a few facts demonstating the great and important fact that he was a prophet, and, if possible, put a quietus on the fears of the fearful. His first work was translating the Book of Mormon, which in itself contains many prophecies, some of which have already been fulfilled; but we shall not notice them at present, as the Lord saw fit to establish the fact by living witnesses, who testify to the truth of the Book of Mormon, and whose testimony stands unimpeached.

His next work was preaching the gospel and laying the foundation of the church by calling men by commandment through the Urim and Thummim and by the voice of the gospel to save themselves from this untoward generation. Now what did he teach? He professed to be inspired from on high and to have been administered unto by an angel from heaven. Paul said of old, "though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." Now Paul classes himself with the rest of the disciples, and they preached by inspiration of God. If Joseph preaches by inspiration their doctrines will be analagous, and the laws of analogy are arbitrary in respect to the things of God, and incontrovertible. If God inspired the apostles to preach the doctrine that they preached, he never inspired any other man to preach any other doctrine for gospel.—We will now bring a few parallel passages, and see how they agree together:—

JOSEPH'S.	THE APOSTLES'.
"Hearken and listen to the voice of him who is from all eternity to all eternity, the Great I AM, even Jesus Christ, the life and light of the world; a light which shineth in darkness and the darkness comprehendeth it not: the same which came in the meridian of time unto my own, and my own received me not; but to as many as received me, gave I power to become my sons, and even so will I give unto as many as will receive me, power to become my sons." D. & C. sec. lix. p. 2.	"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the word was God. In him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehendeth it not. He came unto his own and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." John i. 1, 4, 5, 11, 12.
2. "And verily, verily I say unto you, he that receiveth my gospel, receiveth me; and he that receiveth not my gospel, receiveth not me. And this is my gospel; Repentanance and baptism by water, and then cometh the baptism of fire and the Holy Ghost, even the Comforter, which showeth all things, and teacheth the peaceable things of the kingdom."	"He that receiveth you receiveth me, and he that receiveth not you receiveth not him who sent me."
	"Thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day: And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations." Luke xxiv. 46, 47.
	"Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."
3. "Arise and be baptized, and wash away your sins, calling on my (the Lord's) name, and you shall receive my spirit."	"Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord. Acts xxii. 16.
"And again, it shall come to pass, that on as many as ye shall baptize with water ye shall lay your hands, and they shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost, and shall be looking forth for the signs of my coming, and shall know me." D. & C. sec. lix. p. 6.	"When they heard this, they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus. And when Paul had laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues and prophecied." Acts xix. 5, 6.

We might extend parallel doctrines to a great length, but forbear for the present, and say that in order that the apostles might effectually preach the gospel and be witnesses of the power of his name, Jesus instructed them to tarry at Jerusalam until they were endued with power from on high, which was fulfilled on the day of pentecost. When they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and spake in other tongues as the spirit gave them utterance.—Joseph also called upon the saints to assemble themselves together, and God would endue them with power from on high. Now if this was accomplished according to the word of the Lord by Joseph the prophet, it is one of the strongest points of analogy between this church and the apostolic, and shows, beyond successful controversy, that the "Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints" is the true church of Christ, having a heaven qualified ministry to testify of Jesus Christ, and preach his gospel. I make a few extracts from the revelations of Jesus Christ without reference to place in D. & C. Search these commandments, saith the Lord, for they are true and faithful, and the promises in them shall all be fulfilled: "Thou art called to go to the Ohio, and inasmuch as my people shall assemble themselves to the Ohio, I have kept in store a blessing such as is not known among the children of men, and it shall be poured forth upon their heads."

"Tarry ye in this place and call a solemn assembly, even of those who are the first laborers in this last kingdom. Sanctify yourselves and you shall be endowed with power. Wherefore, for this cause I gave unto you the commandment, that ye should go to the Ohio and there I will give unto you my law, and there you shall be endowed with power from on high, and from thence, whomsoever I will, shall go forth among all nations, and it shall be told them what they shall do: for I have a great work laid up in store, for Israel shall be saved, and I will lead them whithersoever I will, and no power shall stay my hand." Now I myself am a witness of the fulfillment of the above promises, and there are plenty of living witnesses able and willing to testify to the same facts. I quote from my private journal:—

"Wed. March 30th, 1836. This day being sanctified as a fast day for the authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, between the hours of 8 and 9, A. M., upwards of 320 ordained members met in the house of the Lord here in Kirtland, Ohio, to attend to the last ordinance of the endowment, viz.: the ordinance of washing of feet. This ordinance is administered to none but those who are clean from the blood of the generation in which they live.——The washing was commenced by the Presidency, who first washed the 12 apostles and the 7 Presidents of the seventies.—The 12 and 7 then commenced washing, which continued until the whole assembly were washed. The order of the house was, that we tarry until to-morrow morning in the house of the Lord. (It being as I said a fast.) After the washing the spirit of the Lord, even the Holy Ghost, was poured out from on high upon the congregation, and the brethren commenced prohecying and speaking in other tongues, as the spirit gave them utterance. During part of the day the assembly room was divided into four parts by the curtains, and they prophecied, spake and sang in other tongues in each room.—We fasted until even, when we partook of bread and wine in commemoration of the Lord's supper; but the greatest feast was the after entertainment, by the glory of the Lord, and the power of his spirit." Now having attended through the endowment, I could form an idea of the endowment anciently; for God's ordinances change not. Now, dear reader, you see we have at least 200 more witnesses of the latter day endowment than the former day saints had of theirs; for "in those days the number of names together were about an hundred and twenty." Here was no deception of man; but the power of God abundantly displayed. If God be for us, who can be against us? If this is the only living and true church on the face of the earth, organized after the heavenly pattern, I ask where did we get the pattern? We knew naught of it until God raised up a prophet to restore Israel. Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, as may be proved by thousands of witnesses, and all those who live by the law of his mouth which he spake as he was moved by the power and gift of God will be saved, while those who make him a stumbling stone and rock of offence, and refuse the word spoken through him from heaven, they shall be sought for but shall not be found, because they were fearful, distrustful and unbelieving. When they ran from the supposed snares they fell into the pit, which has covered them forever. O that all men would awake from the slumber of death into which they are fallen, and as Moses said of old, come thou with us and we will do thee good, for the Lord has spoken good concerning Israel. STEPHEN POST.

Centreville, Pa., Sept. 21st, 1848.

RECIPROCAL.

The parents of the Olive Branch send their sincere respects to those of the Gospel Herald for the kind notice they have taken of our little son, we frankly acknowledge he is very small, but if we remember right he is more fat and plump than their son was when it was born in 1846, and christened under the name of Voree Herald, and as he is nourished with the most tender care, by nurses of "some degree of moral honesty," and having plenty of the sincere milk of the words of ancient as well as modern prophets, we account that our child will soon become a man, yea an invincible giant in strength. We hope therefore that their son will not mock, because he is the first born and larger, seeing that our son is a promised seed that will bless all the families of the earth, that he will make the wilderness and the solitary places glad, and the desert to bud and blossom as the rose, that he will comfort all the waste places of Zion, making her wilderness as Eden and her desert as the Garden of the Lord. Isaiah li. 3. We choose much rather that the two children of the same family may live in peace, and have no contention.—Will they let their son come and see us occasioually? We will send ours to Voree as often as we can get him a new dress. It will be our greatest care to teach him truth and righteousness, and if in your presence he behaves with any impropriety, correct him, if he is unmannerly and quarrelsome, or tells any untruth, flog him.—(Kirtland, Ohio,) Olive Branch.

☞ Good! That is a very proper spirit for the parents of so fine a boy. The readiness to have him corrected in case he should become unmannerly will doubtless save the necessity of correction. We are sorry to think such a child should be mortal, and certainly hope his parents will have too much respect for him, in case they should fail in raising him to lay him, in burial by the side of the little Ensign, recently intered there.

Since you have been so very frank, you will not take it amiss if we communicate to you a little wit we purchased. It is said bought wit is the best if we do not buy it too dear. The parents of the Gospel Herald are of a different opinion. We are of opinion that if wit is at hand to be had for nothing but the taking, it is just as good as if paid for at any price whatever. Well, we bought a little, very dear, that we are willing to give away. Our boy was exceedingly praised when young, and we were weak enough to tell him of it, which made him nearly as proud as we were of him. Then we took him on a long journey, and showed him great cities, and a world of curious things. It was all well if he had not been left too much in the company of strangers. But he got a habit of talking too loud. Still he was such a favorite that many persons were very desirous of having the pleasure of nursing him. He had grown a little troublesome to his parents, who had hardly time to look to him, and we concluded to put him out to nurse. Indeed we come within one of committing him to the hands of the parents of the Ensign.—But finally we put him out and sent him off some two miles, to be rid of the care of him. What a load of care it gave us for him.—He became unmannerly and disorderly, meddling with other business, & neglecting that we set him about, quarreled with bad neighbors, and actually picked up some of their bad language. When he caught any of them in a bad trick he accused them all of it, and harped on it as though he could not think of any thing more decent. We gave him many private lectures, and more to his nurses, but all to no purpose. Indeed we were not sorry they gave him a new name, for we were ashamed of having him recognized as our son, and thought "Reveille" a very appropriate name for such an unmannerly little drummer as he was. Finally, one day we caught him carrying two faces, actually telling one story at one house and a very different one at the next, and so all round. None but a parent can know the anguish we felt. We raved first, cried afterward, and in the end left him with the same nurses, dreading to take in hand such a spoiled child. We were greatly to blame, but there is such a thing as being too spirit broken to do our duty. Besides this we were wading in deep water, in the midst of many perils, with but few to assist us, and the sun scarcely visible through the fog.

These strange habits did not agree with the child. He gradually grew sickly. His nurses neglected him as tavern loungers do the pert lively children they teach mischief and give candy to in health, but never look after in sickness. They even brought him the same dish from week to week, which, though good enough in the beginning, was quite stale in the end; and as he ceased to breathe his nurses kicked him out of doors, and people said that he was dead. This was a great mistake. He has a little spark of immortality in his composition. We took him home, and in a lone damp cellar, power shall stay my hand." Now I myself am a witness of the fulfillment of the above promises, and there are plenty of living witnesses able and willing to testify to the same facts. I quote from my private journal :—

"Wed. March 30th, 1836. This day being sanctified as a fast day for the authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, between the hours of 8 and 9, A. M., upwards of 320 ordained members met in the house of the Lord here in Kirtland, Ohio, to attend to the last ordinance of the endowment, viz.: the ordinance of washing of feet. This ordinance is administered to none but those who are clean from the blood of the generation in which they live.———The washing was commenced by the Presidency, who first washed the 12 apostles and the 7 Presidents of the seventies.—The 12 and 7 then commenced washing, which continued until the whole assembly were washed. The order of the house was, that we tarry until to-morrow morning in the house of the Lord. (It being as I said a fast.) After the washing the spirit of the Lord, even the Holy Ghost, was poured out from on high upon the congregation, and the brethren commenced prohecying and speaking in other tongues, as the spirit gave them utterance. During part of the day the assembly room was divided into four parts by the curtains, and they prophecied, spake and sang in other tongues in each room.—We fasted until even, when we partook of bread and wine in commemoration of the Lord's supper; but the greatest feast was the after entertainment, by the glory of the Lord, and the power of his spirit." Now having attended through the endowment, I could form an idea of the endowment anciently; for God's ordinances change not. Now, dear reader, you see we have at least 200 more witnesses of the latter day endowment than the former day saints had of theirs; for "in those days the number of names together were about an hundred and twenty." Here was no deception of man; but the power of God abundantly displayed. If God be for us, who can be against us? If this is the only living and true church on the face of the earth, organized after the heavenly pattern, I ask where did we get the pattern? We knew naught of it until God raised up a prophet to restore Israel. Joseph Smith was a prophet of God, as may be proved by thousands of witnesses, and all those who live by the law of his mouth which he spake as he was moved by the power and gift of God will be saved, while those who make him a stumbling stone and rock of offence, and refuse the word spoken through him from heaven, they shall be sought for but shall not be found, because they were fearful, distrustful and unbelieving. When they ran from the supposed snares they fell into the pit, which has covered them forever. O that all men would awake from the slumber of death into which they are fallen, and as Moses said of old, come thou with us and we will do thee good, for the Lord has spoken good concerning Israel. STEPHEN POST.

Centreville, Pa., Sept. 21st, 1848.

RECIPROCAL.

The parents of the Olive Branch send their sincere respects to those of the Gospel Herald for the kind notice they have taken of our little son, we frankly acknowledge he is very small, but if we remember right he is more fat and plump than their son was when it was born in 1846, and christened under the name of Voree Herald, and as he is nourished with the most tender care, by nurses of "some degree of moral honesty," and having plenty of the sincere milk of the words of ancient as well as modern prophets, we account that our child will soon become a man, yea an invincible giant in strength. We hope therefore that their son will not mock, because he is the first born and larger, seeing that our son is a promised seed that will bless all the families of the earth, that he will make the wilderness and the solitary places glad, and the desert to bud and blossom as the rose, that he will comfort all the waste places of Zion, making her wilderness as Eden and her desert as the Garden of the Lord. Isaiah li. 3. We choose much rather that the two children of the same family may live in peace, and have no contention.—Will they let their son come and see us occasionally? We will send ours to Voree as often as we can get him a new dress. It will be our greatest care to teach him truth and righteousness, and if in your presence he behaves with any impropriety, correct him, if he is unmannerly and quarrelsome, or tells any untruth, flog him.—(Kirtland, Ohio,) Olive Branch.

☞ Good! That is a very proper spirit for the parents of so fine a boy. The readiness to have him corrected in case he should become unmannerly will doubtless save the necessity of correction. We are sorry to think such a child should be mortal, and certainly hope his parents will have too much respect for him, in case they should fail in raising him to lay him, in burial by the side of the little Ensign, recently intered there.

Since you have been so very frank, you will not take it amiss if we communicate to you a little wit we purchased. It is said bought wit is the best if we do not buy it too dear. The parents of the Gospel Herald are of a different opinion. We are of opinion that if wit is at hand to be had for nothing but the taking, it is just as good as if paid for at any price whatever. Well, we bought a little, very dear, that we are willing to give away. Our boy was exceedingly praised when young, and we were weak enough to tell him of it, which made him nearly as proud as we were of him. Then we took him on a long journey, and showed him great cities, and a world of curious things. It was all well if he had not been left too much in the company of strangers. But he got a habit of talking too loud. Still he was such a favorite that many persons were very desirous of having the pleasure of nursing him. He had grown a little troublesome to his parents, who had hardly time to look to him, and we concluded to put him out to nurse. Indeed we come within one of committing him to the hands of the parents of the Ensign.—But finally we put him out and sent him off some two miles, to be rid of the care of him. What a load of care it gave us for him.—He became unmannerly and disorderly, meddling with other business, & neglecting that we set him about, quarreled with bad neighbors, and actually picked up some of their bad language. When he caught any of them in a bad trick he accused them all of it, and harped on it as though he could not think of any thing more decent. We gave him many private lectures, and more to his nurses, but all to no purpose. Indeed we were not sorry they gave him a new name, for we were ashamed of having him recognized as our son, and thought "Reveille" a very appropriate name for such an unmannerly little drummer as he was. Finally, one day we caught him carrying two faces, actually telling one story at one house and a very different one at the next, and so all round. None but a parent can know the anguish we felt. We raved first, cried afterward, and in the end left him with the same nurses, dreading to take in hand such a spoiled child. We were greatly to blame, but there is such a thing as being too spirit broken to do our duty. Besides this we were wading in deep water, in the midst of many perils, with but few to assist us, and the sun scarcely visible through the fog.

These strange habits did not agree with the child. He gradually grew sickly. His nurses neglected him as tavern loungers do the pert lively children they teach mischief and give candy to in health, but never look after in sickness. They even brought him the same dish from week to week, which, though good enough in the beginning, was quite stale in the end; and as he ceased to breathe his nurses kicked him out of doors, and people said that he was dead. This was a great mistake. He has a little spark of immortality in his composition. We took him home, and in a lone damp cellar, but with a good physician and first rate nurses in our absence and constant attention when at home we had not the slightest difficulty in resuscitating him and restoring him to his former vigor. Since which time he progressed finely both in size and intellect. Some of our neighbors say he still retains something of his illmannered ways, but for ourselves we cannot discover the least symptom of it. We know he uses a little asperity of expression occasionally, but it is only on incorrigible subjects, whom neither kind words or tufts of grass will drive out of the melon patches here, or the peach orchards there.

When his case seemed desperate, we did not like to tell him his faults before folks; for nothing renders the reform of a spoiled child so hopeless as making him feel himself disgraced by letting every body know how bad he is. But since by good conduct he has quite retained his character and got the good old name of "Herald" again, and made the acquaintance of a good number of boys of first respectability, whom he visits and receives their return calls every week. We shall even send you this little open line by him, just to say that it is not good to put young children out to nurse at all, and more especially among strangers or illmannered people. As we have paid price enough for this wit, we are perfectly willing to communicate it to all our relatives gratis. It will be worth just as much to you as though you paid any price for it.

Our son will inform you also that he "attends the debating shcool and has got the name of coming out first best every time." If you inquire of him he will doubtless be quite pleased to tell you all about it and invite yours to attend. Perhaps they would both take the same side of the questions already up, but then a new one could easily enough be adopted, where they could try strength when yours gets large and strong enough. We send you a little milk, meat and dessert by our Herald, such as we delight in, and thinking there may be several in your family we have provided accordingly. We send also our good wishes by him, and he is both able and disposed to express his own.

Our son requests us to add that by the genealogies he does not appear to be the oldest, having had a brother by the bond woman at Pittsburgh more than a year before him, by whom he was wickedly mocked. As this was very unpleasant to him, he is resolved not to practice it on any of the children of Ketura; remembering that as he was made the first born by adoption, contrary to nature, but in respect to righteousness, so if he behave unseemly to others his inheritance which he has by adoption might be taken away.

Philadelphia, September 28th, 1848.

PRESIDENT J. J. STRANG:—

DEAR BROTHER,—It has been a long time since I have written to you. All I hear from you is through the paper, which paper I peruse much. I hear through the paper how falsely you are slandered. I have read your appeal, and I say be of good cheer, they cannot harm you. I will write to you concerning the church here.—We numbered when you was here about forty members. Since that there has been about ten more joined, which makes about fifty.—There has three left us, and have gone back to Brigham. The remainder are all in good standing. Can you not write to me, and let me know how you are coming on at Voree? [Wrote the mail before this arrived. ED.] Can't you send Elder John E. Page or some other faithful Elder here? They might do good.

Orson Hyde has been here again. He was on to Washington, and I see in the New York Herald that he has been selling the votes of the Brighamites at Council Bluffs for one thousand dollars, and that there is a great excitement again, and they threaten to drive them again from Iowa. I also see in the papers that an insect called the cricket has destroyed all their grain at Salt Lake, and they are all coming back to the Bluffs. Brother Strang, give my love to brother Page. Tell him to write to me soon. Give my love to brother Haven and his family, (who left us here.) The saints all send their love to you and all the saints. Bro. Syfritt says he can send some tithing soon. We have had no preaching since Elder Adams left us. There are several now who want to be baptized.—Don't forget to write to me. If you have any good let me know.—I long to be with you. May God bless you and all the faithful in Christ Jesus, even so. Amen. I am yours in the new and everlasting covenant,

PETER HESS.

☞ Bro. Page will start soon for Ohio, and will doubtless make his way through Pennsylvania, but we do not know at what time. As we have just written we have little to add, except that Voree presents a far more cheerful face than at any time previous, with every indication that its renewed prosperity will be permanent. If the branch at Philadelphia would catch the same spirit, we think that instead of asking us to send them a faithful Elder to preach to them they would ask one of the Apostles to send out the Elders there to preach to the people in darkness in all that region. If we mistake not there are from twelve to sixteen High Priests and Elders in Philadelphia. Instead of having no preaching, you ought to keep up at least three meetings every Sabbath in the city, and several in the villages around. With faith you can do it, and without faith it is impossible to please God. In the matter of tithing, money can be sent by mail at any time. If brother Syfritt has any tithing of goods, &c., he can box them up and address them, "James J. Strang, Racine, Wis.," and deliver them at any respectable forwarding house, taking a receipt, which should be sent to Pres. Strang by mail, and they will undoubtedly arrive safe. Any tithing or donations sent this fall should be sent immediately, or it will be too late for the fall navigation. [ED.

NOTE.—Can any of the Iowa papers tell us how many votes were polled at the Bluffs? If they are as numerous as they brag of they would poll 3,000. How many did they? [ED. HERALD.

☞ We find in the Wisconsin Standard an extract of the minutes of the Conference held at Winter Quarters by the Brighamites, containing some of their most ridiculous follies, yet credited to the Herald, and so published that the reader would believe it was a Conference of our faith. This is unjust. They are our most bitter enemes. Though they may call the government "Devil," and then help fight its battles, we do not. We neither meddle with war or politics. Not one of us entered the army. Not one in a hundred casts a vote. And though as a people we discountenance the use of tobacco, we would not trifle with God's law by naming the use of it as either original or unpardonable sin, or total depravity. We do not charge Col. Keeler with intending to misrepresent us. We believe him above such an act. But certainly we should be sorry to have our neighbors imagine that the speaking in our Conferences was made up of such trash as his notice has given us credit for.

☞ Where are the Brighamite Twelve? Phineas Young informed us personally, not two weeks since, that six of them were at the Salt Land, and six at Council Bluffs. Letters from various places mention them in different locations. For instance, we learn that Wilford Woodruff is in Boston, and in no hurry to start to the Salt Land. Also that Orson Pratt has left his family in New York, and gone to England. Orson Hyde is sculling about the land seeking whom he may devour. Wonder if they cannot look up some body to be leader. It might patch up their affairs for a few weeks if they could but get some man of character to go up into the wilderness and consent to be their leader.

t with a good physician and first rate nurses in our absence and onstant attention when at home we had not the slightest difficulty resuscitating him and restoring him to his former vigor. Since hich time he progressed finely both in size and intellect. Some our neighbors say he still retains something of his illmannered ays, but for ourselves we cannot discover the least symptom of

We know he uses a little asperity of expression occasionally, t it is only on incorrigible subjects, whom neither kind words tufts of grass will drive out of the melon patches here, or the each orchards there.

When his case seemed desperate, we did not like to tell him his ults before folks; for nothing renders the reform of a spoiled ild so hopeless as making him feel himself disgraced by letting ev- y body know how bad he is. But since by good conduct he has uite retained his character and got the good old name of "Herald" gain, and made the acquaintance of a good number of boys of first espectability, whom he visits and receives their return calls every eek. We shall even send you this little open line by him, just say that it is not good to put young children out to nurse at all, nd more especially among strangers or illmannered people. As e have paid price enough for this wit, we are perfectly willing to ommunicate it to all our relatives gratis. It will be worth just as uch to you as though you paid any price for it.

Our son will inform you also that he "attends the debating cool and has got the name of coming out first best every time." you inquire of him he will doubtless be quite pleased to tell ou all about it and invite yours to attend. Perhaps they would both ke the same side of the questions already up, but then a new one uld easily enough be adopted, where they could try strength when ours gets large and strong enough. We send you a little milk, eat and dessert by our Herald, such as we delight in, and thinking ne may be several in your family we have provided accordingly. We send also our good wishes by him, and he is both able and dis- osed to express his own.

Our son requests us to add that by the genealogies he does not ppear to be the oldest, having had a brother by the bond woman Pittsburgh more than a year before him, by whom he was wick- ly mocked. As this was very unpleasant to him, he is resolved t to practice it on any of the children of Ketura; remembering at as he was made the first born by adoption, contrary to nature, t in respect to righteousness, so if he behave unseemly to others s inheritance which he has by adoption might be taken away.

Philadelphia, September 28th, 1848.

ESIDENT J. J. STRANG:—

DEAR BROTHER,—It has been a long time since I have written to n. All I hear from you is through the papor, which paper I pe- e much. I hear through the paper how falsely you are slander- I have read your appeal, and I say be of good cheer, they can- harm you. I will write to you concerning the church here.— e numbered when you was here about forty members. Since that re has been about ten more joined, which makes about fifty.— ere has three left us, and have gone back to Brigham. The re- inder are all in good standing. Can you not write to me, and me know how you are coming on at Voree? [Wrote the mail fore this arrived. ED.] Can't you send Elder John E. Page or me other faithful Elder here? They might do good.

Orson Hyde has been here again. He was on to Washington, I see in the New York Herald that he has been selling the es of the Brighamites at Council Bluffs for one thousand dollars, that there is a great excitement again, and they threaten to drive n again from Iowa. I also see in the papers that an insect call- he cricket has destroyed all their grain at Salt Lake, and they are all coming back to the Bluffs. Brother Strang, give my love to brother Page. Tell him to write to me soon. Give my love to brother Haven and his family, (who left us here.) The saints all send their love to you and all the saints. Bro. Syfritt says he can send some tithing soon. We have had no preaching since Elder Adams left us. There are several now who want to be baptized.— Don't forget to write to me. If you have any good let me know.— I long to be with you. May God bless you and all the faithful in Christ Jesus, even so. Amen. I am yours in the new and everlasting covenant,

PETER HESS.

☞ Bro. Page will start soon for Ohio, and will doubtless make his way through Pennsylvania, but we do not know at what time. As we have just written we have little to add, except that Voree presents a far more cheerful face than at any time previous, with every indication that its renewed prosperity will be permanent. If the branch at Philadelphia would catch the same spirit, we think that instead of asking us to send them a faithful Elder to preach to them they would ask one of the Apostles to send out the Elders there to preach to the people in darkness in all that region. If we mistake not there are from twelve to sixteen High Priests and Elders in Philadelphia. Instead of having no preaching, you ought to keep up at least three meetings every Sabbath in the city, and several in the villages around. With faith you can do it, and without faith it is impossible to please God: In the matter of tithing, money can be sent by mail at any time. If brother Syfritt has any tithing of goods, &c., he can box them up and address them, "James J. Strang, Racine, Wis.," and deliver them at any respectable forwarding house, taking a receipt, which should be sent to Pres. Strang by mail, and they will undoubtedly arrive safe. Any tithing or donations sent this fall should be sent immediately, or it will be too late for the fall navigation. [ED.

NOTE.—Can any of the Iowa papers tell us how many votes were polled at the Bluffs? If they are as numerous as they brag of they would poll 3,000. How many did they? [ED. HERALD.

☞ We find in the Wisconsin Standard an extract of the minutes of the Conference held at Winter Quarters by the Brighamites, containing some of their most ridiculous follies, yet credited to the Herald, and so published that the reader would believe it was a Conference of our faith. This is unjust. They are our most bitter enemies. Though they may call the government "Devil," and then help fight its battles, we do not. We neither meddle with war or politics. Not one of us entered the army. Not one in a hundred casts a vote. And though as a people we discountenance the use of tobacco, we would not trifle with God's law by naming the use of it as either original or unpardonable sin, or total depravity. We do not charge Col. Keeler with intending to misrepresent us. We believe him above such an act. But certainly we should be sorry to have our neighbors imagine that the speaking in our Conferences was made up of such trash as his notice has given us credit for.

☞ Where are the Brighamite Twelve? Phineas Young informed us personally, not two weeks since, that six of them were at the Salt Land, and six at Council Bluffs. Letters from various places mention them in different locations. For instance, we learn that Wilford Woodruff is in Boston, and in no hurry to start to the Salt Land. Also that Orson Pratt has left his family in New York, and gone to England. Orson Hyde is sculling about the land seeking whom he may devour. Wonder if they cannot look up some body to be leader. It might patch up their affairs for a few weeks if they could but get some man of character to go up into the wilderness and consent to be their leader.

Athens Township, Crawford Co., Pa., Sept. 25th, 1848.

Dearly Beloved:—By way of introduction I subscribe myself your companion in tribulation and brother in the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Feeling deeply interested in the welfare of Zion, and prefering her prosperity above my chiefest joy, I can no longer forbear communicating my mind unto you by way of letter. Although I have remained so long silent, it was not because I loved Zion the less, but because I have learned to esteem others better than myself, and consequently have contented myself with perusing the Herald, instead of becoming an author to any of its lines, while there are so many in the vineyard that have been more abundant in their labors, and more capable of edifying the saints. While the saints are endeavoring to become one, as the gospel requires, we can see the workings of Satan among the people, and even among those that wish to be called saints; they are not willing to trust the Lord Jesus Christ even a dollar, believing at the same time that whoso giveth unto the poor lendeth unto the Lord, and when the Lord comes he will bring his reward with him.

It is evident that if every one which now believes in the doctrine of Christ was willing to cast in their mites and some their abundance, and bring all their tithes into the Lord's store house, that there would be sufficient to relieve the poor, support the families of the elders while engaged in preaching the gospel to the nations, and build the Lord's house in a time accepted. But Paul says, "Except the law had said thou shalt not covet, I had not known sin.—Beware of covetousness, which is idolatry," &c. If covetousness increase with us Zion will not arise in her beauty, for the prosperity of Zion depends upon the faithfulness of the saints and their liberality. When the principle of tithing is held forth, even among the brethren, we can then discover even a worse spirit than that which the young man had, for to say nothing about their selling all and giving to the poor; they are unwilling to give a tenth of their property or time to the building of the Lord's house, or in strengthening a stake, or in establishing Zion. The saints have become sectarian in faith, and instead of building up Zion in righteousness, (that is, in loving the Lord our God with all our heart, might, mind and strength, and our neighbor as ourselves,) they are going to show their faith without works, and let the Lord do the whole of it, and keep his rewards unto himself, or else bestow them upon dry and barren ground. Because there has been many false brethren, which have done wickedly and destroyed much good, the luke warm have determined within themselves that they will do nothing more for the cause of Zion, until they can see her greatly prospered and her borders enlarged. But how surprisingly strange to think of Zion's being built up without means or labor. They might just as well expect their salvation without a belief in the gospel.

People are willing to be saved in their own way, and are not willing to be saved in the Lord's way, but they probably will be when the Lord pours out his judgments upon Babylon, when they find all hopes of their gain gone, and find that their covenant with death and agreement with hell will not stand. How strange it is that the inhabitants of the earth have had the revelation of St. John with them near eighteen hundred years, and yet know nothing about fleeing unto Zion. They think the doctrine of Christ beautiful if it was not for this gathering and having all things common. But it appears to me that I would be willing to give all that I have and ten thousand times more for the building up of Zion. I am determined, by the grace of God, to be with you as soon as I can get there, and until that time arrives I am determined to keep a strict account of all that I have, and pay tithes of all that I possess, besides being more diligent in the ministry. I feel willing to go where the Lord requires me to go, and to stay where the Lord requires me to stay. It is astonishing to see how stupid most of the saints are about obeying the voice which says, "come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." Some people seem to think that the watchmen are meddling to their own hurt when they enforce the duty of fleeing out of Babylon upon the minds of their hearers, just as though there was no God that required it; and just as though the earth was not the Lord's, neither the fullness thereof. How long will it be before the children of men will repent and regard the work of the Lord as they ought to regard it? I answer, not until Zion and Jerusalem are made a praise in the earth, and the Lord comes with his saints and reigns in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem and before his ancients gloriously. I close by subscribing myself your friend and brother in the bonds of the new and everlasting covenant, W. POST.

James J. Strang. [Money received. Ed.]

Depeyster, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Sept. 11th,, 1848.

Dear Brother Strang:—I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of Aug. 27th, and I got one from John E. the same day. The contents of yours gave me great satisfaction. I know that puny man cannot thwart the plans of God. Though apostates may bolt, and Devils may rage, yet God will be with you and all the true and faithful, to protect in time of need. I am in a good harbor. The prospect is good in Otsego county. I have baptized but one, but I shall baptize some more soon. I think the brethren in this county are on their high heeled shoes for Voree in the spring. Several have promised to go who have not joined, but will soon. Tar and feathers are threatened, but I have no fear. I shall return to Otsego next week to stay till next spring, or till further orders from you, and if the Lord will permit me to come up there I will bring one hundred souls with me to Voree.

There are many calls for me that it is impossible to fill. Truly the harvest is great, and the laborers are few. Doors are flung open on every side. The people are hungry and starving for preaching. There is here a famine for the word of the Lord, and a great dearth for truth. Many acknowledge the truth, but pride will not let them obey it. The hand of kind providence has been with me ever since I left Voree, which was on the 11th of April last. I have but few leisure moments, and lack for nothing; for the noble hearted brethren contribute to a full supply as yet. So I do not see any need of being in the least faint hearted about going out to preach. When God speaks let his subjects obey, and we shall lack in nothing, if we do what we do with an eye single to his glory. The wrath of God is heavy on the people. The sickness is great, and death is stout against all opposition, and is in small villages sweeping off from 7 to 15 in a day, and some live only 12 hours after being taken sick. Sure enough, as the prophet says, it is a vexation to hear the report; but to me it is more vexatious to hear the sermons at their funerals. It appears to me there never was a people more ripened for destruction than the Gentiles now are. It takes a man with a stiff upper lip to stand it among them at all. God's judgment is on their hard labor; for thousands and tens of thousands bushels of potatoes are rotten, and thousands of acres of meadows are destroyed by an insect scarcely visible with the naked eye, cutting the grass close to the ground; and also the plum and cherry and other trees of fruit are so cankered with insects this year that in many places it has left the people destitute of any fruit. But amid all this the ungodly cannot discern the signs of the times, notwithstanding their meadows and fruit never failed them before.—The wars and commotions in the earth are no sign to them. I believe it is high time for the elders to magnify their calling in all things. Brother Strang, the saints all rejoice greatly in the order of Enoch, and the topic of their conversation is about the united order, and they long to be there to join in it. Give to the Father a

Athens Township, Crawford Co., Pa., Sept. 25th, 1848.

DEARLY BELOVED:—By way of introduction I subscribe myself your companion in tribulation and brother in the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Feeling deeply interested in the welfare of Zion, and prefering her prosperity above my chiefest joy, I can no longer forbear communicating my mind unto you by way of letter. Although I have remained so long silent, it was not because I loved Zion the less, but because I have learned to esteem others better than myself, and consequently have contented myself with perusing the Herald, instead of becoming an author to any of its lines, while there are so many in the vineyard that have been more abundant in their labors, and more capable of edifying the saints. While the saints are endeavoring to become one, as the gospel requires, we can see the workings of Satan among the people, and even among those that wish to be called saints; they are not willing to trust the Lord Jesus Christ even a dollar, believing at the same time that whoso giveth unto the poor lendeth unto the Lord, and when the Lord comes he will bring his reward with him.

It is evident that if every one which now believes in the doctrine of Christ was willing to cast in their mites and some their abundance, and bring all their tithes into the Lord's store house, that there would be sufficient to relieve the poor, support the families of the elders while engaged in preaching the gospel to the nations, and build the Lord's house in a time accepted. But Paul says, "Except the law had said thou shalt not covet, I had not known sin.—Beware of covetousness, which is idolatry," &c. If covetousness increase with us Zion will not arise in her beauty, for the prosperity of Zion depends upon the faithfulness of the saints and their liberality. When the principle of tithing is held forth, even among the brethren, we can then discover even a worse spirit than that which the young man had, for to say nothing about their selling all and giving to the poor, they are unwilling to give a tenth of their property or time to the building of the Lord's house, or in strengthening a stake, or in establishing Zion. The saints have become sectarian in faith, and instead of building up Zion in righteousness, (that is, in loving the Lord our God with all our heart, might, mind and strength, and our neighbor as ourselves,) they are going to show their faith without works, and let the Lord do the whole of it, and keep his rewards unto himself, or else bestow them upon dry and barren ground. Because there has been many false brethren, which have done wickedly and destroyed much good, the luke warm have determined within themselves that they will do nothing more for the cause of Zion, until they can see her greatly prospered and her borders enlarged. But how surprisingly strange to think of Zion's being built up without means or labor. They might just as well expect their salvation without a belief in the gospel.

People are willing to be saved in their own way, and are not willing to be saved in the Lord's way, but they probably will be when the Lord pours out his judgments upon Babylon, when they find all hopes of their gain gone, and find that their covenant with death and agreement with hell will not stand. How strange it is that the inhabitants of the earth have had the revelation of St. John with them near eighteen hundred years, and yet know nothing about fleeing unto Zion. They think the doctrine of Christ beautiful if it was not for this gathering and having all things common. But it appears to me that I would be willing to give all that I have and ten thousand times more for the building up of Zion. I am determined, by the grace of God, to be with you as soon as I can get there, and until that time arrives I am determined to keep a strict account of all that I have, and pay tithes of all that I possess, besides being more diligent in the ministry. I feel willing to go where the Lord requires me to go, and to stay where the Lord requires me to stay. It is astonishing to see how stupid most of the saints are about obeying the voice which says, "come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." Some people seem to think that the watchmen are meddling to their own hurt when they enforce the duty of fleeing out of Babylon upon the minds of their hearers, just as though there was no God that required it; and just as though the earth was not the Lord's, neither the fullness thereof. How long will it be before the children of men will repent and regard the work of the Lord as they ought to regard it? I answer, not until Zion and Jerusalem are made a praise in the earth, and the Lord comes with his saints and reigns in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem and before his ancients gloriously. I close by subscribing myself your friend and brother in the bonds of the new and everlasting covenant, W. POST.

JAMES J. STRANG. [Money received. ED.]

Depeyster, St. Lawrence Co., N. Y., Sept. 11th,, 1848.

DEAR BROTHER STRANG:—I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of Aug. 27th, and I got one from John E. the same day. The contents of yours gave me great satisfaction. I know that puny man cannot thwart the plans of God. Though apostates may bolt, and Devils may rage, yet God will be with you and all the true and faithful, to protect in time of need. I am in a good harbor. The prospect is good in Otsego county. I have baptized but one, but I shall baptize some more soon. I think the brethren in this county are on their high heeled shoes for Voree in the spring. Several have promised to go who have not joined, but will soon. Tar and feathers are threatened, but I have no fear. I shall return to Otsego next week to stay till next spring, or till further orders from you, and if the Lord will permit me to come up there I will bring one hundred souls with me to Voree.

There are many calls for me that it is impossible to fill. Truly the harvest is great, and the laborers are few. Doors are flung open on every side. The people are hungry and starving for preaching. There is here a famine for the word of the Lord, and a great dearth for truth. Many acknowledge the truth, but pride will not let them obey it. The hand of kind providence has been with me ever since I left Voree, which was on the 11th of April last. I have but few leisure moments, and lack for nothing; for the noble hearted brethren contribute to a full supply as yet. So I do not see any need of being in the least faint hearted about going out to preach. When God speaks let his subjects obey, and we shall lack in nothing, if we do what we do with an eye single to his glory. The wrath of God is heavy on the people. The sickness is great, and death is stout against all opposition, and is in small villages sweeping off from 7 to 15 in a day, and some live only 12 hours after being taken sick. Sure enough, as the prophet says, it is a vexation to hear the report; but to me it is more vexatious to hear the sermons at their funerals. It appears to me there never was a people more ripened for destruction than the Gentiles now are. It takes a man with a stiff upper lip to stand it among them at all. God's judgment is on their hard labor; for thousands and tens of thousands bushels of potatoes are rotten, and thousands of acres of meadow are destroyed by an insect scarcely visible with the naked eye, cutting the grass close to the ground; and also the plum and cherry and other trees of fruit are so cankored with insects this year that in many places it has left the people destitute of any fruit. But amid all this the ungodly cannot discern the signs of the times, notwithstanding their meadows and fruit never failed them before.—The wars and commotions in the earth are no sign to them. I believe it is high time for the elders to magnify their calling in all things. Brother Strang, the saints all rejoice greatly in the order of Enoch, and the topic of their conversation is about the united order, and they long to be there to join in it. Give to the Father petition for me, that I may be directed by wisdom. I and mine send our best love to you and yours, and all the saints. We are well and hearty. Most sincerely, EBENEZER PAGE.

Beaver Island, September 13th, 1848.

PRESIDENT STRANG :—

DEAR BROTHER,—Permit me to intrude upon your time a few moments. I am happy with the privilege of addressing you once more under so favorable circumstances. Matters and things are going on very well here now. We are having very good meetings, and we are all doing and enjoying ourselves very well. Every one is doing his best to lay in store for winter, and the prospect is that we all shall be able to get enough. There has not been any addition to our settlement since you was here, but we remain about the same. The prospect is that the way is preparing for an effectual door to be opened to the Lamanites, the house of Joseph, that they may learn the history of their progenitors. Brown went to the Sault St. Marie and there he found an Ephramite that seemed to be moved upon by a spirit of inquiry, so he laid the principles of our faith before him, and he became so much interested that he promised to return and bring him the Book of Mormon. He told Brown that in the middle of August he was going to visit several of the tribes up about Lake Superior, and he wanted the Book of Mormon to take along and lay before them. So Brown returned, and in a few days he started back with the Book of Mormon and other of our works, such as we thought proper to send. I let him have the Doctrine and Covenants and some papers to carry to him. You will understand that this man, though he is a Lamanite, is well educated, and also can speak the language of several tribes. Therefore he is a proper instrument for the Lord to begin the work. It is evident the Lord is at work among them, and their hearts are turned towards us. I long to see the time come when they will come into the work; for I have hopes of them, but none of the Gentiles. The Gentiles, as a people, never will keep the law of God.

It seems by the last number of the Herald that you are having some trouble in Voree. O the wickedness and treachery of man!—Men that have once been your warmest advocates and professed friends, to see them turn and take the course that they do it is astonishing. It is almost enough to destroy ones confidence entire. But, alas! to view man in one respect he is almost an angel, but in another a demon. What is all this array of kindred spirits against you? Is it for any thing unlawful that you have done? No!—Then what is it? It is because God has called you to be a prophet. If you had not been called to the prophetic office, no man would have said ought against your character to this day. But they must fill up their cup, that God may cut them off. I hope God will deliver you out of their hands. I trust you may always find some true and tried friends here. Yours most sincerely,

SAMUEL SHAW.

CONFERENCE MINUTES.

At a Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints assembled at the Jackson branch, Jackson Co., Mich., on the 30th of September, 1848, Geo. Brownson Pres. and Samuel Graham Clerk, J. M. Wait and Walter Ostrander were given a mission to the Grand River Rapids and vicinity; B. C. Willey and John Hill to labor in and about Jackson; Thomas Horton to Ingham Co. During Conference instructions were given to the Elders to enforce the necessity of the gathering and building of the Temple of our God. By a vote of the Conference S. Graham was appointed a delegate to attend the semi-annual Conference at Voree. The spirit of God attended the ministration of the word, and we were made glad while sitting together and contemplating the great work committed to us in this last dispensation of mercy to man. The brethren and sisters expressed an entire satisfaction and unshaken confidence in the authorities of the church.

S. GRAHAM, Clerk. GEO. BROWNSON, Pres.

INDUSTRY AND INTEGRITY.—There is nothing possible to man which industry and integrity will not accomplish. The poor boy of yesterday—so poor that a dollar was a miracle in his vision; houseless and beardless; compelled to wander on foot from village to village, with his bundle on his back, in order to procure labor and the means of subsistence—has become the talented and honorable young man to-day, by the power of his good right arm, and the potent influence of his pure principles, firmly and perpetually maintained. When poverty and what the world calls disgrace stared him in the face, he shuddered not, but pressed onward, and exulted in high and honorable exertion in the midst of accumulating disasters and calamities. Let the young man be cherished, for he honors his country and dignifies his race. High blood—if this courses not in his veins, he is a freeborn American, and therefore a sovereign and a prince. Wealth—what cares he for that, so long as his heart is pure, and his walk upright? He knows, and his country knows, and his country tells, that the little finger of an honest and upright young man is worth more than the whole body of an effeminate and dishonest rich man. These are the men who make the country—who bring to it whatever of iron sinew and unfailing spirit it possesses or desires—who are rapidly rendering it the mightest, most powerful, as it is already the freest land beneath the circle of the sun.—Ex. paper.

☞ "A man strikes me with a sword and inflicts a wound. Suppose, instead of binding up the wound, I am showing it to every body; and after it has been bound up, I am taking off the bandage continually, and examining the depth of the wound, and making it to fester, till my limb becomes greatly inflamed, and my general health is materially affected; is there a person in the world who would not call me a fool? Now such a fool is he, who by dwelling upon injuries, or insults, or provocations, causes them to agitate and inflame his mind. How much better were it to put a bandage over the wound and never look at it again!"—Simeon's Life.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

Voree, October 19th, 1848.

MR. EDWIN BURGESS :—

DEAR SIR,—After a considerable and an unexpected delay I finally address you according to the arrangement made between us. It is useless to make any apology for the past. I have only to ask your indulgence in the future. I enter upon this correspondence with real pleasure, not because it brings with it the necessity of additional toil, to one who is already much overtasked. But I have confidence in succeeding on ground where I cannot but see that such men as Locke and Paley have failed.

2. As the arrangement of a discussion between us was not commited to writing, I have thought fit to state here what I consider the terms upon which we meet:—

I AFFIRM THAT THERE IS A GOD, and that there may be no doubt as to the true intent of this affirmation, I add by way of explanation that by the name God I signify a PERSON possessed of INTELLIGENCE, MOTIVE and WILL, who is LORD of the UNIVERSE. This I understand you to deny. And because you was very particular that your negation should not be made too broad, I have endeavored to make my affirmation so pointed and so definite that there could be no mistake about the issue.

3. In such a discussion I understand that no man or book is au-

petition for me, that I may be directed by wisdom. I and mine send our best love to you and yours, and all the saints. We are well and hearty. Most sincerely, EBENEZER PAGE.

Beaver Island, September 13th, 1848.

President Strang :—

Dear Brother,—Permit me to intrude upon your time a few moments. I am happy with the privilege of addressing you once more under so favorable circumstances. Matters and things are going on very well here now. We are having very good meetings, and we are all doing and enjoying ourselves very well. Every one is doing his best to lay in store for winter, and the prospect is that we all shall be able to get enough. There has not been any addition to our settlement since you was here, but we remain about the same. The prospect is that the way is preparing for an effectual door to be opened to the Lamanites, the house of Joseph, that they may learn the history of their progenitors. Brown went to the Sault St. Marie and there he found an Ephramite that seemed to be moved upon by a spirit of inquiry, so he laid the principles of our faith before him, and he became so much interested that he promised to return and bring him the Book of Mormon. He told Brown that in the middle of August he was going to visit several of the tribes up about Lake Superior, and he wanted the Book of Mormon to take along and lay before them. So Brown returned, and in a few days he started back with the Book of Mormon and other of our works, such as we thought proper to send. I let him have the Doctrine and Covenants and some papers to carry to him. You will understand that this man, though he is a Lamanite, is well educated, and also can speak the language of several tribes. Therefore he is a proper instrument for the Lord to begin the work. It is evident the Lord is at work among them, and their hearts are turned towards us. I long to see the time come when they will come into the work; for I have hopes of them, but none of the Gentiles. The Gentiles, as a people, never will keep the law of God.

It seems by the last number of the Herald that you are having some trouble in Voree. O the wickedness and treachery of man!—Men that have once been your warmest advocates and professed friends, to see them turn and take the course that they do it is astonishing. It is almost enough to destroy ones confidence entire. But, alas! to view man in one respect he is almost an angel, but in another a demon. What is all this array of kindred spirits against you? Is it for any thing unlawful that you have done? No!—Then what is it? It is because God has called you to be a prophet. If you had not been called to the prophetic office, no man would have said ought against your character to this day. But they must fill up their cup, that God may cut them off. I hope God will deliver you out of their hands. I trust you may always find some true and tried friends here. Yours most sincerely,

SAMUEL SHAW.

CONFERENCE MINUTES.

At a Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints assembled at the Jackson branch, Jackson Co., Mich., on the 30th of September, 1848, Geo. Brownson Prev. and Samuel Graham Clerk, J. M. Wait and Walter Ostrander were given a mission to the Grand River Rapids and vicinity; B. C. Willey and John Hill to labor in and about Jackson; Thomas Horton to Ingham Co. During Conference instructions were given to the Elders to enforce the necessity of the gathering and building of the Temple of our God. By a vote of the Conference S. Graham was appointed a delegate to attend the semi-annual Conference at Voree. The spirit of God attended the ministration of the word, and we were made glad while sitting together and contemplating the great work committed to us in this last dispensation of mercy to man. The brethren and sisters expressed an entire satisfaction and unshaken confidence in the authorities of the church.

S. Graham, Clerk. GEO. BROWNSON, Pres.

Industry and Integrity.—There is nothing possible to man which industry and integrity will not accomplish. The poor boy of yesterday—so poor that a dollar was a miracle in his vision; houseless and beardless; compelled to wander on foot from village to village, with his bundle on his back, in order to procure labor and the means of subsistence—has become the talented and honorable young man to-day, by the power of his good right arm, and the potent influence of his pure principles, firmly and perpetually maintained. When poverty and what the world calls disgrace stared him in the face, he shuddered not, but pressed onward, and exulted in high and honorable exertion in the midst of accumulating disasters and calamities. Let the young man be cherished, for he honors his country and dignifies his race. High blood—if this courses not in his veins, he is a freeborn American, and therefore a sovereign and a prince. Wealth—what cares he for that, so long as his heart is pure, and his walk upright? He knows, and his country knows, and his country tells, that the little finger of an honest and upright young man is worth more than the whole body of an effeminate and dishonest rich man. These are the men who make the country—who bring to it whatever of iron sinew and unfailing spirit it possesses or desires—who are rapidly rendering it the mightest, most powerful, as it is already the freest land beneath the circle of the sun.—Ex. paper.

☞ "A man strikes me with a sword and inflicts a wound. Suppose, instead of binding up the wound, I am showing it to every body; and after it has been bound up, I am taking off the bandage continually, and examining the depth of the wound, and making it to fester, till my limb becomes greatly inflamed, and my general health is materially affected; is there a person in the world who would not call me a fool? Now such a fool is he, who by dwelling upon injuries, or insults, or provocations, causes them to agitate and inflame his mind. How much better were it to put a bandage over the wound and never look at it again!"—Simeon's Life.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

Voree, October 19th, 1848.

Mr. Edwin Burgess :—

Dear Sir,—After a considerable and an unexpected delay I finally address you according to the arrangement made between us. It is useless to make any apology for the past. I have only to ask your indulgence in the future. I enter upon this correspondence with real pleasure, not because it brings with it the necessity of additional toil, to one who is already much overtasked. But I have confidence in succeeding on ground where I cannot but see that such men as Locke and Paley have failed.

2. As the arrangement of a discussion between us was not commited to writing, I have thought fit to state here what I consider the terms upon which we meet:—

I affirm that there is a God, and that there may be no doubt as to the true intent of this affirmation, I add by way of explanation that by the name God I signify a person possessed of intelligence, motive and will, who is Lord of the universe. This I understand you to deny. And because you was very particular that your negation should not be made too broad, I have endeavored to make my affirmation so pointed and so definite that there could be no mistake about the issue.

3. In such a discussion I understand that no man or book is thority in any higher sense than they are in discussing a question of mathematics, chemistry or geology; that there is no Bible or book of laws the dicta of which is supreme or final.

4. There are, however, certain truths which nothing short of insanity questions; such for instance as that two and two are four, that black is not white, and that a circle is not a square. Of the same class, though not equally apparent to the unlearned, are the following: that the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right angles; that an equilateral triangle is also equiangular, and that any sum multiplied by itself produces its square, and multiplied again produces its cube. These truths I expect to rely on as premises universally acknowledged, and needing no proof.

5. There are also many principles in science so well established that in all scientific as well as popular works they are assumed as unquestioned facts, such as the rotundity of the earth, the size and relative situation of the planets, all the elementary principles of the natural sciences as usually taught in the schools throughout the civilized world. I see no reason why these should not be appealed to in the first instance as unquestioned truths. If the opposing party denies their correctness he should be expected to give his reasons, to show the fallacy of that principle of science which has received the common assent of mankind.

6. For an example, if you should assert the rotundity of the earth, that being a fact about which the learned have ceased to doubt, I should not be at liberty to simply deny that fact and call for proofs, but should be bound to give evidence that the common doctrine was erroneous, which you would afterwards reply to and defend your position. I think this rule necessary, otherwise questions would be endless.

7. I should like to have the discussion kept up regular until brought to a close, and for that purpose propose, as far as possible, to furnish about equal to two columns of the Gospel Herald per week, provided you will do the same. We shall endeavor in the publication to as much as possible issue in alternate numbers. For convenience of reference I wish you to write your articles in paragraphs like this, and number the paragraphs. I do also most seriously hope that, after entering into this arrangement as I have, it will not be dropped (as was the Catholic discussion) by my opponent without going over the ground. I shall write very little but what I have already spoken, and would be far from writing it out unless I expected to be answered.

8. I do not know as it was expressly stipulated that you should obtain a publication of this discussion in any paper on your part; nevertheless it is but fair that you should do so if you can. From the general disposition among infidels to investigate whatever questions arise, I have no doubt you can do so. Possibly also one of the Racine papers would be open for that purpose. I wish not to be understood as dictating these terms, but as writing down what is already agreed on, and suggesting what in my opinion ought to be. If any part of it does not meet your approbation I shall be most happy to make any reasonable amendment.

9. The conclusions to which I have come on the subject of the existence of God are not the result of other men's reasonings, but of my own. My reasons were not derived from any book, publication or discourse whatever. I have read one hundred volumes of different authors on the existence of God and the divine authority of the christian religion without finding one argument that I deemed conclusive. Since seeing you I have read the first argument of real force that I ever had the pleasure of reading to prove that there is a God. This is a re-print in the Wisconsin Argus from the Democratic Review. And this is but a repetition, dressed up in better and more scientific language than I am able to use, of part of the arguments used by me in private conversations in Pittsburgh, New York and Boston two years since, and repeated in successive public lectures in Voree last winter and spring.

10. The originating of the argument is of little account compared to the validity of it, the only thing with which we need trouble ourselves. I shall not ask you to be satisfied with guess work, or common theological essays. Neither shall I build my logic on assumptions, as did Paley, Chalmers and a host of others, who have assumed that the world was created, and that it was a machine, in order to prove that it had a creator or a machinest.

11. But whatever kind of proof is always received among men on all subjects, I hold to be good on this if applicable, and to be good to the same extent as in any of the sciences. The same kind of evidence which would be good to prove the rotundity of the earth, I hold to be equally good to prove the existence of God, so far as it is applicable.

12. The testimony of one circumnavigator would go but a little way towards establishing so important a fact among a people not acquainted with it. But among an inquiring people, possessed of a good degree of general intelligence, a numerous series of voyages, made by different persons of eminent character, and in successive generations, and made public with all their facts and circumstances, would gradually work conviction in the minds of a people. And such conviction would be well grounded.

13. I do not claim that such evidence is equal to the astronomic demonstration, but it is equal to any that others than astronomers can have of the astronomic demonstrations, and is as good as the bulk of the learned men have of the great body of scientific truths to which they subscribe. It is as good as any person on earth has or can have of geographic and geologic facts, and far better than history admits of.

14. Geography, natural and political, is proved by the testimony of men. Yet its leading facts are undoubted. There probably may not be a man in the United States who has seen the city of Tombuctoo, the Chinese wall, or the sea of Aral. Who doubts their existence? Only the insane. What has produced such universal credence to facts that none of us know? Simple human testimony. The words of men who have seen them, and their words by hearsay second, third and fourth handed.

15. And this testimony has not been by any means uniform. All who had the means of knowing agree in the main point, the existence of those objects, however much they disagree in the details concerning them. Consequently all men except the merely insane believe their testimony that such places really exist, but disagree according to the several witnesses in their characteristics.

16. Believing this credence of mankind well founded, I appeal to similar evidence to prove a God. HE HAS BEEN SEEN OF MEN. In this the testimony of all mankind concurs. I shall not attempt to give the evidence in detail. It would require a re-writing of the history of the earth. Every nation under the whole heavens furnishes its quota of that mass of evidence which, if written out, would crowd libraries—the testimony of men that they have seen God. From the earliest times of which we have written records to this present, there never was one nation which did not give its share to this testimony. Neither savage tribe or civilized people has refused its contribution.

17. I do not mean that each and every individual gives his own testimony in the premises. But there have been men in every nation and among every people who said in their day and among their people that they had seen God, and conversed with him. And that fact is preserved in their histories and traditions.

18. The Mosaic account (so called) is any thing but unsupported in the premises. Nor is it backed alone by the Jewish prophets. The Egyptians, Chinese, Chaldeans, Hindoos, Phœnecians, Greeks, thority in any higher sense than they are in discussing a question of mathematics, chemistry or geology; that there is no Bible or book of laws the dicta of which is supreme or final.

4. There are, however, certain truths which nothing short of insanity questions; such for instance as that two and two are four, that black is not white, and that a circle is not a square. Of the same class, though not equally apparent to the unlearned, are the following: that the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right angles; that an equilateral triangle is also equiangular, and that any sum multiplied by itself produces its square, and multiplied again produces its cube. These truths I expect to rely on as premises universally acknowledged, and needing no proof.

5. There are also many principles in science so well established that in all scientific as well as popular works they are assumed as unquestioned facts, such as the rotundity of the earth, the size and relative situation of the planets, all the elementary principles of the natural sciences as usually taught in the schools throughout the civilized world. I see no reason why these should not be appealed to in the first instance as unquestioned truths. If the opposing party denies their correctness he should be expected to give his reasons, to show the fallacy of that principle of science which has received the common assent of mankind.

6. For an example, if you should assert the rotundity of the earth, that being a fact about which the learned have ceased to doubt, I should not be at liberty to simply deny that fact and call for proofs, but should be bound to give evidence that the common doctrine was erroneous, which you would afterwards reply to and defend your position. I think this rule necessary, otherwise questions would be endless.

7. I should like to have the discussion kept up regular until brought to a close, and for that purpose propose, as far as possible, to furnish about equal to two columns of the Gospel Herald per week, provided you will do the same. We shall endeavor in the publication to as much as possible issue in alternate numbers. For convenience of reference I wish you to write your arguments in paragraphs like this, and number the paragraphs. I do also most seriously hope that, after entering into this arrangement as I have, it will not be dropped (as was the Catholic discussion) by my opponent without going over the ground. I shall write very little but what I have already spoken, and would be far from writing it out unless I expected to be answered.

8. I do not know as it was expressly stipulated that you should obtain a publication of this discussion in any paper on your part; nevertheless it is but fair that you should do so if you can. From the general disposition among infidels to investigate whatever questions arise, I have no doubt you can do so. Possibly also one of the Racine papers would be open for that purpose. I wish not to be understood as dictating these terms, but as writing down what is already agreed on, and suggesting what in my opinion ought to be. If any part of it does not meet your approbation I shall be most happy to make any reasonable amendment.

9. The conclusions to which I have come on the subject of the existence of God are not the result of other men's reasonings, but of my own. My reasons were not derived from any book, publication or discourse whatever. I have read one hundred volumes of different authors on the existence of God and the divine authority of the christian religion without finding one argument that I deemed conclusive. Since seeing you I have read the first argument of real force that I ever had the pleasure of reading to prove that there is a God. This is a re-print in the Wisconsin Argus from the Democratic Review. And this is but a repetition, dressed up in better and more scientific language than I am able to use, of part of the arguments used by me in private conversations in Pittsburgh, New York and Boston two years since, and repeated in successive public lectures in Voree last winter and spring.

10. The originating of the argument is of little account compared to the validity of it, the only thing with which we need trouble ourselves. I shall not ask you to be satisfied with guess work, or common theological essays. Neither shall I build my logic on assumptions, as did Paley, Chalmers and a host of others, who have assumed that the world was created, and that it was a machine, in order to prove that it had a creator or a machinest.

11. But whatever kind of proof is always received among men on all subjects, I hold to be good on this if applicable, and to be good to the same extent as in any of the sciences. The same kind of evidence which would be good to prove the rotundity of the earth, I hold to be equally good to prove the existence of God, so far as it is applicable.

12. The testimony of one circumnavigator would go but a little way towards establishing so important a fact among a people not acquainted with it. But among an inquiring people, possessed of a good degree of general intelligence, a numerous series of voyages, made by different persons of eminent character, and in successive generations, and made public with all their facts and circumstances, would gradually work conviction in the minds of a people. And such conviction would be well grounded.

13. I do not claim that such evidence is equal to the astronomic demonstration, but it is equal to any that others than astronomers can have of the astronomic demonstrations, and is as good as the bulk of the learned men have of the great body of scientific truths to which they subscribe. It is as good as any person on earth has or can have of geographic and geologic facts, and far better than history admits of.

14. Geography, natural and political, is proved by the testimony of men. Yet its leading facts are undoubted. There probably may not be a man in the United States who has seen the city of Timbuctoo, the Chinese wall, or the sea of Aral. Who doubts their existence? Only the insane. What has produced such universal credence to facts that none of us know? Simple human testimony. The words of men who have seen them, and their words by hearsay second, third and fourth handed.

15. And this testimony has not been by any means uniform. All who had the means of knowing agree in the main point, the existence of those objects, however much they disagree in the details concerning them. Consequently all men except the merely insane believe their testimony that such places really exist, but disagree according to the several witnesses in their characteristics.

16. Believing this credence of mankind well founded, I appeal to similar evidence to prove a God. HE HAS BEEN SEEN OF MEN. In this the testimony of all mankind concurs. I shall not attempt to give the evidence in detail. It would require a re-writing of the history of the earth. Every nation under the whole heavens furnishes its quota of that mass of evidence which, if written out, would crowd libraries—the testimony of men that they have seen God. From the earliest times of which we have written records to this present, there never was one nation which did not give its share to this testimony. Neither savage tribe or civilized people has refused its contribution.

17. I do not mean that each and every individual gives his own testimony in the premises. But there have been men in every nation and among every people who said in their day and among their people that they had seen God, and conversed with him. And that fact is preserved in their histories and traditions.

18. The Mosaic account (so called) is any thing but unsupported in the premises. Nor is it backed alone by the Jewish prophets. The Egyptians, Chinese, Chaldeans, Hindoos, Phœnecians, Greeks,

Romans, Scythians, Germans, Britons and Gauls—all the ancient world—had men standing among them, of all ranks, from the king on his throne to the peasant in the hovel, who testified that they saw God and conversed with him.

19. The modern Chinese, Hindoos, Persians, Turks, Greeks, Egyptians, Italians, Germans, French, Britons and Scandinavians, all have men among them, men of learning and of good report, at this present day who assert that they have seen God, or some of the myriads of spirits in subjection to him, and in rebellion against him.

20. Among the savage nations of America, Africa, Asia and the islands of the Indian and Pacific Oceans not one people is found where similar testimony is not furnished from generation to generation. And though this testimony is often only of the seeing of some of the inferior spirits, and not of God himself, yet I doubt not it is equally in point. For if I make good the existence of a world of spirits, I think you will have no difficulty in acknowledging one superior, a Lord of the universe. Even should you take issue on that point, showing a world of supernatural beings, lays a good foundation for showing that one is supreme, that is God.

21. The existence of this testimony you will not deny. As a man of reading, acquainted with history, you are bound to acknowledge it. Is it true? CAN IT BE FALSE? Have men in all the ancient nations from China to the Pillars of Hercules, and of all ranks from the king to the beggar, and of all characters from the philosopher to the dunce, with all their national divisions and animosities, conspired together to impose a lie on their fellow men?—And have men of every faith, and of every nation, and of every age, from Abraham till myself, made their whole lives one living lie for the purpose of palming off such an imposition on our brothers, our sisters, our wives and our children? And in such a cause, with scarcely a point of unity but this, and ten thousand points of diversity, many of which have drenched the earth in blood, have such men traversed earth and sea to find fellow conspirators in the unknown isles which the covetousness of commerce and the rapacity of conquest never discovered?

22. Have sage, philosopher and statesman joined hands with jugglers, impostors and frightened fools to impose bootless lies on posterity and friends as well as strangers? And is there no truth in man, that when those nearest and dearest to them offered their lives in blood and fire to such a faith, none of these have confessed the imposture to save a father a brother or a child?

23. In all else the united testimony of those who have studied the facts is deemed sufficient and satisfactory proof. The facts of geology, the facts of astronomy, the facts of chemistry, the facts of botany, the facts of zoology, are all proved by testimony like this in kind, less in accumulation. And upon facts so proved are based the principles of those sciences. The facts were thus determined. And the principles are but deductions from them.

24. It is not necessary to give samples where masses are at hand. No man in his senses will deny that the existence of God, the Lord of the universe, a being of intelligence, motive and will, is proved by more testimony than that of Julius Cæsar. And a world of spirits is proved by more living witnesses, and has been in every generation of men, than can or ever could be adduced to prove the existence of one half the species of living animals on the earth.

25. It is but in very modern times, in times very recent, that people have been ashamed to acknowledge these things even in this country, and such a feeling is now limited to a very small portion of the earth. Our fathers and grand-fathers talked of supernatural beings seen by themselves and friends, with awe to be sure, but with as little shamefacedness as in speaking of birds, beasts or fishes of rare kinds.

26. And the time that has since elapsed has changed appearances only, not facts. Enter into the closet of your friends' hearts, open the door that shame and the fear of being called superstitious has shut, induce men to speak to you as they commune with their own hearts, and how many men will you find who have never beheld the supernatural? How many who have never been spoken to by the invisible? How many who have never been led by the intangible?

27. The world is now a vast crowd of living witnesses of the supernatural, shamed down to silence by the Atheistical doctrines of modern christianity. This truth is a spring that can never be dried up. A generation shall yet arise who, taking facts as they find them, will make religion a science, studied by as exact rules as mathematics. Then will these facts be sought for as are new discoveries in geology and astronomy. Facts well attested will be generalized. Rules be drawn from them. Man's prejudices will cease to minister to his blindness. The mouth of the seer will be opened, and the whole earth enlightened.

28. I do not flatter myself that this argument will be generally satisfactory. But I think I may safely pledge myself to make a better answer to any proof that can be made in this country of the existence of the city of St. Petersburgh, or of the Pope of Rome, than any man can make to this. Sincerely and truly,

JAMES J. STRANG.

Egyptian Mummies.—The gilding and columns upon the coffin are still fresh, and the wood of which they were constructed exhibits no indication of decay. Raise the lid! There is the body of the silent inmate preserved in perfect form. The bandages, though browned with age, are yet entire; and the mysterious writing upon the historical roll of papyrus resting upon the breast, is still legible. The head, the hair, the teeth, the arms, the legs, the hands, the feet, the skin, the bones, the sinews, are all preserved, and the whole mortal fabric is there, laid in its narrow house, wrapped in the habiliments of the grave, with all the care and neatness that friendship could dictate or art achieve. These sad but astonishing remains of a civilized and enlightened people, having, for a period of more than three thousand years, been permitted the sanctity and rest of death's sleep, are now rudely torn from their silent tombs, where they were laid by the hands of piety and affection; their coffin-shrouds sacrilegiously stripped away; their trifling trinkets filched by the spoiler, and their naked bodies crumbled and scattered to the winds by Christian hands!—American in Egypt.

☞ Did it ever occur to any one that it was more sinful to misrepresent the Mormons than others? Indeed it is. A little misrepresentation might cost us our lives. It is very sure to make us trouble. Not so with most people. That which produces but a jar on sectarians, on us calls for blood. Yet they by whom offences come, prefer to direct the shaft against us.

☞ We have unexpected good news from some of the saints in the east. We had thought the cause quite dead generally in that region, but by some means it seems to be reviving. Much is the need.

☞ The hope of happiness is a bridge woven out of sunbeams and the colors of the rainbow, which carries us over the frightful chasm of death.

☞ The deepest essence of humanity steps forth in love. True love is the mother of virtue. Nothing bad can live near it.

☞ Words have always proved themselves stronger than swords.

Romans, Scythians, Germans, Britons and Gauls—all the ancient world—had men standing among them, of all ranks, from the king on his throne to the peasant in the hovel, who testified that they saw God and conversed with him.

19. The modern Chinese, Hindoos, Persians, Turks, Greeks, Egyptians, Italians, Germans, French, Britons and Scandinavians, all have men among them, men of learning and of good report, at this present day who assert that they have seen God, or some of the myriads of spirits in subjection to him, and in rebellion against him.

20. Among the savage nations of America, Africa, Asia and the islands of the Indian and Pacific Oceans not one people is found where similar testimony is not furnished from generation to generation. And though this testimony is often only of the seeing of some of the inferior spirits, and not of God himself, yet I doubt not it is equally in point. For if I make good the existence of a world of spirits, I think you will have no difficulty in acknowledging one superior, a Lord of the universe. Even should you take issue on that point, showing a world of supernatural beings, lays a good foundation for showing that one is supreme, that is God.

21. The existence of this testimony you will not deny. As a man of reading, acquainted with history, you are bound to acknowledge it. Is it true? CAN IT BE FALSE? Have men in all the ancient nations from China to the Pillars of Hercules, and of all ranks from the king to the beggar, and of all characters from the philosopher to the dunce, with all their national divisions and animosities, conspired together to impose a lie on their fellow men?—And have men of every faith, and of every nation, and of every age, from Abraham till myself, made their whole lives one living lie for the purpose of palming off such an imposition on our brothers, our sisters, our wives and our children? And in such a cause, with scarcely a point of unity but this, and ten thousand points of diversity, many of which have drenched the earth in blood, have such men traversed earth and sea to find fellow conspirators in the unknown isles which the covetousness of commerce and the rapacity of conquest never discovered?

22. Have sage, philosopher and statesman joined hands with jugglers, impostors and frightened fools to impose bootless lies on posterity and friends as well as strangers? And is there no truth in man, that when those nearest and dearest to them offered their lives in blood and fire to such a faith, none of these have confessed the imposture to save a father a brother or a child?

23. In all else the united testimony of those who have studied the facts is deemed sufficient and satisfactory proof. The facts of geology, the facts of astronomy, the facts of chemistry, the facts of botany, the facts of zoology, are all proved by testimony like this in kind, less in accumulation. And upon facts so proved are based the principles of those sciences. The facts were thus determined. And the principles are but deductions from them.

24. It is not necessary to give samples where masses are at hand. No man in his senses will deny that the existence of God, the Lord of the universe, a being of intelligence, motive and will, is proved by more testimony than that of Julius Cæsar. And a world of spirits is proved by more living witnesses, and has been in every generation of men, than can or ever could be adduced to prove the existence of one half the species of living animals on the earth.

25. It is but in very modern times, in times very recent, that people have been ashamed to acknowledge these things even in this country, and such a feeling is now limited to a very small portion of the earth. Our fathers and grand-fathers talked of supernatural things seen by themselves and friends, with awe to be sure, but with as little shamefacedness as in speaking of birds, beasts or fishes of rare kinds.

26. And the time that has since elapsed has changed appearances only, not facts. Enter into the closet of your friends' hearts, open the door that shame and the fear of being called superstitious has shut, induce men to speak to you as they commune with their own hearts, and how many men will you find who have never beheld the supernatural? How many who have never been spoken to by the invisible? How many who have never been led by the intangible?

27. The world is now a vast crowd of living witnesses of the supernatural, shamed down to silence by the Atheistical doctrines of modern christianity. This truth is a spring that can never be dried up. A generation shall yet arise who, taking facts as they find them, will make religion a science, studied by as exact rules as mathematics. Then will these facts be sought for as are new discoveries in geology and astronomy. Facts well attested will be generalized. Rules be drawn from them. Man's prejudices will cease to minister to his blindness. The mouth of the seer will be opened, and the whole earth enlightened.

28. I do not flatter myself that this argument will be generally satisfactory. But I think I may safely pledge myself to make a better answer to any proof that can be made in this country of the existence of the city of St. Petersburgh, or of the Pope of Rome, than any man can make to this. Sincerely and truly,

JAMES J. STRANG.

Egyptian Mummies.—The gilding and columns upon the coffin are still fresh, and the wood of which they were constructed exhibits no indication of decay. Raise the lid! There is the body of the silent inmate preserved in perfect form. The bandages, though browned with age, are yet entire; and the mysterious writing upon the historical roll of papyrus resting upon the breast, is still legible. The head, the hair, the teeth, the arms, the legs, the hands, the feet, the skin, the bones, the sinews, are all preserved, and the whole mortal fabric is there, laid in its narrow house, wrapped in the habiliments of the grave, with all the care and neatness that friendship could dictate or art achieve. These sad but astonishing remains of a civilized and enlightened people, having, for a period of more than three thousand years, been permitted the sanctity and rest of death's sleep, are now rudely torn from their silent tombs, where they were laid by the hands of piety and affection; their coffin-shrouds sacrilegiously stripped away; their trifling trinkets filched by the spoiler, and their naked bodies crumbled and scattered to the winds by Christian hands!—American in Egypt.

☞ Did it ever occur to any one that it was more sinful to misrepresent the Mormons than others? Indeed it is. A little misrepresentation might cost us our lives. It is very sure to make us trouble. Not so with most people. That which produces but a jar on sectarians, on us calls for blood. Yet they by whom offences come, prefer to direct the shaft against us.

☞ We have unexpected good news from some of the saints in the east. We had thought the cause quite dead generally in that region, but by some means it seems to be reviving. Much is the need.

☞ The hope of happiness is a bridge woven out of sunbeams and the colors of the rainbow, which carries us over the frightful chasm of death.

☞ The deepest essence of humanity steps forth in love. True love is the mother of virtue. Nothing bad can live near it.

☞ Words have always proved themselves stronger than swords.

THE WALL OF CHINA.

A work on China recently published in England, says that the great wall which divides China from Tartary, is reputed to be more than 3,000 miles in length—but the real length does not exceed 1,500 miles. Its course is not always even, sometimes descending into deep valleys, at others rising to the top of lofty mountains. Its height constantly varies, being much greater in certain situations, especially in the valleys, whilst in some it does not rise higher than fifteen feet. In some parts this wall is built entirely of brick, in others of stone and brick mixed; and such is its breadth, that carriages can drive along the top with ease. The writer adds:—

I am informed that the interior of the wall was filled up with earth, and that it was built of that breadth not only for convenience in time of war, but also to facilitate the transport of materials when it was building, as it would otherwise have been impossible to carry it over steep and precipitous spots. It would, in fact, have been beneath the advanced civilization of the Chinese to build a national barrier, passing over rocks, ravines, and mountains, without providing a passage for horse and foot soldiers. Upon examining this work I was greatly astonished to find that, although it was built more than eighteen hundred years ago, it is still so perfect that it does not appear to have been finished above a century.—It is decayed only in a few places, and these dilapidations the Tartars, who are now in possession of China, do not trouble themselves to repair. They only preserve and defend the gates through which there is much traffic. Under the native Chinese government one million of soldiers where employed to guard and garrison this marvelous work.

RESPECT TO AGE.

There is a story of an occurrence at Athens, during the games in honor of a god, illustrative of the respect paid by the Lacedemonians to old age. The seats in the theatre were crowded, and an old man entering late, found no seat. Some young men beckoned him towards them and offered him a seat, but as he advanced they sat closer together, making the vacant seat farther along, and continued to do so as he approached it, so as to excite the laughter of the audience. There were departments of the theatre devoted to foreigners, and as the old man approached that of Lacedemonians, they all arose. The Athenians, with characteristic impetuosity cheered their courteous neighbors with tremendous applause, and the old man turning around remarked, "The Athenians know the right, the Lacedemonians do it."

The present age might learn a lesson from the Lacedemonians.—The politeness everywhere shown to ladies makes a poor excuse for the inattention to age. In steamboats, railroad cars, hotels, and elsewhere an old man receives but a passing glance, and it is not an unfrequent occurrence to see a man scarcely able to walk, supporting himself in a car by the back of a seat, or by a post on a steamer, for lack of the seat which a young strong man occupies near him. We saw a lady give up her seat to an old gentleman once, in such a case, and half a dozen chairs were instantly offered her by gentlmen who had remained motionless before. Americans know what is polite, if they do not practice it.—Jour. Com.

STOCK OF FOOD IN IRELAND.—The Irish Government, under the agency of the Poor-law-Board, have been making very urgent inquiries as to the actual condition at present, and future prospects of Ireland in respect to food; and the result, as committed to the Executive, may be comprised in a very short sentence, namely, "that there is barely food in the country to support the population till the first week in January."—London Globe.

☞ The Louisville correspondent of the Pittsburgh Gazette, says that on the 7th inst., Peter Roberts, a free man of color, a regularly licensed Methodist preacher, a member of the Indiana African Conference, and a Master Mason of the Philadelphia Lodge, was sold at public auction before the Court House door, in that City, for the term of one year. He was bought for $155. The offence of Roberts was a violation of the law prohibiting free negroes from remaining in the State more than thirty days. He was required to give bonds in the sum of $500, which he refused. He was afterwards released, the court deciding that the law under which he was sold, was unconstitutional.

☞ We find the following in one of our exchanges:—

"The Mormon Temple at Nauvoo has been leased, for a term of fifteen years, and is to be at once converted into a college building, and to be occupied for that purpose. The institution is to be under the patronage of the Home Mission Society."

STILL LATER.

"THE MORMON TEMPLE AT NAUVOO.—It appears that this building has not been actually purchased for a Protestant Theological and Literary Seminary, as was reported, but only the refusal of it obtained, with a view to raise the means of purchase from "Christians residing at the East." It is said to be capable of accommodating 200 students."

☞ And we give them good notice that they will be ejected about the time they get it filled up. It is not cunning to borrow a law suit.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We are about to enter upon 2 most important religious discussions, which will be published through the Herald and other papers, and believing that they will be matters of interest to the public generally, are induced to make an effort to enlarge the circulation of this paper on the present occasion. The first discussion is between prophet Strang and Mr. Edwin Burgess of Racine, and commences in this No. (31.) Prophet Strang affirms the existence of God, (as a distinct individual intellectual being,) and Mr. Burgess denies. The second is between prophet Strang and professor D. M. Graham of the Michigan Central College, and is to commence in the next No. Prophet Strang affirms that Mormonism (so called) is a dispensation from God, and professor Graham denies. Whoever will send us the names of two NEW SUBSCRIBERS and four dollars shall have the Herald one year gratis. Whoever will send us the names of TEN NEW SUBSCRIBERS and ten dollars shall have the eleventh copy gratis, and the Herald shall be sent a full year to each of the ten subscribers. These subscriptions will commence at Vol. 3, No. 31, and should be sent in as soon as possible in order to secure all the back numbers. Those who avail themselves of this opportunity will furnish themselves with a weekly paper, and the matter of two valuable books for only one dollar. JAMES J. STRANG.

BOOKS OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE & COVENANTS.

James Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has constantly on hand a large supply of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, common and pocket binding, for sale cheap, either in quantities or by the single copy.

TAILORING.

Joseph Ketcham carries on the business of Tailoring at the foot of the hill in the grove, Voree.

SHOEMAKING IN VOREE.

John D. Hartley conducts a boot and shoe shop, near the stone quarry, where customers can be accommodated on easy terms.

THE WALL OF CHINA.

A work on China recently published in England, says that the great wall which divides China from Tartary, is reputed to be more than 3,000 miles in length—but the real length does not exceed 1,500 miles. Its course is not always even, sometimes descending into deep valleys, at others rising to the top of lofty mountains. Its height constantly varies, being much greater in certain situations, especially in the valleys, whilst in some it does not rise higher than fifteen feet. In some parts this wall is built entirely of brick, in others of stone and brick mixed; and such is its breadth, that carriages can drive along the top with ease. The writer adds:—

I am informed that the interior of the wall was filled up with earth, and that it was built of that breadth not only for convenience in time of war, but also to facilitate the transport of materials when it was building, as it would otherwise have been impossible to carry it over steep and precipitous spots. It would, in fact, have been beneath the advanced civilization of the Chinese to build a national barrier, passing over rocks, ravines, and mountains, without providing a passage for horse and foot soldiers. Upon examining this work I was greatly astonished to find that, although it was built more than eighteen hundred years ago, it is still so perfect that it does not appear to have been finished above a century.—It is decayed only in a few places, and these dilapidations the Tartars, who are now in possession of China, do not trouble themselves to repair. They only preserve and defend the gates through which there is much traffic. Under the native Chinese government one million of soldiers where employed to guard and garrison this marvelous work.

RESPECT TO AGE.

There is a story of an occurrence at Athens, during the games in honor of a god, illustrative of the respect paid by the Lacedemonians to old age. The seats in the theatre were crowded, and an old man entering late, found no seat. Some young men beckoned him towards them and offered him a seat, but as he advanced they sat closer together, making the vacant seat farther along, and continued to do so as he approached it, so as to excite the laughter of the audience. There were departments of the theatre devoted to foreigners, and as the old man approached that of Lacedemonians, they all arose. The Athenians, with characteristic impetuosity cheered their courteous neighbors with tremendous applause, and the old man turning around remarked, "The Athenians know the right, the Lacedemonians do it."

The present age might learn a lesson from the Lacedemonians.—The politeness everywhere shown to ladies makes a poor excuse for the inattention to age. In steamboats, railroad cars, hotels, and elsewhere an old man receives but a passing glance, and it is not an unfrequent occurrence to see a man scarcely able to walk, supporting himself in a car by the back of a seat, or by a post on a steamer, for lack of the seat which a young strong man occupies near him. We saw a lady give up her seat to an old gentleman once in such a case, and half a dozen chairs were instantly offered her by gentlemen who had remained motionless before. Americans know what is polite, if they do not practice it.—Jour. Com.

STOCK OF FOOD IN IRELAND.—The Irish Government, under the agency of the Poor-law-Board, have been making very urgent inquiries as to the actual condition at present, and future prospects of Ireland in respect to food; and the result, as committed to the Executive, may be comprised in a very short sentence, namely, "that there is barely food in the country to support the population till the first week in January."—London Globe.

☞ The Louisville correspondent of the Pittsburgh Gazette, says that on the 7th inst., Peter Roberts, a free man of color, a regularly licensed Methodist preacher, a member of the Indiana African Conference, and a Master Mason of the Philadelphia Lodge, was sold at public auction before the Court House door, in that City, for the term of one year. He was bought for $155. The offence of Roberts was a violation of the law prohibiting free negroes from remaining in the State more than thirty days. He was required to give bonds in the sum of $500, which he refused. He was afterwards released, the court deciding that the law under which he was sold, was unconstitutional.

☞ We find the following in one of our exchanges:—

"The Mormon Temple at Nauvoo has been leased, for a term of fifteen years, and is to be at once converted into a college building, and to be occupied for that purpose. The institution is to be under the patronage of the Home Mission Society."

STILL LATER.

"THE MORMON TEMPLE AT NAUVOO.—It appears that this building has not been actually purchased for a Protestant Theological and Literary Seminary, as was reported, but only the refusal of it obtained, with a view to raise the means of purchase from "Christians residing at the East." It is said to be capable of accommodating 200 students."

☞ And we give them good notice that they will be ejected about the time they get it filled up. It is not cunning to borrow a law suit.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We are about to enter upon 2 most important religious discussions, which will be published through the Herald and other papers, and believing that they will be matters of interest to the public generally, are induced to make an effort to enlarge the circulation of this paper on the present occasion. The first discussion is between prophet Strang and Mr. Edwin Burgess of Racine, and commences in this No. (31.) Prophet Strang affirms the existence of God, (as a distinct individual intellectual being,) and Mr. Burgess denies. The second is between prophet Strang and professor D. M. Graham of the Michigan Central College, and is to commence in the next No. Prophet Strang affirms that Mormonism (so called) is a dispensation from God, and professor Graham denies. Whoever will send us the names of two NEW SUBSCRIBERS and four dollars shall have the Herald one year gratis. Whoever will send us the names of TEN NEW SUBSCRIBERS and ten dollars shall have the eleventh copy gratis, and the Herald shall be sent a full year to each of the ten subscribers. These subscriptions will commence at Vol. 3, No. 31, and should be sent in as soon as possible in order to secure all the back numbers. Those who avail themselves of this opportunity will furnish themselves with a weekly paper, and the matter of two valuable books for only one dollar. JAMES J. STRANG.

BOOKS OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE & COVENANTS.

James Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has constantly on hand a large supply of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, common and pocket binding, for sale cheap, either in quantities or by the single copy.

TAILORING.

Joseph Ketcham carries on the business of Tailoring at the foot of the hill in the grove, Voree.

SHOEMAKING IN VOREE.

John D. Hartley conducts a boot and shoe shop, near the stone quarry, where customers can be accommodated on easy terms.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 32.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. OCT. 26, 1848. [WHOLE No. 96.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 2.

Voree, October 26th, 1848.

MR. EDWIN RURGESS :—In pursuing the subject of the existence of God from where I left it at the close of my last, my next proposition is, that MAN LEARNED ARTICULATE LANGUAGE of GOD. I may not be able to make good by a regular process of logical induction that God, the Lord, was actually the schoolmaster of man who first committed articulate language to him. But I will show that that schoolmaster was a being superior to man, whose dwelling is not with us, and who, in both popular and scientific language, is called supernatural.

30. If I make good this proof, I think you will then make no question of the superiority and sovereignity of one of such beings, or of some number of them, which is the point in issue. And should you do so, I have only to pursue the investigation somewhat further in the same direction to make good that superiority.

31. MAN BY NATURE HAS NO ARTICULATE LANGUAGE. Certainly no fact is clearer than this. The child never speaks words till he hears them. He uses no words but such as are taught to him.—He speaks no language but what he learns from others. If he has no opportunity of learning of others he never speaks. If he is devoid of the faculty of hearing he never learns to speak.

32. All the animals, or at least all the domestic animals, and many not domesticated, all the superior kinds of animals, and many of the inferior, have a natural language; a language of the passions.—This language is uniform with each species. They learn it from none, but possess it by nature. No one of the species is ever without it.

33. The dog barks, howls, growls and whines. Every dog has these powers by nature. The same species of dog has them substantially alike. And he has the whole of these modes of expression and all the varieties of them without learning or hearing them from others. There is a peculiarity in the voice of the dog, when he starts the chase, when he snuffs the track, when he spies the game, when he drives him to tree or burrow, and when he triumphs over him or tastes his blood.

34. He has a growl of pleasure, a growl of fondness, a growl of anger, and a growl of defiance. And no dog in the species is destitute of it. None learn it; all possess it. Not only do all possess it, but all possess it just in the characteristic of his race and of his particular family or breed. Every hunter distinguishes the voice of each different kind of dog. And the particular passion or fact expressed by the voice and intonation of the dog.

35. The dissimilarity and unlikeness between the voice of the hound and the terrier, both used much in hunting, and constantly kenneling together, are very great. Their continual association does not produce any approximation of language, or the slightest change in the intonations of the voice. Ivneither adds to or diminishes from the language of either one intonation.

36. Take the spaniel that has never seen the light and place him with a hound possessed only of his natural habits, and the spaniel never learns one sound that belonged not to his nature. Place him where he never sees or hears another dog, and he is deficient in none. If you cross the breed the new race will have a language between the two, approximating to both, like to neither.

37. You can change the language indefinitely by changing the nature, the blood, or race, but none at all by changing the habits or instructions. These remarks are equally true of all the other animals possessed of a voice. Cows all low and bellow without being taught. Horses all neigh though they have never heard it. And to their natural knowledge of this language instruction can add nothing.

38. Man has a natural language of the same kind, rich and prolific in the expression of the passions, but barren in abstractions, generally dormant by nonuser, but lost by none, and resorted to as often as men meet who have no common articulate language.—From the new born child to decripit old age, in every age, in every country, in every clime, and of every race and family of people, there never was one individual that did not possess it.

39. The common expression of this language is in the laugh, the cry, the shout and the moan, which are the same every where. Every child must be taught to speak; none to cry. All have to learn the definition of words. All know what is meant by the laugh.—The conqueror speaks of his triumph to men of strange tongue in vain, but the shout that tells of victory is never misunderstood.—The dying man's voice articulates bootless words to those who have not learned them, but the moan and the sigh of broken limbs and crushed hearts was never mistaken. The cry of childish fear and pain is comprehended by all ears; how else could he tell his sufferings in a strange land?

40. No one has an articulate language by nature. If articulate language was natural to man, as is the language of the passions to both man and beast, he would be born with it, which no man is; or all would come to possess a uniform language at some definite stage of existence, which is not found at all; or there would be particular forms of language peculiar to particular races, which there is not.

41. The child knows no word till it has been taught. It will use any sound whatever to express any particular idea, just as the tutor pleases to teach it. The English child, placed in a Dutch family, learns and speaks the Dutch as well as a native. The Chinese child, placed in an American family, will not be possessed of one word of the language of his fathers.

42. I have been acquainted with several persons who were deaf from infancy, but whose voice was unimpaired. Not one of them had a spoken language. Not one of them had one word of spoken language. After being educated so as to be able to communicate ideas, they all agree that previous to being educated they had no idea of the use of a language or of the want of it. Is it not the clear-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 32.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, OCT. 26, 1848. [WHOLE No. 96.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS,—No. 2.

Voree, October 26th, 1848.

MR. EDWIN BURGESS:—In pursuing the subject of the existence of God from where I left it at the close of my last, my next proposition is, that MAN LEARNED ARTICULATE LANGUAGE of GOD. I may not be able to make good by a regular process of logical induction that God, the Lord, was actually the schoolmaster of man who first committed articulate language to him. But I will show that that schoolmaster was a being superior to man, whose dwelling is not with us, and who, in both popular and scientific language, is called supernatural.

30. If I make good this proof, I think you will then make no question of the superiority and sovereignity of one of such beings, or of some number of them, which is the point in issue. And should you do so, I have only to pursue the investigation somewhat further in the same direction to make good that superiority.

31. MAN BY NATURE HAS NO ARTICULATE LANGUAGE. Certainly no fact is clearer than this. The child never speaks words till he hears them. He uses no words but such as are taught to him.—He speaks no language but what he learns from others. If he has no opportunity of learning of others he never speaks. If he is devoid of the faculty of hearing he never learns to speak.

22. All the animals, or at least all the domestic animals, and many not domesticated; all the superior kinds of animals, and many of the inferior, have a natural language; a language of the passions.—This language is uniform with each species. They learn it from none, but possess it by nature. No one of the species is ever without it.

33. The dog barks, howls, growls and whines. Every dog has these powers by nature. The same species of dog has them substantially alike. And he has the whole of these modes of expression and all the varieties of them without learning or hearing them from others. There is a peculiarity in the voice of the dog, when he starts the chase, when he snuffs the track, when he spies the game, when he drives him to tree or burrow, and when he triumphs over him or tastes his blood.

34. He has a growl of pleasure, a growl of fondness, a growl of anger, and a growl of defiance. And no dog in the species is destitute of it. None learn it; all possess it. Not only do all possess it, but all possess it just in the characteristic of his race and of his particular family or breed. Every hunter distinguishes the voice of each different kind of dog. And the particular passion or fact expressed by the voice and intonation of the dog.

35. The dissimilarity and unlikeness between the voice of the hound and the terrier, both used much in hunting, and constantly kenneling together, are very great. Their continual association does not produce any approximation of language, or the slightest change in the intonations of the voice. It neither adds to or diminishes from the language of either one intonation.

36. Take the spaniel that has never seen the light and place him with a hound possessed only of his natural habits, and the spaniel never learns one sound that belonged not to his nature. Place him where he never sees or hears another dog, and he is deficient in none. If you cross the breed the new race will have a language between the two, approximating to both, like to neither.

37. You can change the language indefinitely by changing the nature, the blood, or race, but none at all by changing the habits or instructions. These remarks are equally true of all the other animals possessed of a voice. Cows all low and bellow without being taught. Horses all neigh though they have never heard it. And to their natural knowledge of this language instruction can add nothing.

38. Man has a natural language of the same kind, rich and prolific in the expression of the passions, but barren in abstractions, generally dormant by nonusee, but lost by none, and resorted to as often as men meet who have no common articulate language.—From the new born child to decripit old age, in every age, in every country, in every clime, and of every race and family of people, there never was one individual that did not possess it.

39. The common expression of this language is in the laugh, the cry, the shout and the moan, which are the same every where. Every child must be taught to speak; none to cry. All have to learn the definition of words. All know what is meant by the laugh.—The conqueror speaks of his triumph to men of strange tongue in vain, but the shout that tells of victory is never misunderstood.—The dying man's voice articulates bootless words to those who have not learned them, but the moan and the sigh of broken limbs and crushed hearts was never mistaken. The cry of childish fear and pain is comprehended by all ears; how else could he tell his sufferings in a strange land?

40. No one has an articulate language by nature. If articulate language was natural to man, as is the language of the passions to both man and beast, he would be born with it, which no man is; or all would come to possess a uniform language at some definite stage of existence, which is not found at all; or there would be particular forms of language peculiar to particular races, which there is not.

41. The child knows no word till it has been taught. It will use any sound whatever to express any particular idea, just as the tutor pleases to teach it. The English child, placed in a Dutch family, learns and speaks the Dutch as well as a native. The Chinese child, placed in an American family, will not be possessed of one word of the language of his fathers.

42. I have been acquainted with several persons who were deaf from infancy, but whose voice was unimpaired. Not one of them had a spoken language. Not one of them had one word of spoken language. After being educated so as to be able to communicate ideas, they all agree that previous to being educated they had no idea of the use of a language or of the want of it. Is it not the clearest thing in the world that if articulate language was natural, as is the language of the passions, these persons would be able to speak as well as to laugh, moan and cry.

43. There has been in various countries and in different ages instances of persons growing up to manhood with all their faculties unimpaired, but so entirely separated from the rest of mankind as to have no opportunity of learning articulate language. And every one of them have been as destitute of it as the beasts of the field.—Not many years since a wild boy was found in the swamps of Alabama, who, according to the most plausible conjecture, had been lost at the age of three years. He could not speak one word of any known language. Yet all his natural faculties were decidedly good.

44. Similar examples are of frequent occurrence. Scarcely a year passes but the newspapers bring us the account of one. And the facts in every case produce the same conclusion, that man by nature has one uniform and universal language of the passions, and that he has no articulate language. So uniform have been results thus far, that in case a wild man should be found, men would just as much expect to find him able to laugh, moan and cry as to have two ears and one mouth; and would just as little expect him to speak an articulate language, as to understand the art of printing or sculpture.

45. An eminent example of the natural inability of man to speak is found in Caspar Hausar of Nuremburg, who was imprisoned from the age of four years to the age of sixteen, during which time he never saw the face or heard the voice of man. He was possessed of natural talent of superior order, but he could neither speak or understand one word. But he could cry. That was natural lauguage. He needed none to teach him that.

46. The ancients have recorded several cases of children brought up in utter seclusion, for the purpose of determining what language they would speak, vainly supposing that there was one original language from which all were derived, and which all the untaught would speak. They spoke none. Why? Simply because they were not taught.

47. As man has never in any known instance been found in possession of articulate language, and as in millions on millions of cases he is positively known to be destitute of it, the inevitable conclusion is, that by nature he has no articulate language. Did he invent it? Could he originate it? Vain thought! There is not an instance known where he has added one articulate sound to the store with which man was found at the period of the earliest authentic records.

48. It is hardly conceivable that a man destitute of language should know the want of it. Certainly it is impossible that one who was destitute of all the arts and sciences, should see any need of a language, or have any desire to possess one. And it is not by any means conceivable that a people destitute of language should posses arts and sciences.

49. Man untaught is one of the weakest, most dependent and inefficient of all animals. Other animals, cast off in the early period of their existence, seem very well able to take care of themselves.—Man is almost sure to perish. The knowledge that nature or God has made their universal heritage, is usually sufficient to provide for all their wants. In man, even under favorable circumstances, it is barely sufficient to preserve life. Can you conceive that, placed in such circumstances, a mere untutored animal of the forest, the swamps or the prairie, more dependent and inefficient in providing the means of life than any domestic animal, man should ever have a desire for an articulate language? Or that utterly destitute of such a language, he should ever possess any such knowledge of arts and sciences as would make language desirable?

50. And can you dream of such folly as that such a being should invent a language? As well might you talk of one of the dogs or cows about the streets of Racine turning out pedagogue, with a full set of articulations and set definitions to all or at least enough to make up conversation. And the next effort of course would be to compel the rest of his fellow animals to learn from him this first art, of the use of which they could not form the slightest idea.—To believe that man originated language, you must be able to believe all this possible.

51. From whom did man derive articulate language? Not from any of the animals of the earth. None of them have it. They all have a language of the passions, as a natural power, never learned, always possessed. All know it, and none can improve one iota beyond their usual endowment. Man, subject to the same wants, and still more inefficient by nature, has also a language of the passions, about equally expressive, always possessed, never learned. And he has superadded thereto a language consisting of an immense variety of articulations, none by original endowment; all learned. He did not originate it. It is folly worse than insanity to say so. He did not derive it from any inferior animal. None possess it.—Whence came it? From the superior. From him to whom it is a positive endowment, not a transitory improvement.

52. Who is that superior? An animal similar to man, but one step above him in the scale of being? He is not fonud on the earth.—Geologists have no where discovered his fossil remains. Antiquarians discover none of the works of his hands. The pale faith of the wildest tradition has never named him. IT IS THE SUPERNATURAL. IT IS A BEING POSSESSED of INTELLIGENCE, MOTIVE and WILL, the greatest of whom we call God, the Lord, because he rules over the universe.

53. With this accords universal tradition, which every where testifies that the superior, commonly called the supernatural, can speak the articulate language, never, except in two or three rare instances, accords the same power to the inferior. In those instances it is treated as a marvel, though naturally they are not one whit behind man in it.

54. Thus philosophy accords with all tradition, and justifies the divine records. Man was made of the dust of the earth, as were the beasts or the field. But God, intending to give him dominion over them, made him in personal form like himself, that he might be respected as their ruler, and taught him the art of speaking, that he might be qualified with intelligence and knowledge for that purpose. Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

Lapeer, Sunday morning, Oct., 1848.

DEAR BRO.:—I take my pen to drop a few lines to you, not knowing whether you are dead or alive, I thought I would drop a few lines for information. I wish I could see you. There are a great many things I want to inquire about. I live quite retired, consequently do not get much information. My circumstances have caused me to be as silent as I have been. God's work is as dear to me as ever, and I mean before long to be more active in the work. I have been anxious to hear from you, but my poverty has kept me from taking your paper. I used to take Parley's New York paper, but I am so poor and have been, but I am gaining ground some.—I have been taught some things by vision of night, and dreams, which has been a great satisfaction to me. I think sometimes I should like to see you, and then I think it no use for me to try to get through, knowing my weakness and the liability to fall out by the way. I am perfectly satisfied of the work, but when I see what a falling away there has been, I think there is no use of my trying to go any further.

I wish you would write to me and tell when and where I could or can have an interview with you nearest this place. I should be est thing in the world that if articulate language was natural, as is the language of the passions, these persons would be able to speak as well as to laugh, moan and cry.

43. There has been in various countries and in different ages instances of persons growing up to manhood with all their faculties unimpaired, but so entirely separated from the rest of mankind as to have no opportunity of learning articulate language. And every one of them have been as destitute of it as the beasts of the field.—Not many years since a wild boy was found in the swamps of Alabama, who, according to the most plausible conjecture, had been lost at the age of three years. He could not speak one word of any known language. Yet all his natural faculties were decidedly good.

44. Similar examples are of frequent occurrence. Scarcely a year passes but the newspapers bring us the account of one. And the facts in every case produce the same conclusion, that man by nature has one uniform and universal language of the passions, and that he has no articulate language. So uniform have been results thus far, that in case a wild man should be found, men would just as much expect to find him able to laugh, moan and cry as to have two ears and one mouth; and would just as little expect him to speak an articulate language, as to understand the art of printing or sculpture.

45. An eminent example of the natural inability of man to speak is found in Caspar Hausar of Nuremburg, who was imprisoned from the age of four years to the age of sixteen, during which time he never saw the face or heard the voice of man. He was possessed of natural talent of superior order, but he could neither speak or understand one word. But he could cry. That was natural language. He needed none to teach him that.

46. The ancients have recorded several cases of children brought up in utter seclusion, for the purpose of determining what language they would speak, vainly supposing that there was one original language from which all were derived, and which all the untaught would speak. They spoke none. Why? Simply because they were not taught.

47. As man has never in any known instance been found in possession of articulate language, and as in millions on millions of cases he is positively known to be destitute of it, the inevitable conclusion is, that by nature he has no articulate language. Did he invent it? Could he originate it? Vain thought! There is not an instance known where he has added one articulate sound to the store with which man was found at the period of the earliest authentic records.

48. It is hardly conceivable that a man destitute of language should know the want of it. Certainly it is impossible that one who was destitute of all the arts and sciences, should see any need of a language, or have any desire to possess one. And it is not by any means conceivable that a people destitute of language should posses arts and sciences.

49. Man untaught is one of the weakest, most dependent and inefficient of all animals. Other animals, cast off in the early period of their existence seem very well able to take care of themselves.—Man is almost sure to perish. The knowledge that nature or God has made their universal heritage, is usually sufficient to provide for all their wants. In man, even under favorable circumstances, it is barely sufficient to preserve life. Can you conceive that, placed in such circumstances, a mere untutored animal of the forest, the swamps or the prairie, more dependent and inefficient in providing the means of life than any domestic animal, man should ever have a desire for an articulate language? Or that utterly destitute of such a language, he should ever possess any such knowledge of arts and sciences as would make language desirable?

50. And can you dream of such folly as that such a being should invent a language? As well might you talk of one of the dogs or cows about the streets of Racine turning out pedagogue, with a full set of articulations and set definitions to all or at least enough to make up conversation. And the next effort of course would be to compel the rest of his fellow animals to learn from him this first art, of the use of which they could not form the slightest idea.—To believe that man originated language, you must be able to believe all this possible.

51. From whom did man derive articulate language? Not from any of the animals of the earth. None of them have it. They all have a language of the passions, as a natural power, never learned, always possessed. All know it, and none can improve one iota beyond their usual endowment. Man, subject to the same wants, and still more inefficient by nature, has also a language of the passions, about equally expressive, always possessed, never learned. And he has superadded thereto a language consisting of an immense variety of articulations, none by original endowment; all learned. He did not originate it. It is folly worse than insanity to say so. He did not derive it from any inferior animal. None possess it.—Whence came it? From the superior. From him to whom it is a positive endowment, not a transitory improvement.

52. Who is that superior? An animal similar to man, but one step above him in the scale of being? He is not fonud on the earth.—Geologists have no where discovered his fossil remains. Antiquarians discover none of the works of his hands. The pale faith of the wildest tradition has never named him. IT IS THE SUPERNATURAL. IT IS A BEING POSSESSED of INTELLIGENCE, MOTIVE and WILL, the greatest of whom we call God, the Lord, because he rules over the universe.

53. With this accords universal tradition, which every where testifies that the superior, commonly called the supernatural, can speak the articulate language, never, except in two or three rare instances, accords the same power to the inferior. In those instances it is treated as a marvel, though naturally they are [illegible] behind man in it.

54. Thus philosophy accords with all tradition, and justifies the divine records. Man was made of the dust of the earth, as were the beasts or the field. But God, intending to give him dominion over them, made him in personal form like himself, that he might be respected as their ruler, and taught him the art of speaking, that he might be qualified with intelligence and knowledge for that purpose. Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

Lapeer, Sunday morning, Oct., 1848.

DEAR BRO.:—I take my pen to drop a few lines to you, not knowing whether you are dead or alive, I thought I would drop a few lines for information. I wish I could see you. There are a great many things I want to inquire about. I live quite retired, consequently do not get much information. My circumstances have caused me to be as silent as I have been. God's work is as dear to me as ever, and I mean before long to be more active in the work. I have been anxious to hear from you, but my poverty has kept me from taking your paper. I used to take Parley's New York paper, but I am so poor and have been, but I am gaining ground some.—I have been taught some things by vision of night, and dreams, which has been a great satisfaction to me. I think sometimes I should like to see you, and then I think it no use for me to try to get through, knowing my weakness and the liability to fall out by the way. I am perfectly satisfied of the work, but when I see what a falling away there has been, I think there is no use of my trying to go any further.

I wish you would write to me and tell when and where I could or can have an interview with you nearest this place. I should be glad if I was where I could administer a little to you of the things of this life, but money here is hard to be got. Robins, a Brighamite, has been here, calling for help, but got none here. He told hard tales about Voree, &c., but it did no good or harm with any one.—I don't know as you will think me worth your notice. If so, I hope you will have the charity to tell me, "for charity," says Paul, "rejoices not in iniquity, but truth." Do send me a line if you please. I am bound to gather as soon as I can to the place God has appointed, which is Voree. If any of the Elders are coming out this way send them to me. It will be a pleasure for me or my wife to administer to them as far as possible. When I lived in Nauvoo I was told that the Lord would use the saints as a miller uses wheat. First, take the bran; second, the shorts; third, the canel; fourth, the fine flour; fifth, the superfine. I think they told the truth a little in the above figure. I hope you will tell the world where the bran, &c., is put or gone. Give my love to all my old brethren.—I subscribe myself your friend, whether absent or present,

L. D. HICKEY.

N. B. Buzzard has a shovel and tongs that belong to me, and you may get them and keep them until further directions if you please, and oblige me.

L. D. H.

☞ You wrote me so before, and I endeavored to get them of Buzzard, but since he turned Brighamite, like the rest, he thinks all he gets out of you clear gain. He would not give them up. If I should pass through Michigan I would put you in the way of meeting me, but the surest course is to come here, where you can both dwell with the saints and have abundance of farms and houses with the saints. I send you a file of back papers for your information.

OPINION OF A VISITOR.

Voree is situated on White River, in the west of Racine Co., Wisconsin, and presents to the passing traveler a very delightful prospect. The river is one of the most beautiful in the west. Its banks are dry, and especially the east bank contains a very extensive quarry of white lime stone of a superior quality for building, and for many other purposes is scarcely surpassed by common marble. The prophet Strang is a man truly displaying many admirable qualifications, among which is a depth of thought seldom reached by man; a rapid speaker, eloquent and powerful in argument, and although I may not concede to the fact of his being a divinely inspired prophet, yet he is certainly a gentleman. A brief description of his residence may not be out of place. He lives in a rudely made log house, about ten feet by fourteen, one story high, containing a chest or two, two beds, common low post bedsteads, a small stove, three or four chairs, and a very intelligent and agreeable companion. The members of the church are an intelligent and industrious community, living principally in unfinished stone houses.

I never like to personate, but I must express my surprise when I was made to know John E. Page, and more so when I heard him preach. He is a very talented man, but few would think that the oracles of God should be committed to a man so uncouth in expression and manners as John E. Page. That apostates may not consider themselves slighted, I will give them a passing notice; not because they deserve it, but by way of compliment. I consider that the church has lost nothing by their withdrawing and choosing society congenial to their taste. But I must not close until I notice the well on the Hill of Promise. It is about thirty feet deep, stoned up, near six feet in diameter, and from it is drawn in abundance the best of water ever drank by man. The Voree plates, the wonder of many, I saw them and the place from whence they were taken. They are about one inch and a half by two and three-fourths, thickly covered with ancient characters of curious workmanship.—The people, especially those with whom I lodged, seem very kind and courteous to strangers. In fact Voree presents many advantages—a place where an industrious, peaceable, law-abiding people may spend their days in pleasure, and it is to be hoped that none but such will gather there.

L. D. GRAHAM, A VISITOR.

☞ There is a report here that the Temple at Nauvoo has been burnt. We have not learned the particulars, but have no reason to doubt the truth of the rumor.

☞ The news from foreign countries shows a growing warlike spirit every where, especially in Europe. There have been serious outbreaks in Ireland. But the most melancholy feature of the news is the general scarcity of provisions, and the prevalence of disease.

Spring Arbor, May 5th, 1848.

MUCH BELOVED PROPHET:—As our country presents at one view all of those discordant elements that ever caused a reform or necessitated a revolution, I have thought proper to offer a few hints to my brethren and this Gentile world, if, in your superior wisdom, you think best to give them an insertion in the Herald. Reforms and revolutions are almost co-extensive with man, and indeed they seem to be a necessity of his progressive nature. Noble spirits, quickened by Jehovah's life-infusing breath, collect the fragments of dismembered parties and harmonize discordant elements. Tyrants are confounded, and the philanthropic rejoice. Man was made for action. Objects adapted to call forth his powers abound in creation. Upon action all his hopes of happiness depend. The legitimate object of government is to secure to all of its legal subjects the privilege of the freest action. This is securing the happiness of the people in the highest sense possible to human governments.

Governments may fail of securing this object, either by adopting a narrow and partial policy, or, after adopting a good policy, by departing from it, or by not providing for demands developed by progress. By all these methods governments may, for a season, curtail the freedom of their subjects, or even oppress them, but they can never extinguish the God-given powers of man, nor destroy the objects that call them forth. Wherever these and bad governments exist, there are the elements of a reform or of a revolution. Revolutions are dreadful expedients, and seldom, if ever, secure in the highest degree the end for which they are undertaken. They nourish more Bonapartes than Washingtons. But, dreadful as they are, the history of all mankind shows they will continue the scourge of the oppressor and the avenger of the oppressed till man becomes more proficient in moral courage, or governments learn the lesson they are designed to teach. Policy then as well as humanity calls upon good men to be bold in resisting by moral means the first encroachments upon established rights, and energetic in reforming long standing abuses; for come what may, man must be free.

Our fathers, oppressed in the old world, left the endearments of home and friends for the howling wilderness. Oppression pursued them. In vain they petitioned and remonstrated. Their blood smoked upon the altar of freedom. Human rights triumphed. Our fathers laid, for the most part, the foundation of their government deep upon the rock of eternal truth. But by not securing to every loyal subject freedom, and by violating the just principles and representation, their policy was both narrow and partial. But by securing the liberty of the press, the freedom of speech, and means of easily amending the constitution, their policy was admirably adopted, not only to remove original defects, but also to provide for the demands developed by progress.

glad if I was where I could administer a little to you of the things of this life, but money here is hard to be got. Robins, a Brighamite, has been here, calling for help, but got none here. He told hard tales about Voree, &c., but it did no good or harm with any one.—I don't know as you will think me worth your notice. If so, I hope you will have the charity to tell me, "for charity," says Paul, "rejoices not in iniquity, but truth." Do send me a line if you please. I am bound to gather as soon as I can to the place God has appointed, which is Voree. If any of the Elders are coming out this way send them to me. It will be a pleasure for me or my wife to administer to them as far as possible. When I lived in Nauvoo I was told that the Lord would use the saints as a miller uses wheat. First, take the bran; second, the shorts; third, the canel; fourth, the fine flour; fifth, the superfine. I think they told the truth a little in the above figure. I hope you will tell the world where the bran, &c., is put or gone. Give my love to all my old brethren.—I subscribe myself your friend, whether absent or present,

L. D. HICKEY.

N. B. Buzzard has a shovel and tongs that belong to me, and you may get them and keep them until further directions if you please, and oblige me. L. D. H.

☞ You wrote me so before, and I endeavored to get them of Buzzard, but since he turned Brighamite, like the rest, he thinks all he gets out of you clear gain. He would not give them up. If I should pass through Michigan I would put you in the way of meeting me, but the surest course is to come here, where you can both dwell with the saints and have abundance of farms and houses with the saints. I send you a file of back papers for your information.

OPINION OF A VISITOR.

Voree is situated on White River, in the west of Racine Co., Wisconsin, and presents to the passing traveler a very delightful prospect. The river is one of the most beautiful in the west. Its banks are dry, and especially the east bank contains a very extensive quarry of white lime stone of a superior quality for building, and for many other purposes is scarcely surpassed by common marble. The prophet Strang is a man truly displaying many admirable qualifications, among which is a depth of thought seldom reached by man; a rapid speaker, eloquent and powerful in argument, and although I may not concede to the fact of his being a divinely inspired prophet, yet he is certainly a gentleman. A brief description of his residence may not be out of place. He lives in a rudely made log house, about ten feet by fourteen, one story high, containing a chest or two, two beds, common low post bedsteads, a small stove, three or four chairs, and a very intelligent and agreeable companion. The members of the church are an intelligent and industrious community, living principally in unfinished stone houses.

I never like to personate, but I must express my surprise when I was made to know John E. Page, and more so when I heard him preach. He is a very talented man, but few would think that the oracles of God should be committed to a man so uncouth in expression and manners as John E. Page. That apostates may not consider themselves slighted, I will give them a passing notice; not because they deserve it, but by way of compliment. I consider that the church has lost nothing by their withdrawing and choosing society congenial to their taste. But I must not close until I note the well on the Hill of Promise. It is about thirty feet deep, curbed up, near six feet in diameter, and from it is drawn in abundance the best of water ever drank by man. The Voree plates, the wonder of many, I saw them and the place from whence they were taken. They are about one inch and a half by two and three-fourths, thickly covered with ancient characters of curious workmanship.—The people, especially those with whom I lodged, seem very kind and courteous to strangers. In fact Voree presents many advantages—a place where an industrious, peaceable, law-abiding people may spend their days in pleasure, and it is to be hoped that none but such will gather there. L. D. GRAHAM, A VISITOR.

☞ There is a report here that the Temple at Nauvoo has been burnt. We have not learned the particulars, but have no reason to doubt the truth of the rumor.

☞ The news from foreign countries shows a growing warlike spirit every where, especially in Europe. There have been serious outbreaks in Ireland. But the most melancholy feature of the news is the general scarcity of provisions, and the prevalence of disease.

Spring Arbor, May 5th, 1848.

MUCH BELOVED PROPHET:—As our country presents at one view all of those discordant elements that ever caused a reform or necessitated a revolution, I have thought proper to offer a few hints to my brethren and this Gentile world, if, in your superior wisdom, you think best to give them an insertion in the Herald. Reforms and revolutions are almost co-extensive with man, and indeed they seem to be a necessity of his progressive nature. Noble spirits, quickened by Jehovah's life-infusing breath, collect the fragments of dismembered parties and harmonize discordant elements. Tyrants are confounded, and the philanthropic rejoice. Man was made for action. Objects adapted to call forth his powers abound in creation. Upon action all his hopes of happiness depend. The legitimate object of government is to secure to all of its legal subjects the privilege of the freest action. This is securing the happiness of the people in the highest sense possible to human governments.

Governments may fail of securing this object, either by adopting a narrow and partial policy, or, after adopting a good policy, by departing from it, or by not providing for demands developed by progress. By all these methods governments may, for a season, curtail the freedom of their subjects, or even oppress them, but they can never extinguish the God-given powers of man, nor destroy the objects that call them forth. Wherever these and bad governments exist, there are the elements of a reform or of a revolution. Revolutions are dreadful expedients, and seldom, if ever, secure in the highest degree the end for which they are undertaken. They nourish more Bonapartes than Washingtons. But, dreadful as they are, the history of all mankind shows they will continue the scourge of the oppressor and the avenger of the oppressed till man becomes more proficient in moral courage, or governments learn the lesson they are designed to teach. Policy then as well as humanity calls upon good men to be bold in resisting by moral means the first encroachments upon established rights, and energetic in reforming long standing abuses; for come what may, man must be free.

Our fathers, oppressed in the old world, left the endearments of home and friends for the howling wilderness. Oppression pursued them. In vain they petitioned and remonstrated. Their blood smoked upon the altar of freedom. Human rights triumphed. Our fathers laid, for the most part, the foundation of their government deep upon the rock of eternal truth. But by not securing to every loyal subject freedom, and by violating the just principles and representation, their policy was both narrow and partial. But by securing the liberty of the press, the freedom of speech, and means of easily amending the constitution, their policy was admirably adopted, not only to remove original defects, but also to provide for the demands developed by progress.

Though our fathers may have been mistaken in their policy, the spirit of the largest freedom glowed in their bosoms, and fondly they cherished the hope of the speedy emancipation of universal man. The love of liberty yet glows in the American bosom. But does that generous love of truth and liberty for their own sakes actuate the present administrators of our government and many of those breath made men of our times? No! They cherish as the corner stone of republicanism an institution which cripples our commerce, burdens us with heavy debts, slights our petitions, closes our mouths, sets at naught every domestic tie, dooms the mind to perpetual ignorance, annihilates the idea of obligation, and by abolishing the decalogue seeks to set a limit to the empire of Jehovah.

To sustain this impious institution, wars are declared, greedy hands stretched out for foreign aid, villainous treaties are made, to support which our troops are ordered to the frontiers, and our squadrons sent to awe the nations we insult. Thus it is manifest that our government not only at first adopted some wrong principles, but has since violated some of its best principles, among which are those by which the original defects might be remedied and provisions made for all growing demands. Hence in it are virtually all the elements which ever demanded a reform, or necessitated a revolution. One or the other must come. Already the patriot, as he looks upon his country disgraced, and beholds the fair temple of liberty desecrated, torn down and the fragments scattered, hangs his harp mute upon the willow and ceases to sing the song of liberty. He gives vent to his grief by the deep sigh and the falling tear. Liberty appears to him by the blood of his fathers, by the departed glory of his country, by his own temple desecrated, by his own rights betrayed, by all the horrors of a bloody war, by his love of the union, in the name of all that is dear to humanity and sacred to God.

She calls upon him to reform his country and save her from a bloody revolution. He heeds the beseeching call. He lifts high his hand and invokes the great God of liberty to palsy his arm and make forever mute his tongue if he strikes his harp or tunes his voice to the song of liberty till his country is freed from oppression and the just reproach of heaven-daring hypocrisy. He gives a blast to the trump of freedom—patriots by thousands gather round him. They sacrifice their party and their all upon the altar of their country's good—they consecrate themselves to their God, and would fain withdraw themselves from the rest of mankind, and seek to dwell in peace with naught but the pure love of God to observe.—But, hark! a cry comes, "elevate to the highest station one man and all shall be well. Your slighted petitions shall be heard, and all your wrongs redressed!" Who are these proffered benefactors? The most efficient supporters of the vile system whence chiefly flows our miseries. This is adding insult to injury. This is Charles I. making pledges to the Long Parliament, after he has a thousand times violated the sanctity of a king's oath. This is George III. making peace with the colonies by sending forth his fleets and armies.

Ah! the dearest privilege that a man can enjoy is that of bearing before all men an uncompromising testimony against freemen's voting. We do not say for men who transgress the most manifest principle of morality and openly contemn the authority of God, but those who disregard the plainest maxims of civil law, and recklessly before a free nation and in the face of high heaven trample upon every inalienable right of man.

A people that can long do this are fast hastening their necks for some despotic yoke. Will the saints of God longer do this? Will they place in the hand of a tyrant a rod for their own backs? No, no; eternally no. But some talk about going to the polls and there seek to reform our country. But do not the Gentile institutions all speak in language not to be mistaken that this cannot be done?—Why, it is said by their great men that all is well. A continual cry of peace, peace, and there is no peace. To say this, is to call the declaration of independence a rhetorical flourish. To say our rights are trampled upon, mobbing is not an evil, that to close our mouths is right, to slight our petitions is just, that freedom is merely an idea, to do this is to imitate Charles I., who stayed by evasion the storm of mitigation till it burst with violence, which his blood alone could appease. To refuse to hear the voice of Americans, calling for a practical regard of the self-evident truths of the glorious declaration, is only to close the volcanoe's crater; the hidden fires thereby give strength. Earthquakes forebode the coming doom; the explosion comes; the whole mountain is torn from its foundation, and the earth trembles to the centre.

The uprising spirit of crushed humanity may rend nations, but a thousand despotisms can never chain the spirit of freedom. With our nation the crisis has come, as with Ninevah. A thorough and radical reform alone can save her from desolation and blood. The stamp act is passed. The tea tax is laid. The riots have ceased. Lexington, Bunker Hill and Saratoga are soon to be re-fought.—The watch word has already been given to the only true Israel of our God. Let a word to the wise be sufficient. Gather yourselves together that I may protect you under my wings, for the destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way, and in keeping the commandments of God alone there is safety.

S. GRAHAM.

DIVINE AUTHORITY OF MORMONISM.

EXPLANATORY NOTE.

Something over a year since a challenge was given out through the Gospel Herald (Reveille) for discussion on almost any point of faith wherein the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (commonly called Mormons) disagree with other people, signed by James J. Strang and John E. Page. For a long time they received no response except from Mr. Charles Rafferty of Wellsville, Ohio, a learned gentleman of clerical education, and of the Roman Catholic faith. Mr. Strang replied to Mr. Rafferty's communication in a series of articles published through the Herald, which paper was held open to Mr. Rafferty, but he declined pursuing the subject further.

At the last spring Conference of the Latter Day Saints Elder Samuel Graham presented a proposition from Professor D. M. Graham of the Michigan Central College to enter into a discussion for the purpose of examining the foundations of Mormonism, with an intimation that he wished to meet an opponent who would be able to do justice to that faith. The Conference were pleased to approve of holding such a discussion, and passed resolutions to that effect. It was then expected that the discussion would take place during the summer vacation at the College, and a correspondence was opened between Mr. Strang and Professor Graham to make the preliminary arrangements. Circumstances have prevented this, and recently Elder Samuel Graham, after conversing with Professor Graham, called on Mr. Strang and arranged for the discussion to come off through the papers, Gospel Herald and Morning Star.—He and Professor Graham had also fixed on the question to be discussed, in these words: "Is the Book of Mormon a divinely inspired record?" which, it will be perceived, Mr. Strang proposes to change for the more comprehensive one: "Is Mormonism (so called) a dispensation from God?" By these means it has happened that the discussion is opened without preliminaries absolutely agreed on between the parties. Still it is believed that there is an actual agreement between them in the matter, and that the discussion will be regularly continued until properly closed. [Ed.

Though our fathers may have been mistaken in their policy, the spirit of the largest freedom glowed in their bosoms, and fondly they cherished the hope of the speedy emancipation of universal man. The love of liberty yet glows in the American bosom. But does that generous love of truth and liberty for their own sakes actuate the present administrators of our government and many of those breath made men of our times? No! They cherish as the corner stone of republicanism an institution which cripples our commerce, burdens us with heavy debts, slights our petitions, closes our mouths, sets at naught every domestic tie, dooms the mind to perpetual ignorance, annihilates the idea of obligation, and by abolishing the decalogue seeks to set a limit to the empire of Jehovah.

To sustain this impious institution, wars are declared, greedy hands stretched out for foreign aid, villainous treaties are made, to support which our troops are ordered to the frontiers, and our squadrons sent to awe the nations we insult. Thus it is manifest that our government not only at first adopted some wrong principles, but has since violated some of its best principles, among which are those by which the original defects might be remedied and provisions made for all growing [illegible]. Here in it are virtually all the elements which ever dem[illegible] or necessitated a revolution. One or the other must [illegible]. Already the patriot, as he looks upon his country disgraced, [illegible] beholds the fair temple of liberty desecrated, torn down and the fragments scattered, hangs his harp mute upon the willow and ceases to sing the song of liberty. He gives vent to his grief by the deep sigh and the falling tear. Liberty appears to him by the blood of his fathers, by the departed glory of his country, by his own temple desecrated, by his own rights betrayed, by all the horrors of a bloody war, by his love of the union, in the name of all that is dear to humanity and sacred to God.

She calls upon him to reform his country and save her from a bloody revolution. He heeds the beseeching call. He lifts high his hand and invokes the great God of liberty to palsy his arm and make forever mute his tongue if he strikes his harp or tunes his voice to the song of liberty till his country is freed from oppression and the just reproach of heaven-daring hypocrisy. He gives a blast to the trump of freedom—patriots by thousands gather round him. They sacrifice their party and their all upon the altar of their country's good—they consecrate themselves to their God, and would fain withdraw themselves from the rest of mankind, and seek to dwell in peace with naught but the pure love of God to observe.—But, hark! a cry comes, "elevate to the highest station one man and all shall be well. Your slighted petitions shall be heard, and all your wrongs redressed!" Who are these proffered benefactors? The most efficient supporters of the vile system whence chiefly flows our miseries. This is adding insult to injury. This is Charles I. making pledges to the Long Parliament, after he has a thousand times violated the sanctity of a king's oath. This is George III. making peace with the colonies by sending forth his fleets and armies.

Ah! the dearest privilege that a man can enjoy is that of bearing before all men an uncompromising testimony against freemen's vo[illegible]ing. We do not say for men who transgress the most manifest principle of morality and openly contemn the authority of God, but those who disregard the plainest maxims of civil law, and recklessly before a free nation and in the face of high heaven trample upon every inalienable right of man.

A people that can long do this are fast hastening their necks for some despotic yoke. Will the saints of God longer do this? Will they place in the hand of a tyrant a rod for their own backs? No, no; eternally no. But some talk about going to the polls and there seek to reform our country. But do not the Gentile institutions all speak in language not to be mistaken that this cannot be done?—Why, it is said by their great men that all is well. A continual cry of peace, peace, and there is no peace. To say this, is to call the declaration of independence a rhetorical flourish. To say our rights are trampled upon, mobbing is not an evil, that to close our mouths is right, to slight our petitions is just, that freedom is merely an idea, to do this is to imitate Charles I, who stayed by evasion the storm of mitigation till it burst with violence, which his blood alone could appease. To refuse to hear the voice of Americans, calling for a practical regard of the self-evident truths of the glorious declaration, is only to close the volcanoe's crater; the hidden fires thereby give strength. Earthquakes forebode the coming doom; the explosion comes; the whole mountain is torn from its foundation, and the earth trembles to the centre.

The uprising spirit of crushed humanity may rend nations, but a thousand despotisms can never chain the spirit of freedom. With our nation the crisis has come, as with Ninevah. A thorough and radical reform alone can save her from desolation and blood. The stamp act is passed. The tea tax is laid. The riots have ceased. Lexington, Bunker Hill and Saratoga are soon to be re-fought.—The watch word has already been given to the only true Israel of our God. Let a word to the wise be sufficient. Gather yourselves together that I may protect you under my wings, for the destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way, and in keeping the commandments of God alone there is safety.

S. GRAHAM.

DIVINE AUTHORITY OF MORMONISM.*

EXPLANATORY NOTE.

Something over a year since a challenge was given out through the Gospel Herald (Nauvoo) for discussion on [illegible] points of faith wherein the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints (commonly called Mormons) disagree with other people, signed by James J. Strang and John E. Page. For a long time they received no response except from Mr. Charles Rafferty of Wellsville, Ohio, a learned gentleman of clerical education, and of the Roman Catholic faith. Mr. Strang replied to Mr. Rafferty's communication in a series of articles published through the Herald, which paper was held open to Mr. Rafferty, but he declined pursuing the subject further.

At the last spring Conference of the Latter Day Saints Elder Samuel Graham presented a proposition from Professor D. M. Graham of the Michigan Central College to enter into a discussion for the purpose of examining the foundations of Mormonism, with an intimation that he wished to meet an opponent who would be able to do justice to that faith. The Conference were pleased to approve of holding such a discussion, and passed resolutions to this effect. It was then expected that the discussion would take place during the summer vacation at the College, and a correspondence was opened between Mr. Strang and Professor Graham to make the preliminary arrangements. Circumstances have prevented this, and recently Elder Samuel Graham, after conversing with Professor Graham, called on Mr. Strang and arranged for the discussion to come off through the papers, Gospel Herald and Morning Star.—He and Professor Graham had also fixed on the question to be discussed, in these words: "Is the Book of Mormon a divinely inspired record?" which, it will be perceived, Mr. Strang proposes to change for the more comprehensive one: "Is Mormonism (so called) a dispensation from God?" By these means it has happened that the discussion is opened without preliminaries absolutely agreed on between the parties. Still it is believed that there is an actual agreement between them in the matter, and that the discussion will be regularly continued until properly closed. [Ed.

PRELIMINARIES.

Voree, October 16th, 1848.

DEAR SIR:—I have just had a conversation with brother Samuel Graham concerning the statement of the point to be discussed between us. The question as fixed upon between you and brother Graham I think does not strictly raise the true issue. I do not undertake to show that the mere historic parts of the Book of Mormon is divinely inspired, and translated by gift and power of God.—But I do undertake to show that Mormonism, so called, is a dispensation from God. This is what I affirm. This is what I understand you to deny.

2. He informs me that it is finally agreed that the discussion be by publication through the papers, if I concur, which I do, though it is not near as convenient to me, but I think it far better for the public.

3. He also informs me that you undertake to publish it through the Morning Star published at Dover, N. H., expecting me to publish it through the Gospel Herald, puplished in this place. This is satisfactory. After this publication the copy right will belong to us equally.

4. I suggest that, for convenience of reference, the entire discussion be arranged in paragraphs of about one hundred words, and the paragraphs numbered. Such a division would not conform to the natural division of the subject, but would not produce any confusion in it, and would save much labor in reference.

5. I suggest further that some certain amount of printed matter be fixed on as the length of each article. The manuscript could not be made to conform to it very exact, but when it appeared that one had occupied more than his regular space, he would be admonished to be more brief. The articles could be made to average, if they did not conform to the measurement. And by this means we should have even space.

6. As I hold the affirmative, I shall expect to open and close. I shall commence before I have time to hear from you. If there is any thing in these preliminaries which is not agreeable to you I shall be willing to amend, but shall commence as though they were agreed on, and shall number the paragraphs in a continuous series, expecting yours to be also numbered in a separate series.

7. What amount of matter do you think would be proper for each number? I suggest four columns of the Herald, leaded. I understand brother Graham that you expect to furnish an article once a fortnight. I will do the same as much as possible, and thus keep them alternate, one article in every paper.

8. I think too it would be convenient for you to send the manuscript here, so that both sets would be first published in the Herald and republished in the Star. Of course you will exercise your pleasure in this. I will furnish you with as many copies of the Herald as you wish for, and the same to the Star office, and will also send you proof sheets as soon as they are off the press if you wish.

9. We can tell how soon the discussion ought to close after we have got well into it, and it would be well then to fix upon its limits. Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

MR. STRANG TO PROFESSOR GRAHAM.—No. 1.

Voree, October 26th, 1848.

PROFESSOR GRAHAM:—SIR,—In opening the discussion of the question whether God has given a dispensation of the gospel to the saints of the last days, called Mormons, with so respectable a controversialist as yourself for opponent, and under so favorable circumstances for the development of truth, I confess a degree of personal satisfaction seldom realized.

11. Always believing that truth was a hearty child, perfectly safe out of doors, and abundantly able to take care of himself in any company, I have constantly sought discussion on all questions affecting the welfare and happiness of mankind. In this spirit and this confidence I enter upon this controversy, taking upon myself the necessity of toil which no personal considerations would ever induce me to undergo.

12. I have so often entered into engagements for discussions with various persons who have subsequently receded from their engagements, that it gives me peculiar satisfaction to enter the lists with one whose standing and character is a sure guarantee that he will faithfully defend his positions, make the most of his points, and may, I hope, if shown in error, yield to the truth.

13. Among the various evidences which may be adduced to show that Mormonism (so called) is a dispensation from God, I shall commence with this: THAT IT ALONE OF ALL CHURCHES ON EARTH IS POSSESSED OF THE TRUE GOSPEL. In showing this I shall proceed to state what the gospel is, as taught and practiced among the Latter Day Saints, (called Mormons.)—I shall then show from the New Testament what the true gospel is, as taught by Christ, his Apostles and immediate followers. Finally, by way of contrast, I will show what gospels are taught in the various other churches.

14. "The things that are of God, no man knoweth, but the spirit of God. Now we have received not the spirit of this world, but the spirit that is of God, that we may know the things that are given us from God; which things also we speak, not in the learned words of human wisdom, but in the doctrine of the spirit, comparing things spiritual with spiritual."

15. Paul said expressly to the Galatian saints: "Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you, than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." I shall not take the trouble to show that Paul preached the same gospel as Christ and the other Apostles, but assuming that they all preached one gospel, shall refer to their several writings to show what that gospel is. Before doing that I proceed to state the gospel as the Lord Jesus Christ has committed it to us, and as it is preached in the church of the saints, called Mormons.

16. Christ came in the flesh, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Judah, and of the house and lineage of David, according to the prophets; was crucified, and died for the redemption of mankind; that he rose from the dead, by means of which he has brought the resurrection of the body to all mankind,

17. And that whosoever will be saved must have faith towards God; that he must repent of works of wickedness, and be baptized for the remission of sins; that, after being baptized, by the laying on of hands of the Elders he receives the Holy Spirit, by means of which he is enlightened in spiritual things; and abiding and continuing in obedience to God, he is made a son of God, will come forth in the first resurrection, a thousand years before the general resurrection of all mankind, as an heir of God and a partaker of the glory of his kingdom.

18. To make these things perfectly unambiguous, I state in different words: That baptism, unless it be preceded by both faith and repentance, is of no avail; and that without baptism (immersion) no man can be saved. Such are a few of the leading principles of the gospel, as taught and practiced by the Latter Day Saints, called Mormons. I proceed to compare it with the gospel as taught by Christ and his Apostles and immediate followers.

19. Christ, in giving their mission to his Apostles, disclosed these principles: 1st. That he had received all power in heaven and on earth. Matt. xxviii. 18. John xx. 23. 2d. That he sent them to preach throughout the earth. Matt. xxviii. 19. Mark xvi. 15. Luke xxiv. 47. 3d. That they were to preach faith. Mark xvi. 16. Heb. xi. 6. 4th. That they were to preach repentance. Luke xxiv.

PRELIMINARIES.

Voree, October 16th, 1848.

Dear Sir:—I have just had a conversation with brother Samuel Graham concerning the statement of the point to be discussed between us. The question as fixed upon between you and brother Graham I think does not strictly raise the true issue. I do not undertake to show that the mere historic parts of the Book of Mormon is divinely inspired, and translated by gift and power of God.—But I do undertake to show that Mormonism, so called, is a dispensation from God. This is what I affirm. This is what I understand you to deny.

2. He informs me that it is finally agreed that the discussion be by publication through the papers, if I concur, which I do, though it is not near as convenient to me, but I think it far better for the public.

3. He also informs me that you undertake to publish it through the Morning Star published at Dover, N. H., expecting me to publish it through the Gospel Herald, puplished in this place. This is satisfactory. After this publication the copy right will belong to us equally.

4. I suggest that, for convenience of reference, the entire discussion be arranged in paragraphs of about one hundred words, and the paragraphs numbered. Such a division would not conform to the natural division of the subject, but would not produce any confusion in it, and would save much labor in reference.

5. I suggest further that some certain amount of printed matter be fixed on as the length of each article. The manuscript could not be made to conform to it very exact, but when it appeared that one had occupied more than his regular space, he would be admonished to be more brief. The articles could be made to average, if they did not conform to the measurement. And by this means we should have even space.

6. As I hold the affirmative, I shall expect to open and close. I shall commence before I have time to hear from you. If there is any thing in these preliminaries which is not agreeable to you I shall be willing to amend, but shall commence as though they were agreed on, and shall number the paragraphs in a continuous series, expecting yours to be also numbered in a separate series.

7. What amount of matter do you think would be proper for each number? I suggest four columns of the Herald, leaded. I understand brother Graham that you expect to furnish an article once a fortnight. I will do the same as much as possible, and thus keep them alternate, one article in every paper.

8. I think too it would be convenient for you to send the manuscript here, so that both sets would be first published in the Herald and republished in the Star. Of course you will exercise your pleasure in this. I will furnish you with as many copies of the Herald as you wish for, and the same to the Star office, and will also send you proof sheets as soon as they are off the press if you wish.

9. We can tell how soon the discussion ought to close after we have got well into it, and it would be well then to fix upon its limits.

Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

MR. STRANG TO PROFESSOR GRAHAM.—No. 1.

Voree, October 26th, 1848.

Professor Graham:—Sir,—In opening the discussion of the question whether God has given a dispensation of the gospel to the saints of the last days, called Mormons, with so respectable a controversialist as yourself for opponent, and under so favorable circumstances for the development of truth, I confess a degree of personal satisfaction seldom realized.

11. Always believing that truth was a hearty child, perfectly safe out of doors, and abundantly able to take care of himself in any company, I have constantly sought discussion on all questions affecting the welfare and happiness of mankind. In this spirit and this confidence I enter upon this controversy, taking upon myself the necessity of toil which no personal considerations would ever induce me to undergo.

12. I have so often entered into engagements for discussions with various persons who have subsequently receded from their engagements, that it gives me peculiar satisfaction to enter the lists with one whose standing and character is a sure guarantee that he will faithfully defend his positions, make the most of his points, and may, I hope, if shown in error, yield to the truth.

13. Among the various evidences which may be adduced to show that Mormonism (so called) is a dispensation from God, I shall commence with this: THAT IT ALONE OF ALL CHURCHES ON EARTH IS POSSESSED OF THE TRUE GOSPEL. In showing this I shall proceed to state what the gospel is, as taught and practiced among the Latter Day Saints, (called Mormons.)—I shall then show from the New Testament what the true gospel is, as taught by Christ, his Apostles and immediate followers. Finally, by way of contrast, I will show what gospels are taught in the various other churches.

14. "The things that are of God, no man knoweth, but the spirit of God. Now we have received not the spirit of this world, but the spirit that is of God, that we may know the things that are given us from God; which things also we speak, not in the learned words of human wisdom, but in the doctrine of the spirit, comparing things spiritual with spiritual."

15. Paul said expressly to the Galatian saints: "Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you, than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." I shall not take the trouble to show that Paul preached the same gospel as Christ and the other Apostles, but assuming that they all preached one gospel, shall refer to their several writings to show what that gospel is. Before doing that I proceed to state the gospel as the Lord Jesus Christ has committed it to us, and as it is preached in the church of the saints, called Mormons.

16. Christ came in the flesh, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Judah, and of the house and lineage of David, according to the prophets; was crucified, and died for the redemption of mankind; that he rose from the dead, by means of which he has brought the resurrection of the body to all mankind.

17. And that whosoever will be saved must have faith towards God; that he must repent of works of wickedness, and be baptized for the remission of sins; that, after being baptized, by the laying on of hands of the Elders he receives the Holy Spirit, by means of which he is enlightened in spiritual things; and abiding and continuing in obedience to God, he is made a son of God, will come forth in the first resurrection, a thousand years before the general resurrection of all mankind, as an heir of God and a partaker of the glory of his kingdom.

18. To make these things perfectly unambiguous, I state in different words: That baptism, unless it be preceded by both faith and repentance, is of no avail; and that without baptism (immersion) no man can be saved. Such are a few of the leading principles of the gospel, as taught and practiced by the Latter Day Saints, called Mormons. I proceed to compare it with the gospel as taught by Christ and his Apostles and immediate followers.

19. Christ, in giving their mission to his Apostles, disclosed these principles: 1st. That he had received all power in heaven and on earth. Matt. xxviii. 18. John xx. 23. 2d. That he sent them to preach throughout the earth. Matt. xxviii. 19. Mark xvi. 15. Luke xxiv. 47. 3d. That they were to preach faith. Mark xvi. 16. Heb. xi. 6. 4th. That they were to preach repentance. Luke xxiv.

47. 5th. That they were to baptize their disciples. Matt. xxviii. 19. Mark xvi. 16. Luke xxiv. 47. 6th. That the believers of this gospel so preached were to be distinguished by certain signs, peculiar to the church of God. Mark xvi. 17, 18.

20. An essential requisite to the possession of the gospel is, that the preacher be sent by the authority of God; as Paul says, "how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent." Rom. x. 14, 15. And no man taketh this honor (the priesthood or the authority to administer in the name of God) unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron, Heb. v. 4, who was called by revelation of God by the mouth of his authorized revelator and mouth-piece, to wit, the prophet Moses. Therefore those who pretend to preach the gospel, not having received a dispensation of it to themselves by revelation from God, and not authorized to administer any of its ordinances, cannot preach Christ unto the salvation of any.

21. So entirely requisite is this authority from God that Christ himself did not assume to preach the gospel until he received his priesthood from God. At the age of twelve he was found with extraordinary wisdom disputing with the lawyers and doctors, but till he arrived to thirty the preaching of the gospel was left to John and his disciples, when Christ received, first, baptism, Matt. iii. 15, then priesthood, do 16, 17. Heb. i. 4, 5, 6, and afterward went to preaching the gospel. Nor did he either assume his priesthood as do some, or receive it from man as do more, but had it directly from God. "So Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest, but he that said unto him, thou art my son, to day have I begotten thee," glorified him by making him an high priest. Heb. v. 5.

22. So much I deem it proper to say in this place of the necessity of authority by revelation from God, in order to a possession of the gospel at all. And if I am right, it follows that no church with which I am acquainted except the Latter Day Saints, called Mormons, have the gospel. The Roman Catholic church profess to have a regular succession of ordinations by the hands of those in authority before them, but they make no pretense to a call by revelation.—Protestants claim a succession of ordination only a brief time, but universally disclaim all revelation since the canon of scripture was closed, and thereby have estopped themselves from pretending that either they or their predecessors were called by revelation.

23. It may seem superfluous to enter upon any proof that faith is so essential a principle of the gospel that without it there is no salvation. Indeed, after all that has been said about justification by faith alone, it is usually presumed that many of the Protestant churches are in possession of at least this principle of the gospel. An examination of the scriptures will I believe show them totally destitute of it, as an examination of the facts will show the Mormons in possession of it.

24. Paul, writing to one of the churches of his planting, 1 Cor. xii. 4, says: "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same spirit. 5. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. 6. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. 7. But the manifestation of the spirit is given to every man to profit withal. 8. For to one is given by the spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same spirit; 9. To another FAITH BY THE SAME SPIRIT; to another the GIFTS OF HEALING BY THE SAME SPIRIT; 10. To another the WORKING of MIRACLES; to another PROPHECY; to another DISCERNING of SPIRITS; to another DIVERS kinds of TONGUES; to another the INTERPRETATION of TONGUES: 11. But ALL THESE WORKETH that one and the self-same spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will."

25. By which it clearly appears that gospel faith, such as Paul recognizes as genuine, is not only the gift of God, Eph. ii. 8, but that it is given by the same spirit, which also distributes among those who are subject to his operations healings, miracles, discernings, tongues, interpretations and prophecies, as well as wisdom and knowledge. Need I ask you whether the operations of that spirit are found in any church except the Mormon? Here is an enumeration of nine spiritual gifts, all distributed by one spirit, among those who are subject to his operations; and the whole Protestant world at least disclaim the possession of six at least of those gifts. How can they claim the seventh? If they are the people among whom that spirit distributes all these gifts severally as he will, why is it that he gives none of them either healing, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues or interpretations? Is not their disclaimer of these six gifts of that same spirit evidence that they have no gifts from him? If he distributes all these gifts among a people, how is it that six of the nine are never found in a single instance in the entire Protestant community?

26. These considerations are, to my mind, conclusive that gospel faith is not found among them. On the contrary, in the Mormon church, with a priesthood called by revelation of God, faith is found, which is not merely historic, founded on reading, the gift of education or tradition, but is truly the gift of God, distributed among us by the spirit, which also distributes among us wisdom, knowledge, healings, miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues and interpretations.

27. So essential to salvation is this faith, that Paul says: without faith it is impossible to please God; Heb. xi. 6; and Jesus Christ, in still stronger terms: He that believeth not shall be damned. Mark xvi. 16. Not only is the genuineness of this faith witnessed by its being accompanied by the other gifts, and its falsity by the absence of them, but also by the work which it accomplishes. The eleventh chapter of Hebrews is made up of an enumeration of the works accomplished by the faith formerly given to the saints. The same kind of works are accomplished by it among the people called Mormons now. Where else are they found in christendom?

28. Moreover Christ first said, preach the gospel to every creature; and then, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.—Believeth what? Presbyterianism, Methodism, Baptistism or Campbellism? Are those that believe either of these isms promised salvation? Or is the promise of salvation confined to those that believe the gospel which he sent the Apostles to preach?

29. The various Protestant denominations acknowledge each other as christian brethren; as members of the church of God. They each confess that salvation can be attained by obedience to the precepts, ordinances and administrations of the others. Yet among them they preach various gospels. Every one has its own creed or confession of faith, written or unwritten, to which members must conform to have a standing among them. Yet they confess salvation in other churches, having different creeds and confessions of faith.

30. As a Protestant and a Baptist, what interpretation do you put on Christ's words, "he that believeth not shall be damned?" What shall he believe? Believe the gospel? Or is it sufficient to believe the creeds, the new perverted gospels of Potestantism? The creeds being contradictory, some must be false. Yet the Protestant world allows faith in either to be sufficient for salvation. "He that believeth not shall be damned." But will believing false doctrines answer for salvation? If it will not, all Protestantism is unchurched, and out of the pale of the promises of God. If it will, then an error believed is as good as the truth without hypocrisy.

31. Thus it appears that the Protestant churches, by disclaiming the possession of the other gifts distributed by the same spirit, which gives genuine faith, have in effect disclaimed gospel faith.—

47. 5th. That they were to baptize their disciples. Matt. xxviii. 19. Mark xvi. 16. Luke xxiv. 47. 6th. That the believers of this gospel so preached were to be distinguished by certain signs, peculiar to the church of God. Mark xvi. 17, 18.

20. An essential requisite to the possession of the gospel is, that the preacher be sent by the authority of God; as Paul says, "how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent." Rom. x. 14, 15. And no man taketh this honor (the priesthood or the authority to administer in the name of God) unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron, Heb. v. 4, who was called by revelation of God by the mouth of his authorized revelator and mouth-piece, to wit, the prophet Moses. Therefore those who pretend to preach the gospel, not having received a dispensation of it to themselves by revelation from God, and not authorized to administer any of its ordinances, cannot preach Christ unto the salvation of any.

21. So entirely requisite is this authority from God that Christ himself did not assume to preach the gospel until he received his priesthood from God. At the age of twelve he was found with extraordinary wisdom disputing with the lawyers and doctors, but till he arrived to thirty the preaching of the gospel was left to John and his disciples, when Christ received, first, baptism, Matt. iii. 15, then priesthood, do 16, 17. Heb. i. 4, 5, 6, and afterward went to preaching the gospel. Nor did he either assume his priesthood as do some, or receive it from man as do more, but had it directly from God. "So Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest, but he that said unto him, thou art my son, to day have I begotten thee," glorified him by making him an high priest. Heb. v. 5.

22. So much I deem it proper to say in this place of the necessity of authority by revelation from God, in order to a possession of the gospel at all. And if I am right, it follows that no church with which I am acquainted except the Latter Day Saints, called Mormons, have the gospel. The Roman Catholic church profess to have a regular succession of ordinations by the hands of those in authority before them, but they make no pretense to a call by revelation.—Protestants claim a succession of ordination only a brief time, but universally disclaim all revelation since the canon of scripture was closed, and thereby have estopped themselves from pretending that either they or their predecessors were called by revelation.

23. It may seem superfluous to enter upon any proof that faith is so essential a principle of the gospel that without it there is no salvation. Indeed, after all that has been said about justification by faith alone, it is usually presumed that many of the Protestant churches are in possession of at least this principle of the gospel. An examination of the scriptures will I believe show them totally destitute of it, as an examination of the facts will show the Mormons in possession of it.

24. Paul, writing to one of the churches of his planting, 1 Cor. xii. 4, says: "Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same spirit. 5. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord. 6. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all. 7. But the manifestation of the spirit is given to every man to profit withal. 8. For to one is given by the spirit the word of wisdom; to another the word of knowledge by the same spirit; 9. To another FAITH BY THE SAME SPIRIT; to another the GIFTS OF HEALING BY THE SAME SPIRIT; 10. To another the WORKING of MIRACLES; to another PROPHECY; to another DISCERNING of SPIRITS; to another DIVERS kinds of TONGUES; to another the INTERPRETATION of TONGUES: 11. But ALL THESE WORKETH that one and the self-same spirit, dividing to every man severally as he will."

25. By which it clearly appears that gospel faith, such as Paul recognizes as genuine, is not only the gift of God, Eph. ii. 8, but that it is given by the same spirit, which also distributes among those who are subject to his operations healings, miracles, discernings, tongues, interpretations and prophecies, as well as wisdom and knowledge. Need I ask you whether the operations of that spirit are found in any church except the Mormon? Here is an enumeration of nine spiritual gifts, all distributed by one spirit, among those who are subject to his operations; and the whole Protestant world at least disclaim the possession of six at least of those gifts. How can they claim the seventh? If they are the people among whom that spirit distributes all these gifts severally as he will, why is it that he gives none of them either healing, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues or interpretations? Is not their disclaimer of these six gifts of that same spirit evidence that they have no gifts from him? If he distributes all these gifts among a people, how is it that six of the nine are never found in a single instance in the entire Protestant community?

26. These considerations are, to my mind, conclusive that gospel faith is not found among them. On the contrary, in the Mormon church, with a priesthood called by revelation of God, faith is found, which is not merely historic, founded on reading, the gift of education or tradition, but is truly the gift of God, distributed among us by the spirit, which also distributes among us wisdom, knowledge, healings, miracles, prophecy, discerning of spirits, tongues and interpretations.

27. So essential to salvation is this faith, that Paul says: without faith it is impossible to please God; Heb. xi. 6; and Jesus Christ, in still stronger terms: He that believeth not shall be damned. Mark xvi. 16. Not only is the genuineness of this faith witnessed by its being accompanied by the other gifts, and its falsity by the absence of them, but also by the work which it accomplishes. The eleventh chapter of Hebrews is made up of an enumeration of the works accomplished by the faith formerly given to the saints. The same kind of works are accomplished by it among the people called Mormons now. Where else are they found in christendom?

28. Moreover Christ first said, preach the gospel to every creature; and then, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.—Believeth what? Presbyterianism, Methodism, Baptistism or Campbellism? Are those that believe either of these isms promised salvation? Or is the promise of salvation confined to those that believe the gospel which he sent the Apostles to preach?

29. The various Protestant denominations acknowledge each other as christian brethren; as members of the church of God. They each confess that salvation can be attained by obedience to the precepts, ordinances and administrations of the others. Yet among them they preach various gospels. Every one has its own creed or confession of faith, written or unwritten, to which members must conform to have a standing among them. Yet they confess salvation in other churches, having different creeds and confessions of faith.

30. As a Protestant and a Baptist, what interpretation do you put on Christ's words, "he that believeth not shall be damned!" What shall he believe? Believe the gospel? Or is it sufficient to believe the creeds, the new perverted gospels of Potestantism? The creeds being contradictory, some must be false. Yet the Protestant world allows faith in either to be sufficient for salvation. "He that believeth not shall be damned." But will believing false doctrines answer for salvation? If it will not, all Protestantism is unchurched, and out of the pale of the promises of God. If it will, then an error believed is as good as the truth without hypocrisy.

31. Thus it appears that the Protestant churches, by disclaiming the possession of the other gifts distributed by the same spirit, which gives genuine faith, have in effect disclaimed gospel faith.—

By altogether denying the effects produced by faith in gospel times, existing among themselves, they have declared themselves not possessed of true faith. And by mutually acknowledging faith in their several contradictory creeds to be sufficient for salvation, they have declared faith in heresies and lies to be as good and effectual before God as faith in the gospel.

32. I apprehend that an examination will show that they do not know what repentance is, and consequently that they are destitute of the exercise of it. Certainly in all my acquaintance with christian denominations, from the ancient mother to the youngest daughter, I have never found any who did not count a mere sensation, a feeling of terror at the expected wrath of God, as good repentance.

33. But for brevity I will pass on to the examination of the doctrine of baptism. It is a common matter of reproach upon the Mormons that they hold that without baptism there is no salvation.—Indeed our enemies not unfrequently accuse us of holding that baptism is a saving ordinance. Which however is not true, for we hold that faith in and obedience to the whole gospel is essential to salvation, and consequently hold that without baptism man cannot be saved. That is, a sinner cannot be saved from sin, and in the glory of God, except his sins be remitted in baptism.

34. In committing a dispensation of the gospel to the first of its ministers Christ said to them: "Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them." John xx. 23. And a short time after, when Peter was preaching, and some of his hearers believed the word and inquired of him what they should do, he told them to be baptized for the remission of sins; clearly showing that he exercised the power of remitting sins, which had been committed to him, by and in the sacrament of baptism. Christ, receiving ALL POWER in heaven and on earth, committed the power of remitting sins on earth to his priesthood on earth, and they immediately commenced remitting sins in the ordinance of baptism. What can make it plainer that the remission of sins is had in baptism?

35. Ananias, a devout Jew of Demascus, to whom Paul was sent by revelation to be instructed in the gospel, directed him to "be baptized and WASH AWAY his sins." Acts xxii. 16. Peter also says, baptism doth now (the time of his writing) save us, (Peter and his companions,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ. 1st Peter iii. 21. Or, if I can understand his words, baptism brings us believers in to be partakers of the resurrection with him.

36. But as if designing by the most carefully selected language to put up a barrier against doubt on this subject, which neither ignorance nor acumen could possibly misinterpret, the Lord Jesus says, with an oath, "EXCEPT A MAN BE BORN OF WATER and of the SPIRIT, he cannot ENTER INTO the KINGDOM of GOD." John iii. 5.

37. It is very evident that if a man does not enter into the kingdom of God, where God and Christ are he cannot come; he cannot be an heir of God and joint heir with Jesus Christ, who, in God's kingdom, is king of kings and lord of lords. He cannot have part in the first resurrection, for such shall reign with Christ on the earth when God's kingdom, which we all pray for, and the rest of God, is brought in. In short, entering into the kingdom of God, and being saved, are in scripture convertible terms, perfectly synonymous.

38. It is remarkable too, that, though Christ in this conversation with Nicodemus does not mention the sacrament of baptism by name, yet by one of the strongest comparisons that language and fact admit of, he has expressed both the necessity and the form of it—"Except a man be born of water." What is it to be born of water? Truly, being enveloped in water, and from that state brought out of it, is the most perfect idea of being born of water. It is the exact pattern of a natural birth. A real birth is its berfect symbol. The thing symbolized is baptism.

39. So Christ's words are precisely equivalent to saying, except a man be enveloped in water and brought forth out of it, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God; or, except a man be baptized he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. Such was the faith of the Former Day Saints. Such is the faith of Latter Day Saints, in derision called Mormons. And such is not the faith of any other church in christendom.

40. Roman Catholics, indeed, with all the ancient fathers of the church, and all christendom previous to the twelfth century, hold that baptism is regeneration. But, unfortunately for the cause of the Roman church, their substitute for baptism is not a birth of water in any sense whatever. It is merely a sprinkling, or an ablution. The Campbellites, indeed, and I believe they are alone among modern sectaries, insist on the birth of water as essential to salvation. But, as if determined to stamp every article of their creed and every act of their religion with the mark of imposture and delusion, they practice baptism for the remission of sins by those whom they expressly assert are not authorized of God to remit sins.

41. And as if still fearful that their folly might fail to manifest itself sufficiently, they constantly require men to remit sins "in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit," who do not pretend to ever have been authorized by either of them to use their names. Should any one grant pardons and reprieves in the name of a public officer, or receipts and discharges in the name of a private citizen without being authorized by him to do so he would be prosecuted as a swindler and a forger, and confined in a penitentiary by the moral and righteous community in which we live. But when he does all these acts in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, Campbellites look upon it as an act of true religion, and actually flatter themselves that the forgery will stand good in the court of heaven. And all the Protestant sects, which have any sacraments, have involved themselves in the same folly, with barely this plea in their favor, the non-materiality of the sacrament. For as they do not hold baptism of the least account in attaining to salvation, like a man arraigned for forging a written instrument of no legal force or value whatever, they may plead that as the deed is not of the slightest legal value if genuine, therefore it is of no consequence whether it is genuine or forged, and the forgery no crime.

42. But as to the great body of the christian churches, they do not practice baptism at all. They merely sprinkle or wash in water; and leaving out of the consideration all question of their authority to administer ordinances and sacraments, and of the ungospel purposes with which they administer them, they cannot in any sense pretend to be born of water. So that, upon this very ground, the great body of christendom must either unchurch themselves, in order to pretend to a gospel church on earth, aside from the Mormons, or on the other hand must deny so important a principle in the gospel as baptism for the remission of sins; by doing which they effectually unchurch themselves, by showing that they know not the gospel.

43. There is another test by which we know that the gospel is not in any other church except the Mormon, and is in that, which I recur to with real pleasure, because it was particularly given by Christ himself in connection with the gospel mission to all the earth. By Mark it is recorded in these words: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned. And THESE SIGNS SHALL FOLLOW THEM THAT BELIEVE: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues: They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them: They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." xvi. 15, 16, 17, 18.

(To be continued.)

altogether denying the effects produced by faith in gospel times, sting among themselves, they have declared themselves not pos- sed of true faith. And by mutually acknowledging faith in their eral contradictory creeds to be sufficient for salvation, they have lared faith in heresies and lies to be as good and effectual before d as faith in the gospel.

2. I apprehend that an examination will show that they do not w what repentance is, and consequently that they are destitute he exercise of it. Certainly in all my acquaintance with chris- denominations, from the ancient mother to the youngest daugh- I have never found any who did not count a mere sensation, a ing of terror at the expected wrath of God, as good repentance.

3. But for brevity I will pass on to the examination of the doc- e of baptism. It is a common matter of reproach upon the Mor- ns that they hold that without baptism there is no salvation.— eed our enemies not unfrequently accuse us of holding that bap- m is a saving ordinance. Which however is not true, for we hold t faith in and obedience to the whole gospel is essential to sal- ion. and consequently hold that without baptism man cannot be ed. That is, a sinner cannot be saved from sin, and in the glory God, except his sins be remitted in baptism.

4. In committing a dispensation of the gospel to the first of its isters Christ said to them : " Whose soever sins ye remit, they remitted unto them." John xx. 23. And a short time after, when er was preaching, and some of his hearers believed the word inquired of him what they should do, he told them to be bap- d for the remission of sins; clearly showing that he exercised the er of remitting sins, which had been committed to him, by and he sacrament of baptism. Christ, receiving ALL POWER in ven and on earth, committed the power of remitting sins on earth is priesthood on earth, and they immediately commenced remit- sins in the ordinance of baptism. What can make it plainer t the remission of sins is had in baptism?

5. Ananias, a devout Jew of Demascus, to whom Paul was sent revelation to be instructed in the gospel, directed him to "be bap- d and WASH AWAY his sins." Acts xxii. 16. Peter also says, tism doth now (the time of his writing) save us, (Peter and his panions,) by the resurrection of Jesus Christ. 1st Peter iii. 21. If I can understand his words, baptism brings us believers in to artakers of the resurrection with him.

6. But as if designing by the most carefully selected language to up a barrier against doubt on this subject, which neither igno- e nor acumen could possibly misinterpret, the Lord Jesus says, an oath, " EXCEPT A MAN BE BORN OF WATER and of SPIRIT, he cannot ENTER INTO the KINGDOM of GOD." iii. 5.

7. It is very evident that if a man does not enter into the kingdom od, where God and Christ are he cannot come; he cannot heir of God and joint heir with Jesus Christ, who, in God's dom, is king of kings and lord of lords. He cannot have part e first resurrection, for such shall reign with Christ on the earth God's kingdom, which we all pray for, and the rest of God, is ght in. In short, entering into the kingdom of God, and being , are in scripture convertible terms, perfectly synonymous.

8. It is remarkable too, that, though Christ in this conversation Nicodemus does not mention the sacrament of baptism by name, one of the strongest comparisons that language and fact of, he has expressed both the necessity and the form of it— cept a man be born of water." What is it to be born of water? , being enveloped in water, and from that state brought out is the most perfect idea of being born of water. It is the pattern of a natural birth. A real birth is its berfect symbol. hing symbolized is baptism.

39. So Christ's words are precisely equivalent to saying, except a man be enveloped in water and brought forth out of it, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God; or, except a man be baptized he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. Such was the faith of the Former Day Saints. Such is the faith of Latter Day Saints, in derision called Mormons. And such is not the faith of any other church in christendom.

40. Roman Catholics, indeed, with all the ancient fathers of the church, and all christendom previous to the twelfth century, hold that baptism is regeneration. But, unfortunately for the cause of the Roman church, their substitute for baptism is not a birth of water in any sense whatever. It is merely a sprinkling, or an ablution. The Campbellites, indeed, and I believe they are alone among modern sectaries, insist on the birth of water as essential to salvation. But, as if determined to stamp every article of their creed and every act of their religion with the mark of imposture and delusion, they practice baptism for the remission of sins by those whom they expressly assert are not authorized of God to remit sins.

41. And as if still fearful that their folly might fail to manifest itself sufficiently, they constantly require men to remit sins "in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit," who do not pretend to ever have been authorized by either of them to use their names. Should any one grant pardons and reprieves in the name of a public officer, or receipts and discharges in the name of a private citizen without being authorized by him to do so he would be prosecuted as a swindler and a forger, and confined in a penitentiary by the moral and righteous community in which we live. But when he does all these acts in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, Campbellites look upon it as an act of true religion, and actually flatter themselves that the forgery will stand good in the court of heaven. And all the Protestant sects, which have any sacraments, have involved themselves in the same folly, with barely this plea in their favor, the non-materiality of the sacrament. For as they do not hold baptism of the least account in attaining to salvation, like a man arraigned for forging a written instrument of no legal force or value whatever, they may plead that as the deed is not of the slightest legal value if genuine, therefore it is of no consequence whether it is genuine or forged, and the forgery no crime.

42. But as to the great body of the christian churches, they do not practice baptism at all. They merely sprinkle or wash in water; and leaving out of the consideration all question of their authority to administer ordinances and sacraments, and of the ungospel purposes with which they administer them, they cannot in any sense pretend to be born of water. So that, upon this very ground, the great body of christendom must either unchurch themselves, in order to pretend to a gospel church on earth, aside from the Mormons, or on the other hand must deny so important a principle in the gospel as baptism for the remission of sins; by doing which they effectually unchurch themselves, by showing that they know not the gospel.

43. There is another test by which we know that the gospel is not in any other church except the Mormon, and is in that, which I recur to with real pleasure, because it was particularly given by Christ himself in connection with the gospel mission to all the earth. By Mark it is recorded in these words: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned. And THESE SIGNS SHALL FOLLOW THEM THAT BELIEVE: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues: They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them: They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." xvi. 15, 16, 17, 18.

(To be continued.)

Boston, October 5th, 1848.

To Pres. James J. Strang:—

Dear Brother in the Bonds of the New and Everlasting Covenant,—As the presiding Elder of this branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints I write this epistle, in order that I may give some information that will be interesting, perhaps, to you, and to the brethren at Voree, in regard to the affairs of the church in this place. The saints in Boston have no public meetings at this time, owing to the great expense of hiring a hall; yet we do meet together from time to time, as our circumstances will permit, and speak one to another on the necessity of the work of God in these last days; the importance of a prophet to proclaim the truths according to the will of our Heavenly Father, and more especially to proclaim that great truth—the second commandment—"Lay not up treasures on earth." Matt. vi. 19. [The second commandment in the decalogue is, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.] The disobedience to which has caused the judgments of God to be poured out upon the world, and they will continue until every man from mountain top to mountain top shall meet a brother and a friend; but this can never be until mankind shall be willing to acknowledge one Father; for the idea of a brotherhood involves that of one parent. [Glorious truth.]

We rejoice to hear that you have been enabled to establish the order of Enoch for the benefit of the saints; and we believe the time is fast approaching when the world of mankind will be ready, prepared and willing to hear and understand the law of God in regard to temporal things. Our Savior declared that "the kingdom of God comes not by observation." Yet the saints in Boston are watching anxiously and prayerfully its progress with faith, yet with fear and trembling. And we pray continually that the time may come when the saints shall redeem the land of Zion with songs of everlasting joy. There are many persons in the east who would be very happy to see you besides the saints. We recollect with gratitude to our heavenly Father the enjoyment we received in your society two years since, and the truths that we obtained from your lips. Brother Page also has many warm friends in Boston, who admire his plainness and openness of heart.

The Brighamites have been sent out to proclaim the gospel, but I will say by the spirit, not sent by God, but by Brigham; for they cannot and they have not converted any one, (unless it is the old bunkers.) Wilford Woodruff is in Boston with his family, and expects to stay here for some time to come, (two or three years.) He has no idea of leaving his family in the Salt Lake Paradise, though he counsels others to go when they get ready. Orson Pratt has left his family in New York and gone to England. Orson Hyde has published a letter against Lyman Wight's pamphlet. He denies that Joseph ever taught the community doctrine; though the book of D. & C. declares, "in your temporal things you shall be equal." Sec. xxvi. p. 3. [sec. xcix. p. 10, 11, 12. sec. lxxxvii. p. 3, 4.]—One of the brethren at our last meeting prophecied by the spirit that Parley P. Pratt would yet be in Boston, and denounce the iniquities and all the abominations practiced by the rest of the apostate Twelve. Our prayer to God is, thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Your brother in Christ,

DAVID BROWN.

[Money received. Bills on all solvent banks of the U. S. and Canada are good here. Ed.]

☞ The following article we take from the Scientific American. We are disposed to think however that it was written by Orson Pratt, and published without his name as the impartial opinion of a stranger. Certainly it says, with an effort, that the Salt Land will bring forth an abundance. But without rain and within four miles of perpetual snow, believe that who can:—

"The Salt Lake of the Rocky Mountains.—On one of the southern spurs of the Rocky Mountains, there is a valley full of geological wonders and curiosities, and is at present surrounded with a romantic interest, as being the place where that strange people, the Mormons, have taken up their residence. It is well known that a peculiar religion, founded in the enthusiastic nature of great number of men and women of all nations, separated the Mormons from all other people in the State of Illinois, where they once had a flourishing colony. It is also well known that persecution on the one hand and bigot religious feeling on the other, expelled the Mormons from the borders of our republic. Taking up their march like the Israelites of old they have become dwellers in a strange land. Wandering forth from the United States, they took up their line of march for the far, far west, and a portion of them have settled in a valley of California, in which there is a lake of salt water, so salt that it is impossible for a man to sink himself above his arm pits, and after bathing there a while, and drying himself, he will be incrusted over. Into this lake there empties a fresh water river, cold and sparkling, from the snow mountains, and which the Mormons have named the Jordan, in the striking coincidence of that river flowing into the Dead Sea. There is no rain in that part of the world, and the land is watered by turning the cooling brooks from their "water courses" among the fields. They have no need of ice houses, they dwell only four miles from the region of snow, and the water does not get warm before it is dancing at their doors. There are also hot springs on the mountain, boiling hot continually, thus indicating subterranean fires, which will one day banish the Mormons from that land by a far fiercer tempest than that enmity which drove them from our midst. The hot waters rush out in great volumes. The water has a sulphurous smell, but is of a clear blue color, and the people go there to bathe for various diseases. There are but few natural fruits in the valley, but the soil will bring forth an abundance by good cultivation, and there the strange Mormon may enjoy the fruit of his toil in peace, if he be peaceful himself."

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We are about to enter upon two important religious discussions, which will be published through the Herald and other papers, and believing that they will be matters of interest to the public generally, are induced to make an effort to enlarge the circulation of this paper on the present occasion. The first discussion is between prophet Strang and Mr. Edwin Burgess of Racine, and commences in this No. (31.) Prophet Strang affirms the existence of God, (as a distinct individual intellectual being,) and Mr. Burgess denies. The second is between prophet Strang and professor D. M. Graham of the Michigan Central College, and is to commence in the next No. Prophet Strang affirms that Mormonism (so called) is a dispensation from God, and professor Graham denies. Whoever will send us the names of two new subscribers and four dollars shall have the Herald one year gratis. Whoever will send us the names of ten new subscribers and ten dollars shall have the eleventh copy gratis, and the Herald shall be sent a full year to each of the ten subscribers. These subscriptions will commence at Vol. 3, No. 31, and should be sent in as soon as possible in order to secure all the back numbers. Those who avail themselves of this opportunity will furnish themselves with a weekly paper, and the matter of two valuable books for only one dollar. JAMES J. STRANG.

Voree, October 19th, 1848.

TAILORING.

Joseph Ketcham carries on the business of Tailoring at the foot of the hill in the grove, Voree.

Boston, October 5th, 1848.

To Pres. James J. Strang:—

Dear Brother in the Bonds of the New and Everlasting Covenant,—As the presiding Elder of this branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints I write this epistle, in order that I may give some information that will be interesting, perhaps, to you, and to the brethren at Voree, in regard to the affairs of the church in this place. The saints in Boston have no public meetings at this time, owing to the great expense of hiring a hall; yet we do meet together from time to time, as our circumstances will permit, and speak one to another on the necessity of the work of God in these last days; the importance of a prophet to proclaim the truths according to the will of our Heavenly Father, and more especially to proclaim that great truth—the second commandment—"Lay not up treasures on earth." Matt. vi. 19. [The second commandment in the decalogue is, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself.] The disobedience to which has caused the judgments of God to be poured out upon the world, and they will continue until every man from mountain top to mountain top shall meet a brother and a friend; but this can never be until mankind shall be willing to acknowledge one Father; for the idea of a brotherhood involves that of one parent. [Glorious truth.]

We rejoice to hear that you have been enabled to establish the order of Enoch for the benefit of the saints; and we believe the time is fast approaching when the world of mankind will be ready, prepared and willing to hear and understand the law of God in regard to temporal things. Our Savior declared that "the kingdom of God comes not by observation." Yet the saints in Boston are watching anxiously and prayerfully its progress with faith, yet with fear and trembling. And we pray continually that the time may come when the saints shall redeem the land of Zion with songs of everlasting joy. There are many persons in the east who would be very happy to see you besides the saints. We recollect with gratitude to our heavenly Father the enjoyment we received in your society two years since, and the truths that we obtained from your lips. Brother Page also has many warm friends in Boston, who admire his plainness and openness of heart.

The Brighamites have been sent out to proclaim the gospel, but I will say by the spirit, not sent by God, but by Brigham; for they cannot and they have not converted any one, (unless it is the old hunkers.) Wilford Woodruff is in Boston with his family, and expects to stay here for some time to come, (two or three years.) He has no idea of leaving his family in the Salt Lake Paradise, though he counsels others to go when they get ready. Orson Pratt has left his family in New York and gone to England. Orson Hyde has published a letter against Lyman Wight's pamphlet. He denies that Joseph ever taught the community doctrine, though the book of D. & C. declares, "in your temporal things you shall be equal." Sec. xxvi. p. 3. [sec. xcix. p. 10, 11, 12. sec. lxxxvii. p. 3, 4.]—One of the brethren at our last meeting prophecied by the spirit that Parley P. Pratt would yet be in Boston, and denounce the iniquities and all the abominations practiced by the rest of the apostate Twelve. Our prayer to God is, thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven. Your brother in Christ,

DAVID BROWN.

[Money received. Bills on all solvent banks of the U. S. and Canada are good here. Ed.]

☞ The following article we take from the Scientific American. We are disposed to think however that it was written by Orson Pratt, and published without his name as the impartial opinion of a stranger. Certainly it says, with an effort, that the Salt Land will bring forth an abundance. But without rain and within four miles of perpetual snow, believe that who can:—

"The Salt Lake of the Rocky Mountains.—On one of the southern spurs of the Rocky Mountains, there is a valley full of geological wonders and curiosities, and is at present surrounded with a romantic interest, as being the place where that strange people, the Mormons, have taken up their residence. It is well known that a peculiar religion, founded in the enthusiastic nature of great number of men and women of all nations, separated the Mormons from all other people in the State of Illinois, where they once had a flourishing colony. It is also well known that persecution on the one hand and bigot religious feeling on the other, expelled the Mormons from the borders of our republic. Taking up their march like the Israelites of old they have become dwellers in a strange land. Wandering forth from the United States, they took up their line of march for the far, far west, and a portion of them have settled in a valley of California, in which there is a lake of salt water, so salt that it is impossible for a man to sink himself above his arm pits, and after bathing there a while, and drying himself, he will be incrusted over. Into this lake there empties a fresh water river cold and sparkling, from the snow mountains, and which the Mormons have named the Jordan, in the striking coincidence of the river flowing into the Dead Sea. There is no rain in that part of the world, and the land is watered by turning the cooling brook from their "water courses" among the fields. They have no need of ice houses, they dwell only four miles from the region of snow and the water does not get warm before it is dancing at their door. There are also hot springs on the mountain, boiling hot continually thus indicating subterranean fires, which will one day banish the Mormons from that land by a far fiercer tempest than that enmity which drove them from our midst. The hot waters rush out in great volumes. The water has a sulphurous smell, but is of a clear blue color, and the people go there to bathe for various diseases. There are but few natural fruits in the valley, but the soil will bring forth an abundance by good cultivation, and there the strange Mormon will enjoy the fruit of his toil in peace, if he be peaceful himself."

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We are about to enter upon two important religious discussions which will be published through the Herald and other papers, and believing that they will be matters of interest to the public generally are induced to make an effort to enlarge the circulation of this paper on the present occasion. The first discussion is between prophet Strang and Mr. Edwin Burgess of Racine, and commences in the No. (31.) Prophet Strang affirms the existence of God, (as a distinct individual intellectual being,) and Mr. Burgess denies. The second is between prophet Strang and professor D. M. Graham of the Michigan Central College, and is to commence in the next No. Prophet Strang affirms that Mormonism (so called) is a dispensation from God, and professor Graham denies. Whoever will send us the names of two new subscribers and four dollars shall have the Herald one year gratis. Whoever will send us the names of ten new subscribers and ten dollars shall have the eleventh copy gratis, and the Herald shall be sent a full year to each of the subscribers. These subscriptions will commence at Vol. 3, No. 1, and should be sent in as soon as possible in order to secure all the back numbers. Those who avail themselves of this opportunity will furnish themselves with a weekly paper, and the matter of two valuable books for only one dollar. JAMES J. STRANG.

Voree, October 19th, 1848.

TAILORING.

Joseph Ketcham carries on the business of Tailoring at the foot of the hill in the grove, Voree.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 33.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, NOV. 2, 1848. [WHOLE No. 97.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

ELECTIONS.

The election of President, Vice President and Members of Congress of the U. S. and of State officers in many of the States will come off previous to our next issue. Amid all the contending factions there may in many instances be one found whose professions address themselves strongly to the sympathy of the saints. Again we admonish the saints to have nothing to do with them. Keep perfectly clear of politics. Cast no votes. Attend no elections. Politicians may make you fair promises, but they will never do you any good. The political system of the country has effected no moral reformation among its movers, who need it most. How shall it accomplish the same for others? It always promised equality and justice to the people, but it has never given either. Both are receding further and further from their grasp. The saints in Voree do not attend elections at all. Altogether they have never cast a half dozen votes at any election. Two or three of the last elections have not been attended by a single one. We wish to see this course pursued. If we mix up with a sinful government, what shall redeem us from its plagues? We repeat, have nothing to do with the elections.

DIVINE AUTHORITY OF MORMONISM.

MR. STRANG TO PROFESSOR GRAHAM.—No. 1.

(Concluded.)

43. There is another test by which we know that the gospel is not in any other church except the Mormon, and is in that, which I recur to with real pleasure, because it was particularly given by Christ himself in connection with the gospel mission to all the earth. By Mark it is recorded in these words: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned. And THESE SIGNS SHALL FOLLOW THEM THAT BELIEVE: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues: They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them: They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." xvi. 15, 16, 17, 18.

44. In the trial of this test the Protestants cannot complain if they are allowed to be their own witnesses. They universally profess that the signs do not follow them. Christ says, they shall follow them that believe. Therefore they, the Protestants, are not believers of the gospel. But these signs do follow the Mormons.—So that in this, as in every thing else, they answer to the requisitions of a people possessed of the gospel, and in the enjoyment of the administration of its true ordinances.

45. Thus by this brief and imperfect examination of the facts, it appears that the people called Mormons, alone, of all churches known, are possessed of a knowledge of the gospel, of faith in it, or of the administration of its ordinances.

46. To fully appreciate the force of this argument it is necessary to bear in mind the words of Paul, that "the church of the living God is the pillar and ground of the truth." 1 Tim. iii. 15. Consequently if any other church than the Mormon was the church of the living God, so great a truth as the gospel of salvation and everlasting life would be found in it. And the Mormons, a people of a few days, having grown up within the present generation, would not be in possession of so great and important truths, of which all the rest of the world are ignorant, except they had received them from God.

47. There are in christendom some hundred thousand clergymen of various denominations, including in their numbers a vast proportion of the learning of the age, great numbers of them literati of the first rank, men who have done honor to all the colleges of Europe and America, who have made language, literature, criticism and the sacred oracles the study of their lives. Yet with their Bibles before then as the book of all books, from infancy to old age, they have altogether failed to discover what that gospel is which is there recorded. Not one of them has declared it. Not one acknowlegded it when presented, till proved by aguments he could not answer.

48. As we find it now, so it has been for ages gone by. The world has been filled with Bibles. It has been filled with Bible readers. It has been over stocked with clergymen educated expressly as expounders of the scriptures. Yet the simplest facts contained in the scriptures were to the world mysteries more profound, less known than the mysteries of Free Masonry. Other sciences they could understand. This they could not. Why? Because "the things of God knoweth no man, but the spirit of God;" 1 Cor. ii. 11; which spirit they were not possessed of.

49. They could not stir up any gift within them by prophecy, and by the laying on of the hands of the priesthood; 1 Tim. iv. 14; for they had never been called by prophecy, nor set apart by the laying on of the hands of the priesthood, and had no such gift.—Consequently they were left blind to the things of God. Like the Pharisees, Saducees, and their doctors of the law in the time of Christ, they had the oracles of God and educated expounders thereof. Yet with their eyes they could not see, with their ears they could not hear, and with their hearts they could not understand.—As it was with the people, so with the priest. They were alike blind. And as one led the other, both fell into the ditch; both came short of salvation.

50. On the other hand, the Mormons, having a dispensation of the gospel direct from God by revelation, having a priesthood called by prophecy and revelation, set apart by the hands of the priesthood, by whose hands they have the gift of preaching, teaching and expounding the oracles of God, have been able to perceive and teach the true gospel.

51. They have taken those who fill the various offices in their priesthood from the fields and the shops, without education, without experience as speakers, with no qualifications whatever but the gift of God, and sent them out to face a world of opposition, in the

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 33.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, NOV. 2, 1848. [WHOLE No. 97.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

ELECTIONS.

The election of President, Vice President and Members of Congress of the U. S. and of State officers in many of the States will come off previous to our next issue. Amid all the contending factions there may in many instances be one found whose professions address themselves strongly to the sympathy of the saints. Again we admonish the saints to have nothing to do with them. Keep perfectly clear of politics. Cast no votes. Attend no elections. Politicians may make you fair promises, but they will never do you any good. The political system of the country has effected no moral reformation among its movers, who need it most. How shall it accomplish the same for others? It always promised equality and justice to the people, but it has never given either. Both are receding further and further from their grasp. The saints in Voree do not attend elections at all. Altogether they have never cast a half dozen votes at any election. Two or three of the last elections have not been attended by a single one. We wish to see this course pursued. If we mix up with a sinful government, what shall redeem us from its plagues? We repeat, have nothing to do with the elections.

DIVINE AUTHORITY OF MORMONISM.

MR. STRANG TO PROFESSOR GRAHAM.—No. 1.

(Concluded.)

43. There is another test by which we know that the gospel is not in any other church except the Mormon, and is in that, which I recur to with real pleasure, because it was particularly given by Christ himself in connection with the gospel mission to all the earth. By Mark it is recorded in these words: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; and he that believeth not shall be damned. And THESE SIGNS SHALL FOLLOW THEM THAT BELIEVE: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues: They shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing it shall not hurt them; They shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." xvi. 15, 16, 17, 18.

44. In the trial of this test the Protestants cannot complain if they are allowed to be their own witnesses. They universally profess that the signs do not follow them. Christ says, they shall follow them that believe. Therefore they, the Protestants, are not believers of the gospel. But these signs do follow the Mormons.—So that in this, as in every thing else, they answer to the requisitions of a people possessed of the gospel, and in the enjoyment of the administration of its true ordinances.

45. Thus by this brief and imperfect examination of the facts, it appears that the people called Mormons, alone, of all churches known, are possessed of a knowledge of the gospel, of faith in it, or of the administration of its ordinances.

46. To fully appreciate the force of this argument it is necessary to bear in mind the words of Paul, that "the church of the living God is the pillar and ground of the truth." 1 Tim. iii. 15. Consequently if any other church than the Mormon was the church of the living God, so great a truth as the gospel of salvation and everlasting life would be found in it. And the Mormons, a people of a few days, having grown up within the present generation, would not be in possession of so great and important truths, of which all the rest of the world are ignorant, except they had received them from God.

47. There are in christendom some hundred thousand clergymen of various denominations, including in their numbers a vast proportion of the learning of the age, great numbers of them literati of the first rank, men who have done honor to all the colleges of Europe and America, who have made language, literature, criticism and the sacred oracles the study of their lives. Yet with their Bibles before them as the book of all books, from infancy to old age, they have altogether failed to discover what that gospel is which is there recorded. Not one of them has declared it. Not one acknowledged it when presented, till proved by aguments he could not answer.

48. As we find it now, so it has been for ages gone by. The world has been filled with Bibles. It has been filled with Bible readers. It has been stocked with clergymen educated expressly as expounders of the scriptures. Yet the things contained in the scriptures were to the world mysteries more profound, less known than the mysteries of Free Masonry. Other sciences they could understand. This they could not. Why? Because "the things of God knoweth no man, but the spirit of God;" 1 Cor. ii. 11; which spirit they were not possessed of.

49. They could not stir up any gift within them by prophecy, and by the laying on of the hands of the priesthood; 1 Tim. iv. 14; for they had never been called by prophecy, nor set apart by the laying on of the hands of the priesthood, and had no such gift.—Consequently they were left blind to the things of God. Like the Pharisees, Saducees, and their doctors of the law in the time of Christ, they had the oracles of God and educated expounders thereof. Yet with their eyes they could not see, with their ears they could not hear, and with their hearts they could not understand.—As it was with the people, so with the priest. They were alike blind. And as one led the other, both fell into the ditch; both came short of salvation.

50. On the other hand, the Mormons, having a dispensation of the gospel direct from God by revelation, having a priesthood called by prophecy and revelation, set apart by the hands of the priesthood, by whose hands they have the gift of preaching, teaching and expounding the oracles of God, have been able to perceive and teach the true gospel.

51. They have taken those who fill the various offices in their priesthood from the fields and the shops, without education, without experience as speakers, with no qualifications whatever but the gift of God, and sent them out to face a world of opposition, in the establishment of a doctrine at war with every religious sect on earth, whose first declaration of faith perfectly unchurches them all, and they have prevailed.

52. So perfectly have they prevailed, that there is hardly a man to be found in all the U. S. who has the courage like yourself to enter the lists with them in discussion. To speak within common experience, throughout half the States they have been the terror of sectarian preachers wherever they have gone. And preachers of the first rank have commonly warned their flocks not to hear them, when they themselves dare not discuss with them.

53. It was not a strange remark of a neighbor of yours, that John E. Page was very uncouth in manners and expression for one to whom the oracles of God were committed. Such remarks have been made on almost every preacher in the entire church, and not always accompanied with a confession of talent neither. But with all their uncouthness they are able to give a reason for the hope that is in them, that the learned Doctors of Divinity in five hundred denominations cannot gainsay. And also to show that, except the Mormons, there is not a gospel church on the earth.

54. Yes, we have called men from the field and the plough, from the forest and the shop, who were not able to read the text from which they preached, nor to write an account of their missions, and giving them the gifts by prophecy and the hands of the priesthood, they have both preached the gospel with success in country and city, and have defended their faith with success against the ablest men of all denominations every where; till at this time you will find more men who will perform anew the feat of Gen. Putnam with the wolf than sectarian preachers who will enter upon a discussion with a Mormon, of even the humblest pretensions.

55. Almost every denomination has, when it sprung up, had some one point of doctrine on which it prided itself, and in which it had the advantage of others in point of argument, as the Methodists on free grace, the Baptists on immersion, the Campbellites on the essentiality of baptism to salvation. These sects were founded by men of great learning, and with the light of extensive acquaintance, experience and reading.

56. But Joseph Smith, a very illiterate boy, as uncouth in manner and expression as one could well be, and, in fact, profoundly ignorant on all subjects without exception, (unless he was taught of God,) laid the foundation of a church, became its first preacher, declared and defended its doctrine, having more than this usual advantage in every point of faith; and its preachers selected among those like himself, have universally prevailed every where.

57. The Mormons alone have a priesthood called and set apart by prophecy and the laying on of hands to the preaching of the gospel, allowing every denomination to be their own witnesses. The Mormons alone preach the gospel as it is recorded in the scriptures. The Mormons alone profess faith in such a gospel as is recorded in the scriptures. The Mormons alone have the signs follow them that Christ promised should follow the believers of the gospel. And the Mormons alone can find men qualified to preach the gospel merely by the gifts of God, without any assistance from man.

58. I conclude, therefore, that the Mormons alone of all churches on earth are in possession of the true gospel. And as it is ridiculous to presume that the church of God is not in possession of the gospel, and extremely improbable that the treasure of the riches of God's revelations should be committed to any but the true church, I conclude farther that Mormonism (so called) is a dispensation from God. Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

☞ We are waiting patiently for Mr. Edwin Burgess' first article on the existence of a God, wishing to insert that before we advance to new points.

THE ECONOMY OF SLAVERY.

BY LYDIA MARIA CHILD.

On the Battery, the other day, I met an acquaintance from New England. He was on his way to Virginia, where he had been making contracts for wood at a dollar an acre. In the true spirit of Yankee enterprise, he buys up the waste lands, falls the trees, ships them to New York and Boston, and finds the trade profitable.

A large emigration of substantial farmers from Orange, Duchess, and Columbia counties in this State, have within a few years, emigrated to the counties of London, Culpepper, and Fairfax, in Virginia; they bought up the worn out plantations for a mere song, by judicious application of free labor, they are "redeeming the places, and making the wilderness blossom as the rose." A traveler recently told me that the farms cultivated by Quakers, who employed no slaves, formed such a striking contrast to the other portions of Virginia, that they seemed almost like oases in the desert.

What a lesson this teaches concerning the comparative effect of slave labor and free labor, on the prosperity of a State! It seems stange, indeed, that enlightened self-interest does not banish the accursed system from the world; for economists ought to see that "it is worse than a crime, it is a blunder," as Napoleon once said of some error in State policy—but the fact is, self-interest never can be very much enlightened. All true vision derives its clearness from the heart.

If ever this truth were legibly written on the face of earth, it is on Virginia. No State in the Union has superior advantages.—Look at its spacious bays, its broad and beautiful rivers, traversing the country in every direction; its majestic forests, its grand and picturesque mountains, its lovely and fertile valleys, and the abundance of its mineral wealth. Words could hardly be found enthusiastic enough to express the admiration of Europeans who first visited this magnificent region. Some say her name was given "because the country seemed to retain the virgin plenty and purity of the first creation, and the people their primitive innocency of life and manners." Waller describes it thus:—

"So sweet the air, so moderate the clime,
None sickly lives or dies before his time.
Heaven sure has kept this spot of earth uncurst,
To show how all things were created first."

Alas, that the shores of that beautiful State should become the Guinea coast of the New World!—our central station of slavery and the slave trade! Of the effects produced, we need not question abolitionists, for we learn from the lips of her own sons. John Randolph said years ago, that he "expected soon to see the slaves of Virginia advertising runaway masters." Washington, in a letter to Sir John Sinclair, describes the land in the neighborhood of Mount Vernon, as exhausted and miserable. He alludes to the fact that the price of land in Pennsylvania and the free States, then averaged more than twice as much as land in Virginia: "because," says he, "there are in Pennsylvania laws for the gradual abolition of slavery, and because foreign emigrants are more inclined to settle in free States." Mr. Curtis says, "Of the multitude of foreigners who daily seek an asylum and home in the empire of liberty, how many turn their steps to the region of the slave? None. There is a malaria in the atmosphere of those regions which the new comer shuns as being deleterious to his views and habits. See the wide-spreading ruin which the advice of our ancestral government has produced in the South, as witnessed in a sparse population of freemen, deserted habitations, and fields without culture. Strange to tell, even the wolf driven back long since by the approach of man, now returns after the lapse of many years, to howl over the desolation of slavery."

establishment of a doctrine at war with every religious sect on earth, whose first declaration of faith perfectly unchurches them all, and they have prevailed.

52. So perfectly have they prevailed, that there is hardly a man to be found in all the U. S. who has the courage like yourself to enter the lists with them in discussion. To speak within common experience, throughout half the States they have been the terror of sectarian preachers wherever they have gone. And preachers of the first rank have commonly warned their flocks not to hear them, when they themselves dare not discuss with them.

53. It was not a strange remark of a neighbor of yours, that John E. Page was very uncouth in manners and expression for one to whom the oracles of God were committed. Such remarks have been made on almost every preacher in the entire church, and not always accompanied with a confession of talent neither. But with all their uncouthness they are able to give a reason for the hope that is in them, that the learned Doctors of Divinity in five hundred denominations cannot gainsay. And also to show that, except the Mormons, there is not a gospel church on the earth.

54. Yes, we have called men from the field and the plough, from the forest and the shop, who were not able to read the text from which they preached, nor to write an account of their missions, and giving them the gifts by prophecy and the hands of the priesthood, they have both preached the gospel with success in country and city, and have defended their faith with success against the ablest men of all denominations every where; till at this time you will find more men who will perform anew the feat of Gen. Putnam with the wolf than sectarian preachers who will enter upon a discussion with a Mormon, of even the humblest pretensions.

55. Almost every denomination has, when it sprung up, had some one point of doctrine on which it prided itself, and in which it had the advantage of others in point of argument, as the Methodists on free grace, the Baptists on immersion, the Campbellites on the essentiality of baptism to salvation. These sects were founded by men of great learning, and with the light of extensive acquaintance, experience and reading.

56. But Joseph Smith, a very illiterate boy, as uncouth in manner and expression as one could well be, and, in fact, profoundly ignorant on all subjects without exception, (unless he was taught of God,) laid the foundation of a church, became its first preacher, declared and defended its doctrine, having more than this usual advantage in every point of faith; and its preachers selected among those like himself, have universally prevailed every where.

57. The Mormons alone have a priesthood called and set apart by prophecy and the laying on of hands to the preaching of the gospel, allowing every denomination to be their own witnesses. The Mormons alone preach the gospel as it is recorded in the scriptures. The Mormons alone profess faith in such a gospel as is recorded in the scriptures. The Mormons alone have the signs follow them that Christ promised should follow the believers of the gospel. And the Mormons alone can find men qualified to preach the gospel merely by the gifts of God, without any assistance from man.

58. I conclude, therefore, that the Mormons alone of all churches on earth are in possession of the true gospel. And as it is ridiculous to presume that the church of God is not in possession of the gospel, and extremely improbable that the treasure of the riches of God's revelations should be committed to any but the true church, I conclude further that Mormonism (so called) is a dispensation from God. Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

☞ We are waiting patiently for Mr. Edwin Burgess' first article on the existence of a God, wishing to insert that before we advance to new points.

THE ECONOMY OF SLAVERY.

BY LYDIA MARIA CHILD.

On the Battery, the other day, I met an acquaintance from New England. He was on his way to Virginia, where he had been making contracts for wood at a dollar an acre. In the true spirit of Yankee enterprise, he buys up the waste lands, falls the trees, ships them to New York and Boston, and finds the trade profitable.

A large emigration of substantial farmers from Orange, Duchess, and Columbia counties in this State, have within a few years, emigrated to the counties of London, Culpepper, and Fairfax, in Virginia; they bought up the worn out plantations for a mere song, by judicious application of free labor, they are "redeeming the places, and making the wilderness blossom as the rose." A traveler recently told me that the farms cultivated by Quakers, who employed no slaves, formed such a striking contrast to the other portions of Virginia, that they seemed almost like oases in the desert.

What a lesson this teaches concerning the comparative effect of slave labor and free labor, on the prosperity of a State! It seems stange, indeed, that enlightened self-interest does not banish the accursed system from the world; for economists ought to see that "it is worse than a crime, it is a blunder," as Napoleon once said of some error in State policy—but the fact is, self-interest never can be very much enlightened. All true vision derives its clearness from the heart.

If ever this truth were legibly written on the face of earth, it is on Virginia. No State in the Union has superior advantages.—Look at its spacious bays, its broad and beautiful rivers, traversing the country in every direction; its majestic forests, its grand and picturesque mountains, its lovely and fertile valleys, and the abundance of its mineral wealth. Words could hardly be found enthusiastic enough to express the admiration of Europeans who first visited this magnificent region. Some say her name was giv-en "because the country seemed to retain the virgin plenty and purity of the first creation, and the people their primitive innocency of life and manners." Waller describes it thus:—

"So sweet the air, so moderate the clime,
None sickly lives or dies before his time.
Heaven sure has kept this spot of earth uncurst,
To show how all things were created first."

Alas, that the shores of that beautiful State should become the Guinea coast of the New World!—our central station of slavery and the slave trade! Of the effects produced, we need not question abolitionists, for we learn from the lips of her own sons. John Randolph said years ago, that he "expected soon to see the slaves of Virginia advertising runaway masters." Washington, in a letter to Sir John Sinclair, describes the land in the neighborhood of Mount Vernon, as exhausted and miserable. He alludes to the fact that the price of land in Pennsylvania and the free States, then averaged more than twice as much as land in Virginia: "because," says he, "there are in Pennsylvania laws for the gradual abolition of slavery, and because foreign emigrants are more inclined to settle in free States." Mr. Curtis says, "Of the multitude of foreigners who daily seek an asylum and home in the empire of liberty, how many turn their steps to the region of the slave? None. There is a malaria in the atmosphere of those regions which the new comer shuns as being deleterious to his views and habits. See the wide-spreading ruin which the advice of our ancestral government has produced in the South, as witnessed in a sparse population of freemen, deserted habitations, and fields without culture. Strange to tell, even the wolf driven back long since by the approach of man, now returns after the lapse of many years, to howl over the desolation of slavery."

The allusion to the wolf is no figure of speech; wild beasts have returned to extensive districts of Virginia, once inhabited and cultivated.

Some eighteen years ago, when I lived in the dream-land of romantic youth, and thought nothing of slavery, or any other evils that infest the social system, an intelligent young lady from the South told an adventure which made a strong impression on my imagination. She was traveling with her brother in the interior of Eastern Virginia. Marks of diminishing prosperity every where met their view. One day they entered upon a region which seemed entirely deserted. Here and there some elegant villa indicated the former presence of wealth; piazzas had fallen, and front doors had either dropped, or hung suspended upon one hinge. Here and there a stray garden flower peeped forth amid the choaking wilderness of weeds, and vines once carefully trained on lattices, spread over the ground in tangled confusion. Nothing disturbed the silence, save the twittering of some startled bird, and the hoot and scream of gloomy wood creatures, scared by the unusual noise of travelers.

At last they came to a church, through the roof of which a tree, rooted in the central aisle beneath, sent up its verdant branches into the sunlight above. Leaving their horse to browse on the grass grown road, they passed into the building to examine the interior. Their entrance startled innumerable birds and bats, which flew circling around their heads, and through the broken windows. The pews had coats of arms blazoned on the door pannels, but birds had built their nests in the corners, and grass had grown up through the chinks of the floor. The handsome trimmings of the pulpit were so covered with dust, as to leave the original color doubtful. On the cushion lay a gilt edged Bible, still open, probably at the place where religious lessons had last been read.

I have before my mind's eye a vivid picture of that lonely church, standing in the silence of the forest. In some moods of mind, how pleasant it would be to spend the Sabbath there alone, listening to the insects singing their prayers, or to the plaintive voice of the ring dove, coming up from the inmost heart of the shaded forest.

"Whose deep, low note is like the gentle wife,
A poor, a pensive, yet a happy one,
Stealing, when daylight's common tasks are done,
An hour for mother's work; and singing low,
While her tired husband and children sleep."

In the stillness of nature there is ever something sacred; for she pleadeth tenderly with man that he will live no more at discord with her; and, like the eloquent dumb boy, she ever carrieth "great names for God in her heart."

"'Neath cloistered boughs, each floral bell that swingeth,
And tolls its perfume on the passing air,
Makes Sabbath in the fields, and ever ringeth
A call to prayer."

The rapid ruin and the unbroken stillness seemed so much like a work of entrenchmeut that the travelers named the place The Hamlet of the Seven Sleepers. At the next inhabited village, they obtained a brief outline of its history. It had been originally settled by wealthy families with large plantations and numerous slaves. They were Virginia gentlemen of the older school, and would have felt themselves disgraced by the modern business of breeding slaves for market. In fact strong family pride made them extremely adverse to selling any slaves that had belonged to their ancestors. So the slaves multiplied on their hands, and it soon took "all their corn to feed their hogs, and all their hogs to feed their negroes." Matters grew worse and worse in these old families. The strong soil was at last exhausted by the miserable system of slavery, and would no longer yield an increase.

What could these aristocratic gentlemen do for their sons under such circumstance? Plantations must be purchased for them in the far South-west, and they must disperse with their train of human cattle, to blight other new and fertile regions. There is an old superstition, that no grass grows where the devil has danced; and the effects of slavery show that this tradition, like most others, is born of truth. It is not, as some suppose, a special vengeance on the wicked system; it is a simple result of the universal and intimate relation between spirit and matter. Freedom risks itself on the earth in growth and beauty; oppression, in dreariness and decay. If we attempt to trace this effect analytically, we shall find that it originates in the landholders too proud to work, in laborers deprived of healthful motive, in the inevitable intermediate class of overseers, who have no interest in the soil or the labors, but whose pay depends on the forced product they can extort from them both. Mr. Faulkner, of Virginia, had stated the case impressively. "Compared the condition of the slaveholding portion of this commonwealth, barren, desolate, and scared as it were by the avenging hand of heaven, with the description which we have of this same country from those who broke its soil. To what is this change ascribed? Alone to the blasting and withering effects of slavery. To that vice in the origanization of society by which one half its inhabitants are arrayed in interest and feeling against the other half; to that condition of things in which half a million of your population can feel no sympathy with society, in the prosperity of which they are forbidden to participate, and no attachment to the government at whose hands they receive nothing but injustice."

Dr. Meade, of Virginia, in the records of an official tour through the State, speaks of great numbers of churches fallen absolutely into ruin, from the gradual impoverishment of surrounding estates, and the consequent dispersion of the population.

Pope's Greek Church, where General Washington was baptized, fell into such a complete decay, that it was a resort for beasts and birds. It was set on fire a few years ago, lest the falling of the roof should kill the cattle, accustomed to seek shade and shelter there.

Yet in view of these facts, statesmen, for temporary purposes, are willng to spread over the rich prairies of Texas this devastating system, to devour, like the locusts of Egypt, every green thing in its path.

And while we are thus wilfully perpetuating and extending this terrible evil, priests and politicians are not ashamed to say that it must be so, because the system was entailed upon us by "the avarice of our ancestral government." Would any other evil, any evil which we ourselves did not choose, be tolerated among us, because it was a legacy from Great Britain? I never hear this weak apology offered, without thinking of the answer made to it by the eloquent George Thompson: "Yes, charge the guilt upon England; but as you have copied England in her sin, copy her also in her repentance."

☞ The Mormon Temple burnt.—The Temple at Nauvoo, so long a bone of contention between the two sects of Mormons, was burnt on the morning of the 9th instant. When first discovered, at 4 o'clock A. M., the cupola was in flames, and notwithstanding the most strenuous exertions, nothing is now left of this magnificent edifice but its ruined and blackened walls. It is supposed to be the work of an incendiary, though we are at a loss to discover what motive could prove sufficiently strong to induce any one to perpetrate such a piece of Vandalism. We hope he may be discovered and meet the reward he so justly merits.—Wisconsin Standard.

Reform in Egypt.—An exchange says that a deputation waited upon the Pacha of Egypt, and requested a mitigation of certain grievances. The Pacha hung the whole of the deputation.

The allusion to the wolf is no figure of speech; wild beasts have returned to extensive districts of Virginia, once inhabited and cultivated.

Some eighteen years ago, when I lived in the dream-land of romantic youth, and thought nothing of slavery, or any other evils that infest the social system, an intelligent young lady from the South told an adventure which made a strong impression on my imagination. She was traveling with her brother in the interior of Eastern Virginia. Marks of diminishing prosperity every where met their view. One day they entered upon a region which seemed entirely deserted. Here and there some elegant villa indicated the former presence of wealth; piazzas had fallen, and front doors had either dropped, or hung suspended upon one hinge. Here and there a stray garden flower peeped forth amid the choaking wilderness of weeds, and vines once carefully trained on lattices, spread over the ground in tangled confusion. Nothing disturbed the silence, save the twittering of some startled bird, and the hoot and scream of gloomy wood creatures, scared by the unusual noise of travelers.

At last they came to a church, through the roof of which a tree, rooted in the central aisle beneath, sent up its verdant branches into the sunlight above. Leaving their horse to browse on the grass grown road, they passed into the building to examine the interior. Their entrance startled innumerable birds and bats, which flew circling around their heads, and through the broken windows. The pews had coats of arms blazoned on the door pannels, but birds had built their nests in the corners, and grass had grown up through the chinks of the floor. The handsome trimmings of the pulpit were so covered with dust, as to leave the original color doubtful. On the cushion lay a gilt edged Bible, still open, probably at the place where religious lessons had last been read.

I have before my mind's eye a vivid picture of that lonely church, standing in the silence of the forest. In some moods of mind, how pleasant it would be to spend the Sabbath there alone, listening to the insects singing their prayers, or to the plaintive voice of the ring dove, coming up from the inmost heart of the shaded forest.

"Whose deep, low note is like the gentle wife,
A poor, a pensive, yet a happy one,
Stealing, when daylight's common tasks are done,
An hour for mother's work; and singing low,
While her tired husband and children sleep."

In the stillness of nature there is ever something sacred; for she leadeth tenderly with man that he will live no more at discord with her; and, like the eloquent dumb boy, she ever carrieth "great themes for God in her heart."

"'Neath cloistered boughs, each floral bell that swingeth,
And tolls its perfume on the passing air,
Makes Sabbath in the fields, and ever ringeth
A call to prayer."

The rapid ruin and the unbroken stillness seemed so much like work of entrenchmeut that the travelers named the place The Hamlet of the Seven Sleepers. At the next inhabited village, they gained a brief outline of its history. It had been originally settled by wealthy families with large plantations and numerous slaves. They were Virginia gentlemen of the older school, and would have held themselves disgraced by the modern business of breeding slaves for market. In fact strong family pride made them extremely adverse to selling any slaves that had belonged to their ancestors. So the slaves multiplied on their hands, and it soon took "all their corn to feed their hogs, and all their hogs to feed their negroes." Affairs grew worse and worse in these old families. The strength was at last exhausted by the miserable system of slavery, and could no longer yield an increase.

What could these aristocratic gentlemen do for their sons under such circumstance? Plantations must be purchased for them in the far South-west, and they must disperse with their train of human cattle, to blight other new and fertile regions. There is an old superstition, that no grass grows where the devil has danced; and the effects of slavery show that this tradition, like most others, is born of truth. It is not, as some suppose, a special vengeance on the wicked system; it is a simple result of the universal and intimate relation between spirit and matter. Freedom risks itself on the earth in growth and beauty; oppression, in dreariness and decay. If we attempt to trace this effect analytically, we shall find that it originates in the landholders too proud to work, in laborers deprived of healthful motive, in the inevitable intermediate class of overseers, who have no interest in the soil or the labors, but whose pay depends on the forced product they can extort from them both. Mr. Faulkner, of Virginia, had stated the case impressively. "Compared the condition of the slaveholding portion of this commonwealth, barren, desolate, and scared as it were by the avenging hand of heaven, with the description which we have of this same country from those who broke its soil. To what is this change ascribed? Alone to the blasting and withering effects of slavery. To that vice in the organization of society by which one half its inhabitants are arrayed in interest and feeling against the other half; to that condition of things in which half a million of your population can feel no sympathy with society, in the prosperity of which they are forbidden to participate, and no attachment to the government at whose hands they receive nothing but injustice."

Dr. Meade, of Virginia, in the records of an official tour through the State, speaks of great numbers of churches fallen absolutely into ruin, from the gradual impoverishment of surrounding estates, and the consequent dispersion of the population.

Pope's Greek Church, where General Washington was baptized, fell into such a complete decay, that it was a resort for beasts and birds. It was set on fire a few years ago, lest the falling of the roof should kill the cattle, accustomed to seek shade and shelter there.

Yet in view of these facts, statesmen, for temporary purposes, are willng to spread over the rich prairies of Texas this devastating system, to devour, like the locusts of Egypt, every green thing in its path.

And while we are thus wilfully perpetuating and extending this terrible evil, priests and politicians are not ashamed to say that it must be so, because the system was entailed upon us by "the avarice of our ancestral government." Would any other evil, any evil which we ourselves did not choose, be tolerated among us, because it was a legacy from Great Britain? I never hear this weak apology offered, without thinking of the answer made to it by the eloquent George Thompson: "Yes, charge the guilt upon England; but as you have copied England in her sin, copy her also in her repentance."

☞ The Mormon Temple burnt.—The Temple at Nauvoo, so long a bone of contention between the two sects of Mormons, was burnt on the morning of the 9th instant. When first discovered, at 4 o'clock A. M., the cupola was in flames, and notwithstanding the most strenuous exertions, nothing is now left of this magnificent edifice but its ruined and blackened walls. It is supposed to be the work of an incendiary, though we are at a loss to discover what motive could prove sufficiently strong to induce any one to perpetrate such a piece of Vandalism. We hope he may be discovered and meet the reward he so justly merits.—Wisconsin Standard.

Reform in Egypt.—An exchange says that a deputation waited upon the Pacha of Egypt, and requested a mitigation of certain grievances. The Pacha hung the whole of the deputation.

Pittsburgh, October 7th, 1848.

Beloved Brother:—Being once more together we thought to write to you; for the communion of the saints on earth is one of our greatest privileges. We have read with deep emotion your "appeal." We cannot express by words how deeply we sympathize with you. How abhorrent to our feelings is that criminal credulity exhibited by some professed saints, who, like "greedy dogs," are ready to swallow the foul refuses of the less ungodly moral scavenger of the world. But enough. We talk from our souls' deepest feeling. That man or woman (especially if they be professed saints) who are eternally "rooting" in the moral sinks of filth and infamy for (their appropriate food) scandal, such are clouds without water, constantly speaking and believing "evil" of their brethren. From such "good Lord deliver" the church. The sooner the better. But for you, dear brother, and the few noble spirits who do battle so nobly with you for "truth," the altars of our hearts' shall ever be lit up with the incense of prayer. We must not be discouraged. We do know that the world is ripening fast for "the harvest."

"And soon the reaping time will come,
And angels shout the harvest home."

Now to business. Brother James Smith sends by me forty Books of Mormon; thirty-five for tithing, and five for the paper; one copy from the beginning of the third volume. Brother Winders sends ten dollars for tithing. T. G. M. Greig intends sending more paper for the Herald. We shall ship the box as follows: "To J. J. Strang, Milwaukee, Wisconsin Territory." If this direction is not correct, please to give us the proper one in your next paper. I have had the pleasure of baptizing my dear mother since I wrote you last. There are a few faithful ones here yet. I have been preaching pretty regular this summer in Beaver county, but it is like preaching at "Vanity Fair." The legitimate fruit of the present religious systems are being more and more manifest in downright skepticism. Mesmerism, clairvoyance and the various other appliances of the "father of lies" are doing their work, perfecting the system of Anti-Christ.

Now a few hints to our dear brother Page. Tell your "devil" to ink a little more, that's all. We like your paper (barring the ink) first rate. "Go ahead." Give us as much proof, I mean "collateral," of the Book of Mormon as you can spare room for. It is what we like, and what we want, and you are the one to do that. I received a small pamphlet from ——— Cowles containing some wonderful translations, &c. I have not had time to examine it.—Can you tell us who the professed translator is of the book of Esdras? We are waiting for the other half of those hymn books, to get them bound. I could give you some of the most astonishing proofs of the antiquity of this earth that the world ever dreamed of, but nobody but a saint would believe either of us, although the facts are well attested by respectable "disinterested" witnesses.

I will state two well attested facts for your own ear. Mr. Joseph Craig (who may be seen at any time in Philadelphia, of the firm of "Craig, Bellows & Co.") one cold morning put a lump of bitumenous coal (from Mr. Patterson's bank) into a stove, while he sat and watched the kindling of the fire, the lump opened (from the heat) and he observed a round scale, as he thought, peal off from the inside of one of the pieces. Curiosity led him to examine it.—In trying to break it (as from its black appearance he had taken it for slate) he found it was copper. He applied a weak acid and cleaned it. It proved to be a "coin," with some curious devices, nearly obliterated, on one side, and a (raised) figure of a horse's head and neck on the other, but no date. I examined the piece as soon as cleaned, and from my knowledge of ancient coins I must say that I do believe "its fellow" does not exist in the knowledge of man at the present time. This lump of coal was taken (the day before) from the bank some two hundred yards in the hill. Another instance is of Mr. Marquis, who found a piece of wrought iron in a lump of coal, taken by himself from his own coal bank, (some one hundred and fifty yards from its mouth in the bank,) which not only retained the marks of a hammer upon it, but the marks of a chisel also. Both the above specimens may be seen by calling upon the above persons, (Craig or Marquis.) Your brother,

JAMES M. GREIG.

☞ $11,00 cash received. To Racine is the proper direction in sending to Voree by water. Boxes of goods for tithing should be addressed, James J. Strang, Racine, Wis. Nevertheless, if addressed to Milwaukee, they will be received. The former package from Pittsburgh was delayed many months on the way, and received only a few weeks since, but one can hardly fail of finally arriving. We should like to pursue the investigation of the evidence of the earth's antiquity further. By our reading, the country beyond Pittsburgh is that spoken of in Gen. ii. 11, 12, and the coins are doubtless antediluvian. We doubt their being pre-Adamic.

Salem, September 26th, 1848.

Dear Brother Strang:—You will pardon me for intruding upon your notice, when I inform you of my case. I obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine taught by Jesus and the Apostles, and joined the church of Latter Day Saints in 1833. I labored unceasingly to promote the cause, while the Temples in Kirtland and Nauvoo were building, that I might be able to cast in my mite, that I might obtain a name and place in the house of the Lord, until the dreadful shock which the church has sustained in the death of the prophet Joseph, and breaking up of the church at Nauvoo with the attending evils, has produced a sad reverse. My disappointment has made sad my spirit, and has greatly impaired my health. I have the two last years suffered much from debility, originating from a diseased state of the liver; and as I recognize no other head or leader of the church than the man appointed by Joseph, I, as a lonely wanderer, a scattered sheep of the wilderness, address myself to you.—As we have been abundantly taught, and in many instances have tested the same, that the faith of the former church, with its attendant gifts and blessings has been restored, and as it is found on record that there were those that never died that by sending aprons and handkerchiefs to the Apostles were healed of their diseases.—I send no apron or handkerchief, but on this simple sheet I send this humble request to you and the saints assembled in Voree, that your faith and prayers may be exercised in my behalf that my health may be restored, and especially my eye sight, which has become much impaired, may be in some measure restored. Not for my labors do I ask this mercy at the hand of God and his people, but that in my declining years I may be able to do something for his people in affliction. I have ever felt a strong desire to be assembled with the saints, but as yet the way has not been opened.—I hope the time is not far distant when the Lord will send his servants into this part of his vineyard, for the few of us that remain here are like sheep scattered on the mountains, while the wolves are prowling round us. I must now close by subscribing myself your unworthy sister in the faith of the everlasting gospel,

ABIGAIL P. HOLMES.

P. S. I will just mention that my place of residence is Georgetown, but being on a visit to brother Bryant's, I dated from this place. We shall be pleased to receive a communication from you, directed to Nathaniel Holmes, Georgetown. A. P. HOLMES.

☞ We receive many similar letters to this. And we believe that in nearly every instance is the prayer of faith of the saints an-

Pittsburgh, October 7th, 1848.

Beloved Brother:—Being once more together we thought to write to you; for the communion of the saints on earth is one of our greatest privileges. We have read with deep emotion your "appeal." We cannot express by words how deeply we sympathize with you. How abhorrent to our feelings is that criminal credulity exhibited by some professed saints, who, like "greedy dogs," are ready to swallow the foul refuses of the less ungodly moral scavenger of the world. But enough. We talk from our souls' deepest feeling. That man or woman (especially if they be professed saints) who are eternally "rooting" in the moral sinks of filth and infamy for (their appropriate food) scandal, such are clouds without water, constantly speaking and believing "evil" of their brethren. From such "good Lord deliver" the church. The sooner the better. But for you, dear brother, and the few noble spirits who do battle so nobly with you for "truth," the altars of our hearts' shall ever be lit up with the incense of prayer. We must not be discouraged. We do know that the world is ripening fast for "the harvest."

"And soon the reaping time will come,
And angels shout the harvest home."

Now to business. Brother James Smith sends by me forty Books of Mormon; thirty-five for tithing, and five for the paper; one copy from the beginning of the third volume. Brother Winders sends ten dollars for tithing. T. G. M. Greig intends sending more paper for the Herald. We shall ship the box as follows: "To J. J. Strang, Milwaukee, Wisconsin Territory." If this direction is not correct, please to give us the proper one in your next paper. I have had the pleasure of baptizing my dear mother since I wrote you last. There are a few faithful ones here yet. I have been preaching pretty regular this summer in Beaver county, but it is like preaching at "Vanity Fair." The legitimate fruit of the present religious systems are being more and more manifest in downright skepticism. Mesmerism, clairvoyance and the various other appliances of the "father of lies" are doing their work, perfecting the system of Anti-Christ.

Now a few hints to our dear brother Page. Tell your "devil" to ink a little more, that's all. We like your paper (barring the ink) first rate. "Go ahead." Give us as much proof, I mean "collateral," of the Book of Mormon as you can spare room for. It is what we like, and what we want, and you are the one to do that. I received a small pamphlet from ——— Cowles containing some wonderful translations, &c. I have not had time to examine it.—Can you tell us who the professed translator is of the book of Esdras? We are waiting for the other half of those hymn books, to get them bound. I could give you some of the most astonishing proofs of the antiquity of this earth that the world ever dreamed of, but nobody but a saint would believe either of us, although the facts are well attested by respectable "disinterested" witnesses.

I will state two well attested facts for your own ear. Mr. Joseph Craig (who may be seen at any time in Philadelphia, of the firm of "Craig, Bellows & Co.") one cold morning put a lump of bitumenous coal (from Mr. Patterson's bank) into a stove, while he sat and watched the kindling of the fire, the lump opened (from the heat) and he observed a round scale, as he thought, peal off from the inside of one of the pieces. Curiosity led him to examine it.—In trying to break it (as from its black appearance he had taken it for slate) he found it was copper. He applied a weak acid and cleaned it. It proved to be a "coin," with some curious devices, nearly obliterated, on one side, and a (raised) figure of a horse's head and neck on the other, but no date. I examined the piece as soon as cleaned, and from my knowledge of ancient coins I must say that I do believe "its fellow" does not exist in the knowledge of man at the present time. This lump of coal was taken (the day before) from the bank some two hundred yards in the hill. Another instance is of Mr. Marquis, who found a piece of wrought iron in a lump of coal, taken by himself from his own coal bank, (some one hundred and fifty yards from its mouth in the bank,) which not only retained the marks of a hammer upon it, but the marks of a chisel also. Both the above specimens may be seen by calling upon the above persons, (Craig or Marquis.) Your brother,

JAMES M. GREIG.

☞ $11,00 cash received. To Racine is the proper direction in sending to Voree by water. Boxes of goods for tithing should be addressed, James J. Strang, Racine, Wis. Nevertheless, if addressed to Milwaukee, they will be received. The former package from Pittsburgh was delayed many months on the way, and received only a few weeks since, but one can hardly fail of finally arriving. We should like to pursue the investigation of the evidence of the earth's antiquity further. By our reading, the country beyond Pittsburgh is that spoken of in Gen. ii. 11, 12, and the coins are doubtless antediluvian. We doubt their being pre-Adamic.

Salem, September 26th, 1848.

Dear Brother Strang:—You will pardon me for intruding upon your notice, when I inform you of my case. I obeyed from the heart that form of doctrine taught by Jesus and the Apostles, and joined the church of Latter Day Saints in 1833. I labored unceasingly to promote the cause, while the Temples in Kirtland and Nauvoo were building, that I might be able to cast in my mite, that I might obtain a name and place in the house of the Lord, until the dreadful shock which the church has sustained in the death of the prophet Joseph, and breaking up of the church at Nauvoo with the attending evils, has produced a sad reverse. My disappointment has made sad my spirit, and has greatly impaired my health. I have the two last years suffered much from debility, originating from a diseased state of the liver; and as I recognize no other head or leader of the church than the man appointed by Joseph, I, as a lonely wanderer, a scattered sheep of the wilderness, address myself to you.—As we have been abundantly taught, and in many instances have tested the same, that the faith of the former church, with its attendant gifts and blessings has been restored, and as it is found on record that there were those that never died that by sending aprons and handkerchiefs to the Apostles were healed of their diseases.—I send no apron or handkerchief, but on this simple sheet I send this humble request to you and the saints assembled in Voree, that your faith and prayers may be exercised in my behalf that my health may be restored, and especially my eye sight, which has become much impaired, may be in some measure restored. Not for my labors do I ask this mercy at the hand of God and his people, but that in my declining years I may be able to do something for his people in affliction. I have ever felt a strong desire to be assembled with the saints, but as yet the way has not been opened.—I hope the time is not far distant when the Lord will send his servants into this part of his vineyard, for the few of us that remain here are like sheep scattered on the mountains, while the wolves are prowling round us. I must now close by subscribing myself your unworthy sister in the faith of the everlasting gospel,

ABIGAIL P. HOLMES.

P. S. I will just mention that my place of residence is Georgetown, but being on a visit to brother Bryant's, I dated from this place. We shall be pleased to receive a communication from you, directed to Nathaniel Holmes, Georgetown. A. P. HOLMES.

☞ We receive many similar letters to this. And we believe that in nearly every instance is the prayer of faith of the saints as

swered in healing. Still we cannot forbear to say that those who ask such things should remember their duties to God. We hardly have faith to pray for health to those who disregard the word of wisdom, nor for peace to those who neglect the gathering, or prosperity to those who neglect the payment of tithing. Looking over the desolating heedlessness of God's words, which universally prevails, we can only be surprised and thankful at the new vigor that God has infused in the hearts of his people. Without more faithfulness this cannot last. Who will live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God? We all wonder that Esau should have sold his birthright for a mess of pottage. But how few of us have not sold ours for a dish of hot coffee, or a scalding cup of Old Hyson! Within the last few weeks we have known several persons in middle and old age lay by these things and the filthy weed, and without the least inconvenience. And in that short time there is a visible diminution in the complaints of aches and dullness. [Ed

Beaver Island, September 4th, 1848.

Brother Strang:—It is with feelings of lively satisfaction that I see the Gospel Herald come to hand much enlarged. I here inclose [$5] dollars subscription money for the same. I intend to purchase the paper if nothing else. I shall try and send some more this fall, and I sincerely hope that the saints will all with one accord lend a helping hand, that it may be supported at its present size until we shall be enabled to give it another growth. Let each and every saint make a very little exertion and the paper can be supported, without those who actually do the labor being necessitated to labor without any remuneration whatever. There is scarcely a member in the church but what can raise the small sum of two dollars once every twelve months, and never be any the poorer for it, but much the richer; for they will receive a store of knowledge, if rightly treasured up, better, far better, than the riches of this world. I do really hope that the saints will with union, energy and zeal united take hold, each putting in his mite and your subscription can easily be swelled to four times its present number.

Every person who ptetends to be a saint ought, to say the least, subscribe for the paper, and then carefully peruse its columns. And if they have not become entirely cold, if they have any interest in the work, they can do this with a feeling of interest and satisfaction. But, alas! how many there be who belong to this church who are not subscribers for the paper, or who seldom pretend to peruse its columns. Would that they could but once realize the necessity of well supporting the organ of their faith. Now a word from Beaver, and I will close. We are here enjoying health, strength, peace and prosperity, and hope these few lines will find the saints at Voree enjoying the same blessings. We would like to hear from you very much. Will you write? Send my respects to all inquiring friends. Yours respectfully, R. F. MILLS.

P. S. A number of Books of Mormon wanted here. I also want the evidence of the Book of Mormon. If you have a chance send them R. F. M.

☞ We have received a communication in the hand writing of William Smith, not however signed by his name, made up as usual of patch work, and containing the usual request to "cerect" the spelling, and proposing to discuss some question of prophet Strang's priesthood and Presidency. It is a subject on which we are quite anxious to meet an able opponent. We have a rule however that when we enter on a discussion it must be with an opponent whose positions are in some moderate degree plausible, or who is possessed of some degree of talent, or, in the absence of both these, who has some prospect of making converts. We do not see in Wm. Smith's pretensions the slightest degree of plausibility, or that they are sustained with any talent whatever, nor that there is the remotest prospect of his ever making any converts to them. If, however, Wm. is quite anxious to again see his cogitations in print, we think we can make him room. Though he has seen fit to offer us the affirmative, we will allow him to both open and close. If he will send us an article respectable in its language, decent in its style, and containing any thing deserving the name of argument in answer to what we have heretofore published, and to what he has himself said, we will publish. And he may remember that he has his testimony as well as his arguments to answer.

☞ The following is from the Cleveland True Democrat, you can make such disposal of it as you see proper:— MILLS.

"The Texan Star states that a million mummies have been discovered in the remains of Durango, Mexico. They are in a sitting posture, and have the wrappings and ornaments as the Egyptian. Among them was found a sculptured head, with a poignard of flint, chaplets, beads, fragments of bone polished like ivory, fine worked elastic tissues, (probably our modern india rubber cloth,) moccasins, worked like those of our Indians to-day, bones of vipers, &c. It remains to continue these interesting researches, and America will become another Egypt to antiquarians, and her ruins will go back to the oldest period of the world, showing, doubtless, that the ancestors of the Montezumas lived on the Nile."

Jackson, October 8th, 1848.

Brother Strang:—I inclose two dollars for the Temple. Mr. Hill has come to the conclusion that he will send one-tenth of his earnings for the building of the Temple, believing that God will bless him in his deed. Although he has no other means of supporting his family (which is six in number) only to work for seventy-five cents per day, yet we feel as though we wanted to do all the Lord requires of us. He will send it up two and three dollars at a time, as fast as he earns it, until we are permitted to gather with the saints there. He intends to put what he has into the association. Your sister in the bonds of the everlasting covenant,

HARRIET HILL.

☞ We publish this rather to show that living faith, accompanied by works, is yet to be found. Scarcely a week goes by without some such testimony of the renewed strength of faith and works.—Tithing came in handsomely during Conference, (since the report of the Temple Committee,) and continues to flow this way. [Ed.

☞ The New Covenant comes to us this week for the first time, with an advertisement of another periodical, and a "please notice." We shall have to see it before we can give it a puff.—And we do not feel indebted to the Covenant for notices. We have been in the habit of giving them an occasional notice, and sending our paper, but get neither notice or paper in return.

☞ We have seen a letter from California saying that the Mormons at San Francisco have got the police control of the place, and defy Col. Mason, the Governor, to drive them. Murders are common, and crime of every kind rife. We know nothing of the truth of it, but the band that went out with Brannan and most of the Mormon Battalion are in that region.

☞ The newspapers have for some time teemed with accounts of the successes of the whites against the Indians in Yucatan.—These accounts appear not to be well founded. The New Orleans Picayune has letters from Balize, showing that the Indians are still prevailing, and that that town is crowded with whites from Yucatan in a state of starvation.

ered in healing. Still we cannot forbear to say that those who ask h things should remember their duties to God. We hardly ve faith to pray for health to those who disregard the word of sdom, nor for peace to those who neglect the gathering, or osperity to those who neglect the payment of tithing. Looking er the desolating heedlessness of God's words, which universally evails, we can only be surprised and thankful at the new vigor at God has infused in the hearts of his people. Without more ithfulness this cannot last. Who will live by every word that roceedeth out of the mouth of God? We all wonder that Esau hould have sold his birthright for a mess of pottage. But how few f us have not sold ours for a dish of hot coffee, or a scalding cup of Old Hyson! Within the last few weeks we have known several persons in middle and old age lay by these things and the filthy weed, and without the least inconvenience. And in that short ime there is a visible diminution in [illegible] complaints of aches and dullness. [Ed

Beaver Island, September 4th, 1848.

Brother Strang:—It is with feelings of lively satisfaction that I see the Gospel Herald come to hand much enlarged. I here inclose [$5] dollars subscription money for the same. I intend to purchase the paper if nothing else. I shall try and send some more this fall, and I sincerely hope that the saints will all with one accord lend a helping hand, that it may be supported at its present size until we shall be enabled to give it another growth. Let each and every saint make a very little exertion and the paper can be supported, without those who actually do the labor being necessitated to labor without any remuneration whatever. There is scarcely a member in the church but what can raise the small sum of two dollars once every twelve months, and never be any the poorer for it, but much the richer; for they will receive a store of knowledge, if rightly treasured up, better, far better, than the riches of this world. I do really hope that the saints will with union, energy and zeal united take hold, each putting in his mite and your subscription can easily be swelled to four times its present number.

Every person who ptetends to be a saint ought, to say the least, subscribe for the paper, and then carefully peruse its columns. And if they have not become entirely cold, if they have any interest in the work, they can do this with a feeling of interest and satisfaction. But, alas! how many there be who belong to this church who are not subscribers for the paper, or who seldom pretend to peruse its columns. Would that they could but once realize the necessity of well supporting the organ of their faith. Now a word from Beaver, and I will close. We are here enjoying health, strength, peace and prosperity, and hope these few lines will find the saints at Voree enjoying the same blessings. We would like to hear from you very much. Will you write? Send my respects to all inquiring friends. Yours respectfully, R. F. MILLS.

P. S. A number of Books of Mormon wanted here. I also want the evidence of the Book of Mormon. If you have a chance send them R. F. M.

☞ We have received a communication in the hand writing of William Smith, not however signed by his name, made up as usual of patch work, and containing the usual request to "cerect" the spelling, and proposing to discuss some question of prophet Strang's priesthood and Presidency. It is a subject on which we are quite anxious to meet an able opponent. We have a rule however that when we enter on a discussion it must be with an opponent whose positions are in some moderate degree plausible, or who is possessed of some degree of talent, or, in the absence of both these, who has some prospect of making converts. We do not see in Wm. Smith's pretensions the slightest degree of plausibility, or that they are sustained with any talent whatever, nor that there is the remotest prospect of his ever making any converts to them. If, however, Wm. is quite anxious to again see his cogitations in print, we think we can make him room. Though he has seen fit to offer us the affirmative, we will allow him to both open and close. If he will send us an article respectable in its language, decent in its style, and containing any thing deserving the name of argument in answer to what we have heretofore published, and to what he has himself said, we will publish. And he may remember that he has his testimony as well as his arguments to answer.

☞ The following is from the Cleveland True Democrat, you can make such disposal of it as you see proper:— MILLS.

"The Texan Star states that a million mummies have been discovered in the remains of Durango, Mexico. They are in a sitting posture, and have the wrappings and ornaments as the Egyptian. Among them was found a sculptured head, with a poignard of flint, chaplets, beads, fragments of bone polished like ivory, fine worked elastic tissues, (probably our modern india rubber cloth,) moccasins, worked like those of our Indians to-day, bones of vipers, &c. It remains to continue these interesting researches, and America will become another Egypt to antiquarians, and her ruins will go back to the oldest period of the world, showing, doubtless, that the ancestors of the Montezumas lived on the Nile."

Jackson, October 8th, 1848.

Brother Strang:—I inclose two dollars for the Temple. Mr. Hill has come to the conclusion that he will send one-tenth of his earnings for the building of the Temple, believing that God will bless him in his deed. Although he has no other means of supporting his family (which is six in number) only to work for seventy-five cents per day, yet we feel as though we wanted to do all the Lord requires of us. He will send it up two and three dollars at a time, as fast as he earns it, until we are permitted to gather with the saints there. He intends to put what he has into the association. Your sister in the bonds of the everlasting covenant,

HARRIET HILL.

☞ We publish this rather to show that living faith, accompanied by works, is yet to be found. Scarcely a week goes by without some such testimony of the renewed strength of faith and works.—Tithing came in handsomely during Conference, (since the report of the Temple Committee,) and continues to flow this way. [Ed.

☞ The New Covenant comes to us this week for the first time, with an advertisement of another periodical, and a "please notice." We shall have to see it before we can give it a puff.—And we do not feel indebted to the Covenant for notices. We have been in the habit of giving them an occasional notice, and sending our paper, but get neither notice or paper in return.

☞ We have seen a letter from California saying that the Mormons at San Francisco have got the police control of the place, and defy Col. Mason, the Governor, to drive them. Murders are common, and crime of every kind rife. We know nothing of the truth of it, but the band that went out with Brannan and most of the Mormon Battalion are in that region.

☞ The newspapers have for some time teemed with accounts of the successes of the whites against the Indians in Yucatan.—These accounts appear not to be well founded. The New Orleans Picayune has letters from Ballze, showing that the Indians are still prevailing, and that that town is crowded with whites from Yucatan in a state of starvation.

Alexander, Genesee Co., N. Y., Sept. 28th, 1848.

DEAR BROTHER STRANG:—I wish to relate to you that a Brighamite called on me to see if I would give any thing to help the suffering saints at the west. And while here he got into some conversation about a prophet, in which he said your claim to come in by the door was false. He said it took three angels to ordain Joseph, and said Joseph told their names and showed that you did not tell of but one angel ordaining you, and did not tell his name. He said you dare not tell his name. He carried the idea that if he was an angel of God his name would be known, and he thought if you came in by the door there would have been three angels instead of one, and their names would be known. He also said one angel had not any business to ordain you alone.

Since he was here I have borrowed the Book of Mormon, and I find on the 511th page where it is written of three disciples who were to minister when the Lord see fit to the scattered tribes of Israel, &c. And on the 512th page, commencing on the last line on the other side of the leaf: And if they shall pray the Father in the name of Jesus they can show themselves unto whatsoever man it seemeth them good. Therefore great and marvelous works shall be wrought by them before the great and coming day, when all people must surely stand before the judgment seat of Christ; yea, even among the Gentiles shall there be a great and marvelous work wrought by them before the great and judgment day. I do not say that these are the ones that have ministered to you, or that any one of them has ordained you, but it clearly shows that they, the ancients, looked forward for such an event to be fulfilled, and yet their names would not be known in general.

In your correspondence with O. L. Wight, in which you write in the plural concerning your ordination, which is the first that I ever noticed that there was any more than one angel that ministered in the ordination. I am hoping that God will continue through you to unfold the things of God, so that I can, together with all the saints, be enabled by the help of his spirit to comprehend the things that are necessary to keep me in the path that leads to everlasting life at the right hand of God. Your sister in the covenant,

MARY DEMARY.

☞ All this shuffling by Brighamites and other apostates shows their want of any real ground of opposition. What nonsense to say that one angel cannot ordain, when one man can. Who ever heard of such a thing as alledging the invalidity of an ordination because but one laid on hands? or but one spoke? The record of prophet Strang's ordination says: The angel saluted, anointed and spoke, because one did each of these things, as would happen in every similar case. He was ordained by the ministration of angels, because more than one ministered in the ordination. As for their names, he found them out just as Joseph did, by revelation, and quite as soon as Joseph did too. [ED.

☞ We can assure President Strang, of the Voree Herald, that we have no wish to misrepresent any religious sect. Whatever may be our opinion respecting the truth or falsity of the doctrines of the church over which he now presides, its expression has always been characterized by a spirit of tolerance. It has been our intention, for some weeks past, to notice the Mormon denomination, but the numerous and onerous duties of an editor of a public journal, of the excitement and turmoil consequent upon a fierce political contest, have hitherto prevented our putting it into effect. After the election we will take up the subject and review it in accordance with the views we have long entertained, but never found leisure to bring under public notice.—Wisconsin Standard.

☞ Perfectly just, and in exact accordance with the opinion we have always had of Col. Keeler. We never had the slightest idea that he would willingly misrepresent any body of religious people, and certainly believe he would not wrong the friendship.—But he has not corrected the unintentional injustice done us in his former article. He in that credited to the Gospel Herald an article treating the use of tobacco as original and unpardonable sin, and calling the government of the U. S. the devil, and yet justifying serving it, in such a manner that his readers must understand it to be the expression of the church over which prophet Strang presides; whereas it was the action of another church not in fellowship with us. And the article was published in the Herald for the purpose of reviewing and condemning it, instead of appearing as the expression of our faith. We have nothing to do with either war or politics, except to pay our portion of the taxes that support them.—But we do not call the U. S. the devil. So we stoutly disapprove of the use of tobacco, except medicinally. But we are able to express our disapprobation without blaspheming the name of God, or trifling with his law. Such a mistake concerning an old denomination would fall perfectly harmless. But the public are disposed to think ill of a new denomination. Whatever they hear derogatory to them, they give full credit to. But if the same man speaks well of them on some other point, the people shake their heads.

New York, October 2d, 1848.

DEAR SIR:—I received a copy of the Herald this day and read it with interest, but was somewhat surprised however to see my confidential letter made public in the way it was.* Self-justification is a principle I abhor in others, yet I must beg to say I cannot, after carefully examining the two cases you refer to, see any parallel.—Jeptha vowed a vow to the Lord, and so did the princes, but I have never vowed to God to keep B. Young's deviltry a secret. I had no oath administered to me. One out of forty of us went to an altar and had an oath administered for the whole. Others consented by a nod, all in haste and confusion. I did not give the nod, from the fact that I had no confidence in the administration in the least.† All your argument on that subject is consistent, and I receive it as from a friend. But if I have vowed to God and broke it in the sense you say, fortunate for me, I have by insanity, and hope therefore that judgment may come on me accordingly. I have always been satisfied however of the fact that, when I took up that subject, I was stooping beneath the dignity of my calling. And the greatest evil I have discovered in it was that I had refused to do what the mighty God had condescended to call me to perform. And the world had the impression while selling this book that I had left Mormonism and was publishing against it.‡ I hope you will have the goodness of sending me a copy of the Herald with the notice of the pamphlet and remarks, and also one of the revelations of the common order you spoke of some time since, which I have been anxious to see. I myself do most solemnly protest and abhor the conduct of any who pretend to labor for God, and at the same time are wordly minded, trifling and every thing else but a man in whom the spirit of God dwells. On this principle when I commenced the work of myself I dropped the pretense of the servant of God.

J. VAN DEUSEN.

*Your letter was not confidential. It was one of two letters to the editor of a public journal, and accompanied by a copy of a work of yours, asking his opinion concerning that work. Certainly he could not infer otherwise than that you asked his opinion as a journalist. It is a common practice of all publishers to lay their works on the tables of the different journalists in this manner, to get them before the public. When they come before us we give them a frank notice, not an advertisers puff.

†If you did not in fact take the oath, then our remarks do not ap-

Alexander, Genesee Co., N. Y., Sept. 28th, 1848.

Dear Brother Strang:—I wish to relate to you that a Brighamite called on me to see if I would give any thing to help the suffering saints at the west. And while here he got into some conversation about a prophet, in which he said your claim to come in by the door was false. He said it took three angels to ordain Joseph, and said Joseph told their names and showed that you did not tell of but one angel ordaining you, and did not tell his name. He said you dare not tell his name. He carried the idea that if he was an angel of God his name would be known, and he thought if you came in by the door there would have been three angels instead of one, and their names would be known. He also said one angel had not any business to ordain you alone.

Since he was here I have borrowed the Book of Mormon, and I find on the 511th page where it is written of three disciples who were to minister when the Lord see fit to the scattered tribes of Israel, &c. And on the 512th page, commencing on the last line on the other side of the leaf: And if they shall pray the Father in the name of Jesus they can show themselves unto whatsoever man it seemeth them good. Therefore great and marvelous works shall be wrought by them before the great and coming day, when all people must surely stand before the judgment seat of Christ; yea, even among the Gentiles shall there be a great and marvelous work wrought by them before the great and judgment day. I do not say that these are the ones that have ministered to you, or that any one of them has ordained you, but it clearly shows that they, the ancients, looked forward for such an event to be fulfilled, and yet their names would not be known in general.

In your correspondence with O. L. Wight, in which you write in the plural concerning your ordination, which is the first that I ever noticed that there was any more than one angel that ministered in the ordination. I am hoping that God will continue through you to unfold the things of God, so that I can, together with all the saints, be enabled by the help of his spirit to comprehend the things that are necessary to keep me in the path that leads to everlasting life at the right hand of God. Your sister in the covenant,

MARY DEMARY.

☛ All this shuffling by Brighamites and other apostates shows their want of any real ground of opposition. What nonsense to say that one angel cannot ordain, when one man can. Who ever heard of such a thing as alledging the invalidity of an ordination because but one laid on hands? or but one spoke? The record of prophet Strang's ordination says: The angel saluted, anointed and spoke, because one did each of these things, as would happen in every similar case. He was ordained by the ministration of angels, because more than one ministered in the ordination. As for their names, he found them out just as Joseph did, by revelation, and quite as soon as Joseph did too. [Ed.

☛ We can assure President Strang, of the Voree Herald, that we have no wish to misrepresent any religious sect. Whatever may be our opinion respecting the truth or falsity of the doctrines of the church over which he now presides, its expression has always been characterized by a spirit of tolerance. It has been our intention, for some weeks past, to notice the Mormon denomination, but the numerous and onerous duties of an editor of a public journal, of the excitement and turmoil consequent upon a fierce political contest, have hitherto prevented our putting it into effect. After the election we will take up the subject and review it in accordance with the views we have long entertained, but never found leisure to bring under public notice.—Wisconsin Standard.

☛ Perfectly just, and in exact accordance with the opinion we have always had of Col. Keeler. We never had the slightest idea that he would willingly misrepresent any body of religious people, and certainly believe he would not wrong the friendship. But he has not corrected the unintentional injustice done us in his former article. He in that credited to the Gospel Herald an article treating the use of tobacco as original and unpardonable sin, and calling the government of the U. S. the devil, and yet justifying it, in such a manner that his readers must understand it to be the expression of the church over which prophet Strang presides; whereas it was the action of another church not in fellowship with us. And the article was published in the Herald for the purpose of reviewing and condemning it, instead of appearing as the expression of our faith. We have nothing to do with either war or politics, except to pay our portion of the taxes that support them.—But we do not call the U. S. the devil. So we stoutly disapprove of the use of tobacco, except [illegible]ally. But we are able to express our disapprobation with[illegible]ming the name of God, or trifling with his law. Such a mistake concerning an old denomination would fall perfectly harmless. But the public are disposed to think ill of a new denomination. Whatever they hear derogatory to them, they give full credit to. But if the same man speaks well of them on some other point, the people shake their heads.

New York, October 2d, 1848.

Dear Sir:—I received a copy of the Herald this day and read it with interest, but was somewhat surprised however to see my confidential letter made public in the way it was.* Self-justification is a principle I abhor in others, yet I must beg to say I cannot, after carefully examining the two cases you refer to, see any parallel.—Jeptha vowed a vow to the Lord, and so did the princes, but I have never vowed to God to keep B. Young's deviltry a secret. I had no oath administered to me. One out of forty of us went to an altar and had an oath administered for the whole. Others consented by a nod, all in haste and confusion. I did not give the nod, from the fact that I had no confidence in the administration in the least.† All your argument on that subject is consistent, and I receive it as from a friend. But if I have vowed to God and broke it in the sense you say, fortunate for me, I have by insanity, and hope therefore that judgment may come on me accordingly. I have always been satisfied however of the fact that, when I took up that subject, I was stooping beneath the dignity of my calling. And the greatest evil I have discovered in it was that I had refused to do what the mighty God had condescended to call me to perform. And the world had the impression while selling this book that I had left Mormonism and was publishing against it.‡ I hope you will have the goodness of sending me a copy of the Herald with the notice of the pamphlet and remarks, and also one of the revelations of the common order you spoke of some time since, which I have been anxious to see. I myself do most solemnly protest and abhor the conduct of any who pretend to labor for God, and at the same time are wordly minded, trifling and every thing else but a man in whom the spirit of God dwells. On this principle when I commenced the work of myself I dropped the pretense of the servant of God.

J. VAN DEUSEN.

*Your letter was not confidential. It was one of two letters to the editor of a public journal, and accompanied by a copy of a work of yours, asking his opinion concerning that work. Certainly he could not infer otherwise than that you asked his opinion as a journalist. It is a common practice of all publishers to lay their works on the tables of the different journalists in this manner, to get them before the public. When they come before us we give them a frank notice, not an advertisers puff.

†If you did not in fact take the oath, then our remarks do not apply. But how were we to know that you had not taken the oath, when in your book you state that all who received the endowment were sworn to keep it secret, and that you had taken it? Very likely you may have meant that this oath was taken by all in general, not universally. But you did not say so, much less did you say that you in particular did not take it. If you have suffered wrong by being classed with those who regard not "oaths, nor leagues, nor prophets," it is your own heedlessness that has caused it. We are happy to give you an opportunity of correcting it.

‡Of course they would form that opinion. And it was well for the cause that when engaged in that work you was not pretending to preach. There is very little use in giving divided attention to preaching. If you are pefectly satisfied with all such speculation and publishing the endowment and other follies of apostate Mormons and perfectly established in the faith, not merely of the gospel, but of the dispensation thereof which God has committed to us, it is well to preach the word. None other need do it. The order of Enoch is prospering and prevailing. We have for some time intended publishing a series of articles on the subject, including the revelations, but our two discussions and a thousand other things prevent.

MUSINGS.

NON-RECIPROCAL.

When a sectarian preacher comes to Voree he expects to be received and treated gentlemanly, and to be invited to preach to the Mormons. He also calculates as a mere matter of course that the body of them will turn out and give him an attentive hearing. And this expectation is never disappointed. But when a Mormon goes into a sectarian community he never expects any such courtesy or kindness. And his expectation is seldom disappointed. Both parties judge rightfully, for they judge that we will treat them with courtesy, and we do, and we judge that they will treat us coarsly, and according to our faith so it is to us.

A CASE.

A few months since a strolling Baptist preacher, an African by birth, came this way, and not knowing that he was among saints, accepted an invitation to preach, and in due time gave us just about as good a discourse as a sectarian is capable of. We then took him and instructed him in the way of God and sent him away in peace, with an invitation to call again. All the bug-bear stories that men could tell him would not convince him that Mormons were dragons. On the second visit he gave us a discourse against christian slavery, to which we said amen, with additions.

MORE THAN SATISFACTORS.

Our religious friends are much pleased with the notion of preaching to us. Some how they think us a poor benighted race, greatly in need of the enlightenment of their words, and are much pleased that we are willing to hear them. But then we not only hear them patiently, but correct them carefully. The fact is, they are all quite behind the times in things of religion. They have not heard from their God for some 1770 years at least, and being rather forgetful of stories so long told, they are not quite certain in any religious matter whatever, and, like children who have never been to school, but picked up a few scraps of learning among their playfellows, they think they know it all. Indeed it nettles them to be shown how utterly blind they are.

A RARE INSTANCE.

Last Sabbath another Baptist preacher, one Dr. Irvin, or Marvin, we are not certain which name, came along and stopped to hear high priests and prophet, and expressed to some of the saints a great anxiety to hear what Mormonism really was. So in the evening he was accommodated with a little more of the words of prophets and apostles than he was prepared to swallow. Tuesday he got ready to break up Mormonism so entire that it should never grow again. So he sent a request to the prophet to call the saints together and hear him expound these words:—

"For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit: By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison." 1 Peter iii. 18, 19.

Of course the prophet called a meeting. The saints came together, and what a sermon they did hear! Sectarian-like he divided his subject into three parts. In the division he forgot both introduction and conclusion, but in the preaching he forgot all but that. Not one word did he say about the prison. Not a syllable about the spirits in it. Not the first lisp of the object in preaching to them. On the entire subject of the salvation of the dead he was as dumb as an adder. He neither told us to whom Christ preached in the prison, or what he preached to them. Or whether they were or might be benefitted by the preaching, or what change was wrought upon them in any sense. Nor did he in the division of his subject (which he forgot as soon as made) make the slightest allusion to either of these points.

Well, when he got through the prophet corrected his blunders, repaired his errors of commission, and the chief of apostles amended those of omission, by saying what he had left unsaid. And instead of being obliged to us, don't you think he considered himself misused? He was not so much as thankful to us for mending what he had done wrong, and doing what we ought to have done. And when we preached the gospel to him and called on him to repent, he said the prophet was a blackguard. May the Lord forgive him the railing accusation.

Howard, Western District, Canada West, Oct. 14th, 1846.

MR. JAMES J. STRANG:—SIR,—A paper called Zion's Reveille has been put into my hand containing a challenge to all the world, to discuss certain points of doctrine laid down in certain catalogues, the 16th No. of that paper. And as I believe truth never suffers by investigation, I have no objection to entering into a discussion with you, provided we can conduct it in a christian spirit and christian decorum. As to the subject, I should prefer the 9th of your 2d catalogue, viz.: "We will affirm that the Book of Mormon is a divine record, and that its coming forth is essential to the fulfillment of prophecies in the Bible." I have not the control of any paper in which the discussion can be published, but you may send me the numbers of the Reveille in which the discussion is published, and I will pay for them to John Shipp, one of your Elders. When this point is disposed of we will then take up others, if we think best. Yours in search of truth, A. PLUMB.

☛ Mr. Plumb will see by the files of the Herald that we have entered on the discussion of a question covering that entire ground with Professor Graham of the Michigan Central College. It would not be convenient to have two discussions on the same question in the same paper at the same time. On some other question we can accommodate him. Possibly Mr. Plumb has confidence enough in his own faith to avow it, and enter the lists with a Mormon in the negative. Or, if you have no settled faith and are merely searching for a platform to stand on, pick out some point in ours not already involved in discussion, and we will make up an issue. [ED.

SLAVE TRADE IN BRAZIL.—Late accounts from Brazil state that the horrors of the African slave trade are beginning to attract attention in Rio Janeiro—its very head quarters. More than three quarters of all the slaves obtained in Africa are landed in Brazil. There is a loud and open dissatisfaction expressed at Rio Janeiro of this inhuman traffic. If the trade to Brazil could be stopped, perhaps the English Government would be ashamed to continue it.—Ex. paper.

But how were we to know that you had not taken the oath, [illegible] in your book you state that all who received the endowment [illegible] sworn to keep it secret, and that you had taken it? Very [illegible]ly you may have meant that this oath was taken by all in gen-[illegible], not universally. But you did not say so, much less did you [illegible] that you in particular did not take it. If you have suffered [illegible]ng by being classed with those who regard not "oaths, nor [illegible]rues, nor prophets," it is your own heedlessness that has caused [illegible].

We are happy to give you an opportunity of correcting it.

Of course they would form that opinion. And it was well for [illegible] cause that when engaged in that wo[illegible] you were not pretending [illegible]reach. There is very little use in giving [illegible] to [illegible]aching. If you are perfectly sa[illegible] [illegible] publishing the endowment[illegible] [illegible]ns and perfectly establish[illegible] [illegible] of the dispensation thereof[illegible] [illegible]well to preach the word[illegible] [illegible] Enoch is prospering and [illegible] have for [illegible] time [illegible]ended publishing a series of articles o[illegible] subject, in[illegible]ing the [illegible]elations, but our two discussions and a thousand other things [illegible]vent.

MUSINGS.

NON-RECIPROCAL.

When a sectarian preacher comes to Voree he expects to be re-[illegible]ved and treated gentlemanly, and to be invited to preach to the [illegible]ormons. He also calculates as a mere matter of course that the [illegible]dy of them will turn out and give him an attentive hearing. And [illegible]s expectation is never disappointed. But when a Mormon goes [illegible]o a sectarian community he never expects any such courtesy or [illegible]ndness. And his expectation is seldom disappointed. Both par-[illegible]a judge rightfully, for they judge that we will treat them with courtesy, and we do, and we judge that they will treat us coarsely, [illegible]d according to our faith so it is to us.

A CASE.

A few months since a strolling Baptist preacher, an African by [illegible]th, came this way, and not knowing that he was among saints, [illegible]epted an invitation to preach, and in due time gave us just about [illegible]good a discourse as a sectarian is capable of. We then took him [illegible] instructed him in the way of God and sent him away in peace, [illegible]h an invitation to call again. All the bug-bear stories that men [illegible]ld tell him would not convince him that Mormons were drag-[illegible]. On the second visit he gave us a discourse against christian [illegible]very, to which we said amen, with additions.

MORE THAN SATISFACTORY.

Our religious friends are much pleased with the notion of preach-[illegible] to us. Some how they think us a poor benighted race, greatly [illegible]need of the enlightenment of their words, and are much pleased [illegible]s we are willing to hear them. But then we not only hear them [illegible]ently, but correct them carefully. The fact is, they are all [illegible]e behind the times in things of religion. They have not heard [illegible]n their God for some 1770 years at least, and being rather for-[illegible]ful of stories so long told, they are not quite certain in any re-[illegible]ious matter whatever, and, like children who have never been to [illegible]ool, but picked up a few scraps of learning among their playfel-[illegible]s, they think they know it all. Indeed it nettles them to be [illegible]wn how utterly blind they are.

A RARE INSTANCE.

[illegible]ast Sabbath another Baptist preacher, one Dr. Irvin, or Mar-[illegible] we are not certain which name, came along and stopped to hear [illegible]n priests and prophet, and expressed to some of the saints a [illegible]t anxiety to hear what Mormonism really was. So in the [illegible]ning he was accommodated with a little more of the words of [illegible] prophets and apostles than [illegible] prepared to swallow. Tuesday [illegible] ready to break up Mormonism so entire that it should never grow again. So he sent a request to the prophet to call the saints together and hear him expound these words:—

"For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the spirit: By which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison." 1 Peter iii. 18, 19.

Of course the prophet called a meeting. The saints came together, and what a sermon they did hear! Sectarian-like he divided his subject into three parts. In the division he forgot both introduction and conclusion, but in the preaching he forgot all but that. Not one word did he say about the prison. Not a syllable about the spirits in it. Not the first lisp of the object in preaching to them. On the entire subject of the salvation of the dead he was as dumb as an adder. He neither told us to whom Christ preached in the prison, or what he preached to them. Or whether they were or might be benefitted by the preaching, or what change was wrought upon them in any sense. Nor did he in the division of his subject (which he forgot as soon as made) make the slightest allusion to either of these points.

Well, when he got through the prophet corrected his blunders, repaired his errors of commission, and the chief of apostles amended those of omission, by saying what he had left unsaid. And instead of being obliged to us, don't you think he considered himself misused? He was not so much as thankful to us for mending what he had done wrong, and doing what we ought to have done. And when we preached the gospel to him and called on him to repent, he said the prophet was a blackguard. May the Lord forgive him the railing accusation.

Howard, Western District, Canada West, Oct. 14th, 1848.

MR. JAMES J. STRANG:—SIR,—A paper called Zion's Reveille has been put into my hand containing a challenge to all the world, to discuss certain points of doctrine laid down in certain catalogues in the 16th No. of that paper. And as I believe truth never suffers by investigation, I have no objection to entering into a discussion with you, provided we can conduct it in a christian spirit and christian decorum. As to the subject, I should prefer the 9th of your 2d catalogue, viz.: "We will affirm that the Book of Mormon is a divine record, and that its coming forth is essential to the fulfillment of prophecies in the Bible." I have not the control of any paper in which the discussion can be published, but you may send me the numbers of the Reveille in which the discussion is published, and I will pay for them to John Shippy, one of your Elders. When this point is disposed of we will then take up others, if we think best. Yours in search of truth, A. PLUMB.

☞ Mr. Plumb will see by the files of the Herald that we have entered on the discussion of a question covering that entire ground with Professor Graham of the Michigan Central College. It would not be convenient to have two discussions on the same question in the same paper at the same time. On some other question we can accommodate him. Possibly Mr. Plumb has confidence enough in his own faith to avow it, and enter the lists with a Mormon in the negative. Or, if you have no settled faith and are merely searching for a platform to stand on, pick out some point in ours not already involved in discussion, and we will make up an issue. [ED.

SLAVE TRADE IN BRAZIL.—Late accounts from Brazil state that the horrors of the African slave trade are beginning to attract attention in Rio Janeiro—its very head quarters. More than three quarters of all the slaves obtained in Africa are landed in Brazil. There is a loud and open dissatisfaction expressed at Rio Janeiro of this inhuman traffic. If the trade to Brazil could be stopped, perhaps the English Government would be ashamed to continue it.—Ex. paper.

"KINGS AND THRONES ARE FALLING."

Kings and thrones are falling,
The sound comes o'er the sea;
"Deep unto deep is calling"
To the conflict of the Free;
At the voices of the nations, like the roaring of a flood,
The "sun is turned to darkness, the moon is changed to blood."

The word of power is spoken
In accents loud and long;
The iron chain is broken
From the ankles of the strong;
The blind and beaten giant is staggering up at length,
And the pillars of his prison-house begin to feel his strength.

To exile goes the king,
The throne is in the street,
And royal floors are echoing
The sound of plebeian feet:
O'er gilded rooms and halls of state, the common people throng,
Half fearful of the spectre yet, that haunted them so long.

The Purple Rope is riven,
Ay, crushed beneath the tread
Of masses hunger driven,
Demanding work and bread;
And Death is riding grimly forth, and Terror by his side,
With blood-stained War and Pestilence, and Famine hollow-eyed.

The Powers of Earth are shaken
From the Danube to the Rhine,
Old Germany is waking
Like a Cyclop from his wine;
And dark his brow with hatred, and red his eye with wrath,
While he scatters his tormentors, like pigmies, from his path.

The famished Celt is crying,
Arm, brethren, one and all;
The Saxon lord is flying,
To castle, keep, and wall;
Unhappy Ireland grasps again the old detested bands,
And lifts towards the indignant heavens her bruised and bleeding hands.

The Seine is running red
Through the capital of France;
Over ramparts of the dead
The cry is still, Advance!
With pike and gun and paving-stone, the maddened people arm,
And Peace and Freedom fly the scene of tumult and alarm.

What terror, pain, and sorrow,
Till the travail throes are past,
But then a glorious morrow,
And the promised rest at last;
For the gospel of the Crucified shall triumph like the light,
From the golden gates of morning o'er the darkness of the night.

O'er shattered thrones shall rise
The Kingdom of the Son,
And Ocean, earth, and skies,
Proclaim his reign begun;
The angel-voices heard before on the plains of Galilee,
Shall sound once more on every shore, and over every sea.

J. C. Lord.

Discovery in Mississippi.—In the south-western part of Franklin county, Miss., there is a platform of hewn stone, neatly polished, some three feet under ground. It is about one hundred and eighty ft. long, and eighty feet wide. It extends due north and south, and its surface is perfectly level. The masonry is said to be equal, if not superior, to any work of modern times. The land above it is cultivated, but thirty years ago it was covered with oak and pine trees, measuring from two to three feet in diameter. It is evidently of very remote antiquity, as the Indians who reside in the neighborhood have no knowledge of its existence previous to its recent discovery. Nor is there any tradition among them from any idea of the object of the work, or the people who were its builders. There is also a canal and well connected with it, but they never have been explored. A subterranean passage may be underneath. Farther explorations may throw some light upon its origin.—Ex. paper.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We are about to enter upon two important religious discussions, which will be published through the Herald and other papers, and believing that they will be matters of interest to the public generally, are induced to make an effort to enlarge the circulation of this paper on the present occasion. The first discussion is between prophet Strang and Mr. Edwin Burgess of Racine, and commences in this No. (31.) Prophet Strang affirms the existence of God, (as a distinct individual intellectual being,) and Mr. Burgess denies. The econd is between prophet Strang and professor D. M. Graham of the Michigan Central College, and is to commence in the next No. Prophet Strang affirms that Mormonism (so called) is a dispensation from God, and professor Graham denies. Whoever will send us the names of two NEW SUBSCRIBERS and four dollars shall have the Herald one year gratis. Whoever will send us the names of TEN NEW SUBSCRIBERS and ten dollars shall have the eleventh copy gratis, and the Herald shall be sent a full year to each of the ten subscribers. These subscriptions will commence at Vol. 3, No. 31, and should be sent in as soon as possible in order to secure all the back numbers. Those who avail themselves of this opportunity will furnish themselves with a weekly paper, and the matter of two valuable books for only one dollar. JAMES J. STRANG.

Voree, October 19th, 1848.

RARE SPORTING DOGS.

Isaac Haven, recently from England, offers for sale a few full blooded, black and tan English Fox Terriers, trom the famous stock of Lord Berkly. These rare dogs are sharp scented, tractable and docile; for hunting small game, for fowling, or house and farm dogs are superior to any other dog known. Inquire at the house of Isaac Haven, at Miner's bridge, one mile above Voree.

October 25th, 1848.

TAILORING.

Joseph Ketcham carries on the business of Tailoring at the foot of the hill in the grove, Voree.

BOOKS OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE & COVENANTS.

James Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has constantly on hand a large supply of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, common and pocket binding, for sale cheap, either in quantities or by the single copy.

SHOEMAKING IN VOREE.

John D. Hartley conducts a boot and shoe shop, near the stone quarry, where customers can be accommodated on easy terms.

"KINGS AND THRONES ARE FALLING."

Kings and thrones are falling,
The sound comes o'er the sea;
"Deep unto deep is calling"
To the conflict of the Free;
At the voices of the nations, like the roaring of a flood,
The sun is turned to darkness, the moon is changed to blood."

The word of power is spoken
In accents loud and long;
The iron chain is broken
From the ankles of the strong;
The blind and beaten giant is staggering up at length;
And the pillars of his prison-house begin to feel his strength.

To exile goes the king,
The throne is in the street,
And royal floors are echoing
The sound of plebeian feet:
O'er gilded rooms and halls of state, the common people throng,
Half fearful of the spectre yet, that haunted them so long.

The Purple Rope is riven,
Ay, crushed beneath the tread
Of masses hunger driven,
Demanding work and bread;
And Death is riding grimly forth, and Terror by his side,
With blood-stained War and Pestilence, and Famine hollow-eyed.

The Powers of Earth are shaken
From the Danube to the Rhine,
Old Germany is waking
Like a Cyclop from his wine;
And dark his brow with hatred, and red his eye with wrath,
While he scatters his tormentors, like pigmies, from his path.

The famished Celt is crying,
Arm, brethren, one and all;
The Saxon lord is flying,
To castle, keep, and wall;
Unhappy Ireland grasps again the old detested bands,
And lifts towards the indignant heavens her bruised and bleeding hands.

The Seine is running red
Through the capital of France;
Over ramparts of the dead
The cry is still, Advance!
With pike and gun and paving-stone, the maddened people arm,
And Peace and Freedom fly the scene of tumult and alarm.

What terror, pain, and sorrow,
Till the travail throes are past,
But then a glorious morrow,
And the promised rest at last;
For the gospel of the Crucified shall triumph like the light,
From the golden gates of morning o'er the darkness of the night.

O'er shattered thrones shall rise
The Kingdom of the Son,
And Ocean, earth, and skies,
Proclaim his reign begun;
The angel voices heard before on the plains of Galilee,
Shall sound once more on every shore, and over every sea.

J. C. Lord.

DISCOVERY IN MISSISSIPPI.—In the south-western part of Frank[lin] county, Miss., there is a platform of hewn stone, neatly polish[ed] some three feet under ground. It is about one hundred and eighty long, and eighty feet wide. It extends due north and south, and surface is perfectly level. The masonry is said to be equal, if superior, to any work of modern times. The land above it is cul[ti]vated, but thirty years ago it was covered with oak and pine tre[es] measuring from two to three feet in diameter. It is evidently very remote antiquity, as the Indians who reside in the neighborhoo[d] have no knowledge of its existence previous to its recent discover[y] Nor is there any tradition among them from any idea of the obje[ct] of the work or the people who were its builders. There is also [a] mound with it, but they never have been explored underneath. Farther exploration[s] —Ex. paper.

NOTICE.

We are about to enter upon an important religious discussion which will be published through the Herald and other papers, and believing that they will be matters of interest to the public generally are induced to make an effort to enlarge the circulation of this paper on the present occasion. The first discussion is between prophet Strang and Mr. Edwin Burgess of Racine, and commences in this No. (31.) Prophet Strang affirms the existence of God, (as a distinct individual intellectual being,) and Mr. Burgess denies. The second is between prophet Strang and professor D. M. Graham, of the Michigan Central College, and is to commence in the next No. Prophet Strang affirms that Mormonism (so called) is a dispensation from God, and professor Graham denies. Whoever will send us the names of two NEW SUBSCRIBERS and four dollars shall have the Herald one year gratis. Whoever will send us the names of TEN NEW SUBSCRIBERS and ten dollars shall have the eleventh copy gratis, and the Herald shall be sent a full year to each of the ten subscribers. These subscriptions will commence at Vol. 3, No. 31, and should be sent in as soon as possible in order to secure all the back numbers. Those who avail themselves of this opportunity will furnish themselves with a weekly paper, and the matter of two valuable books for only one dollar. JAMES J. STRANG.

Voree, October 19th, 1848.

RARE SPORTING DOGS.

Isaac Haven, recently from England, offers for sale a few full blooded, black and tan English Fox Terriers, from the famous stock of Lord Berkly. These rare dogs are sharp scented, tractable and docile; for hunting small game, for fowling, or house and farm dogs are superior to any other dog known. Inquire at the house of Isaac Haven, at Miner's bridge, one mile above Voree.

October 25th, 1848.

TAILORING.

Joseph Ketcham carries on the business of Tailoring at the foot of the hill in the grove, Voree.

BOOKS OF MORMON AND DOCTRINE & COVENANTS.

James Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., has constantly on hand a large supply of the Book of Mormon and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants, common and pocket binding, for sale cheap, either in quantities or by the single copy.

SHOEMAKING IN VOREE.

John D. Hartley conducts a boot and shoe shop, near the stone quarry, where customers can be accommodated on easy terms.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 34.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. NOV. 9, 1848. [WHOLE No. 98.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. BURGESS TO MR. STRANG.—No. 1.

Racine, October, 1848.

MR. JAMES J. STRANG :—

DEAR SIR,—I received yours of the 19th, which I shall endeavor to answer for the purpose of removing error and promoting truth, as the best means of removing the misery and increasing the happiness of mankind.

2. In paragraph 2 you state the terms of our inquiry or discussion. I say inquiry, because I presume that we are both honest searchers after truth, and would not conceal from those who think differently, whatever would sustain their views or oppose our own. Discussions are too often one sided and ill willed, evincing the desire to puzzle rather than convince. I understand you to define God as a person possessed of intelligence, motive and will. My denial applies to a supernatural being, who created and governs the universe, and the revelation of his will in any written form whatever, and to the validity of the evidence or testimony by which they are sustained. While you claim popular testimony as proof sufficient of the existence of God, can you reasonably reject the power ascribed to him by the same testimony, that he is creator as well as governor of nature? Gen. chap. 1st, verse 1st : "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth."

3. In paragraph 3 you say; "no man or book is authority in any higher sense than in discussing a question of mathematics," &c.—Then, as mathematicians do not admit testimony opposed to their own as proof of the truth in question, I understand that to be our rule. Ten men affirming a fact do not make the truth more apparent than one.

4. By paragraph 4 I understand self-evident facts require no proofs. Shall we assume that those which are not self-evident do require proof? By paragraph 5 and 6 I understand if I deny God's existence, I should be expected to give my reasons for not believing as the majority do, which would throw the burden of the proof on the negative. Well, as I think it a hard task to sustain the affirmative, when you have done what you can for the latter, I will do what I can for the former.

5. In reply to paragraph 7, you need not fear the discussion being dropped if I am able to sustain it; though I cannot promise to write as much or as fast as you desire. My occupation is a heavy tax on a pair of weak eyes, which, with want of leisure and difficulty of composition, has caused me to delay this communication.

6. In reply to par. 8, the publication of what I write I care little about. I may send a copy to the Boston Investigator to do what they please with.

7. In par. 9, I am glad to find your conclusions are more the result of thought than reading. Some time since I read the articles in the Democratic Review, but saw no proof to satisfy my mind.

8. In par. 10 you say, neither shall I build my logic on assumption, as did Paley, Chalmer and a host of others. I think you do more in assuming the truth of the testimony which contains your premises.

9. In par. 11 you say, "the same kind of evidence which would be good to prove the rotundity of the earth would be equally good to prove the existence of God," so far as applicable; which would be to prove the form of God. Demonstrative evidence is the only proof "always received among men on all subjects."

10. In answer to par. 12, the statements of one traveler, when confirmed by others, and not contrary to experience and reason, is generally believed; and this belief, when true, is promotive of happiness, as it enables us to profit by the experience of others. But were we to act and believe as though accounts of supernatural beings were equally true, we should have to deny the evidence of our senses, and be left to the guidance of less than one in a million who profess to have seen the supernatural; for as all cannot or do not see the supernatural they must depend on the professions of seers. I must say I do not think such evidence well founded, for I think a wise and good parent would make the evidence strong and clear in proportion as it was necessary for the happiness of his children.

11. In par. 13 you say you do not claim that human testimony is equal to demonstration, though as good as the bulk of learned men have of the great body of scientific truths to which they subscribe. This only shows how little reason we have to depend on their testimony, and is an additional reason for us to follow the dictates of experience, "to prove all things." You say it is as good proof as any person or earth has, or can have, of geographic or geologic facts. This I deny, as they can examine the one and the other.

12. As to par. 14, I know that geography, natural and political, is proved by the corroborative testimony of great numbers of living witnesses. And in par. 15 you say, "all who had the means of knowing agree in the main point—the existence of those objects—though they disagree in the details concerning them." This agrees perfectly with our experience, that people observe places and things without noting minutely their particulars; though when any part of a person's testimony is proved false, the other is considered doubtful; but these are things in nature which ordinary people daily examine, and bear no resemblance to the supernatural.

13. In par. 16 you say, believing this evidence of mankind well founded, I appeal to similar evidence to prove a God. He has been seen of men. In this the testimony of all mankind concurs. Then why do we differ?

14. Now, sir, the basis of all credence in science are facts in nature which all may examine. The basis of all historical credence are facts in harmony with nature and experience. True history is the record of the experience of mankind. The credence which you say is well founded, you have not appealed to nature for the proof, and it is contrary to the common experience of mankind. Where is the reason for believing it? Testimony and the general agreement of mankind that that testimony is true, say you. The testi-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 34.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. NOV. 9, 1848. [WHOLE No. 98.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. BURGESS TO MR. STRANG.—No. 1.

Racine, October, 1848.

MR. JAMES J. STRANG:—

DEAR SIR,—I received [illegible] the 19th, which I shall endeavor to answer for the purpose of removing error and promoting truth, as the best means of removing the misery and increasing the happiness of mankind.

2. In paragraph 2 you state the terms of our inquiry or discussion. I say inquiry, because I presume that we are both honest searchers after truth, and would not conceal from those who think differently, whatever would sustain their views or oppose our own. Discussions are too often one sided and ill willed, evincing the desire to puzzle rather than convince. I understand you to define God as a person possessed of intelligence, motive and will. My denial applies to a supernatural being, who created and governs the universe, and the revelation of his will in any written form whatever, and to the validity of the evidence or testimony by which they are sustained. While you claim popular testimony as proof sufficient of the existence of God, can you reasonably reject the power ascribed to him by the same testimony, that he is creator as well as governor of nature? Gen. chap. 1st, verse 1st: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth."

3. In paragraph 3 you say, "no man or book is authority in any higher sense than in discussing a question of mathematics," &c.—Then, as mathematicians do not admit testimony opposed to their own as proof of the truth in question, I understand that to be our rule. Ten men affirming a fact do not make the truth more apparent than one.

4. By paragraph 4 I understand self-evident facts require no proofs. Shall we assume that those which are not self-evident do require proof? By paragraph 5 and 6 I understand if I deny God's existence, I should be expected to give my reasons for not believing as the majority do, which would throw the burden of the proof on the negative. Well, as I think it a hard task to sustain the affirmative, when you have done what you can for the latter, I will do what I can for the former.

5. In reply to paragraph 7, you need not fear the discussion being dropped if I am able to sustain it; though I cannot promise to write as much or as fast as you desire. My occupation is a heavy tax on a pair of weak eyes, which, with want of leisure and difficulty of composition, has caused me to delay this communication.

6. In reply to par. 8, the publication of what I write I care little about. I may send a copy to the Boston Investigator to do what they please with.

7. In par. 9, I am glad to find your conclusions are more the result of thought than reading. Some time since I read the articles in the Democratic Review, but saw no proof to satisfy my mind.

8. In par. 10 you say, neither shall I build my logic on assumption, as did Paley, Chalmer and a host of others. I think you do more in assuming the truth of the testimony which contains your premises.

9. In par. 11 you say, "the same kind of evidence which would be good to prove the rotundity of the earth would be equally good to prove the existence of God," so far as applicable; which would be to prove the form of God. Demonstrative evidence is the only proof "always received among men on all subjects."

10. In answer to par. 12, the statements of one traveler, when confirmed by others, and not contrary to experience and reason, is generally believed; and this belief, when true, is promotive of happiness, as it enables us to profit by the experience of others. But were we to act and believe as though accounts of supernatural beings were equally true, we should have to deny the evidence of our senses, and be left to the guidance of less than one in a million who profess to have seen the supernatural; for as all cannot or do not see the supernatural they must depend on the professions of seers. I must say I do not think such evidence well founded, for I think a wise and good parent would make the evidence strong and clear in proportion as it was necessary for the happiness of his children.

11. In par. 13 you say you do not claim that human testimony is equal to demonstration, though as good as the bulk of learned men have of the great body of scientific truths to which they subscribe. This only shows how little reason we have to depend on their testimony, and is an additional reason for us to follow the dictates of experience, "to prove all things." You say it is as good proof as any person or earth has, or can have, of geographic or geologic facts. This I deny, as they can examine the one and the other.

12. As to par. 14, I know that geography, natural and political, is proved by the corroborative testimony of great numbers of living witnesses. And in par. 15 you say, "all who had the means of knowing agree in the main point—the existence of those objects—though they disagree in the details concerning them." This agrees perfectly with our experience, that people observe places and things without noting minutely their particulars; though when any part of a person's testimony is proved false, the other is considered doubtful; but these are things in nature which ordinary people daily examine, and bear no resemblance to the supernatural.

13. In par. 16 you say, believing this evidence of mankind well founded, I appeal to similar evidence to prove a God. He has been seen of men. In this the testimony of all mankind concurs. Then why do we differ?

14. Now, sir, the basis of all credence in science are facts in nature which all may examine. The basis of all historical credence are facts in harmony with nature and experience. True history is the record of the experience of mankind. The credence which you say is well founded, you have not appealed to nature for the proof, and it is contrary to the common experience of mankind. Where is the reason for believing it? Testimony and the general agreement of mankind that that testimony is true, say [illegible] The testimony I believe is best sustained by lunatics and the sick, who can see things not perceptible to healthy persons, or to themselves when in health. As to the general agreement of mankind, it has proved the earth successively a plain and a globe, and the deity to be change able and unchangeable, cruel and merciful, omniscient and ignorant, present and absent, &c.

15. Will you admit the general agreement of mankind, that you are in error to be sufficient proof of the fact? If not, why require its acceptance from others until you have shown it to be the best means of removing error and sustaining truth?

16. If God has been seen of men he must have been some where, but may be dead now. If he is governor of nature, we must look to nature for the proof. Here it belongs to you to sustain the affirmative. If God governs nature, then the different parts of nature do not mutually govern each other, and astronomy is a lie. Even universal agreement is no positive proof of truth; for as one may be in error, so may any one, and, consequently, every one.

17. In par. 17 you say, there have been men in every nation who have seen God and conversed with him. Please to refer to what you allude, that we may examine the revelation also. By revelation I mean that truth not discernable by reason and experience, but necessary for the promotion of our happiness; for it would be folly to give us reason and experience to guide us which could be only brought to perfection by exercise, and then tell us what we should do, rendering our reason retrogressive instead of progressive. Why not give us sufficient reason to guide us to happiness, with the pleasure of its exercise, instead of a partial revelation to less than one in a million, not known to one-fourth of the human family, not believed by one-tenth, and not governing the conduct of one in a dozen of professed believers. Such I think is the influence of the religion of revelation in our age. By religion I mean a rule of action drawn from revelation, which revelation is not discoverable by reason and experience.

18. In par. 19 you say, various nations have men of learning and good report among them who say they have seen God [or] some of the myriads of spirits in subjection to him, or rebellion against him. Here I request your definition of the word spirit. Many, I believe, think them invisible, intelligent beings, capable of controling material beings, but not subject to their control. They are certainly invisible to me. If God shows himself to others and not to me, is it not probable he desires others and not me to believe? But if myriads of spirits exist in nature and are visible, why are they not more commonly seen? If invisible, they never can be seen. If not subject to material influence, how can we calculate on their actions?

19. In par. 20 you say, though this testimony is only of seeing some of the inferior spirits, and not of God himself, yet you doubt not it is equally in point. How can we know who is Lord and governor of nature without seeing him in the exercise of his power? Admitting the testimony to be true, what is God's object in appearing to an individual once in an age? Is it to produce universal conviction necessary to the happiness of the race, or for no good purpose? If the latter, it is the folly of wisdom. If for the former, is it the best means of causing all to believe? If not, it is evident God is not wise, or he did not do it.

20. You say if you show the existence of a world of spirits you think I shall have no difficulty in acknowledging one superior, a Lord of the universe. What example have we among the most intelligent beings of one governing the whole? In the human family we have many lords, but the more intelligent they become the more self-government they require. The idea appears to me to correspond with the dark ages, when the strong lorded it over the weak. And making their God after their own desires, they made him Lord of the universe.

21. In par. 21, admitting the existence of the testimony, you ask, is it true? I think not. Can it be false? I think so. Shall my opinions be formed by the strongest evidence or the weakest, by the evidence of my senses confirmed by reason and experience, or by the testimony of others denied by both? Have not men drenched the earth with blood to sustain that which you declare to be false? Have not opposing devotees sealed their convictions with their blood? Did it prove both right, or neither? Is not doing wrong a better proof of being wrong?

22. In par. 23 you say, in all else the united testimony of those who have studied the facts of science is deemed sufficient and satisfactory "proof." "When doctors disagree who shall decide?" Would their agreement make falsehood truth? But they accuse each other of mal-practice, and prove by more than testimony, by FACTS.

23. In par. 24 you say, it is not necessary to give samples where masses are at hand. I think differently. I want to examine the sample to enable me to guess the value of the masses.

24. In par. 25 you say, our forefathers talked of supernatural beings, with awe to be sure, but with as little shamefacedness as speaking of birds, beasts and fishes. I think our belief in the supernatural is much in proportion to our desire to account for the phenomena of which we are ignorant. The word seems to me the representation of an unknown cause. For example, when I was a boy, when any one died, and the jury were ignorant of the cause of his death, they would declare their verdict, "died by the visitation of God." But as they progressed in knowledge these became expressive of natural causes, as died by apoplexy, disease of heart, lungs, brain, colic, cholera, &c., or whatever the natural cause happened to be. So when we discover all natural causes I think we shall have no supernatural to believe in.

25. In par. 27 you say, the world is a vast crowd of living witnesses of the supernatural. And yet they cannot show one fact in all nature indicative of his existence. I beg leave to be an exception, though not a solitary one. You say, "a generation will yet arise who, taking facts as they find them, will make religion a science." Then, if I understand you, it will be independent of revelation. This is what Utilitarians do now.

26. In par. 28 you say, I think I may safely pledge myself to make a better answer to any proof that can be made in this country to the existence of the city of St. Petersburg, or the Pope of Rome. Most people have seen cities, Petersburg is one. Most people have seen men, the Pope is one. There is an abundance of historical testimony confirming the existence of each, which you say it is insanity to deny. Who have seen God? None that I know of.—Who the Lord of the universe in the exercise of his power? Here I want your answer.

27. I would just ask one question, as you have coupled doubting and insanity so frequently together. Is doubting a proof of insanity? I think the insane are the most undoubting believers. If they could be induced to doubt, I think there would be a good prospect of recovering them from their error. Yours sincerely for the promotion of truth,

EDWIN BURGESS.

THE DEAD SEA EXPEDITION.

The September number of "Southern Literary Messenger" contains an article of profound interest on this subject, from the pen of Lieut. M. F. Maury, the leading features of which are presented in a condensed form in the Richmond "Republican."

Lieut. Maury gives a history of this expedition, brief, but lucid, and which will increase the anxiety of the public to see the report of Lieut. Lynch, who has made a successful survey, and who, we are glad to learn, is expected to return soon to this country.

mony I believe is best sustained by lunatics and the sick, who can see things not perceptible to healthy persons, or to themselves when in health. As to the general agreement of mankind, it has proved the earth successively a plain and a globe, and the deity to be changeable and unchangeable, cruel and merciful, omniscient and ignorant, present and absent, &c.

15. Will you admit the general agreement of mankind, that you are in error to be sufficient proof of the fact? If not, why require its acceptance from others until you have shown it to be the best means of removing error and sustaining truth?

16. If God has been seen of men he must have been some where, but may be dead now. If he is governor of nature, we must look to nature for the proof. Here it belongs to you to sustain the affirmative. If God governs nature, then the different parts of nature do not mutually govern each other, and astronomy is a lie. Even universal agreement is no positive proof of truth; for as one may be in error, so may any one, and, consequently, every one.

17. In par. 17 you say, there have been men in every nation who have seen God and conversed with him. Please to refer to what you allude, that we may examine the revelation also. By revelation I mean that truth not discernable by reason and experience, but necessary for the promotion of our happiness; for it would be folly to give us reason and experience to guide us which could be only brought to perfection by exercise, and then tell us what we should do, rendering our reason retrogressive instead of progressive. Why not give us sufficient reason to guide us to happiness, with the pleasure of its exercise, instead of a partial revelation to less than one in a million, not known to one-fourth of the human family, not believed by one-tenth, and not governing the conduct of one in a dozen of professed believers. Such I think is the influence of the religion of revelation in our age. By religion I mean a rule of action drawn from revelation, which revelation is not discoverable by reason and experience.

18. In par. 19 you say, various nations have men of learning and good report among them who say they have seen God [or] some of the myriads of spirits in subjection to him, or rebellion against him. Here I request your definition of the word spirit. Many, I believe, think them invisible, intelligent beings, capable of controling material beings, but not subject to their control. They are certainly invisible to me. If God shows himself to others and not to me, is it not probable he desires others and not me to believe? But if myriads of spirits exist in nature and are visible, why are they not more commonly seen? If invisible, they never can be seen. If not subject to material influence, how can we calculate on their actions?

19. In par. 20 you say, though this testimony is only of seeing some of the inferior spirits, and not of God himself, yet you doubt not it is equally in point. How can we know who is Lord and governor of nature without seeing him in the exercise of his power? Admitting the testimony to be true, what is God's object in appearing to an individual once in an age? Is it to produce universal conviction necessary to the happiness of the race, or for no good purpose? If the latter, it is the folly of wisdom. If for the former, is it the best means of causing all to believe? If not, it is evident God is not wise, or he did not do it.

20. You say if you show the existence of a world of spirits you think I shall have no difficulty in acknowledging one superior, a Lord of the universe. What example have we among the most intelligent beings of one governing the whole? In the human family we have many lords, but the more intelligent they become the more self-government they require. The idea appears to me to correspond with the dark ages, when the strong lorded it over the weak. And making their God after their own desires, they made him Lord of the universe.

21. In par. 21, admitting the existence of the testimony, you ask is it true? I think not. Can it be false? I think so. Shall my opinions be formed by the strongest evidence or the weakest, by the evidence of my senses confirmed by reason and experience, or by the testimony of others denied by both? Have not men drenched the earth with blood to sustain that which you declare to be false? Have not opposing devotees sealed their convictions with their blood? Did it prove both right, or neither? Is not doing wrong a better proof of being wrong?

22. In par. 23 you say, in all else the united testimony of those who have studied the facts of science is deemed sufficient and satisfactory "proof." "When doctors disagree who shall decide?" Would their agreement make falsehood truth? But they accuse each other of mal-practice, and prove by more than testimony, by FACTS.

23. In par. 24 you say, it is not necessary to give samples where masses are at hand. I think differently. I want to examine the sample to enable me to guess the value of the masses.

24. In par. 25 you say, our forefathers talked of supernatural beings, with awe to be sure, but [illegible] little shamefacedness as speaking of birds, beasts and fishes. I think our belief in the supernatural is much in proportion to our desire to account for the phenomena of which we are ignorant. The word seems to me the representation of an unknown cause. For example, when I was a boy, when any one died, and the jury were ignorant of the cause of his death, they would declare their verdict, "died by the visitation of God." But as they progressed in knowledge these became expressive of natural causes, as died by apoplexy, disease of heart, lungs, brain, colic, cholera, &c., or whatever the natural cause happened to be. So when we discover all natural causes I think we shall have no supernatural to believe in.

25. In par. 27 you say, the world is a vast crowd of living witnesses of the supernatural. And yet they cannot show one fact in all nature indicative of his existence. I beg leave to be an exception, though not a solitary one. You say, "a generation will yet arise who, taking facts as they find them, will make religion a science." Then, if I understand you, it will be independent of revelation. This is what Utilitarians do now.

26. In par. 28 you say, I think I may safely pledge myself to make a better answer to any proof that can be made in this country to the existence of the city of St. Petersburg, or the Pope of Rome. Most people have seen cities, Petersburg is one. Most people have seen men, the Pope is one. There is an abundance of historical testimony confirming the existence of each, which you say it is insanity to deny. Who have seen God? None that I know of.—Who the Lord of the universe in the exercise of his power? Here I want your answer.

27. I would just ask one question, as you have coupled doubting and insanity so frequently together. Is doubting a proof of insanity? I think the insane are the most undoubting believers. If they could be induced to doubt, I think there would be a good prospect of recovering them from their error. Yours sincerely for the promotion of truth,

EDWIN BURGESS.

THE DEAD SEA EXPEDITION.

The September number of "Southern Literary Messenger" contains an article of profound interest on this subject, from the pen of Lieut. M. F. Maury, the leading features of which are presented in a condensed form in the Richmond "Republican."

Lieut. Maury gives a history of this expedition, brief, but lucid, and which will increase the anxiety of the public to see the report of Lieut. Lynch, who has made a successful survey, and who, we are glad to learn, is expected to return soon to this country.

We learn from Lieut. Maury's article, that this expedition was planned by Lieut. Lynch, who addressed the Secretary of the Navy on the subject, recommending a circumnavigation and exploration of the Dead Sea and its entire coast; stating that the expense would be trifling, as our ships frequenlty touched at Acre, in Syria, forty miles from Lake Tiberias, or Sea of Galilee, from which the river Jordan runs and debuoches in first named sea; that the frame of a boat, with crew and provisions could be transported on camels from Acre to Tiberias, and there put together again. Only one traveler, Mr. Costigan, ever circumnavigated the Dead Sea, and he died at the termination of his voyage, without leaving any journal or notes behind. It is contended, also, that independent of the eager curiosity of all Christendom in regard to this myterious lake, this expedition was of value to the interests of navigation.

This proposition was favorably received. It being necessary to send a store-ship to the Mediterranean squadron, and as after her arrival she would have no employment for months, the Secretary determined to send Lieut. Lynch and his party in her, so that, after meeting the wants of the squadron, she could proceed up the Levant, and land Lieut. Lynch and his companions.

Two metallic boats, one of copper, and the other of iron, were prepared, and the store-ship "Supply" sailed for her destination.

On their arrival at their destination, their troubles began; and in their march to Lake Tiberias, their boats had to be transported over the most formidable mountain gorges and heights, and to be lowered down precipices with ropes. But these difficulties were surmounted with true sailor skill and perseverance, and on the 8th of April the two boats, each with the American ensign flying, were afloat ubon the beautiful blue waters of the Sea of Galilee. "Emblematic of its Master, it alone of all things around them, remained the same. Just as the apostles saw it when our Savior said to it, 'Peace, be still,' this little band of rovers now beheld it."

The navigation of the Jordan was found to be the most difficult and dangerous, from its frequent and fearful rapids. Lieut. Lynch solves the secret of the depression between Lake Tiberias and the Dead Sea, by the tortuous course of the Jordan, which, in a distance of sixty miles, winds through a course of two hundred miles. Within this distance Lieut. Lynch and his party ploughed down no less than twenty-seven threatening rapids, besides many others of less descent. The difference of level between the two seas is over a thousand feet.

The water of the Jordan was sweet to within a few hundred yards of its mouth. The waters of the sea were devoid of smell, but bitter, salt, and nauseous. Upon entering it, the boats were encountered by a gale, and "it seemed as if the bows, so dense was the water, were encountering the sledge-hammers of the Titans, instead of the opposing waves of an angry sea."

The party proceeded daily with their explorations, making topographical sketches as they went, until they reached the southern extremity of the sea, where the most wonderful sight that they had yet seen awaited them.

"In passing the mountain of Uzdom (Sodom) unexpectedly and much to our astonishment," says Lieut. Lynch, "saw a large, rounded, turret-shaped column, facing towards S. E. which proved to be of solid rock salt, capped with carbonate of lime, one mass of chystalization. Mr. Dale took a sketch of it, and Dr. Anderson and I landed with much difficulty and procured specimens from it."

The party circumnavigated the lake, returned to their place of departure, and brought back their boats in as complete order as they received them at New York. They were all in fine health. This is a specimen of all the skill, system, and discipline of the American Navy. No nation in the world has such a service. The time is coming, when it will give proofs of that fact palpable to the most dull understanding.

Thanks to the good managements of Lieut. Lynch, the whole cost of this scientific exploration of the Dead Sea was but seven hundred dollars.

From the letters of Lieut. Lynch, quoted by Lieut. Maury, we transcribe the following interesting facts elicited by the exploration.

The bottom of the northern half of this sea is almost an entire plain. Its meridianal lines, at a short distance from the shore, scarce vary in depth. The deepest soundings thus far is 188 fathoms (1128 feet.) Near the shore, the bottom is generally an incrustation of salt, but the intermediate one is soft mud with many rectangular chrystals—most cubes—of pure salt. At one time, Stellwager's lead brought up nothing but chrystals.

The Southern half of the sea is as shallow as the Northern one is deep, and for about one-fourth of its entire length, the depth does not exceed three fathoms (18 feet.) Its Southern bed has presented no chrystals, but when we landed at Uzdom, in the space of an hour our foot-prints were coated with chrystalization.

The opposite shores of the peninsula and the west coast presented evident marks of disruption.

There are, unquestionably, birds and insects upon the shores, and ducks are sometimes upon the sea, for we have seen them—but cannot detect any living thing within it; although the salt streams flowing into it contain salt fish. I feel sure that the results of this survey will fully sustain the Scriptural account of the cities of the plain.

He thus speaks of the Jordan—"The Jordan, although rapid and impetuous, is graceful in its windings, and fringed with luxuriance, while its waters are sweet, clear, cool, and refreshing.

After a survey of the sea, the party proceeded to determine the height of mountains on its shores, and to run a level thence by the way of Jerusalem to the Mediterranean. They found the summit of the West bank of the Dead Sea more than 1,000 feet above the surface, and very nearly on a level with the Mediterranean.

"It is a curious fact," says Lieut Maury, "that the distance from the top to the bottom of the Dead Sea, should measure the height of its banks, the elevation of the Mediterranean, and the difference of level between the bottom of the two seas, and that the depth of the Dead Sea should also be an exact multiple of the height of Jerusalem above it."

Another not less singular fact, in the opinion of Lieut. Lynch, "is that the bottom of the Dead Sea forms two submerged plains, an elevated and a depressed one. The first, its southern part, of slimy mud covered by a shallow bay; the last, its northern and largest portion of mud incrustations, with a narrow ravine running through it, corresponding with the bed of the river Jordan at one extremity, and the Wady 'el Jeib,' or wady within a wady at the other.

"The slimy ooze," says Lieut. Maury, "upon that plain at the bottom of the Dead Sea, will not fail to remind the sacred historian of the 'slime pits' in the vale, where were joined in battle 'four kings with five.'"

MARTINIQUE.—Accounts from St. Pierre to the 9th inst., represent that island in a very disturbed state—the blacks being rebellious.—A number of the white inhabitants have sent a memorial to the President of the United States, praying him to grant them such facilities as would enable them to settle here upon land to be granted to them.—Exchange Paper.

☞ This number has been delayed one week beyond the usual time of publication for want of paper. We shall endeavor to be more punctual hereafter.

We learn from Lieut. Maury's article, that this expedition was planned by Lieut. Lynch, who addressed the Secretary of the Navy on the subject, recommending a circumnavigation and exploration of the Dead Sea and its entire coast; stating that the expense would be trifling, as our ships frequenlty touched at Acre, in Syria, forty miles from Lake Tiberias, or Sea of Galilee, from which the river Jordan runs and debuoches in first named sea; that the frame of a boat, with crew and provisions could be transported on camels from Acre to Tiberias, and there put together again. Only one traveler, Mr. Costigan, ever circumnavigated the Dead Sea, and he died at the termination of his voyage, without leaving any journal or notes behind. It is contended, also, that independent of the eager curiosity of all Christendom in regard to this mysterious lake, this expedition was of value to the interests of navigation.

This proposition was favorably received. It being necessary to send a store-ship to the Mediterranean squadron, and as after her arrival she would have no employment for months, the Secretary determined to send Lieut. Lynch and his party in her, so that, after meeting the wants of the squadron, she could proceed up the Levant, and land Lieut. Lynch and his companions.

Two metallic boats, one of copper, and the other of iron, were prepared, and the store-ship "Supply" sailed for her destination.

On their arrival at their destination, their troubles began; and in their march to Lake Tiberias, their boats had to be transported over the most formidable mountain gorges and heights, and to be lowered down precipices with ropes. But these difficulties were surmounted with true sailor skill and perseverance, and on the 8th of April the two boats, each with the American ensign flying, were afloat ubon the beautiful blue waters of the Sea of Galilee. "Emblematic of its Master, it alone of all things around them, remained the same. Just as the apostles saw it when our Savior said to it, 'Peace, be still,' this little band of rovers now beheld it."

The navigation of the Jordan was found to be the most difficult and dangerous, from its frequent and fearful rapids. Lieut. Lynch solves the secret of the depression between Lake Tiberias and the Dead Sea, by the tortuous course of the Jordan, which, in a distance of sixty miles, winds through a course of two hundred miles. Within this distance Lieut. Lynch and his party ploughed down no less than twenty-seven threatening rapids, besides many others of less descent. The difference of level between the two seas is over a thousand feet.

The water of the Jordan was sweet to within a few hundred yards of its mouth. The waters of the sea were devoid of smell, but bitter, salt, and nauseous. Upon entering it, the boats were encountered by a gale, and "it seemed as if the bows, so dense was the water, were encountering the sledge-hammers of the Titans, instead of the opposing waves of an angry sea."

The party proceeded daily with their explorations, making topographical sketches as they went, until they reached the southern extremity of the sea, where the most wonderful sight that they had yet seen awaited them.

"In passing the mountain of Uzdom (Sodom) unexpectedly and much to our astonishment," says Lieut. Lynch, "saw a large, rounded, turret-shaped column, facing towards S. E. which proved to be of solid rock salt, capped with carbonate of lime, one mass of chystalization. Mr. Dale took a sketch of it, and Dr. Anderson and I landed with much difficulty and procured specimens from it."

The party circumnavigated the lake, returned to their place of departure, and brought back their boats in as complete order as they received them at New York. They were all in fine health. This is a specimen of all the skill, system, and discipline of the American Navy. No nation in the world has such a service. The time is coming, when it will give proofs of that fact palpable to the most dull understanding.

Thanks to the good managements of Lieut. Lynch, the whole cost of this scientific exploration of the Dead Sea was but seven hundred dollars.

From the letters of Lieut. Lynch, quoted by Lieut. Maury, we transcribe the following interesting facts elicited by the exploration.

The bottom of the northern half of this sea is almost an entire plain. Its meridianal lines, at a short distance from the shore, scarce vary in depth. The deepest soundings thus far is 188 fathoms (1128 feet.) Near the shore, the bottom is generally an incrustation of salt, but the intermediate one is soft mud with many rectangular chrystals—most cubes—of pure salt. At one time, Stellwager's lead brought up nothing but chrystals.

The Southern half of the sea is as shallow as the Northern one is deep, and for about one-fourth of its entire length, the depth does not exceed three fathoms (18 feet.) Its Southern bed has presented no chrystals, but when we landed at Uzdom, in the space of an hour our foot-prints were coated with chrystalization.

The opposite shores of the peninsula and the west coast presented evident marks of disruption.

There are, unquestionably, birds and insects upon the shores, and ducks are sometimes upon the sea, for we have seen them—but cannot detect any living thing within it; although the salt streams flowing into it contain salt fish. I feel sure that the results of this survey will fully sustain the Scriptural account of the cities of the plain.

He thus speaks of the Jordan—"The Jordan, although rapid and impetuous, is graceful in its windings, and fringed with luxuriance, while its waters are sweet, clear, cool, and refreshing.

After a survey of the sea, the party proceeded to determine the height of mountains on its shores, and to run a level thence by the way of Jerusalem to the Mediterranean. They found the summit of the West bank of the Dead Sea more than 1,000 feet above the surface, and very nearly on a level with the Mediterranean.

"It is a curious fact," says Lieut Maury, "that the distance from the top to the bottom of the Dead Sea, should measure the height of its banks, the elevation of the Mediterranean, and the difference of level between the bottom of the two seas, and that the depth of the Dead Sea should also be an exact multiple of the height of Jerusalem above it."

Another not less singular fact, in the opinion of Lieut. Lynch, "is that the bottom of the Dead Sea forms two submerged plains, an elevated and a depressed one. The first, its southern part, of slimy mud covered by a shallow bay; the last, its northern and largest portion of mud incrustations, with a narrow ravine running through it, corresponding with the bed of the river Jordan at one extremity, and the Wady 'el Jeib,' or wady within a wady at the other.

"The slimy ooze," says Lieut. Maury, "upon that plain at the bottom of the Dead Sea, will not fail to remind the sacred historian of the 'slime pits' in the vale, where were joined in battle 'four kings with five.'"

MARTINIQUE.—Accounts from St. Pierre to the 9th inst., represent that island in a very disturbed state—the blacks being rebellious.—A number of the white inhabitants have sent a memorial to the President of the United States, praying him to grant them such facilities as would enable them to settle here upon land to be granted to them.—Exchange Paper.

☞ This number has been delayed one week beyond the usual time of publication for want of paper. We shall endeavor to be more punctual hereafter.

☞ The following article was written some time since, but its publication delayed until after the election for reasons which our readers will sufficiently appreciate. They doubtless all understand that the object of the Free Soil party is to prevent the extension of slavery over territory now free. There is a large amount of such territory now in possession of the U. S., and the southern Senators are so determined on extending slavery over New Mexico and California that they left these extensive countries without government, rather than govern them without slavery.

THE FREE SOIL MOVEMENT.

The organization and movements of the Free Soil party is the strong feature in the political aspects of the country. The existence of the party is very recent, but its ultimate causes are remote, and have no connection with its principles. Nearly a half century since Aaron Burr planned the dismemberment of the American Union and the Spanish American provinces, and erecting a new and powerful empire in the Mississippi valley. His plans against Spanish America were as public as the buffalo hunt against Mexico now is, and was entered upon heartily by many western gentlemen, among whom was General Jackson; the whole thing being carried on under pretense of settling a colony in Louisiana, as the invasion of Mexico now is under pretense of a hunting expedition.

When his intentions against the United States became known, his friends gradually dropped him. And though he escaped a conviction for treason, he became universally detested and driven from political circles. But his active mind, fruitful in expedients, seized on the project of bringing forward Gen. Jackson for the Presidency. The chapter of accidents made this project successful; though it did not in any respect retrieve the reputation of Burr. But without any desire to separate States, which he was able to govern, Jackson came into the Presidency with all Burr's longing for the Spanish, now Mexican territory. Secretly and most assiduously did he pursue that object for years; yet barely lived to see it accomplished in the annexation of Texas.

Very few are aware of the cause which lay at the bottom of the Texan revolution. In the beginning of Jackson's administration, making some family troubles the pretense, Houston, Governor of Tennessee, and one of the most talented and ambitious men in the nation, resigned his office and abandoned civilized society; going off upon the immediate borders of Texas, with no apparent object but seclusion and Indian life. After a short time he appeared at Washington, extensively engaged in contracts for the removal of Indians west of the Mississippi, at very exorbitant prices. Under these contracts the money was drawn from the treasury of the U. S. that revolutionized Texas, and in the operation the men were taken there from the U. S., who afterwards declared Texas independent and fought her battles. The project of annexation was earlier than that of revolutions. And while these measures were being secretly pushed forward the U. S. were, through their accredited minister at Mexico, offering to purchase this same territory and making the fact of civil war and internal strife a reason why Mexico should sell a territory which she was unable to hold. Failing to purchase the territory, assistance was pushed on from all the western States, until Texan independence was achieved, and the project of annexation presented to the U. S.

But in the mean time the government of the U. S. had passed into the hands of Martin Van Buren, who had become as noted for his prudence and caution as Jackson for his resolution and iron will. Van Buren did not refuse, but postponed annexation. We were in Virginia at this time, and then remarked that so far as he was concerned the postponement was perpetual; that his party had gone just as far as leadership and party discipline could carry them in favor of slavery; that their concessions had already made the whole party restless and uneasy, and the attempt to add new slave territory would produce a breach which neither great names or political attachment could heal; that the whole north was at heart anti-slavery; and the resolutions passed at political meetings, which bore a different complexion, were deep political hypocrisy, called out by the arrogance of the south.

Towards the close of Tyler's administration John C. Calhoun took in hand the annexation of Texas, and brought it forward expressly as a pro-slavery measure. The diplomatic correspondence laid before the Senate to induce that body to ratify the treaty of annexation made the strengthening of the slavery interests the principal reason for doing so. The treaty was rejected, but the project was not dropped. While the public mind was excited with it, Mr. Van Buren was interrogated on the subject, and gave his opinion that it should be postponed. That one word lost him the Presidency. His name was dropped by the caucus, and Polk put up expressly as the annexation candidate, and the influence of his election was so great as to produce the passage of the act of annexation without waiting for him to come into office. Aside from the slavery question this extension of territory would have been every where popular, both by ministering to national vanity and by extending the market for manufactured articles. This last fact reconciled the north and east to the act.—But the termination of the Mexican war by the annexation of a vast additional territory, has raised the question in a new form, while it has consummated plans so long since concocted. Burr's project of a great empire in the valley of the Mississippi is more than realized. Though it does not take quite so much of Mexico as he coveted, it has all the region east of the Alleganies. Those who accomplished it learned their plan of him. Yet those that praise it call him traitor. Those that did it sought to strengthen slavery.—Yet it has raised a storm they cannot quell while slavery lasts.

The country being annexed with no provision concerning slavery, the north have secured what they want—its market—and this is better without slavery than with it. The disposition of the south to trust no man in the Presidency unless he is the owner of slaves, casts off a band of political union heretofore strong, by rendering it impossible for a northern statesman to count on southern votes. Politicians will not support a party when they get no support in return. The attempt of John C. Calhoun to make all the new territory a slave region, and the new movements at the south to secure the control of the U. S. government permanently in the hands of slave holders, has driven out of the old political parties vast numbers of persons always opposed to slavery, who, so long as no attempt was made to propagate it, were content to let the subject alone. With these go many more, who have all along believed that their several parties were doing all in their power to limit slavery.

The rallying of these elements of political power under so skillful a leader as Martin Van Buren is rapidly bringing about a crisis in the affairs of the nation, such as has never yet been passed. The strength of both the Whig and Democratic parties is evidently melting away before this cry of "Free Soil." Eight months ago those parties seemed unbroken in their strength. Southern influences so far prevailed that Presidential candidates took new and stronger positions in favor of the south to secure their nominations. Yet so strong is the revulsion now that men running on the ticket with the owner of 280 slaves are generally pledged against slavery. And though Gen. Cass abandoned his former opposition to slavery extension, in order to obtain a nomination, yet those who run with him are generally pledged against the extension. Cass is in jeopardy in the south because he is not the owner of slaves, and the friends of Taylor say no northern man is to be trusted, no matter what his pledges. Yet nearly all the northern supporters of both

☞ The following article was written some time since, but its publication delayed until after the election for reasons which our readers will sufficiently appreciate. They doubtless all understand that the object of the Free Soil party is to prevent the extension of slavery over territory now free. There is a large amount of such territory now in possession of the U. S., and the southern Senators are so determined on extending slavery over New Mexico and California that they left these extensive countries without government, rather than govern them without slavery.

THE FREE SOIL MOVEMENT.

The organization and movements of the Free Soil party is the strong feature in the political aspects of the country. The existence of the party is very recent, but its ultimate causes are remote, and have no connection with its principles. Nearly a half century since Aaron Burr planned the dismemberment of the American Union and the Spanish American provinces, and erecting a new and powerful empire in the Mississippi valley. His plans against Spanish America were as public as the buffalo hunt against Mexico now is, and was entered upon heartily by many western gentlemen, among whom was General Jackson; the whole thing being carried on under pretense of settling a colony in Louisiana, as the invasion of Mexico now is under pretense of a hunting expedition.

When his intentions against the United States became known, his friends gradually dropped him. And though he escaped a conviction for treason, he became universally detested and driven from political circles. But his active mind, fruitful in expedients, seized on the project of bringing forward Gen. Jackson for the Presidency. The chapter of accidents made this project successful; though it did not in any respect retrieve the reputation of Burr. But without any desire to separate States, which he was able to govern, Jackson came into the Presidency with all Burr's longing for the Spanish, now Mexican territory. Secretly and most assiduously did he pursue that object for years; yet barely lived to see it accomplished in the annexation of Texas.

Very few are aware of the cause which lay at the bottom of the Texan revolution. In the beginning of Jackson's administration, making some family troubles the pretense, Houston, Governor of Tennessee, and one of the most talented and ambitious men in the nation, resigned his office and abandoned civilized society; going off upon the immediate borders of Texas, with no apparent object but seclusion and Indian life. After a short time he appeared at Washington, extensively engaged in contracts for the removal of Indians west of the Mississippi, at very exorbitant prices. Under these contracts the money was drawn from the treasury of the U. S. that revolutionized Texas, and in the operation the men were taken there from the U. S., who afterwards declared Texas independent and fought her battles. The project of annexation was earlier than that of revolutions. And while these measures were being secretly pushed forward the U. S. were, through their accredited minister at Mexico, offering to purchase this same territory and making the fact of civil war and internal strife a reason why Mexico should sell a territory which she was unable to hold. Failing to purchase the territory, assistance was pushed on from all the western States, until Texan independence was achieved, and the project of annexation presented to the U. S.

But in the mean time the government of the U. S. had passed into the hands of Martin Van Buren, who had become as noted for his prudence and caution as Jackson for his resolution and iron will. Van Buren did not refuse, but postponed annexation. We were in Virginia at this time, and then remarked that so far as he was concerned the postponement was perpetual; that his party had gone just as far as leadership and party discipline could carry them in favor of slavery; that their concessions had already made the whole party restless and uneasy, and the attempt to add new slave territory would produce a breach which neither great names or political attachment could heal; that the whole north was at heart anti-slavery; and the resolutions passed at political meetings, which bore a different complexion, were deep political hypocrisy, called out by the arrogance of the south.

Towards the close of Tyler's administration John C. Calhoun took in hand the annexation of Texas, and brought it forward expressly as a pro-slavery measure. The diplomatic correspondence laid before the Senate to induce that body to ratify the treaty of annexation made the strengthening of the slavery interests the principal reason for doing so. The treaty was rejected, but the project was not dropped. While the public mind was excited with it, Mr. Van Buren was interrogated on the subject, and gave his opinion that it should be postponed. That one word lost him the Presidency. His name was dropped by the caucus, and Polk put up expressly as the annexation candidate, and the influence of his election was so great as to produce the passage of the act of annexation without waiting for him to come into office. Aside from the slavery question this extension of territory would have been every where popular, both by ministering to national vanity and by extending the market for manufactured articles. This last fact reconciled the north and east to the act.—But the termination of the Mexican war by the annexation of a vast additional territory, has raised the question in a new form, while it has consummated plans so long since concocted. Burr's project of a great empire in the valley of the Mississippi is more than realized. Though it does not take quite so much of Mexico as he coveted, it has all the region east of the Alleganies. Those who accomplished it learned their plan of him. Yet those that praise it call him traitor. Those that did it sought to strengthen slavery.—Yet it has raised a storm they cannot quell while slavery lasts.

The country being annexed with no provision concerning slavery, the north have secured what they want—its market—and this is better without slavery than with it. The disposition of the south to trust no man in the Presidency unless he is the owner of slaves, casts off a band of political union heretofore strong, by rendering it impossible for a northern statesman to count on southern votes. Politicians will not support a party when they get no support in return. The attempt of John C. Calhoun to make all the new territory a slave region, and the new movements at the south to secure the control of the U. S. government permanently in the hands of slave holders, has driven out of the old political parties vast numbers of persons always opposed to slavery, who, so long as no attempt was made to propagate it, were content to let the subject alone. With these go many more, who have all along believed that their several parties were doing all in their power to limit slavery.

The rallying of these elements of political power under so skillful a leader as Martin Van Buren is rapidly bringing about a crisis in the affairs of the nation, such as has never yet been passed. The strength of both the Whig and Democratic parties is evidently melting away before this cry of "Free Soil." Eight months ago those parties seemed unbroken in their strength. Southern influences so far prevailed that Presidential candidates took new and stronger positions in favor of the south to secure their nominations. Yet so strong is the revulsion now that men running on the ticket with the owner of 280 slaves are generally pledged against slavery. And though Gen. Cass abandoned his former opposition to slavery extension, in order to obtain a nomination, yet those who run with him are generally pledged against the extension. Cass is in jeopardy in the south because he is not the owner of slaves, and the friends of Taylor say no northern man is to be trusted, no matter what his pledges. Yet nearly all the northern supporters of both

Taylor and Cass profess to be opposed to any extension of slavery. It is impossible that this should continue. The end will be that the mass will support such men as avow the sentiments which they believe in. The issue has been taken, and it is too late to recede from it. Let the result of one election be what it may, the Free Soil party must and will prevail in the north. And when it does prevail slavery will every day become less powerful. As a simple political fact, we take no interest in it. But in its final effect on the nation much.

Whether slavery is abolished by law or not, is to us a matter of little consequence. We look for its final abolition as one of the certainties of prophecy. The course of events weakens the friends of that instution from day to day. If the present political issue continue slavery cannot last. But the chapter of accidents which has produced these issues may change them entirely, or it may bring them to a crises sooner then any one anticipates. A contested election to the Presidency at the present time would bring into exercise all the malignant passions of politicians, both north and south; and should the result of the election depend on the vote of Wisconsin it is known that it would be contested, because the State of Wisconsin has passed no law for holding such elections. Still it is only by a concurrence of facts that the stability of the government could be put to so hard a test. Come what may in the political struggle, it is certain that the anti-slavery feeling at the north is thoroughly aroused, and they have not the least disposition to make concessions. While this feeling continues politicians will be deterred from making the usual concessions and compromises. On the whole it portends serious difficulty. Yet knowing as we do that attachment to the union is one of the strongest feelings in the American bosom, we do not look with confidence for any great change to be effected by the crisis of this question. A dissolution of the union or an extensive civil war would inevitably result in the abolition of slavery. But with all the violence of the times, neither would be deliberately entered upon.

It is a curious fact, too, and one showing how little real truth and sincerity there is in politicians, that those who have all along been among the loudest in proclaiming detestation are now in close alliance with those whose avowed object is the extension of slavery, and those who have been ready to yield most to the claims of slavery in times past, are many of them now among the stoutest opponents of its further extension. They cannot return to their old ground as easy as they left it. John C. Calhoun struck a hard blow upon the pro-slavery party when he pushed propagandism so hard as to break with the northern statesman. The breach is more likely to widen then to be healed. No party needs quiet so much as the slave holders, and none are more sensible of the inconvenience of excitement on the subject. And though the majority of the politicians of the north are allied with those of the south in their present movement, facts have shown the hollowness of their hypocrisy. Nearly every man in nomination for member of Congress in all northern States is pledged to oppose the extension of slavery. Yet they all know that if their Presidential candidates were pledged to the same thing, they would not stand the remotest chance of an election.

THE CHOLERA.—Letters from Salonica contain fearful descriptions of the ravages of this terrible scourge. We make an extract, dated August 23:—

"The cholera is proceeding here in a frightful manner. Yesterday between one hundred and one hundred and ten bodies were carried to the cemetry. For several days past the greatest mortality reigns among the Jews and Greeks. The deaths among them have been forty, fifty, and even as high as sixty per day. Yesterday and the day before, it was the Turkish and American quarters which suffered most. There are also several Europeans dead, but there are no English among them. The whole of the family of M. Toselli, the Belgian Consul, have been attacked. Two of the daughters are dead, another has had a narrow escape, but is recovering, and Madam Toselli is in great danger. The panic is incredible. Fathers run away from their children, and chidren from their parents, to escape the dreadful contagion. Among the Jews and Greeks dead bodies have, in many cases, been left for thirty or forty hours unburied.

☞ Scandal, like the Nile, is fed by many streams, but it is difficult to trace it to its source.

DIVINE AUTHORITY OF MORMONISM.

PROFESSOR GRAHAM TO MR. STRANG.—No. 1.

Spring Arbor, October 26th, 1848.

DEAR SIR:—In looking over the Herald this morning I noticed that you state that you expect soon to commence the discussion so long talked of, as being about to take place between you and myself. I had also so expected, and had made some preparation.—When my cousin last spoke to me concerning the discussion, I expected to settle as a minister. Had that been the case I should have had time to attend to it, but less than two weeks ago I decided to go to New England. Next Monday I start on that journey. While I am gone I shall travel constantly, and cannot therefore either get your articles or have time to reply. I shall be gone at least six months, probably much longer.

It was at first with reluctance that I consented to undertake the discussion. It is now with reluctance that I am compelled to postpone it, or relinquish it altogether; not that I have become enlisted; not that it has afforded me any very agreeable mental labor, but for the two following reasons: Since it is impossible that either you or your friends should know the embarrasments with which I have had to contend since this discussion was first spoken of, it may be very readily and quite plausibly inferred that I have put off the discussion from time to time, because I shrink from it. The second reason is far-more important. The time has come I think in which the subject proposed for the discussion ought to be candidly and thoroughly examined. It is true that others might do it much more ably, but no one to my knowledge has undertaken it, and though I might fail to do justice to the subject, I might be instrumental in calling to it the attention of those fully competent. If no one enters the field before I can command the requisite time, I still design to give attention to it. As to the first reason, I will only add that I never court discussion—think that most discussions do little or no good—still I would not always avoid them. That on this subject I shrink from it will probably be shown to be not at all likely.

It may be that your first article will be prepared before this reaches you. If so, please send the number containing it to Boston, as I expect to spend a few weeks at that place. Some one has kindly furnished me with two or three numbers of your paper, perhaps yourself. Where I shall be after a few weeks is so entirely uncertain that I cannot now tell my P. O. address for more than four weeks. When I shall be able to commence my part of the discussion is altogether uncertain, but as I have always told my cousin, I will do it as soon as I can have time to understand the subject. It will be of no avail for either side for me to undertake the discussion of a subject upon which I have very little or no information. Your statement of the subject of discussion may to your mind be synonymous with the following: "Is the Book of Mormon entitled to a place in the sacred canon?" If so, there is no misunderstanding concerning the question. Yours truly,

J. J. STRANG, of Voree. D. M. GRAHAM.

Taylor and Cass profess to be opposed to any extension of slavery. It is impossible that this should continue. The end will be that the mass will support such men as avow the sentiments which they believe in. The issue has been taken, and it is too late to recede from it. Let the result of one election be what it may, the Free Soil party must and will prevail in the north. And when it does prevail slavery will every day become less powerful. As a simple political fact, we take no interest in it. But in its final effect on the nation much.

Whether slavery is abolished by law or not, is to us a matter of little consequence. We look for its final abolition as one of the certainties of prophecy. The course of events weakens the friends of that instution from day to day. If the present political issue continue slavery cannot last. But the chapter of accidents which has produced these issues may change them entirely, or it may bring them to a crises sooner then any one anticipates. A contested election to the Presidency at the present time would bring into exercise all the malignant passions of politicians, both north and south; and should the result of the election depend on the vote of Wisconsin it is known that it would be contested, because the State of Wisconsin has passed no law for holding such elections. Still it is only by a concurrence of facts that the stability of the government could be put to so hard a test. Come what may in the political struggle, it is certain that the anti-slavery feeling at the north is thoroughly aroused, and they have not the least disposition to make concessions. While this feeling continues politicians will be deterred from making the usual concessions and compromises. On the whole it portends serious difficulty. Yet knowing as we do that attachment to the union is one of the strongest feelings in the American bosom, we do not look with confidence for any great change to be effected by the crisis of this question. A dissolution of the union or an extensive civil war would inevitably result in the abolition of slavery. But with all the violence of the times, neither would be deliberately entered upon.

It is a curious fact, too, and one showing how little real truth and sincerity there is in politicians, that those who have all along been among the loudest in proclaiming detestation are now in close alliance with those whose avowed object is the extension of slavery, and those who have been ready to yield most to the claims of slavery in times past, are many of them now among the stoutest opponents of its further extension. They cannot return to their old ground as easy as they left it. John C. Calhoun struck a hard blow upon the pro-slavery party when he pushed propagandism so hard as to break with the northern statesman. The breach is more likely to widen then to be healed. No party needs quiet so much as the slave holders, and none are more sensible of the inconvenience of excitement on the subject. And though the majority of the politicians of the north are allied with those of the south in their present movement, facts have shown the hollowness of their hypocrisy. Nearly every man in nomination for member of Congress in all northern States is pledged to oppose the extension of slavery. Yet they all know that if their Presidential candidates were pledged to the same thing, they would not stand the remotest chance of an election.

THE CHOLERA.—Letters from Salonica contain fearful descriptions of the ravages of this terrible scourge. We make an extract, dated August 23:—

"The cholera is proceeding here in a frightful manner. Yesterday between one hundred and one hundred and ten bodies were carried to the cemetry. For several days past the greatest mortality reigns among the Jews and Greeks. The deaths among them have been forty, fifty, and even as high as sixty per day. Yesterday and the day before, it was the Turkish and American quarters which suffered most. There are also several Europeans dead, but there are no English among them. The whole of the family of M. Toselli, the Belgian Consul, have been attacked. Two of the daughters are dead, another has had a narrow escape, but is recovering, and Madam Toselli is in great danger. The panic is incredible. Fathers run away from their children, and chidren from their parents, to escape the dreadful contagion. Among the Jews and Greeks dead bodies have, in many cases, been left for thirty or forty hours unburied.

☞ Scandal, like the Nile, is fed by many streams, but it is difficult to trace it to its source.

DIVINE AUTHORITY OF MORMONISM.

PROFESSOR GRAHAM TO MR. STRANG.—No. 1.

Spring Arbor, October 26th, 1848.

DEAR SIR:—In looking over the Herald this morning I noticed that you state that you expect soon to commence the discussion so long talked of, as being about to take place between you and myself. I had also so expected, and had made some preparation.—When my cousin last spoke to me concerning the discussion, I expected to settle as a minister. Had that been the case I should have had time to attend to it, but less than two weeks ago I decided to go to New England. Next Monday I start on that journey. While I am gone I shall travel constantly, and cannot therefore either get your articles or have time to reply. I shall be gone at least six months, probably much longer.

It was at first with reluctance that I consented to undertake the discussion. It is now with reluctance that I am compelled to postpone it, or relinquish it altogether; not that I have become enlisted; not that it has afforded me any very agreeable mental labor, but for the two following reasons: Since it is impossible that either you or your friends should know the embarrasments with which I have had to contend since this discussion was first spoken of, it may be very readily and quite plausibly inferred that I have put off the discussion from time to time, because I shrink from it. The second reason is far more important. The time has come I think in which the subject proposed for the discussion ought to be candidly and thoroughly examined. It is true that others might do it much more ably, but no one to my knowledge has undertaken it, and though I might fail to do justice to the subject, I might be instrumental in calling to it the attention of those fully competent. If no one enters the field before I can command the requisite time, I still design to give attention to it. As to the first reason, I will only add that I never court discussion—think that most discussions do little or no good—still I would not always avoid them. That on this subject I shrink from it will probably be shown to be not at all likely.

It may be that your first article will be prepared before this reaches you. If so, please send the number containing it to Boston, as I expect to spend a few weeks at that place. Some one has kindly furnished me with two or three numbers of your paper, perhaps yourself. Where I shall be after a few weeks is so entirely uncertain that I cannot now tell my P. O. address for more than four weeks. When I shall be able to commence my part of the discussion is altogether uncertain, but as I have always told my cousin, I will do it as soon as I can have time to understand the subject. It will be of no avail for either side for me to undertake the discussion of a subject upon which I have very little or no information. Your statement of the subject of discussion may to your mind be synonymous with the following: "Is the Book of Mormon entitled to a place in the sacred canon?" If so, there is no misunderstanding concerning the question. Yours truly,

J. J. STRANG, of Voree. D. M. GRAHAM.

DIVINE AUTHORITY OF MORMONISM.

MR. STRANG TO PROFESSOR GRAHAM.—No. 2.

Voree, November 7th, 1848.

DEAR SIR:—Yours of October 26th is this moment received, and I confess the most serious disappointment in the reading of it. I acknowledge I do not see in the new circumstances in which you are placed any necessity of relinquishing or postponing the discussion of the question at issue between us. Certainly it is more pleasant and convenient to be at leisure to sit down by one's fireside, with a library at hand, and write and rewrite, until an article is made as perfect as possible.

60. This, however, is a pleasure I have never enjoyed, and never expect to. I can feel the full force of all the embarrassments you speak of in your new engagements; for I have already entered on it with embarrassments twice as great resting on me. Besides domestic business, which usually would be expected to employ the entire time of three or four men, the editorial charge of a paper, the pastoral care of a church of several thousand persons, scattered over a third of the earth, and a very extensive private correspondence, I have already two other discussions in progress, and have not the assistance of a clerk.

61. In conducting this discussion I expect to do as I have in times past: to sit down among the compositors in the printing office, and, commencing to write as they prepare to put the work in type, to furnish matter for three compositors receiving alternate slips of paper from my hands, and sometimes with each compositor on a different subject, and requiring me to take up and drop the thread of the argument several times in an hour; subject also to continual calls, which are answered verbally without stopping the pen. To travel, as you are about to, would be a relief, and give perfect leisure for such an undertaking.

62. Indeed I have published a paper, the Voree Herald, while traveling, and found the preparation of matter for it a pleasant means of whiling away the live long hours on steamboats, in rail road cars, and at public houses. Even my rough and uncouth friend John E. Page, taken from the logging field, without the benefit of a common school education, has done the same. And among the learned, the celebrated Alexander Campbell, if I am not quite mistaken, carried on his famous controversy with Mr. Skinner while traveling by stage. In the mere matter of carrying on a discussion, where you are not troubled with the superintendence of the publication, this task would not be difficult.

63. As to the difficulty of getting my articles, you will hardly travel any length of time without seeing either the Gospel Herald or Morning Star. Doubtless the Star is taken in all the churches you will visit. And you would be perfectly at liberty, without charge, to order the Herald to the principal post offices on all the routes that you might by any means travel. If you did not get my articles quite so promptly as might be desirable, I will assure you that at all times I will keep plenty of material before you demanding a reply.

64. I understand the question, "Is Mormonism (so called) a dispensation from God?" to be a little more than synonymous with the question, "Is the Book of Mormon entitled to a place in the sacred oracles?" It involves that question, and more too. To my understanding of the matter, in proving Mormonism to be a dispensation from God, I must not only make good the claim of the Book of Mormon to a place in the sacred oracles, but must show that the priesthood was conferred on those by whom it was committed to men. If this exposition does not render the question satisfactory, as stated by me, I will concur in your statement of it.

65. I should the more deeply regret any postponement of the discussion, because I fear that it may not again be returned to. Certainly I believe you, that you do not now shrink from it. But if you do not, there are very few men of talent either in the United States or Great Britain who can sympathize with you. I do not speak at random when I say it is a controversy that the christian world (so called) fears to enter upon. And there is a general understanding among christian ministers to refuse discussion and stifle investigation by a general outcry against the moral characters of the saints, and a studious evasion of their doctrine.

66. I doubt not these expressions will strike you with some surprise. But if you will let your intention to enter upon such a discussion be generally known before your travels, the anxious advice of your ministerial brethren will convince you. Even the Morning Star, some years since, spoke strongly against such discussions, because they bring Mormonism into notice; arguing truly that if men are made acquainted with it they will embrace it. I think, therefore, that unless you have your mind firmly made up to enter upon the discussion immediately, and to pursue it from to time whenever your avocations will admit, in spite of any man's advice, you will find more serious remonstrances to encounter than you have ever yet met with. You will excuse the frankness with which I speak on this subject, when I tell you that in several occasions I and my brethren have engaged to discuss various theological questions with christian ministers of no mean standing, and completed the arrangements down to the appointment of time and place of meeting and the giving out of public notice, and have then been met with a positive recession from the engagements, without any other excuse than the advice of ministerial brethren.

67. Nor do I press this matter with so much earnestness from any egotism of success. True, with all my friends, I expect to succeed entirely. But our confidence is in the cause, not in the man. The same would be expected of any of the Elders, who is able to make himself understood. I possess no one advantage over the common mass of my countrymen, except the intrinsic merit of the cause I have espoused. Born of poor parentage, raised on the very borders of civilization, suffering with debilitating disease from infancy, I had a most indifferent opportunity of obtaining even a common school education. I have neither had the benefit of a private tutor, nor attended school one week since I was fifteen years of age. I have never known one day of health since I was born; and at the age of thirty-five find the weakness of youth and the decrepitude of old age meeting in me. Yet in this cause I feel myself able to endure all things, and the thought of failure never enters my heart. I seek the encounter, knowing that among my friends the most flattering success is but barely what they would expect of any one, and will bring with it no honor; and that the slightest failure would bring with it the most overwhelming disgrace.

68. And I am fully persuaded that these facts are not unknown to the great body of christian ministers. I believe that they are fully conscious of the weakness of their cause, and will prevent discussion by every influence in their power. Among the pretenses constantly resorted to to excuse non-investigation is the oft repeated allegation of the non-importance of the question. The unexampled success of this faith, the moral and intellectual ability of its advocates, the sincerity and sufferings of its believers, the known and conceded strength of its positions, all alike forbid a resort to any such excuse.

69. Notwithstanding the great anxiety I have expressed on this subject, I wish not to be unreasonably importunate. If the discussion can be in progress, so that the readers can be sure that they will not be disappointed in it, I will be fully content. Indeed if you will procure the publication of it on your part, I would not object to go on and close the affirmative, waiting your replies at your leisure, and with a distinct understanding that the replies should be

DIVINE AUTHORITY OF MORMONISM.

MR. STRANG TO PROFESSOR GRAHAM.—No. 2.

Voree, November 7th, 1848.

DEAR SIR:—Yours of October 26th is this moment received, and I confess the most serious disappointment in the reading of it. I acknowledge I do not see in the new circumstances in which you are placed any necessity of relinquishing or postponing the discussion of the question at issue between us. Certainly it is more pleasant and convenient to be at leisure to sit down by one's fireside, with a library at hand, and write and rewrite, until an article is made as perfect as possible.

60. This, however, is a pleasure I have never enjoyed, and never expect to. I can feel the full force of all the embarrassments you speak of in your new engagements; for I have already entered on it with embarrassments twice as great resting on me. Besides domestic business, which usually would be expected to employ the entire time of three or four men, the editorial charge of a paper, the pastoral care of a church of several thousand persons, scattered over a third of the earth, and a very extensive private correspondence, I have already two other discussions in progress, and have not the assistance of a clerk.

61. In conducting this discussion I expect to do as I have in times past: to sit down among the compositors in the printing office, and, commencing to write as they prepare to put the work in type, to furnish matter for three compositors receiving alternate slips of paper from my hands, and sometimes with each compositor on a different subject, and requiring me to take up and drop the thread of the argument several times in an hour; subject also to continual calls, which are answered verbally without stopping the pen. To travel, as you are about to, would be a relief, and give perfect leisure for such an undertaking.

62. Indeed I have published a paper, the Voree Herald, while traveling, and found the preparation of matter for it a pleasant means of whiling away the live long hours on steamboats, in rail road cars, and at public houses. Even my rough and uncouth friend John E. Page, taken from the logging field, without the benefit of a common school education, has done the same. And among the learned, the celebrated Alexander Campbell, if I am not quite mistaken, carried on his famous controversy with Mr. Skinner while traveling by stage. In the mere matter of carrying on a discussion, where you are not troubled with the superintendence of the publication, this task would not be difficult.

63. As to the difficulty of getting my articles, you will hardly travel any length of time without seeing either the Gospel Herald or Morning Star. Doubtless the Star is taken in all the churches you will visit. And you would be perfectly at liberty, without charge, to order the Herald to the principal post offices on all the routes that you might by any means travel. If you did not get my articles quite so promptly as might be desirable, I will assure you that at all times I will keep plenty of material before you demanding a reply.

64. I understand the question, "Is Mormonism (so called) a dispensation from God?" to be a little more than synonymous with the question, "Is the Book of Mormon entitled to a place in the sacred oracles?" It involves that question, and more too. To my understanding of the matter, in proving Mormonism to be a dispensation from God, I must not only make good the claim of the Book of Mormon to a place in the sacred oracles, but must show that the priesthood was conferred on those by whom it was committed to men. If this exposition does not render the question satisfactory, as stated by me, I will concur in your statement of it.

65. I should the more deeply regret any postponement of the discussion, because I fear that it may not again be returned to. Certainly I believe you, that you do not now shrink from it. But if you do not, there are very few men of talent either in the United States or Great Britain who can sympathize with you. I do not speak at random when I say it is a controversy that the christian world (so called) fears to enter upon. And there is a general understanding among christian ministers to refuse discussion and stifle investigation by a general outcry against the moral characters of the saints, and a studious evasion of their doctrine.

66. I doubt not these expressions will strike you with some surprise. But if you will let your intention to enter upon such a discussion be generally known before your travels, the anxious advice of your ministerial brethren will convince you. Even the Morning Star, some years since, spoke strongly against such discussions, because they bring Mormonism into notice; arguing truly that if men are made acquainted with it they will embrace it. I think, therefore, that unless you have your mind firmly made up to enter upon the discussion immediately, and to pursue it from to time whenever your avocations will admit, in spite of any man's advice, you will find more serious remonstrances to encounter than you have ever yet met with. You will excuse the frankness with which I speak on this subject, when I tell you that in several occasions I and my brethren have engaged to discuss various theological questions with christian ministers of no mean standing, and completed the arrangements down to the appointment of time and place of meeting and the giving out of public notice, and have then been met with a positive recession from the engagements, without any other excuse than the advice of ministerial brethren.

67. Nor do I press this matter with so much earnestness from any egotism of success. True, with all my friends, I expect to succeed entirely. But our confidence is in the cause, not in the man. The same would be expected of any of the Elders, who is able to make himself understood. I possess no one advantage over the common mass of my countrymen, except the intrinsic merit of the cause I have espoused. Born of poor parentage, raised on the very borders of civilization, suffering with debilitating disease from infancy, I had a most indifferent opportunity of obtaining even a common school education. I have neither had the benefit of a private tutor, nor attended school one week since I was fifteen years of age. I have never known one day of health since I was born; and at the age of thirty-five find the weakness of youth and the decrepitude of old age meeting in me. Yet in this cause I feel myself able to endure all things, and the thought of failure never enters my heart. I seek the encounter, knowing that among my friends the most flattering success is but barely what they would expect of any one, and will bring with it no honor; and that the slightest failure would bring with it the most overwhelming disgrace.

68. And I am fully persuaded that these facts are not unknown to the great body of christian ministers. I believe that they are fully conscious of the weakness of their cause, and will prevent discussion by every influence in their power. Among the pretenses constantly resorted to to excuse non-investigation is the oft repeated allegation of the non-importance of the question. The unexampled success of this faith, the moral and intellectual ability of its advocates, the sincerity and sufferings of its believers, the known and conceded strength of its positions, all alike forbid a resort to any such excuse.

69. Notwithstanding the great anxiety I have expressed on this subject, I wish not to be unreasonably importunate. If the discussion can be in progress, so that the readers can be sure that they will not be disappointed in it, I will be fully content. Indeed if you will procure the publication of it on your part, I would not object to go on and close the affirmative, waiting your replies at your leisure, and with a distinct understanding that the replies should be made and published as well as my response. In the faith of the gospel, and the love of the truth, I remain truly and sincerely a witness of the Lord Jesus Christ to you and to all nations,

JAMES J. STRANG.

For the Gospel Herald.

ONE WORD OUT OF SEASON.

I once knew an instance of two individuals who had lived on terms of fondest intimacy for years, but who, in consequence of a solitary word thoughtlessly dropped by one in the hearing of the other, caused a rupture of friendship which time could never repair. Strange, sadly strange! and yet how true is this in the case of many others, who thought to live for life with the cords of love and friendship unriven. Go, brother or sister, to your own private history, and there ask whom have I, in an hour of thoughtless gayety, wounded with a word such as can never be healed. Go, meditate over the steps of the past; there is one you once esteemed. You thought you could never be the cause of any offence to that friend. You thought that in trial and difficulty you would mutually relieve and assist each other. Alas! how changed the scene! Now enemies, who once were friends. Now thinking of each other only to contemn and despise. Now turning to the past, but to say how madly I once acted. Now harboring sentiments of hatred and revenge, where one could never dream that such could be the case. And all this from a solitary word—a slight moving and compression of the lips. All this from some trivial circumstance, which one would never think could produce such disastrous results.

You pretend to delicacy, sentiment and sensibility of feeling.—It may be. But what of this? Have not others sensibility also? Cannot others feel the stings of outrage and wrong? O! then beware how you shield yourself, when you strike the innocent with the arrows of poison. Beware of giving utterance to words and feelings which, if evinced by others towards you, would rankle as vipers in your bosom, or sink like lead into your heart. O! learn kindness. Speak soothing accents to an erring friend, and know that the hour may come when you may be overtaken in a fault which, if widely revealed, would ruin your character forever. Learn of him who sins not. Breathe the spirit of Jesus. If you have sinned ask your Father's forgiveness. If another has offended you, bow down with him upon your knees and ask God to pardon the offender. He that turneth a sinner from the error of sins saves a soul from death, &c. Nothing will so endear you to your friends as the spirit of constant love and forgiveness. Cherish it then as a certain passport to your success and happiness here, and forever hereafter. Amen.

SAMUEL GRAHAM.

Bath Mills, Oct. 28th, 1848.

THE GLOBE:
A CONGRESSIONAL, AGRICULTURAL AND LITERARY NEWSPAPER.

The Editors of the Congressional Globe propose a new publication. To deserve the patronage which Congress has accorded to their reports of its debates, in receiving and making the Globe the official register, they intend to add promptitude to whatever merit has hitherto recommended the work. They will publish a Daily Globe, to record the proceedings and debates as they occur; and a Congressional Globe periodically, as heretofore, embodying the reports of Congress separate from the miscellaneous matter which will accompany them in the daily print. To fill the sheet of the daily newspapers it is designed to gather the news from all quarters, and complete the contest by drawing from every source that may be of most interest among literary novelties, and of greatest utility in scientific and practical works on agriculture. For material, the leading journals and periodicals of France and Great Britain, treating of such subjects, will be consulted, and, it is hoped, advantageously used. Original essays, especially on topics connected with agriculture, will be obtained from the most enlightened and practical men of our country.

The Globe as a newspaper, and as a vehicle of information and amusement in other respects, will be under the charge of Francis P. Blair and James C. Pickett. The Congressional department and business concerns of the paper will be under the management of John C. Rives. The public are familiar with Blair and Rives as connected with the press. In introducing Mr. Pickett as one of the concern, they will be allowed to say a few words of him.—He is a gentleman favorably known to the Government, for the talent and judgment which distinguished his diplomatic service while connected with the mission to Quito; and more recently when Charge d' Affaires to Peru. From his pen mainly the Globe will derive the selections and translations from the French journals and periodicals, the comments on them, and the other literary articles, which will be found among its chief attractions.

The Globe will be published daily during the session of Congress, and weekly the balance of the year, and will undergo distribution in the form of a Weekly Globe, a Congressional Globe, and an Appendix.

The weekly Globe will be the vehicle of the miscellaneous articles of the daily print, with a synopsis of the Congressional proceedings. The Congressional Globe will embody, as it has done for the last sixteen years, Congressional proceedings and debates exclusively.

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches separately, and the messages of the President of the United States, and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments.

The Congresional Globe and Appendix will pe published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number. Subscribers may expect one number of each a week during the first four weeks of a session, and two or three numbers of each a week afterwards, until the end of the session.

Nothing of a political party aspect will appear in the Globe save that which will be found in the Congressional reports. A paper assuming to be an impartial vehicle for all sides, cannot maintain its character if the editorial columns reflect a party hue. The Editors of the Globe have borne their share in the party conflicts of the press. They claim an honorable discharge from the vocation. The Globe will inviolably maintain the neutrality which its relation to Congress imposes.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Daily Globe (daily during the session of Congress, and weekly during the recess) a year	$5 00
For one copy of the Weekly Globe one year	2 00
For one copy of the Congressional Globe during the next session, if subscribed for before the first of January	1 00
For one copy of the Appendix during the next session, if subscribed for before the first of January	1 00
For six copies of either the Congressional Globe, or the Appendix, or part of both	5 00

The subscription for the Congressional Globe, or the Appendix, after the 1st of January, will be $1 50.

Our prices for these papers are so low that we cannot afford to credit them out; therefore no person need consume time in ordering them, unless the subscription price accompanies the order.

Washington, October 16th, 1848. BLAIR & RIVES.

☞ A formidable insurrection has broken out against the British troops in South Africa.

made and published as well as my response. In the faith of the gospel, and the love of the truth, I remain truly and sincerely a witness of the Lord Jesus Christ to you and to all nations,

JAMES J. STRANG.

For the Gospel Herald.

ONE WORD OUT OF SEASON.

I once knew an instance of two individuals who had lived on terms of fondest intimacy for years, but who, in consequence of a solitary word thoughtlessly dropped by one in the hearing of the other, caused a rupture of friendship which time could never repair. Strange, sadly strange! and yet how true is this in the case of many others, who thought to live for life with the cords of love and friendship unriven. Go, brother or sister, to your own private history, and there ask whom have I, in an hour of thoughtless gayety, wounded with a word such as can never be healed. Go, meditate over the steps of the past; there is one you once esteemed. You thought you could never be the cause of any offence to that friend. You thought that in trial and difficulty you would mutually relieve and assist each other. Alas! how changed the scene! Now enemies, who once were friends. Now thinking of each other only to contemn and despise. Now turning to the past, but to say how madly I once acted. Now harboring sentiments of hatred and revenge, where one could never dream that such could be the case. And all this from a solitary word—a slight moving and compression of the lips. All this from some trivial circumstance, which one would never think could produce such disastrous results.

You pretend to delicacy, sentiment and sensibility of feeling.—It may be. But what of this? Have not others sensibility also? Cannot others feel the stings of outrage and wrong? O! then beware how you shield yourself, when you strike the innocent with the arrows of poison. Beware of giving utterance to words and feelings which, if evinced by others towards you, would rankle as vipers in your bosom, or sink like lead into your heart. O! learn kindness. Speak soothing accents to an erring friend, and know that the hour may come when you may be overtaken in a fault which, if widely revealed, would ruin your character forever. Learn of him who sins not. Breathe the spirit of Jesus. If you have sinned ask your Father's forgiveness. If another has offended you, bow down with him upon your knees and ask God to pardon the offender. He that turneth a sinner from the error of his ways saves a soul from death, &c. Nothing will so endear you to your friends as the spirit of constant love and forgiveness. Cherish it then as a certain passport to your success and happiness here, and forever hereafter. Amen.

SAMUEL GRAHAM.

Bath Mills, Oct. 28th, 1848.

THE GLOBE:

CONGRESSIONAL, AGRICULTURAL AND LITERARY NEWSPAPER.

The Editors of the Congressional Globe propose a new publication. To deserve the patronage which Congress has accorded to their reports of its debates, in receiving and making the Globe the official register, they intend to add promptitude to whatever merit has heretofore recommended the work. They will publish a Daily Globe, to record the proceedings and debates as they occur; and a Congressional Globe periodically, as heretofore, embodying the reports of Congress separate from the miscellaneous matter which will accompany them in the daily print. To fill the sheet of the daily newspapers it is designed to gather the news from all quarters, and complete the contest by drawing from every source that may be of most interest among literary novelties, and of greatest utility in scientific and practical works on agriculture. For material, the leading journals and periodicals of France and Great Britain, treating of such subjects, will be consulted, and, it is hoped, advantageously used. Original essays, especially on topics connected with agriculture, will be obtained from the most enlightened and practical men of our country.

The Globe as a newspaper, and as a vehicle of information and amusement in other respects, will be under the charge of Francis P. Blair and James C. Pickett. The Congressional department and business concerns of the paper will be under the management of John C. Rives. The public are familiar with Blair and Rives as connected with the press. In introducing Mr. Pickett as one of the concern, they will be allowed to say a few words of him.—He is a gentleman favorably known to the Government, for the talent and judgment which distinguished his diplomatic service while connected with the mission to Quito; and more recently when Charge d' Affaires to Peru. From his pen mainly the Globe will derive the selections and translations from the French journals and periodicals, the comments on them, and the other literary articles, which will be found among its chief attractions.

The Globe will be published daily during the session of Congress, and weekly the balance of the year, and will undergo distribution in the form of a Weekly Globe, a Congressional Globe, and an Appendix.

The weekly Globe will be the vehicle of the miscellaneous articles of the daily print, with a synopsis of the Congressional proceedings. The Congressional Globe will embody, as it has done for the last sixteen years, Congressional proceedings and debates exclusively.

The Appendix will embrace the revised speeches separately, and the messages of the President of the United States, and the reports of the Heads of the Executive Departments.

The Congresional Globe and Appendix will pe published as fast as the proceedings of Congress will make a number. Subscribers may expect one number of each a week during the first four weeks of a session, and two or three numbers of each a week afterwards, until the end of the session.

Nothing of a political party aspect will appear in the Globe save that which will be found in the Congressional reports. A paper assuming to be an impartial vehicle for all sides, cannot maintain its character if the editorial columns reflect a party hue. The Editors of the Globe have borne their share in the party conflicts of the press. They claim an honorable discharge from the vocation. The Globe will inviolably maintain the neutrality which its relation to Congress imposes.

TERMS.

For one copy of the Daily Globe (daily during the session of Congress, and weekly during the recess) a year	$5 00
For one copy of the Weekly Globe one year	2 00
For one copy of the Congressional Globe during the next session, if subscribed for before the first of January	1 00
For one copy of the Appendix during the next session, if subscribed for before the first of January	1 00
For six copies of either the Congressional Globe, or the Appendix, or part of both	5 00

The subscription for the Congressional Globe, or the Appendix, after the 1st of January, will be $1 50.

Our prices for these papers are so low that we cannot afford to credit them out; therefore no person need consume time in ordering them, unless the subscription price accompanies the order.

Washington, October 16th, 1848. BLAIR & RIVES.

☞ A formidable insurrection has broken out against the British troops in South Africa.

EVICTION—BRUTALITY OF THE IRISH LANDLORDS.

The London Dispatch gives a heart-rending picture of the work of depopulation now going on in the south of Ireland, and especially in the County of Limerick and County of Clare, under the supervision of unfeeling landlords. It was stated in a copy of the Limerick and Clare Examiner, received by a former arrival, that one thousand houses had been demolished, and the poor inmates thrown upon the world to survive or perish, as chance might direct, in the union of Kilrush, within the space of a few weeks. A late number of the same paper says that three hundred have since been added to the melancholy list. The very week before the American sailed, twenty-three families in Kilrush—comprising more than one hundred human beings, many of them helpless infants and aged persons—were expelled from their homes, which were levelled with the earth by a "wrecking party," under the direction of the landlord and sub-sheriff. "In the name of a God of mercy!" says the Dispatch, "will no one put a stop to these deeds?" The same paper has the following: "Over one hundred human beings have been cast out on the world's bleak common, from the estate of Sir William Fitzgerald, at Liscannor. The houses are tumbled, and the unfortunate people squatted by the roadside in huts. They were under tenants of a middleman named Sheahan, who was ejected for non-payment of rent."—True Sun.

☞ Our readers need only be told that this turning of people out of doors and destroying their houses is an operation of the landlords to increase the size and diminish the numbers of their farms, because large farms pay rent better than little patches of a few acres. A few men, owning all the land, are actually forbidding others the privilege of living on the earth, and this according to law in a christian nation. God deliver us from such a faith.

☞ A block from the roots of the tree under which the plates of Rajah Manchou were obtained was laid in the wall of the Tower on the Hill of Promise by J. W. Archer, chief mason, and Gilbert Watson, chief stone cutter, the 31st of October ult. It is placed in a wall of stone masonry three feet thick, and is in the south-eastern range between the third window from the eastern approach and the next door, and at the level of the top of the door. Immediately above it is a case of archives.

MORMON SETTLEMENT, TEXAS.

The Mormons have lately been negotiating for the purchase of a large tract of land on the Pierdenales, above Fredericksburg, and intend to form a new settlement there. The anxiety they manifest to purchase this land has excited some suspicions that they have discovered mines upon it. They have also probably discovered that the soil of the Pierdenales valley is admirably adapted to the culture of wheat and other grains, which they have been accustomed to raise in the Missouri and Illinois, and will afford them all the facilities they desire for a new and extensive settlement. They have also a pretended prophecy that the New Jerusalem of their great prophet, is to be found in Texas. This opinion has long been prevalent among them, and we have been informed by an English gentleman that the presiding elder of the Mormon society of London has often said that the Mormons will, ultimately, all congregate in Texas. We should be sorry to learn that they have located the New Jerusalem on the Pierdenales, or on the San Saba, for our frontier settlements will soon be pushed beyond these streams, and then wars might arise between "the saints" and new settlers.—If the Mormons, however, should find the New Jerusalem on the Puerco, many years would probably elapse before the frontier settlements would reach them, and they might build up their city, and fortify it with seven walls, if they desired, long before the advancing limits of the frontier settlements would be pushed even to the source of the Colorado.—Houston (Texas) Telegraph.

☞ Our readers will doubtless understand that this is spoken of the establishment of Lyman Wight. The Telegraph is, however, mistaken in supposing that the New Jerusalem of the Mormons is in Texas, or that their principal settlements ever will be there, though they may build up large settlements there. Why any one should regret their settlement on the Pierdenales, or should talk about wars with them, we are at a loss to understand. We certainly never heard of the Mormons beginning a war; and if their neighbors wish to avoid that calamity we cannot see that they have any thing to do but to let them alone. If a fight should really break out, we don't doubt that Lyman Wight would play his part. But it certainly sounds singular to see the Houston Telegraph discourse of a little party of 250 people making war on the people of Texas. What will come of the Gentiles when their fear comes upon them?

A SUBTERRANEAN LAKE.

The Michigan Central Railway contractors west of Niles, lately met with a most singular casualty. It became necessary to carry a grading or embankment of fifteen feet high across a low piece of ground, containing about 100 acres, nearly dry enough for plow land. When they had progressed with the grading for some distance, it became too heavy for the soil to support, the crust of the earth broke in, and the embankment sunk down into seventy-nine feet of water! It appears that the piece of ground had been a lake, but had collected a soil of roots, peet, muck, &c., on its surface, apparently from ten to fifteen feet thick, which had become hardened and dry enough for farm purposes. Mr. Brooks thought it would have supported an embankment of five feet thickness, and that if it had not been necessary for them to have one much heavier, it would have supported the road; and the fact might never have been discovered that it rested on the bosom of a lake.—Daily Wisconsin.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We are about to enter upon two important religious discussions, which will be published through the Herald and other papers, and believing that they will be matters of interest to the public generally, are induced to make an effort to enlarge the circulation of this paper on the present occasion. The first discussion is between prophet Strang and Mr. Edwin Burgess of Racine, and commences in this No. (31.) Prophet Strang affirms the existence of God, (as a distinct individual intellectual being,) and Mr. Burgess denies. The second is between prophet Strang and professor D. M. Graham of the Michigan Central College, and is to commence in the next No. Prophet Strang affirms that Mormonism (so called) is a dispensation from God, and professor Graham denies. Whoever will send us the names of two NEW SUBSCRIBERS and four dollars shall have the Herald one year gratis. Whoever will send us the names of TEN NEW SUBSCRIBERS and ten dollars shall have the eleventh copy gratis, and the Herald shall be sent a full year to each of the ten subscribers. These subscriptions will commence at Vol. 3, No. 31, and should be sent in as soon as possible in order to secure all the back numbers. Those who avail themselves of this opportunity will furnish themselves with a weekly paper, and the matter of two valuable books for only one dollar. JAMES J. STRANG.

Voree, October 19th, 1848.

SHOEMAKING IN VOREE.

John D. Hartley conducts a boot and shoe shop, near the Temple, where customers can be accommodated on easy terms.

EVICTION—BRUTALITY OF THE IRISH LANDLORDS.

The London Dispatch gives a heart-rending picture of the work of depopulation now going on in the south of Ireland, and especially in the County of Limerick and County of Clare, under the supervision of unfeeling landlords. "It was stated in a copy of the Limerick and Clare Examiner, received by a former arrival, that one thousand houses had been demolished, and the poor inmates thrown upon the world to survive or perish, as chance might direct, in the union of Kilrush, within the space of a few weeks. A late number of the same paper says that three hundred have since been added to the melancholy list. The very week before the American sailed, twenty-three families in Kilrush—comprising more than one hundred human beings, many of them helpless infants and aged persons—were expelled from their homes, which were levelled with the earth by a "wrecking party," under the direction of the landlord and sub-sheriff. "In the name of a God of mercy!" says the Dispatch, "will no one put a stop to these deeds?" The same paper has the following: "Over one hundred human beings have been cast out on the world's bleak common, from the estate of Sir William Fitzgerald, at Liscannor. The houses are tumbled, and the unfortunate people squatted by the roadside in huts. They were under tenants of a middleman named Sheahan, who was ejected for non-payment of rent."—True Sun.

☞ Our readers need only be told that this turning of people out of doors and destroying their houses is an operation of the landlords to increase the size and diminish the numbers of their farms, because large farms pay rent better than little patches of a few acres. A few men, owning all the land, are actually forbidding others the privilege of living on the earth, and this according to law in a christian nation. God deliver us from such a faith.

☞ A block from the roots of the tree under which the plates of Rajah Manchou were obtained was laid in the wall of the Tower on the Hill of Promise by J. W. Archer, chief mason, and Gilbert Watson, chief stone cutter, the 31st of October [illegible] it is placed in a wall of stone masonry three feet thick, and is in the south-eastern range between the third window from the eastern approach and the next door, and at the level of the top of the door. Immediately above it is a case of archives.

MORMON SETTLEMENT, TEXAS.

The Mormons have lately been negotiating for the purchase of a large tract of land on the Pierdenales, above Fredericksburg, and intend to form a new settlement there. The anxiety they manifest to purchase this land has excited some suspicions that they have discovered mines upon it. They have also probably discovered that the soil of the Pierdenales valley is admirably adapted to the culture of wheat and other grains, which they have been accustomed to raise in the Missouri and Illinois, and will afford them all the facilities they desire for a new and extensive settlement. They have also a pretended prophecy that the New Jerusalem of their great prophet, is to be found in Texas. This opinion has long been prevalent among them, and we have been informed by an English gentleman that the presiding elder of the Mormon society of London has often said that the Mormons will, ultimately, all congregate in Texas. We should be sorry to learn that they have located the New Jerusalem on the Pierdenales, or on the San Saba, for our frontier settlements will soon be pushed beyond these streams, and then wars might arise between "the saints" and new settlers.—If the Mormons, however, should find the New Jerusalem on the Puerco, many years would probably elapse before the frontier settlements would reach them, and they might build up their city, and fortify it with seven walls, if they desired, long before the advancing limits of the frontier settlements would be pushed even to the source of the Colorado.—Houston (Texas) Telegraph.

☞ Our readers will doubtless understand that this is spoken of the establishment of Lyman Wight. The Telegraph is, however, mistaken in supposing that the New Jerusalem of the Mormons is in Texas, or that their principal settlements ever will be there, though they may build up large settlements there. Why any one should regret their settlement on the Pierdenales, or should talk about wars with them, we are at a loss to understand. We certainly never heard of the Mormons beginning a war; and if their neighbors wish to avoid that calamity we cannot see that they have any thing to do but to let them alone. If a fight should really break out, we don't doubt that Lyman Wight would play his part. But it certainly sounds singular to see the Houston Telegraph discourse of a little party of 250 people making war on the people of Texas. What will come of the Gentiles when their fear comes upon them!

A SUBTERRANEAN LAKE.

The Michigan Central Railway contractors west of Niles, lately met with a most singular casualty. It became necessary to carry a grading or embankment of fifteen feet high across a low piece of ground, containing about 100 acres, nearly dry enough for plow land. When they had progressed with the grading for some distance, it became too heavy for the soil to support, the crust of the earth broke in, and the embankment sunk down into seventy-nine feet of water! It appears that the piece of ground had been a lake, but had collected a soil of roots, peet, muck, &c., on its surface, apparently from ten to fifteen feet thick, which had become hardened and dry enough for farm purposes. Mr. Brooks thought it would have supported an embankment of five feet thickness, and that if it had not been necessary for them to have one much heavier, it would have supported the road; and the fact might never have been discovered that it rested on the bosom of a lake.—Daily Wisconsin

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We are about to enter upon two important religious discussions which will be published through the Herald and other papers, and believing that they will be matters of interest to the public generally are induced to make an effort to enlarge the circulation of this paper on the present occasion. The first discussion is between prophet Strang and Mr. Edwin Burgess of Racine, and commences in this No. (31.) Prophet Strang affirms the existence of God, (as a distinct individual intellectual being,) and Mr. Burgess denies. The second is between prophet Strang and professor D. M. Graham of the Michigan Central College, and is to commence in the next No. Prophet Strang affirms that Mormonism (so called) is a dispensation from God, and professor Graham denies. Whoever will send us the names of two NEW SUBSCRIBERS and four dollars shall have the Herald one year gratis. Whoever will send us the names of TEN NEW SUBSCRIBERS and ten dollars shall have the eleventh copy gratis, and the Herald shall be sent a full year to each of the ten subscribers. These subscriptions will commence at Vol. 3, No. 1, and should be sent in as soon as possible in order to secure all the back numbers. Those who avail themselves of this opportunity will furnish themselves with a weekly paper, and the matter of two valuable books for only one dollar. JAMES J. STRANG.

Voree, October 19th, 1848.

SHOEMAKING IN VOREE.

John D. Hartley conducts a boot and shoe shop, near the Temple, where customers can be accommodated on easy terms.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 35.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. NOV. 16, 1848. [WHOLE No. 99.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—NO. 3.

Voree, November 17th, 1848.

MR. EDWIN BURGESS:—I am happy to be in the receipt of your first number, which I shall proceed to review before advancing in the affirmative. In paragraph 2 you ask me to affirm that God creadte', as well as governs universe. It would be a more ambiguous affirmation than I am in the habit of making. The word create, the verb of the sentence, has come to have an uncertain meaning. Primarily it signifies to make, but in regard to the making of the earth it is quite frequently used to signify a production from non-entity, which is neither true nor possible.

56. Nor is there any such universal testimony that God created the universe, as that he governs it. If the creation is true, it is to us merely matter of opinion, or of revelation; not of human testimony at all; for it was previous to man. No man can, and none ever could, testify of the creation; for no man existed then; none beheld it. But men have seen God. Therefore they can testify that he is.

57. In this matter as in others, you have fallen into a common error; that of not distinguishing between the expression of opinions and the testimony of facts. The text you quote does not assert that God made the earth from nothing; only that he made it. But had the writer of the book of Genesis expressly asserted that God created the earth of nothing, this affirmation would not be testimony, but opinion. The opinion might be erroneous, and the man perfectly sincere.

58. But when the writer of the book of Exodus asserts that "Moses spoke, and God answered him; and the Lord came down upon mount Sinai, in the very top of the mount, and he called Moses unto the top thereof," and that the Lord commanded a law to Israel, and gave to Moses two tables of stone containing the words of that law, he speaks of things of knowledge, not of opinion. With the original author such an assertion is not a conclusion. It is testimony; and as such is either a truth or a lie.

59. Conceding to you that the author of Genesis does assert the creation of the earth from nothing, (which he does not,) still there is no such universality of testimony on that subject as on the being of God. I am not aware that it is pretended that any nation but the Jews have a tradition of the creation of the earth of nothing. And this pretense in regard to them is built on the mere assumption that the word create in Genesis is used in a secondary sense.

60. Moreover if it was true that God had created the earth from nothing, still that fact would be but historic of his life, and could not be named as a part of his personal description, by which we should define his being. It is necessary to understand and define our idea of God, before I can assert that HE IS; but it is proper to show that he is before I undertake to show what he has done. I shall not therefore affirm that he created the earth out of nothing, nor shall I at this stage of the investigation assert that he created it at all.

61. So much for the question at issue. Now for the rules of discussion. Hoping you will not be compelled to delay the matter greatly, I perfectly concur in the reasonableness of what you have said on the subject, and shall not complain if you furnish less matter from week to week than I had hoped for, and will patiently wait your time.

62. In your 3d par. you have most grossly perverted my 3d.—Your construction appears to me not merely captious, but the captiousness is founded on a suppression of part of my words. I proposed that in such a discussion as this no man or book is authority in any higher sense than in discussing a question of mathematics, chemistry or geology. On this you say, "as mathematicians do not admit testimony opposed to their own as proofs," that is to be our rule. That is, you do not admit any testimony opposed to you as proof. A most sage conclusion. So I am beat before I start.—I can make no proof of the existence of God, because you do not see fit to admit testimony opposed to you, who deny it.

63. Your fundamental error here is in making no distinction between testimony and authority. The statement of any private person of facts within his knowledge, on questions at issue, is testimony; but the decision of a judge having jurisdiction is authority. On theological questions arising between members of the various christian denominations acknowledging faith in the scriptures, they are authority. In discussions between individuals of the same church, the creeds and tribunals of the same church are authority.—So in all the sciences there are certain works written by men of great learning, which, though not actual authority, are respected in nearly the same degree. Euclid's Elements of Geometry is universally respected as authority in this sense. Bakewell is relied on in the same sense in geology, and several writers in chemistry.—Not that men are expected absolutely to subscribe to any principle merely because it is contained in these works, but that the things contained in them are so well sustained that there is no doubt among the learned of their accuracy.

64. Yet any person would be perfectly at liberty to dispute the correctness of Euclid's Elements, by showing that its reasonings are unsound. These works are not absolute authority. But no one can dispute the final decision of the supreme court, because its decisions are absolute authority. In the great theologic discussions which have interested the religious world, certain books have usually been agreed on to be received as final authority. As for instance, in that of Campbell and Skinner, the books of the Old and New Testament in the original tongues with the privilege of a primary resort to king James' English translation.

65. But as there are no books which both parties to this investigation absolutely subscribe to as a final authority in the matters at issue, I have simply embodied that saying in the rules, in what I deem plain and unambiguous language.

66. Testimony is a very different thing. Testimony proves facts. Authority establishes principles. If testimony is contradictory, the

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 35.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, NOV. 16, 1848. [WHOLE No. 99.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—NO. 3.

Voree, November 17th, 1848.

Mr. Edwin Burgess:—I am happy to be in the receipt of your first number, which I shall proceed to review before advancing in the affirmative. In paragraph 2 you ask me to affirm that God creadte', as well as governs universe. It would be a more ambiguous affirmation than I am in the habit of making. The word create, the verb of the sentence, has come to have an uncertain meaning. Primarily it signifies to make, but in regard to the making of the earth it is quite frequently used to signify a production from non-entity, which is neither true nor possible.

57. Nor is there any such universal testimony that God created the universe, as that he governs it. If the creation is true, it is to us merely matter of opinion, or of revelation; not of human testimony at all; for it was previous to man. No man can, and none ever could, testify of the creation; for no man existed then; none beheld it. But men have seen God. Therefore they can testify that he is.

57. In this matter as in others, you have fallen into a common error; that of not distinguishing between the expression of opinions and the testimony of facts. The text you quote does not assert that God made the earth from nothing; only that he made it. But had the writer of the book of Genesis expressly asserted that God created the earth of nothing, this affirmation would not be testimony, but opinion. The opinion might be erroneous, and the man perfectly sincere.

58. But when the writer of the book of Exodus asserts that "Moses spoke, and God answered him; and the Lord came down upon mount Sinai, in the very top of the mount, and he called Moses unto the top thereof," and that the Lord commanded a law to Israel, and gave to Moses two tables of stone containing the words of that law, he speaks of things of knowledge, not of opinion. With the original author such an assertion is not a conclusion. It is testimony; and as such is either a truth or a lie.

59. Conceding to you that the author of Genesis does assert the creation of the earth from nothing, (which he does not,) still there is no such universality of testimony on that subject as on the being of God. I am not aware that it is pretended that any nation but the Jews have a tradition of the creation of the earth of nothing. And this pretense in regard to them is built on the mere assumption that the word create in Genesis is used in a secondary sense.

60. Moreover if it was true that God had created the earth from nothing, still that fact would be but historic of his life, and could not be named as a part of his personal description, by which we should define his being. It is necessary to understand and define our idea of God, before I can assert that HE IS; but it is proper to show that he is before I undertake to show what he has done. I shall not therefore affirm that he created the earth out of nothing, nor shall I at this stage of the investigation assert that he created it at all.

61. So much for the question at issue. Now for the rules of discussion. Hoping you will not be compelled to delay the matter greatly, I perfectly concur in the reasonableness of what you have said on the subject, and shall not complain if you furnish less matter from week to week than I had hoped for, and will patiently wait your time.

62. In your 3d par. you have most grossly perverted my 3d.—Your construction appears to me not merely captious, but the captiousness is founded on a suppression of part of my words. I proposed that in such a discussion as this no man or book is authority in any higher sense than in discussing a question of mathematics, chemistry or geology. On this you say, "as mathematicians do not admit testimony opposed to their own as proofs," that is to be our rule. That is, you do not admit any testimony opposed to you as proof. A most sage conclusion. So I am beat before I start.—I can make no proof of the existence of God, because you do not see fit to admit testimony opposed to you, who deny it.

63. Your fundamental error here is in making no distinction between testimony and authority. The statement of any private person of facts within his knowledge, on questions at issue, is testimony; but the decision of a judge having jurisdiction is authority. On theological questions arising between members of the various christian denominations acknowledging faith in the scriptures, they are authority. In discussions between individuals of the same church, the creeds and tribunals of the same church are authority.—So in all the sciences there are certain works written by men of great learning, which, though not actual authority, are respected in nearly the same degree. Euclid's Elements of Geometry is universally respected as authority in this sense. Bakewell is relied on in the same sense in geology, and several writers in chemistry.—Not that men are expected absolutely to subscribe to any principle merely because it is contained in these works, but that the things contained in them are so well sustained that there is no doubt among the learned of their accuracy.

64. Yet any person would be perfectly at liberty to dispute the correctness of Euclid's Elements, by showing that its reasonings are unsound. These works are not absolute authority. But no one can dispute the final decision of the supreme court, because its decisions are absolute authority. In the great theologic discussions which have interested the religious world, certain books have usually been agreed on to be received as final authority. As for instance, in that of Campbell and Skinner, the books of the Old and New Testament in the original tongues with the privilege of a primary resort to king James' English translation.

65. But as there are no books which both parties to this investigation absolutely subscribe to as a final authority in the matters at issue, I have simply embodied that saying in the rules, in what I deem plain and unambiguous language.

66. Testimony is a very different thing. Testimony proves facts. Authority establishes principles. If testimony is contradictory, the effect is to leave facts in doubt. But if authority is contradictory, the superior must prevail. To a christian debater the Bible is authority. But to all men it is the testimony of its writers. And men of science do admit testimony which is opposed to them. It is the only testimony they have any occasion to admit.

67. To make this fact and the true distinction plain, I will introduce a question in geology. There are two opposing systems or theories in the science of geology. One is, that the earth was formed in water, called the Neptunian, and the other that it was formed in fire, called the Plutonic. The advocates of the Neptunian theory admit the testimony of their opponents as evidence that rocks of particular kinds are found in certain positions, though that testimony is strongly against them, by laying the foundation of an argument against their theory. But they do not admit their books as authority to prove the true principles of geology. So the advocates of the Plutonic system admit the testimony of their opponents to prove the position of rocks and strata or any other facts, but do not admit their books as authority.

68. I do not know what you intend in saying, (par. 3,) "Ten men affirming a fact do not make it more apparent than one." Certainly a truth is a truth, whether any one affirms it or not, and a lie is a lie, if ten thousand tell it for truth. But the assertion or testimony of ten geologists or other persons that they have found aquatic shells beneath the coal formations, is better evidence of the fact than the assertion of one man; and, consequently, lays a better foundation for an argument in favor of the Neptunian system. The argument itself is as good in the mouth of one man as of a multitude.

69. In answer to your question in par. 4, I reply, I do not assume that facts which are not self-evident require proof. Facts not generally known and those which the opposing party disputes require proof. If you assert that Julius Cesar waged war on the Britons, changed the constitution and governed the empire of Rome, though your assertion is any thing in the world but self-evident, yet it requires no proof. I shall not dispute it. So, too, if I should have any occasion to assert that David was king of Israel, that he was succeeded by his son Solomon, and that, after his time, the kingdom was divided, I should not expect to prove it. I should expect you, as a reasonable man, having a tolerable knowledge of the most familiar points of history, to acknowledge it. Nevertheless, if you did dispute it, I should prove it. Professing, as you do, to seek for truth rather than a triumph, you must be beside yourself to think of demanding proof of what you know to be true, because it is not self-evident.

(To be continued.)

CATHOLIC DISCUSSION.

MR. RAFFERTY TO MR. STRANG.—No. 2.

Wellsville, Ohio, Oct. 7th, 1848.

DEAR SIR:—In your last you have stated that a year has nearly elapsed since my first letter on the Catholic question, and that you have answered in six letters, the last of which must have been some five months in my possession. That is all true. But unforeseen occurrences, and the death of my wife, has been the principal cause of this delay. I had a letter written to mail to you, but lost it before mailing it. About this time I heard a communication read from one of your papers repudiating the word to be continued, which made me almost conclude never to write again, though I thought it but fair to have as good a chance to answer as you. You cannot expect that I, being destitute of sight, having to employ another to write and dictate to him, can keep pace with you, that has a printing press at will, without the privilege of using the word "continued."

When first I wrote to you it was merely for sake of information upon a certain question, known to yourself, which you said you would affirm. Have you done so? I think not. You have branched out upon almost every thing else but the real question at issue, which you have never touched. You say that I have made a great many assertions without proof, notwithstanding I have been trying to accommodate you with such proofs as no sane man can refute.—Yet I will, for your special good, give you a few more plain enough for the weakest capacities to comprehend. To follow you through your zig zag, serpentine course would perplex a Grecian philosopher. I consider there is nothing in your six previous letters in answer to my first to justify the affirmation that the church of Jesus Christ was extinct before the origin of the Latter Day Saints. I have heard this ten thousand times over belched out from the fetid appetites of sectarians in justification of their doctrines. For instance, the Donalists, Manicheons, Iconoclats, Arians, Lollards, Seekers, Dippers, Socinians, Muggletonians, Hussonians, Buchanites, and several more not necessary here to insert. These different sects have all had their time in reforming the church of Christ, and are all extinct or nearly so.

Now, sir, to my proofs. I will now try to prove from the holy scriptures that there can be but one true religion. First. Jesus Christ came, as he says himself, to gather all nations together, to bring back all who had been dispersed, that there might be but one sheepfold and one shepherd. John tenth 16, eleventh 52. Secondly. He also came (as recorded in all the gospels) to establish his spiritual kingdom throughout the whole earth. But how could the eternal wisdom, who had expressed in the most forcible terms (Matt. x. xii. 25) the desolation threatening a kingdom divided in itself, expose his own kingdom to such a danger? Yet this he certainly would have done had he authorized different religions, whose opposition to each other in belief and in rules of conduct must be an endless source of dissensions and divisions. Thirdly. It was the constant prayer of our divine Savior, whilst on earth, that all his disciples should be one, as he and his heavenly Father were one.—You will find this recorded in John 17c. 21v. He must therefore have established that plan of worship which, uniting all in the same faith, same hope, and same love, could alone promote what he had so earnestly had at heart.

Fourthly. The gospel of Matt. 28c. 18v. (19v.) plainly informs us that the Apostles were sent by Jesus Christ to teach all nations the same heavenly doctrines he had taught them; to administer to them all the same baptism, and to preach to them all the same Christ and Redeemer. By which it is plain no room is left for variety of difference. Hence St. Paul declares in 19, 20, Ephes. 4c. 5v., that there is but one Lord, one Faith, and one Baptism. Fifthly. Jesus Christ established but one church for all nations, as is evident from his own words to St. Peter: Thou art Peter, (or the rock,) and on this rock I build my church, (not churches.) And also from these words, Matt. 18c. 17v.: He that will not hear the church (not churches) let him be to thee as the heathen and the publican. Now all must allow, if there be but one church, there is but one religion. But, sir, you may ask, what church now existing is that true church? I contend it is the Roman Catholic church. My reasons for believing so are these:—

Firstly. Because it is the only religion that can unite all nations and all ages in the same religious sentiments. Secondly. Because it is the only religion that can afford people reasonable grounds of certainty with regard to their faith. Thirdly. Because it is the only religion whose method of instructing is adapted to the nature of man. Fourthly. Because it is the religion which, of all others, shows best our Savior's love for mankind, and holds him forth in effect is to leave facts in doubt. But if authority is contradictory, the superior must prevail. To a christian debater the Bible is authority. But to all men it is the testimony of its writers. And men of science do admit testimony which is opposed to them. It is the only testimony they have any occasion to admit.

67. To make this fact and the true distinction plain, I will introduce a question in geology. There are two opposing systems or theories in the science of geology. One is, that the earth was formed in water, called the Neptunian, and the other that it was formed in fire, called the Plutonic. The advocates of the Neptunian theory admit the testimony of their opponents as evidence that rocks of particular kinds are found in certain positions, though that testimony is strongly against them, by laying the foundation of an argument against their theory. But they do not admit their books as authority to prove the true principles of geology. So the advocates of the Plutonic system admit the testimony of their opponents to prove the position of rocks and strata or any other facts, but do not admit their books as authority.

68. I do not know what you intend in saying, (par. 3,) "Ten men affirming a fact do not make it more apparent than one." Certainly a truth is a truth, whether any one affirms it or not, and a lie is a lie, if ten thousand tell it for truth. But the assertion or testimony of ten geologists or other persons that they have found aquatic shells beneath the coal formations, is better evidence of the fact than the assertion of one man; and, consequently, lays a better foundation for an argument in favor of the Neptunian system. The argument itself is as good in the mouth of one man as of a multitude.

69. In answer to your question in par. 4, I reply, I do not assume that facts which are not self-evident require proof. Facts not generally known and those which the opposing party disputes require proof. If you assert that Julius Cesar waged war on the Britons, changed the constitution and governed the empire of Rome, though your assertion is anything in the world but self-evident, yet it requires no proof. I shall not dispute it. So, too, if I should have any occasion to assert that David was king of Israel, that he was succeeded by his son Solomon, and that, after his time, the kingdom was divided, I should not expect to prove it. I should expect you, as a reasonable man, having a tolerable knowledge of the most familiar points of history, to acknowledge it. Nevertheless, if you did dispute it, I should prove it. Professing, as you do, to seek for truth rather than a triumph, you must be beside yourself to think of demanding proof of what you know to be true, because it is not self-evident.

(To be continued.)

CATHOLIC DISCUSSION.

MR. RAFFERTY TO MR. STRANG.—No. 2.

Wellsville, Ohio, Oct. 7th, 1848.

DEAR SIR:—In your last you have stated that a year has nearly elapsed since my first letter on the Catholic question, and that you have answered in six letters, the last of which must have been some five months in my possession. That is all true. But unforeseen occurrences, and the death of my wife, has been the principal cause of this delay. I had a letter written to mail to you, but lost it before mailing it. About this time I heard a communication read from one of your papers repudiating the word to be continued, which made me almost conclude never to write again, though I thought it but fair to have as good a chance to answer as you. You cannot expect that I, being destitute of sight, having to employ another to write and dictate to him, can keep pace with you, that has a printing press at will, without the privilege of using the word "continued."

When first I wrote to you it was merely for sake of information upon a certain question, known to yourself, which you said you would affirm. Have you done so? I think not. You have branched out upon almost every thing else but the real question at issue, which you have never touched. You say that I have made a great many assertions without proof, notwithstanding I have been trying to accommodate you with such proofs as no sane man can refute.—Yet I will, for your special good, give you a few more plain enough for the weakest capacities to comprehend. To follow you through your zig zag, serpentine course would perplex a Grecian philosopher. I consider there is nothing in your six previous letters in answer to my first to justify the affirmation that the church of Jesus Christ was extinct before the origin of the Latter Day Saints. I have heard this ten thousand times over belched out from the fetid appetites of sectarians in justification of their doctrines. For instance, the Donalists, Manicheons, Iconoclats, Arians, Lollards, Seekers, Dippers, Socinians, Muggletonians, Hussonians, Buchanites, and several more not necessary here to insert. These different sects have all had their time in reforming the church of Christ, and are all extinct or nearly so.

Now, sir, to my proofs. I will now try to prove from the holy scriptures that there can be but one true religion. First. Jesus Christ came, as he says himself, to gather all nations together, to bring back all who had been dispersed, that there might be but one sheepfold and one shepherd. John tenth 16, eleventh 52. Secondly. He also came (as recorded in all the gospels) to establish his spiritual kingdom throughout the whole earth. But how could the eternal wisdom, who had expressed in the most forcible terms (Matt. x. xii. 25) the desolation threatening a kingdom divided in itself, expose his own kingdom to such a danger? Yet this he certainly would have done had he authorized different religions, whose opposition to each other in belief and in rules of conduct must be an endless source of dissensions and divisions. Thirdly. It was the constant prayer of our divine Savior, whilst on earth, that all his disciples should be one, as he and his heavenly Father were one.—You will find this recorded in John 17c. 21v. He must therefore have established that plan of worship which, uniting all in the same faith, same hope, and same love, could alone promote what he had so earnestly had at heart.

Fourthly. The gospel of Matt. 28c. 18v. (19v.) plainly informs us that the Apostles were sent by Jesus Christ to teach all nations the same heavenly doctrines he had taught them; to administer to them all the same baptism, and to preach to them all the same Christ and Redeemer. By which it is plain no room is left for variety of difference. Hence St. Paul declares in 19, 20, Ephes. 4c. 5v., that there is but one Lord, one Faith, and one Baptism. Fifthly. Jesus Christ established but one church for all nations, as is evident from his own words to St. Peter: Thou art Peter, (or the rock,) and on this rock I build my church, (not churches.) And also from these words, Matt. 18c. 17v.: He that will not hear the church (not churches) let him be to thee as the heathen and the publican. Now all must allow, if there be but one church, there is but one religion. But, sir, you may ask, what church now existing is that true church? I contend it is the Roman Catholic church. My reasons for believing so are these:—

Firstly. Because it is the only religion that can unite all nations and all ages in the same religious sentiments. Secondly. Because it is the only religion that can afford people reasonable grounds of certainty with regard to their faith. Thirdly. Because it is the only religion whose method of instructing is adapted to the nature of man. Fourthly. Because it is the religion which, of all others, shows best our Savior's love for mankind, and holds him forth in the most amiable light. Fifthly. Because it is the only christian society that can, in a manner plain to the weakest capacity, trace up its origin to Christ and his Apostles. Sixthly. Because it is the only christian society which has not violated the ninth article of the creed. I will close upon this subject at present, and refer to your last letter, in which you have stated that you have sent copies to all the Catholic offices with which you are acquainted, and to some of the Catholic churches; and you ask, in a sarcastic manner, why they do not take it up, or dare they not? I answer, I am both able and willing myself. I presume the clergy are aware of it, therefore they will not intersere.

I want you to stick close to the matter at issue, and not wander over all creation, and not try to prove what has been ten thousand times before refuted; knowing, sir, as you do, that by trying to prove too much you just prove nothing at all. I would also refer you to a certain paragraph in one of your communications respecting the priesthood. Heb. 5c. 4v.: "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." With you I agree. But, sir, why not begin at the first verse of said chapter? and read: "For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins." Again, sir, I had in my last letter, which was mislaid, taken special care in noting down the opinions of the Holy Fathers from the second century to the time of Martin Luther's pretended reformation, with his included, respecting the authority of the Holy Catholic Church; which I need not have done, as I have heard read from one of your papers in reply to a communication from a sect called Perfectionists, advising them to return to their mother church. I would therefore advise you to beware of the responsibility resting upon those that bear false witness against their neighbors. I remain, sir, with due respect, &c.,

CHARLES RAFFERTY.

Westford, N. Y., Nov. 1st, 1848.

Respected Brother Strang:—With feelings of no ordinary character, and under peculiar circumstances, I now attempt to break a long silence. My mind often refers back to the time I left your hospitable cottage, and the society of those rendered dear to me by their virtues, their benevolence and their glorious institutions, that, with the assistance of my heavenly Father, has formed my character and habits for the society of saints and angels. I have just returned to this place from a short excursion of two weeks down through the south part of Broome Co. Brother Hale was with me. We passed through Colesville, where the church was first organized, and, as a community, they were a hard set. From thence we went to Binghampton, then north four miles, where I, by the grace of God, in my infancy in the faith, raised a branch of twenty-seven members, in the fall of 1830 and winter of 1831, and from among the number I married my first wife. I found brother Wm. Rose in good faith, but poor health, by the means of a stone hitting him in the breast last August. It was thrown at him through a glass window by a ruthless mob in the night at a late hour. A part of the gang are in prison awaiting their doom for the same.

Brother Rose gave us $3 to add to our comfort. And in that region we visited mother Bennet, aunt Polly Crocker, Anson Amsbury, Johnson Brown and Charles Sprague, who gave liberally to our assistance, to the amount of $7 and 47 cents. I had a good visit. Then we returned towards this place, and near Colesville we found one Wm. Hale a Strangite, a cousin to sister Emma Smith, and second cousin to Alden Hale, who is my present partner in the ministry. On our return here we called on the brethren to swell the sum to $10, which they did cheerfully; and the same was put into brother Hale's hands to go east, and on the 31st of Oct. he left for Lowell; was in usual health and good spirits. We parted with no ordinary kind of feelings. Elder Hale is a worthy brother.—Brother Strang, in your Conference minutes your credit to brother B con of $10 ought to have been to Samuel Snider. One mishap in you is harped upon more than ten thousand words or faults in a Gentile paper. All the brethren here and elsewhere where we have been are fully determined to sell if possible and go to Voree in the spring.

Brother Strang, it seems almost useless to preach to the Gentiles; for I have been from here to St. Lawrence twice this season, taking different routes each time and trying to get a hearing, but their bands are made strong, no man can loose them: and I just looked over my daily journal, I have traveled about twenty-seven hundred miles, and preached seventy-seven times and to some thousands of people, but not one of ten thousand received my testimony. For a while in these regions doors were opened and the prospect appeared good, but at present doors are locked, and hearts and ears also. Had not the Lord said, let my servants the apostles, priests and elders be continual witnesses for me before the world, I would quit them, for they are in a swift current, going down stream, and it is like rowing up a cataract to preach to them.

Were not our foundation a rock, our cable truth, our anchors the word of God, and our craft the spirit and the Holy Ghost, I should despair of all hopes of ever doing much. I challenge them all, their learned fools and holy knaves, to meet me; but, like crows and dogs off at a distance, caw and bark and dare not face us.—Brother Strang, I want to see you much. I was in hopes, and so were all the saints, that you would come down here and hold a Conference. The brethren here want some counsel about selling, and what sacrifice to make rather than not sell, and what would be wisdom, &c. I think a goodly number will accompany me up there next spring. Bro. Lyman Hewitt wants you to come here, and thinks if you come you will not go away empty. Come and see. The saints here say united order or nothing. I have learned five maxims to be observed through life. 1st. Never regret what is irretrievably lost. 2d. Never believe that which seems improbable. 3d. Never expose your disappointment to the world. 4th. Never complain of being ill used. 5th. Always speak well of your friends, but of your enemies speak neither good nor evil. E. PAGE.

THE MORMON TEMPLE

At Nauvoo, was destroyed by fire on Sunday night last, the 8th instant, about 3 o'clock. We learn that the people of the city are strongly of the opinion that it was the work of an incendiary; but what ground there is for that opinion, we do not know. It is stated that a religious meeting had been held in it in the evening, called by a Universalist preacher—and that this meeting did not adjourn until between 10 and 11 o'clock. There is a report, also, that when the fire was first discovered by the citizens, a window was found open; leading to the conviction that it had been fired by some one who entered for that purpose. We have not heard that suspicion rests upon any individual; but whether it may have been by accident or design—or be the perpetrator friend or foe—Strangite, Brighamite, or Rigdonite—the body of the Anti-Mormons, of Hancock county, will have to bear the blame.

The fire was seen in various parts of the county, at a distance of some 15 miles—and, had it not been a moonlight night, might have been seen much further. The four blackened walls of stone still stand, a monument of the rise, progress and downfall of one of the boldest and most nefareous systems of imposture of modern times.—Warsaw Signal.

☞ We publish the foregoing as the most particular account we have yet seen of the burning of the Temple. At first reading the following remark struck us as containing more than was inten-the most amiable light. Fifthly. Because it is the only christian society that can, in a manner plain to the weakest capacity, trace up its origin to Christ and his Apostles. Sixthly. Because it is the only christian society which has not violated the ninth article of the creed. I will close upon this subject at present, and refer to your last letter, in which you have stated that you have sent copies to all the Catholic offices with which you are acquainted, and to some of the Catholic churches; and you ask, in a sarcastic manner, why they do not take it up, or dare they not? I answer, I am both able and willing myself. I presume the clergy are aware of it, therefore they will not interfere.

I want you to stick close to the matter at issue, and not wander over all creation, and not try to prove what has been ten thousand times before refuted; knowing, sir, as you do, that by trying to prove too much you just prove nothing at all. I would also refer you to a certain paragraph in one of your communications respecting the priesthood. Heb. 5c. 4v.: "And no man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron." With you I agree. But, sir, why not begin at the first verse of said chapter! and read: "For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins." Again, sir, I had in my last letter, which was mislaid, taken special care in noting down the opinions of the Holy Fathers from the second century to the time of Martin Luther's pretended reformation, with his included, respecting the authority of the Holy Catholic Church; which I need not have done, as I have heard read from one of your papers in reply to a communication from a sect called Perfectionists, advising them to return to their mother church. I would therefore advise you to beware of the responsibility resting upon those that bear false witness against their neighbors. I remain, sir, with due respect, &c.,

CHARLES RAFFERTY.

Westford, N. Y., Nov. 1st, 1848.

RESPECTED BROTHER STRANG:—With feelings of no ordinary character, and under peculiar circumstances, I now attempt to break a long silence. My mind often refers back to the time I left your hospitable cottage, and the society of those rendered dear to me by their virtues, their benevolence and their glorious institutions, that, with the assistance of my heavenly Father, has formed my character and habits for the society of saints and angels. I have just returned to this place from a short excursion of two weeks down through the south part of Broome Co. Brother Hale was with me. We passed through Colesville, where the church was first organized, and, as a community, they were a hard set. From thence we went to Binghampton, then north four miles, where I, by the grace of God, in my infancy in the faith, raised a branch of twenty-seven members, in the fall of 1830 and winter of 1831, and from among the number I married my first wife. I found brother Wm. Rose in good faith, but poor health, by the means of a stone hitting him in the breast last August. It was thrown at him through a glass window by a ruthless mob in the night at a late hour. A part of the gang are in prison awaiting their doom for the same.

Brother Rose gave us $3 to add to our comfort. And in that region we visited mother Bennet, aunt Polly Crocker, Anson Amesbury, Johnson Brown and Charles Sprague, who gave liberally to our assistance, to the amount of $7 and 47 cents. I had a good visit. Then we returned towards this place, and near Colesville we found one Wm. Hale a Strangite, a cousin to sister Emma Smith, and second cousin to Alden Hale, who is my present partner in the ministry. On our return here we called on the brethren to swell the sum to $10, which they did cheerfully; and the same was put into brother Hale's hands to go east, and on the 31st of Oct. he left for Lowell; was in usual health and good spirits. We parted with no ordinary kind of feelings. Elder Hale is a worthy brother.—Brother Strang, in your Conference minutes your credit to brother Bacon of $10 ought to have been to Samuel Snider. One mishap in you is harped upon more than ten thousand words or faults in a Gentile paper. All the brethren here and elsewhere where we have been are fully determined to sell if possible and go to Voree in the spring.

Brother Strang, it seems almost useless to preach to the Gentiles; for I have been from here to St. Lawrence twice this season, taking different routes each time and trying to get a hearing, but their hands are made strong, no man can loose them: and I just looked over my daily journal, I have traveled about twenty-seven hundred miles, and preached seventy-seven times and to some thousands of people, but not one of ten thousand received my testimony. For a while in these regions doors were opened and the prospect appeared good, but at present doors are locked, and hearts and ears also. Had not the Lord said, let my servants the apostles, priests and elders be continual witnesses for me before the world, I would quit them, for they are in a swift current, going down stream, and it is like rowing up a cataract to preach to them.

Were not our foundation a rock, our cable truth, our anchors the word of God, and our craft the spirit and the Holy Ghost, I should despair of all hopes of ever doing much. I challenge them all, their learned fools and holy knaves, to meet me; but, like crows and dogs off at a distance, caw and bark and dare not face us.—Brother Strang, I want to see you much. I was in hopes, and so were all the saints, that you would come down here and hold a Conference. The brethren here want some counsel about selling, and what sacrifice to make rather than not sell, and what would be wisdom, &c. I think a goodly number will accompany me up there next spring. Bro. Lyman Hewitt wants you to come here, and thinks if you come you will not go away empty. Come and see. The saints here say united order or nothing. I have learned five maxims to be observed through life. 1st. Never regret what is irretrievably lost. 2d. Never believe that which seems improbable. 3d. Never expose your disappointment to the world. 4th. Never complain of being ill used. 5th. Always speak well of your friends, but of your enemies speak neither good nor evil. E. PAGE.

THE MORMON TEMPLE

At Nauvoo, was destroyed by fire on Sunday night last, the 9th instant, about 3 o'clock. We learn that the people of the city are strongly of the opinion that it was the work of an incendiary; but what ground there is for that opinion, we do not know. It is stated that a religious meeting had been held in it in the evening, called by a Universalist preacher—and that this meeting did not adjourn until between 10 and 11 o'clock. There is a report, also, that when the fire was first discovered by the citizens, a window was found open; leading to the conviction that it had been fired by some one who entered for that purpose. We have not heard that suspicion rests upon any individual; but whether it may have been by accident or design—or be the perpetrator friend or foe—Strangite, Brighamite, or Rigdonite—the body of the Anti-Mormons, of Hancock county, will have to bear the blame.

The fire was seen in various parts of the county, at a distance of some 15 miles—and, had it not been a moonlight night, might have been seen much further. The four blackened walls of stone still stand, a monument of the rise, progress and downfall of one of the boldest and most nefarious systems of imposture of modern times.—Warsaw Signal.

☞ We publish the foregoing as the most particular account we have yet seen of the burning of the Temple. At first reading the following remark struck us as containing more than was indi-

ded :—"The Anti-Mormons of Hancock county, will have to bear the blame." A people distinct and very diverse in their politics or religion, especially the latter, are likley to be made the scape goat for the sins of all. Jews, Ana-Baptists, Methodists, Shakers, Perfectionists—almost every sect in its origin has rested under the suspicion of every sin forbidden in the decalogue. Indeed the time has been that a pestilence could hardly prevail but Jews had to bear the blame. Fortunate for these various sects, the Mormons have risen up still more unique and exclusive in their faith, and totally unlike all other have been the butt of all mens' prejudices, and the scape goat for all mens' sins. But why should the Anti-Mormons have to bear the blame of such an act? Are they a separate and peculiar people? Are they the butt of political prejudices, or of the religious hate of the community? They are members of the same political parties with the nation at large; they are brethren in the same christian churches; they have an even share with them in Free Masonry, Odd Fellowship, Temperance Societies, and other benevolent enterprises. Why then are they marked to bear the blame of burning the Temple? Why do they resist the accusation before it is made? Simply because they know they have merited the suspicion. They have boasted the crimes they would commit, and have been engaged in law breaking till all men as naturally accuse them of each high handed outrage as the mountaineers accuse the wolves of killing the sheep found dead. [Ed.

For California.—Lieut. Col. Fremont, and thirty-five young, and athletic men, left this city yesterday, on board the steamer Martha, en route for California. They disembark at Westport, where the largest portion of their baggage, mules, horses, &c., are in readiness, and from thence proceed across the plains by what is known as the southern or Cimarone route, taking in their course the most densely populated and fertile regions of New Mexico. The object of this expedition is not generally known, but that most currently reported is, the completion of the Colonel's recent surveys and researches in that wild and far-off region. His lady accompanies him as far as Westport, at which place he is to be joined by the celebrated Santa Fe and Western traveler, Kit Carson.—St. Louis Rep. Oct. 4.

Expeditions to California.—A company is now forming at Fort Smith to start for California next Spring. The Van Buren (Ark.) Intelligencer says:—

"Some fifteen or twenty heads of families have already registered for one trip, and we have no doubt that the party will swell up to 100 or 200 persons. It is important that the Government should send out an escort of dragoons from this port to California, next spring, and each succeeding one to travel this route, which is by far the shortest and easiest."

There are organizations of companies in various towns in Kentucky, for emigration to California. Meetings have been called in Baltimore to take measures to get up an expedition. It is supposed by many that at least 50,000 will emigrate thither next year. —Ex paper.

☞ The California Star of April 1st, says that large numbers of Chinese are preparing to emigrate to that country, which is considered a favorable climate for the silk worm.

Church Establishments.—The British Quarterly remarks:—"The National Presbyterian Church in Scotland is the vestige merely from the general population of the country, yet supported by a heavy tax upon the whole community. Europe will cease ere long to retain a single institution based on anything like this amount of social injustice."

☞ It is a curious fact that the most carniverous quadrupeds are the most adverse to devouring women than men. The bears of Kamschatka follow the women, while gathering wild flowers, into the woods, and although most rapacious animals, seldom do them more harm than robbing them of their fruit.—Medical Times.

Yucatan.—We learn from Capt. Whitney, the brig Harriet, arrived yesterday from Sisal, that news reached Sisal on the morning of the 23d ult., that the Yucatecos had had a battle with the Indians. Three officers wounded, and five American Volunteers killed and wounded. We hear nothing as to which party whipped.—New Orleans Delta.

☞ The Episcopal church in Ireland, established by British law, receives annually from the state five millions of dollars, being more than ten dollars for every man, woman and child in that island attached to that church! Who can wonder at the discontent of the Irish?—Ex. paper.

Correction.—In the report of the Temple Committee, made at the last Conference, a slight error has been discovered. Samuel P. Bacon is credited with the payment of $10,00 tithing. It should have been credited to Samuel Snider. The error was made simply in transcribing, the book being correct.

"FRIENDSHIP, LOVE AND TRUTH."

Three sunny isles on life's river;
Three golden arrows in life's quiver;
Three stars that never fade or dim;
Three notes that angels love to hymn;
Three charms that guard the heart from sorrow;
Three whispers of a brighter morrow;
Three links that bind with silken bands;
Three watchwords on life's stormy strands;
Three harbors mid the heart's commotion;
Three fragrant flowers most fair to see;
Three garlands twining round life's tree;
Three gems of pure, ethereal light;
Three paths all lovely, pure and bright;
Three rays of light from Heaven's throne;
Where naught but happiness is known.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We are about to enter upon two important religious discussions, which will be published through the Herald and other papers, and believing that they will be matters of interest to the public generally, are induced to make an effort to enlarge the circulation of this paper on the present occasion. The first discussion is between prophet Strang and Mr. Edwin Burgess of Racine, and commences in this No. (31.) Prophet Strang affirms the existence of God, (as a distinct individual intellectual being,) and Mr. Burgess denies. The second is between prophet Strang and professor D. M. Graham of the Michigan Central College, and is to commence in the next No. Prophet Strang affirms that Mormonism (so called) is a dispensation from God, and professor Graham denies. Whoever will send us the names of two NEW SUBSCRIBERS and four dollars shall have the Herald one year gratis. Whoever will send us the names of TEN NEW SUBSCRIBERS and ten dollars shall have the eleventh copy gratis, and the Herald shall be sent a full year to each of the ten subscribers. These subscriptions will commence at Vol. 3, No. 31, and should be sent in as soon as possible in order to secure all the back numbers. Those who avail themselves of this opportunity will furnish themselves with a weekly paper, and the matter of two valuable books for only one dollar. JAMES J. STRANG.

Voree, October 19th, 1848.

ded:—"The Anti-Mormons of Hancock county, will have to bear the blame." A people distinct and very diverse in their politics or religion, especially the latter, are likley to be made the scape goat for the sins of all. Jews, Ana-Baptists, Methodists, Shakers, Perfectionists—almost every sect in its origin has rested under the suspicion of every sin forbidden in the decalogue! Indeed the time has been that a pestilence could hardly prevail but Jews had to bear the blame. Fortunate for these various sects, the Mormons have risen up still more unique and exclusive in their faith, and totally unlike all other have been the butt of all mens' prejudices, and the scape goat for all mens' sins. But why should the Anti-Mormons have to bear the blame of such an act? Are they a separate and peculiar people? Are they the butt of political prejudices, or of the religious hate of the community? They are members of the same political parties with the nation at large; they are brethren in the same christian churches; they have an even share with them in Free Masonry, Odd Fellowship, Temperance Societies, and other benevolent enterprises. Why then are they marked to bear the blame of burning the Temple? Why do they resist the accusation before it is made? Simply because they know they have merited the suspicion. They have boasted the crimes they would commit, and have been engaged in law breaking till all men as naturally accuse them of each high handed outrage as the mountaineers accuse the wolves of killing the sheep found dead. [Ed.

For California.—Lieut. Col. Fremont, and thirty-five young and athletic men, left this city yesterday, on board the steamer Martha, en route for California. They disembark at Westport, where the largest portion of their baggage, mules, horses, &c., are in readiness, and from thence proceed across the plains by what is known as the southern or Cimarone route, taking in their course the most densely populated and fertile regions of New Mexico. The object of this expedition is not generally known, but that most currently reported is, the completion of the Colonel's recent surveys and researches in that wild and far-off region. His lady accompanies him as far as Westport, at which place he is to be joined by the celebrated Santa Fe and Western traveler, Kit Carson.—St. Louis Rep. Oct. 4.

Expeditions to California.—A company is now forming at Fort Smith to start for California next Spring. The Van Buren (Ark.) Intelligencer says:—

"Some fifteen or twenty heads of families have already registered for one trip, and we have no doubt that the party will swell up to 100 or 200 persons. It is important that the Government should send out an escort of dragoons from this port to California, next spring, and each succeeding one to travel this route, which is by far the shortest and easiest."

There are organizations of companies in various towns in Kentucky, for emigration to California. Meetings have been called in Baltimore to take measures to get up an expedition. It is supposed by many that at least 50,000 will emigrate thither next year.—Ex paper.

☞ The California Star of April 1st, says that large numbers of Chinese are preparing to emigrate to that country, which is considered a favorable climate for the silk worm.

Church Establishments.—The Bristish Quarterly remarks:—"The National Presbyterian Church in Scotland is the vestige merely from the general population of the country, yet supported by a heavy tax upon the whole community. Europe will cease ere long to retain a single institution based on anything like this amount of social injustice."

☞ It is a curious fact that the most carniverous quadrupeds are the most adverse to devouring women than men. The bears of Kamschatka follow the women, while gathering wild flowers, into the woods, and although most rapacious animals, seldom do them more harm than robbing them of their fruit.—Medical Times.

Yucatan.—We learn from Capt. Whitney, the brig Harriet, arrived yesterday from Sisal, that news reached Sisal on the morning of the 23d ult., that the Yucatecos had had a battle with the Indians. Three officers wounded, and five American Volunteers killed and wounded. We hear nothing as to which party whipped.—New Orleans Delta.

☞ The Episcopal church in Ireland, established by British law, receives annually from the state five millions of dollars, being more than ten dollars for every man, woman and child in that island attached to that church! Who can wonder at the discontent of the Irish?—Ex. paper.

Correction.—In the report of the Temple Committee, made at the last Conference, a slight error has been discovered. Samuel P. Bacon is credited with the payment of $10.00 tithing. It should have been credited to Samuel Snyder. The error was made simply in transcribing, the book being correct.

"FRIENDSHIP, LOVE AND TRUTH."

Three sunny isles on life's river;
Three golden arrows in life's quiver;
Three stars that never fade or dim;
Three notes that angels love to hymn;
Three charms that guard the heart from sorrow;
Three whispers of a brighter morrow;
Three links that bind with silken bands;
Three watchwords on life's stormy strands;
Three harbors mid the heart's commotion;
Three fragrant flowers most fair to see;
Three garlands twining round life's tree;
Three gems of pure, ethereal light;
Three paths all lovely, pure and bright;
Three rays of light from Heaven's throne;
Where naught but happiness is known.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

We are about to enter upon two important religious discussions, which will be published through the Herald and other papers, and believing that they will be matters of interest to the public generally, are induced to make an effort to enlarge the circulation of this paper on the present occasion. The first discussion is between prophet Strang and Mr. Edwin Burgess of Racine, and commences in this No. (31.) Prophet Strang affirms the existence of God, (as a distinct individual intellectual being,) and Mr. Burgess denies. The second is between prophet Strang and professor D. M. Graham of the Michigan Central College, and is to commence in the next No. Prophet Strang affirms that Mormonism (so called) is a dispensation from God, and professor Graham denies. Whoever will send us the names of two NEW SUBSCRIBERS and four dollars shall have the Herald one year gratis. Whoever will send us the names of TEN NEW SUBSCRIBERS and ten dollars shall have the eleventh copy gratis, and the Herald shall be sent a full year to each of the ten subscribers. These subscriptions will commence at Vol. 3, No. 31, and should be sent in as soon as possible in order to secure all the back numbers. Those who avail themselves of this opportunity will furnish themselves with a weekly paper, and the matter of two valuable books for only one dollar.

JAMES J. STRANG.

Voree, October 19th, 1848.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 36.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. NOV. 23, 1848. [WHOLE No. 100.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 3.

(Concluded.)

70. The balance of your par. 4 is too puerile. I had simply laid down that well established facts and principles in sciences, such as the rotundity of the earth and the size and relations of the planets, and the elementary principles of the natural sciences be appealed to in the first instance as unquestioned truths, leaving the opposing party to dissent from them and give his reasons; and you pretend to understand me that therefore the order of debate is changed, and the burden of proof thrown on the negative.

71. I expect in the course of this discussion to appeal to astronomy. Must I, in order to lay a foundation for such an appeal, first write out and demonstrate all the principles in the science of astronomy, and prove by witnesses all the facts on which those principles are founded? On my making such an appeal, concisely stating facts in regard to the size and situation of the planets and satellites in the solar system, and building upon those facts an argument to show that God was exerting a present power over them, would you deem it justifiable in a debater seeking for truth to say, "you have not proved astronomy; you have merely assumed it; and I require proof?" Must I write a full treatise on every science with a demonstration of every principle involved, before I can depend on it in the argument? If so, I have to write out an Encyclopedia before beginning the discussion, and have committed myself for several years labor to prove to a man who thinks himself too wise to be a christian that the earth is not flat like a pancake, nor built upon the backs of turtles, and show him the reason why Lake Michigan does not spill out every time the earth turns over.

72. I confess I have spent much more time on this matter than its importance calls for, and cannot conceive that any man with even a moderate share of common sense will say otherwise than with me, that the elementary principles of the natural sciences be appealed to in the first instance, and that the party who disputes the correctness of those elementary principles which have received the common assent of the learned, gives his reaons.

73. In paragraph 2 you draw a most sage conclusion. If such errors are for want of understanding, you had better give up discussion. If of mere captiousness, it would be as well to stop talking of love of truth. What kind of evidence is good to prove the rotundity of the earth? The testimony of men of certain facts, and the calculations of mathematicians and astronomers founded thereon. What kind of evidence then is good to prove the existence of God? The testimony of men of facts, and the equally scientific deductions therefrom of his existence.

74. In par. 10 you intimate that the statements of travelers (and I presume therefore all human testimony) should not be received when contrary to experience. Then the king of Siam was right in treating the Dutch embassador as a liar, and driving him from his court, when he told of water congealing and men traveling on it and driving loaded teams over it. It was contrary to all experience in his country that water should become hard, and exceedingly unreasonable to pretend that men and horses could travel on it.

75. Further, you say, if we are to believe accounts of the supernatural, we must be left to the guidance of less than one in a million. Untrue. A majority of men give their testimony of the supernatural, using that word as you appear to, in the popular sense. But if it were true that the supernatural was proved by less than one in a million, so is the natural, in many cases. The existence of the Antarctic continent is proved by less than one in ten millions. Who doubts it? The existence of some of the planets is hardly proved by one in 50,000,000. Yet no man questions it.

76. I know nothing whatever of the duty of a parent (or of God) to make the evidence of his existence strong and clear. But whatever the evidence may be, it is in fact satisfactory to most men.—Very few have any doubts on the subject.

77. Your recommend to "prove all things" is very well, but in most strange company, by the side of reasons for rejecting all human testimony. Certainly I cannot understand the balance of the paragraph to mean otherwise than that we should experiment all things, and believe nothing till we had put it to the test of experience. I repeat that most of our knowledge of geography and geology is hear say, and necessarily ever must be. More can be learned by one week's study of Morse's geography than a man can accumulate by personal observation in all his life. More by a thorough study of Bakewell's geology than one man's experience would suffice to accumulate if he could devote centuries of existence to its investigation. And you are the first man I have ever met who could see in this that we have "little reason to depend on the testimony of men of science."

78. In par. 13, alluding to my assertion that God has been seen of men, and that in this the testimony of all mankind concurs, you ask, why do we differ? I answer, we do not. True, you differ from the rest of us. And doubtless there are a few others who concur with you. I saw one not long since who denied that animals were possessed of sensation, another who denied that the earth moves, and two who disputed the existence of tides. I have not the least doubt that each of them will find more concurring with them, even in civilized countries, than you will with you. Indeed by your premises the most of us ought to concur with them on the two latter points, for we have neither seen the tides nor examined for ourselves whether the earth was in motion or quiescent. Even our ablest teachers depend on hear say for it.

79. In par. 14 you say, "the basis of all credence in science is facts in nature, which all may examine." This is not true. The facts which have established the truth of the Copernican system were scattered over the period of centuries. At the time when they transpired, but few could observe them. The world is dependent for all its knowledge on that subject upon the favored few astronomers who happened to be favored with telescopes, and a knowledge

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 36.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. NOV. 23, 1848. [WHOLE No. 100.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 3.

(Concluded.)

70. The balance of your par. 4 is too puerile. I had simply laid down that well established facts and principles in sciences, such as the rotundity of the earth and the size and relations of the planets, and the elementary principles of the natural sciences be appealed to in the first instance as unquestioned truths, leaving the opposing party to dissent from them and give his reasons; and you pretend to understand me that therefore the order of debate is changed, and the burden of proof thrown on the negative.

71. I expect in the course of this discussion to appeal to astronomy. Must I, in order to lay a foundation for such an appeal, first write out and demonstrate all the principles in the science of astronomy, and prove by witnesses all the facts on which those principles are founded? On my making such an appeal, concisely stating facts in regard to the size and situation of the planets and satellites in the solar system, and building upon those facts an argument to show that God was exerting a present power over them, would you deem it justifiable in a debater seeking for truth to say, "you have not proved astronomy; you have merely assumed it; and I require proof!" Must I write a full treatise on every science with a demonstration of every principle involved, before I can depend on it in the argument? If so, I have to write out an Encyclopedia before beginning the discussion, and have committed myself for several years labor to prove to a man who thinks himself too wise to be a christian that the earth is not flat like a pancake, nor built upon the backs of turtles, and show him the reason why Lake Michigan does not spill out every time the earth turns over.

72. I confess I have spent much more time on this matter than its importance calls for, and cannot conceive that any man with even a moderate share of common sense will say otherwise than with me, that the elementary principles of the natural sciences be appealed to in the first instance, and that the party who disputes the correctness of those elementary principles which have received the common assent of the learned, gives his reaons.

73. In paragraph 2 you draw a most sage conclusion. If such errors are for want of understanding, you had better give up discussion. If of mere captiousness, it would be as well to stop talking of love of truth. What kind of evidence is good to prove the rotundity of the earth? The testimony of men of certain facts, and the calculations of mathematicians and astronomers founded thereon. What kind of evidence then is good to prove the existence of God? The testimony of men of facts, and the equally scientific deductions therefrom of his existence.

74. In par. 10 you intimate that the statements of travelers (and I presume therefore all human testimony) should not be received when contrary to experience. Then the king of Siam was right in treating the Dutch embassador as a liar, and driving him from his court, when he told of water congealing and men traveling on it and driving loaded teams over it. It was contrary to all experience in his country that water should become hard, and exceedingly unreasonable to pretend that men and horses could travel on it.

75. Further, you say, if we are to believe accounts of the supernatural, we must be left to the guidance of less than one in a million. Untrue. A majority of men give their testimony of the supernatural, using that word as you appear to, in the popular sense. But if it were true that the supernatural was proved by less than one in a million, so is the natural, in many cases. The existence of the Antarctic continent is proved by less than one in ten millions. Who doubts it? The existence of some of the planets is hardly proved by one in 50,000,000. Yet no man questions it.

76. I know nothing whatever of the duty of a parent (or of God) to make the evidence of his existence strong and clear. But whatever the evidence may be, it is in fact satisfactory to most men.—Very few have any doubts on the subject.

77. Your recommend to "prove all things" is very well, but in most strange company, by the side of reasons for rejecting all human testimony. Certainly I cannot understand the balance of the paragraph to mean otherwise than that we should experiment all things, and believe nothing till we had put it to the test of experience. I repeat that most of our knowledge of geography and geology is hear say, and necessarily ever must be. More can be learned by one week's study of Morse's geography than a man can accumulate by personal observation in all his life. More by a thorough study of Bakewell's geology than one man's experience would suffice to accumulate if he could devote centuries of existence to its investigation. And you are the first man I have ever met who could see in this that we have "little reason to depend on the testimony of men of science."

78. In par. 13, alluding to my assertion that God has been seen of men, and that in this the testimony of all mankind concurs, you ask, why do we differ? I answer, we do not. True, you differ from the rest of us. And doubtless there are a few others who concur with you. I saw one not long since who denied that animals were possessed of sensation, another who denied that the earth moves, and two who disputed the existence of tides. I have not the least doubt that each of them will find more concurring with them, even in civilized countries, than you will with you. Indeed by your premises the most of us ought to concur with them on the two latter points, for we have neither seen the tides nor examined for ourselves whether the earth was in motion or quiescent. Even our ablest teachers depend on hear say for it.

79. In par. 14 you say, "the basis of all credence in science is facts in nature, which all may examine." This is not true. The facts which have established the truth of the Copernican system were scattered over the period of centuries. At the time when they transpired, but few could observe them. The world is dependent for all its knowledge on that subject upon the favored few astronomers who happened to be favored with telescopes, and a knowledge of the higher branches of mathematics; as you unjustly pretend it is for its knowledge of God upon the seers.

80. Again, you say, "the basis of historic credence is facts in harmony with nature and experience." If so, there is no basis of historic credence in the most momentous affairs of nations. No one man has had the experience. No man knows what is natural in the premises except on the testimony of great numbers of witnesses. I cannot appeal to nature to prove cannibalism, or image worship. And so far as my experience goes, it is all against it. I never saw an instance of either. Shall I disbelieve that either custom exists? If you say I ought to believe that either of these facts ever existed, you require me to give historic credence, contrary to nature and experience.

81. In answer to par. 15, I answer, that I do not admit or offer the general agreement of mankind to prove any thing. It is the concurrent testimony of mankind that I admit and offer as proof.

82. In par. 16 you say, "if God has been seen of men, he may be dead now." Certainly, unless he is possessed of immortality.—And so may your wife that you left in health an hour since, but you probably have no fear on the subject. If God had not been heard from for 1700 or 1800 years, as some say, we might have some misgivings about it. But as he has kept up a running intercourse with men for five or six thousand years, and with myriads of spirits much longer without showing any signs of mortality, we have little reason to trouble ourselves on that question.

83. If you have really any fears of his demise you might possibly relieve yourself by a little further study of astronomy, which does NOT teach that the different parts of nature govern one another. Astronomy, you are aware, (if you know any thing about it,) acknowledges the universality of the laws of attraction, by means of which all matter tends to concentrate at a common centre. Can you tell which part governs all others, so as to prevent such a catastrophe? Can you not see that the star which has none beyond it can be attracted but one way, that is to the centre, and therefore must be governed by something besides an astronomic body? Well, when that governor dies, or loses his power, be he natural or supernatural, we shall all learn it, that proof which will be satisfactory even to you; the wreck of nature and the crash of worlds.

84. I shall hardly question your right to give a new definition to such words as "revelation" and "religion," (par. 17,) and using the words accordingly. Still I think it more convenient to use a language already in existence, than to fix one up anew, and must beg leave myself to write in English. I know that school teachers reveal to their pupils some things even in the science of mathematics, all of which is discoverable by reason, and compel to practice that, and much more which the scholar is left to discover in the exercise of his reason, to the end that both the revelations and the discoveries may be useful.

85. I apprehend that if the teacher were to reveal the whole science of mathematics to his pupils, requiring no exercise of reason or experience on their part, they would still be profoundly ignorant. On the other hand, if he were to say this science is discernible by reason, and therefore need not be revealed, how many mathematicians should we have? About as many as the Indians, who have no teachers to reveal the science to them.

86. If you wish (par. 18) to obtain a definition of the word "spirit," you will doubtless find it in your dictionary. If you wish to learn the constitution of those persons called spirits, they are intellectual beings of exceedingly refined formation, and though actually material, not of ordinary gross matter, and bearing no nearer resemblance to gross matter than do light, electricity, magnetism or caloric. I am not aware that in any true sense they are supernatural. But in the popular vocabulary they are called so. Not wishing to remodel the language, I have sometimes followed that mode of speaking.

87. In answer to your question, "if God shows himself to others and not to you, is it not probable that he desires others and not you to believe" on him? I answer, by asking "if President Polk shows himself to Secretary Marcy and not to me, is it not probable he wishes Mr. Marcy and not me to believe on him?" I do not think governors, kings or God show themselves merely that some body may believe they exist. But doubtless they are seen oftenest by those officers with whom they have business.

88. Your question about visibility I also answer by asking you of electricity, which pervades both earth and air; if visible, why is it not constantly seen? If invisible, how is it ever seen?

89. In par. 19 and 20 you intimate that, on proof of a world of spirits, you shall still take issue on that of God. Certainly you have a right to do so. But as for your proof, it is most unfortunate: "What example have we among the most intelligent beings of one governing?" All example. Among intelligent people government is constantly extending. The civilized nations are examples of one (with his ministers and coadjutors) governing myriads. Unintelligent and savage nations are cut up to mere tribes, over whom one exercises but a precarious authority.

90. Most animals are too ignorant to have any regular government. Nevertheless some of the wisest have a regular government over a community of themselves, as horses and elephants in the wild state, and among insects, bees and ants.

91. Your question as to God's object in appearing to man (par. 19) does not cover the whole ground. A simple negative is a perfect answer to the interrogation, and yet no answer at all. His object is not to produce conviction of his existence, neither is it for no good reason. It is always for some good reason, but not always for the same reason. If you will name the particular time, possibly I may endeavor to tell the reason.

92. In answer to par. 21, I simply say, I have not offered martyrdom as evidence of truth. It is simple evidence of sincerity, and that only when retraction would save life. Consequently when men give testimony of facts known to them, and suffer martyrdom rather than retract, they have given good evidence of the truth of their testimony. Conviction is not testimony.

93. How does reason and experience confirm the evidence of the senses? What is experience but sensation? Do you mean that experience confirms itself? What is reason but conclusions from facts, ascertained by the senses? How can reason say a thing is not, which the senses perceive to be? I tell a nation of the tropics that water has congealed, and I have walked on it and drawn loads over it, and he says it is contrary to reason and experience, and he will believe it. I tell an Indian that I have looked through a telescope and saw men and dogs walking on the hills fifty miles off, and he answers, "all white men very uncertain, you great liar."—I tell him unacquainted with geography that the Indian Ocean is directly on the opposite side of the earth, and that the inhabitants of Madacascar stand with their feet pointing directly towards ours, and their heads the opposite, and he exclaims, impossible! they would fall down. All reason and experience is against it. The ocean would spill out, and the men could not hang on. And when I assert that water can be congealed in a red hot skillet, probably all but the chemist and a few who are not excessively wise will think I am merely gumming them. They are quite sure that it is contrary to reason and experience. Equally so when I assert the existence of spiritual beings, you, for just the same reason, say it is contrary to reason and experience.

94. I doubt not that your experience may fail to prove a world of spirits, as it would probably fail to prove another continent; but of the higher branches of mathematics; as you unjustly pretend it is for its knowledge of God upon the seers.

80. Again, you say, "the basis of historic credence is facts in harmony with nature and experience." If so, there is no basis of historic credence in the most momentous affairs of nations. No one man has had the experience. No man knows what is natural in the premises except on the testimony of great numbers of witnesses. I cannot appeal to nature to prove cannibalism, or image worship. And so far as my experience goes, it is all against it. I never saw an instance of either. Shall I disbelieve that either custom exists? If you say I ought to believe that either of these facts ever existed, you require me to give historic credence, contrary to nature and experience.

81. In answer to par. 15, I answer, that I do not admit or offer the general agreement of mankind to prove any thing. It is the concurrent testimony of mankind that I admit and offer as proof.

82. In par. 16 you say, "if God has been seen of men, he may be dead now." Certainly, unless he is possessed of immortality.—And so may your wife that you left in health an hour since, but you probably have no fear on the subject. If God had not been heard from for 1700 or 1800 years, as some say, we might have some misgivings about it. But as he has kept up a running intercourse with men for five or six thousand years, and with myriads of spirits much longer without showing any signs of mortality, we have little reason to trouble ourselves on that question.

83. If you have really any fears of his demise you might possibly relieve yourself by a little further study of astronomy, which does NOT teach that the different parts of nature govern one another. Astronomy, you are aware, (if you know any thing about it,) acknowledges the universality of the laws of attraction, by means of which all matter tends to concentrate at a common centre. Can you tell which part governs all others, so as to prevent such a catastrophe? Can you not see that the star which has none beyond it can be attracted but one way, that is to the centre, and therefore must be governed by something besides an astronomic body? Well, when that governor dies, or loses his power, be he natural or supernatural, we shall all learn it, that proof which will be satisfactory even to you; the wreck of nature and the crash of worlds.

84. I shall hardly question your right to give a new definition to such words as "revelation" and "religion," (par. 17,) and using the words accordingly. Still I think it more convenient to use a language already in existence, than to fix one up anew, and must beg leave myself to write in English. I know that school teachers reveal to their pupils some things even in the science of mathematics, all of which is discoverable by reason, and compel to practice that, and much more which the scholar is left to discover in the exercise of his reason, to the end that both the revelations and the discoveries may be useful.

85. I apprehend that if the teacher were to reveal the whole science of mathematics to his pupils, requiring no exercise of reason or experience on their part, they would still be profoundly ignorant. On the other hand, if he were to say this science is discernible by reason, and therefore need not be revealed, how many mathematicians should we have? About as many as the Indians, who have no teachers to reveal the science to them.

86. If you wish (par. 18) to obtain a definition of the word "spirit," you will doubtless find it in your dictionary. If you wish to learn the constitution of those persons called spirits, they are intellectual beings of exceedingly refined formation, and though actually material, not of ordinary gross matter, and bearing no nearer resemblance to gross matter than do light, electricity, magnetism or caloric. I am not aware that in any true sense they are supernatural. But in the popular vocabulary they are called so. Not wishing to remodel the language, I have sometimes followed that mode of speaking.

87. In answer to your question, "if God shows himself to others and not to you, is it not probable that he desires others and not you to believe" on him? I answer, by asking "if President Polk shows himself to Secretary Marcy and not to me, is it not probable he wishes Mr. Marcy and not me to believe on him?" I do not think governors, kings or God show themselves merely that somebody may believe they exist. But doubtless they are seen oftenest by those officers with whom they have business.

88. Your question about visibility I also answer by asking you of electricity, which pervades both earth and air; if visible, why is it not constantly seen? If invisible, how is it ever seen?

89. In par. 19 and 20 you intimate that, on proof of a world of spirits, you shall still take issue on that of God. Certainly you have a right to do so. But as for your proof, it is most unfortunate: "What example have we among the most intelligent beings of one governing?" All example. Among intelligent people government is constantly extending. The civilized nations are examples of one (with his ministers and coadjutors) governing myriads. Uninteligent and savage nations are cut up to mere tribes, over whom one exercises but a precarious authority.

90. Most animals are too ignorant to have any regular government. Nevertheless some of the wisest have a regular government over a community of themselves, as horses and elephants in the wild state, and among insects, bees and ants.

91. Your question as to God's object in appearing to man (par. 19) does not cover the whole ground. A simple negative is a perfect answer to the interrogation, and yet no answer at all. His object is not to produce conviction of his existence, neither is it for no good reason. It is always for some good reason, but not always for the same reason. If you will name the particular time, possibly I may endeavor to tell the reason.

92. In answer to par. 21, I simply say, I have not offered martyrdom as evidence of truth. It is simple evidence of sincerity, and that only when retraction would save life. Consequently when men give testimony of facts known to them, and suffer martyrdom rather than retract, they have given good evidence of the truth of their testimony. Conviction is not testimony.

93. How does reason and experience confirm the evidence of the senses? What is experience but sensation? Do you mean that experience confirms itself? What is reason but conclusions from facts, ascertained by the senses? How can reason say a thing is not, which the senses perceive to be? I tell a nation of the tropics that water has congealed, and I have walked on it and drawn loads over it, and he says it is contrary to reason and experience, and he will believe it. I tell an Indian that I have looked through a telescope and saw men and dogs walking on the hills fifty miles off, and he answers, "all white men very uncertain, you great liar."—I tell him unacquainted with geography that the Indian Ocean is directly on the opposite side of the earth, and that the inhabitants of Madacascar stand with their feet pointing directly towards ours, and their heads the opposite, and he exclaims, impossible! they would fall down. All reason and experience is against it. The ocean would spill out, and the men could not hang on. And when I assert that water can be congealed in a red hot skillet, probably all but the chemist and a few who are not excessively wise will think I am merely gumming them. They are quite sure that it is contrary to reason and experience. Equally so when I assert the existence of spiritual beings, you, for just the same reason, say it is contrary to reason and experience.

94. I doubt not that your experience may fail to prove a world of spirits, as it would probably fail to prove another continent; but no man's experience can prove that an object does not exist. And reason only applies to facts ascertained or supposed, and cannot prove either that any thing does or does not exist. You think the universal testimony of mankind of a world of spirits can be false.—It is naturally possible, but not morally. So their testimony of the existence of meteors may be false. The doubters in the latter case are probably the most numerous. And they can give better reasons for their doubts, if any thing is a reason, against a fact.

95. In par. 22 you have simply confounded agreement of proof with agreement in opinion. You will perceive by looking over my article again that I have not offered opinions as proof. From par. 16 to 27 inclusive, I have shown that men of all ages, from the earliest history to the present time, of all the nations of the earth, of every kindred and race, of every rank, from the king, the sage and the philosopher, to the barbarian, the beggar and the slave, and of every faith by which men have been associated or divided, notwithstanding contradiction and hatred in all else, and even ignorant of each other's existence, have all concurred in giving testimony of the existence of God and a world of spirits.

96. I do not see with you that it is necessary to examine samples in order to guess the value of the masses. It is better to examine the masses and know their value. Nevertheless I will not refuse you a few samples, reminding you that we take the mass of human testimony as the real proof, of which these samples are mites:—

97. 1st. The appearance of a spectre to Brutus after the death of Cæsar, and previous to the battle of Phillippi. See Plutarch's Lives. 2d. The Dæman which acted as cicerone to Socrates. 3d. The appearance of God to Moses to send him into Egypt. Ex. iii. 4th. His appearance on mount Sinai to give law to Israel. 5th. The appearance of God to Elijah in the cavern. 6th. The visit of two angels to Lot in Sodom. 7th. The appearance of the Lord to Isaiah in the Temple at Jerusalem. 8th. The descent of the spirit at the baptism of Jesus Christ. 9th. The manifestation of Christ to his disciples after his death, upon the mount of Olives. 10th. The angel bringing the Revelations to John. 11th. The angel laying the plates of the Book of Mormon before its witnesses. 12th. The conferring of the priesthood on myself by the ministration of angels.

98. Time and space forbid to write out these several cases at length. As they are but twelve in as many thousand, doing so would be useless, and writing out the whole would be impracticable. I am pleased with what you say of unknown causes, (par. 24,) but were you to apply the same rule to that class of facts that you do to this, you would simply deny the facts, and say it was contrary to reason and experience, that such and such things should happen. Your objection to the evidence of a God is not that there is any natural impossibility in it, but simply that you don't know any such thing.

99. In par. 25 you say, I "cannot show one fact," &c. Possibly not by your rule of evidence. If a million of men say they have seen spirits, that does not show it, because that is contrary to your experience and to the king of Siam's reason. For he, like you, would not believe what he had never seen, that water congealed.

100. I do not know who you call Utilitsrians. If they are a class who, in order to take facts as they find them, establish a rule of evidence that some things, not naturally impossible, cannot be proved, I beg not to be one of them. I take facts as I find them in religion, just as I do in geology, and do not say a thing is contrary to reason and experience, because it is new to me.

101. There is abundance of historic testimony, as you say, to prove the existence of St. Petersburg and the Pope, which I do truly call it insanity to deny. But there is more historic testimony of the same kind to prove a God, as well as a world of spirits, and you do deny it. To return your own words upon you, "you cannot introduce one fact to prove it."

102. You have attached importance to the suggestion that God must be seen in the exercise of his authority, that we may know him as the governor of the universe. Pray, then, how many can know that Great Britain has a queen? Is there any thing peculiar in her exercise of authority, by means of which the fact should be recognized? Her principal acts of authority are signing laws, commissions and warrants of execution. To a stranger there would be little difference in her appearance and that of a theatrical supernumerary, dressed in dramatic regalia writing valentines or filling up posters.

103. Whether you may have supposed I would flinch from an unpopular assertion, or hoped to gain an advantage by my not flinching, or what your object was in asking for my answer to your question, "who has seen the Lord of the universe in the exercise of his power?" I care not. I beg to remind you that the discussion does not give you the license of such a question, but it will not be refused. I like to see things done in order, but out of place I tell you I HAVE SEEN THE LORD OF THE UNIVERSE IN THE EXERCISE OF HIS POWER.

104. I have, as you say, in several cases coupled doubting with insanity. You take issue. Will you tell in which of those cases doubting is not insanity? Atheists have had the credit for a long time of being great reasoners. It is only because their opponents were men who dare not appeal to reason. Like the Catholics, they now have to enter the lists on a new field. They in turn flinch from the ordinary rules of evidence.

105. I shall not dispute your right to use words as you please.—But I remind you that I use different words to express different ideas; and that with me such words as agreement, evidence, proof, testimony, &c., &c., are not synonymous.

106. As a general reply to the whole of your first number, you have not taken the first step in making a logical answer to my first number. I have arrayed before you the mass of historic evidence every where existing of the being of a God. You have not shown the fallacy of this testimony either in mass or in detail. You have not attempted to make any answer whatever to it, except that which has been given and answered thousands of times on the discovery of almost every phenomenon in nature. You have introduced no opposing evidence. Regarding, therefore, my first position as well taken, I subscribe myself truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

NAUVOO TEMPLE.

This stupendous superstructure, which we had hoped would have stood until hewn down by the corroding hand of time, was destroyed by fire on Monday morning last, supposed to have been the work of an incendiary. Both—the leader and the Prophet of this strange sect, and the Temple erected as a monument to perpetuate his memory while time shall last—have crumbled to ashes, and in a few short years, the place which was the great centre and attracting point of thousands of deluded followers, will know them no longer. The very names of those who have ignominiously imposed upon their fellow man, will become a hiss and a by word. Such is the spirit of man, whether just or not, that intolerance and oppression, when coming from his fellow man, will not always be borne.

The Temple, the naked walls of which only now stand, must have been seen to form an adequate idea of its grandeur and beauty. We had the pleasure of examining both its exterior and interior on the day after the great battle between the Mormons and the Anti-Mormons, about two years since, at which time we found it in possession o no man's experience can prove that an object does not exist. And reason only applies to facts ascertained or supposed, and cannot prove either that any thing does or does not exist. You think the universal testimony of mankind of a world of spirits can be false.—It is naturally possible, but not morally. So their testimony of the existence of meteors may be false. The doubters in the latter case are probably the most numerous. And they can give better reasons for their doubts, if any thing is a reason, against a fact.

95. In par. 22 you have simply confounded agreement of proof with agreement in opinion. You will perceive by looking over my article again that I have not offered opinions as proof. From par. 16 to 27 inclusive, I have shown that men of all ages, from the earliest history to the present time, of all the nations of the earth, of every kindred and race, of every rank, from the king, the sage and the philosopher, to the barbarian, the beggar and the slave, and of every faith by which men have been associated or divided, notwithstanding contradiction and hatred in all else, and even ignorant of each other's existence, have all concurred in giving testimony of the existence of God and a world of spirits.

96. I do not see with you that it is necessary to examine samples in order to guess the value of the masses. It is better to examine the masses and know their value. Nevertheless I will not refuse you a few samples, reminding you that we take the mass of human testimony as the real proof, of which these samples are mites:—

97. 1st. The appearance of a spectre to Brutus after the death of Cæsar, and previous to the battle of Phillippi. See Plutarch's Lives. 2d. The Dæman which acted as cicerone to Socrates. 3d. The appearance of God to Moses to send him into Egypt. Ex. iii. 4th. His appearance on mount Sinai to give law to Israel. 5th. The appearance of God to Elijah in the cavern. 6th. The visit of two angels to Lot in Sodom. 7th. The appearance of the Lord to Isaiah in the Temple at Jerusalem. 8th. The descent of the spirit at the baptism of Jesus Christ. 9th. The manifestation of Christ to his disciples after his death, upon the mount of Olives. 10th. The angel bringing the Revelations to John. 11th. The angel laying the plates of the Book of Mormon before its witnesses. 12th. The conferring of the priesthood on myself by the ministration of angels.

98. Time and space forbid to write out these several cases at length. As they are but twelve in as many thousand, doing so would be useless, and writing out the whole would be impracticable. I am pleased with what you say of unknown causes, (par. 24,) but were you to apply the same rule to that class of facts that you do to this, you would simply deny the facts, and say it was contrary to reason and experience, that such and such things should happen. Your objection to the evidence of a God is not that there is any natural impossibility in it, but simply that you don't know any such thing.

99. In par. 25 you say, I "cannot show one fact," &c. Possibly not by your rule of evidence. If a million of men say they have seen spirits, that does not show it, because that is contrary to your experience and to the king of Siam's reason. For he, like you, would not believe what he had never seen, that water congealed.

100. I do not know who you call Utilitarians. If they are a class who, in order to take facts as they find them, establish a rule of evidence that some things, not naturally impossible, cannot be proved, beg not to be one of them. I take facts as I find them in religion, as I do in geology, and do not say a thing is contrary to reason and experience, because it is new to me.

101. There is abundance of historic testimony, as you say, to prove the existence of St. Petersburg and the Pope, which I do truly call it insanity to deny. But there is more historic testimony of the same kind to prove a God, as well as a world of spirits, and you do deny it. To return your own words upon you, "you cannot introduce one fact to prove it."

102. You have attached importance to the suggestion that God must be seen in the exercise of his authority, that we may know him as the governor of the universe. Pray, then, how many can know that Great Britain has a queen? Is there any thing peculiar in her exercise of authority, by means of which the fact should be recognized? Her principal acts of authority are signing laws, commissions and warrants of execution. To a stranger there would be little difference in her appearance and that of a theatrical supernumerary, dressed in dramatic regalia writing valentines or filling up posters.

103. Whether you may have supposed I would flinch from an unpopular assertion, or hoped to gain an advantage by my not flinching, or what your object was in asking for my answer to your question, "who has seen the Lord of the universe in the exercise of his power?" I care not. I beg to remind you that the discussion does not give you the license of such a question, but it will not be refused. I like to see things done in order, but out of place I tell you I HAVE SEEN THE LORD OF THE UNIVERSE IN THE EXERCISE OF HIS POWER.

104. I have, as you say, in several cases coupled doubting with insanity. You take issue. Will you tell in which of those cases doubting is not insanity? Atheists have had the credit for a long time of being great reasoners. It is only because their opponents were men who dare not appeal to reason. Like the Catholics, they now have to enter the lists on a new field. They in turn flinch from the ordinary rules of evidence.

105. I shall not dispute your right to use words as you please.—But I remind you that I use different words to express different ideas; and that with me such words as agreement, evidence, proof, testimony, &c., &c., are not synonymous.

106. As a general reply to the whole of your first number, you have not taken the first step in making a logical answer to my first number. I have arrayed before you the mass of historic evidence every where existing of the being of a God. You have not shown the fallacy of this testimony either in mass or in detail. You have not attempted to make any answer whatever to it, except that which has been given and answered thousands of times on the discovery of almost every phenomenon in nature. You have introduced no opposing evidence. Regarding, therefore, my first position as well taken, I subscribe myself truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

NAUVOO TEMPLE.

This stupendous superstructure, which we had hoped would have stood until hewn down by the corroding hand of time, was destroyed by fire on Monday morning last, supposed to have been the work of an incendiary. Both—the leader and the Prophet of this strange sect, and the Temple erected as a monument to perpetuate his memory while time shall last—have crumbled to ashes, and in a few short years, the place which was the great centre and attracting point of thousands of deluded followers, will know them no longer. The very names of those who have ignominiously imposed upon their fellow man, will become a hiss and a by word. Such is the spirit of man, whether just or not, that intolerance and oppression, when coming from his fellow man, will not always be borne.

The Temple, the naked walls of which only now stand, must have been seen to form an adequate idea of its grandeur and beauty. We had the pleasure of examining both its exterior and interior on the day after the great battle between the Mormons and the Anti-Mormons, about two years since, at which time we found it in possession of the belligerant party, who had taken up their quarters and stacked their arms within its spacious rooms. To us who had ever lived in peace and quietness—undisturbed in our sacred rights and privileges, the spectacle before us was anything but enlivening or pleasing. In front of the building, in battle array, with their mouths pointed towards the setting sun, had been placed several cannon, heavily charged, while the officers in command were hurrying from their homes defenceless men, and innocent women and children. The battle had been fought and the victory won. There was no alternative save one, and that was to flee in the direction in which the cannon were pointing. In that direction the main body have gone, and each breeze, as it comes o'er the plains across which they have traveled, brings back tidings of the sufferings, hardships and death which have overtaken them in their journey to the 'Holy Land.'—Such is life—such is the lot of man.

Wishing to take a view from the steeple, which seemed to tower into the very heavens, we commenced climbing the stairway, and after various and intricate windings and turnings, we found ourself standing upon the highest accessible point where thousands stood before us. The sight from this aerial position, was inconceivably grand; and we must leave its description to those who wield a readier pen than ours. We placed our name within the uppermost dome, along with hundreds of others from all parts of the habitable globe, and made our way to earth again. Now, this gigantic building presents to the beholder a heap of ruins, while its architects and builders are scattered to the four quarters of the earth, heaping execrations upon those who in defiance of law, drove them from their habitations and their homes.—Monmouth Atlas.

FIRE AND DESTRUCTION OF THE MORMON TEMPLE.

On Monday, the 9th instant, our citizens were awakened by the alarm of fire, which, when first discovered, was bursting out through the spire of the Temple, near the small door that opened from the east side to the roof on the main building.

The fire was seen first about 3 o'clock in the morning, and not until it had taken such hold of the timbers and roof, as to make useless any effort to extinguish it.

The materials of the inside were so dry, and the fire spread so rapidly, that a few minutes were sufficient to wrap this famed edifice in a sheet of flames. It was a sight too full of mournful sublimity. The mass of material which had been gathered there by the labor of many years, afforded a rare opportunity for this element to play off some of its wildest sports. Although the morning was tolerably dark, still, when the flames shot upward, the spire, the streets, and the houses for a mile distant, were lighted up, so as to render even the smallest objects discernable. The glare of this vast torch, pointing sky-wards, indiscribably contrasted with the universal gloom and darkness around it—and men looked on with faces sad, as if the crumbling ruins below were consuming all their hopes. It was evidently the work of an incendiary.

There had been on the evening previous, a meeting in the lower room; but no person was in the upper part where the fire was first discovered. Who he was, and what could have been his motives, we have now no idea. Some feeling infinitely more unenviable than that of the individual who put the torch to the beautiful Ephesian structure of old, must have possessed him. To destroy a work of art at once the most elegant in its constructure, and the most renowned in its celebrity, of any in the whole west, would, we should think, require a mind of more than ordinary depravity, and we feel assured that no one in this community could have been so lost to every consideration of interest, as to become the author of the deed. Admit that it was a monument of folly, and of evil, yet it was, to say the least of it, a splendid and a harmless one.

Its loss, no doubt, will be more forcibly felt by the people of this place than any other; because, even the most dreamy, will hardly think of soon seeing another such an ornament—and, because it was on the eve of changing hands, and being converted into a commodious building of useful education, such as the west greatly needs, and such as no one ought to be envious of.—Nauvoo Patriot.

THE MORMON TEMPLE IN RUINS.

By an extra Statesman which was brought to us last evening by the Editor of the Davenport Gazette, we have the astounding intelligence that that magnificent specimen of architecture, the Mormon Temple at Nauvoo, was entirely consumed by fire on yesterday morning at 4 o'clock. Mr. Saunders informed us that as he came by, it was a heap of ruins. The walls were standing, but were completely calcined and rendered useless. Even the mystical oxen, with the baptismal font in the basement, had shared the same fate.

The fire was discovered issuing from the elegant and towering cupola, and was no doubt the work of some nefarious incendiary.—This edifice was the wonder of Illinois. It was beautifully situated on an eminence in Nauvoo, and could be seen from a great distance from all points of the compass. Its cost was over a million of dollars. As a work of art and a memorial of Mormon delusion, it should have stood for ages. None but the most depraved heart could have applied the torch to effect its destruction. It was still in possession of the Mormons. Their inability to give a clear and undisputed title has hitherto prevented them from disposing of it to the Catholics.—Burlington Hawk Eye.

CASE OF THE SLAVE GIRLS.

A meeting will be held in the Tabernacle this evening, for the purpose of presenting the case of two Christian girls held in slavery in Alexandria, Va., and about to be sent to the southern market.—The father of these two girls, whose name is Paul Edmondson, was in the city a week or two ago, endeavoring to raise funds for their release. He is seventy years of age, having a family of fourteen children. Five of the daughters have purchased their freedom, and the two in question, with four brothers, were on board the schooner Pearl, when she was retaken. One of these brothers has since become free, three have been sold and taken south, and the young girl, by the open confession of those who hold them, are destined for a fate even worse than slavery itself. The price demanded for them by these dealers in human flesh is $2,250, and negotiations have been going on for some time with a view to prevent their being taken away before the sum could be raised.

On the 12th inst., it was finally arranged that they should remain, on condition that their friends would deposit $500, and agree to forfeit it if the sum is not made up.—N. Y. Eve. Post, 23d.

☛ We only wish our readers to understand that this is in a christian and a republican country. The men engaged in such speculations are honest in the sight of the law, and religious in the sight of the church. They can neither be punished by one, nor disciplined by the other. The sympathy of poor human nature, which is better than either christianity or law, is all they can hope from. We dare not trust ourself to comment. [Ed.

ESTRAY.

Came into the inclosure of the subscriber, in Voree, about the 1st of Nov. inst. a light brindle cow, with a little white on the tail and belly, supposed to be five years old. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take her away.

Voree, Nov. 21st, 1848. JAMES J. STRANG.

the belligerant party, who had taken up their quarters and stacked their arms within its spacious rooms. To us who had ever lived in peace and quietness—undisturbed in our sacred rights and privileges, the spectacle before us was anything but enlivening or pleasing. In front of the building, in battle array, with their mouths pointed towards the setting sun, had been placed several cannon, heavily charged, while the officers in command were hurrying from their homes defenceless men, and innocent women and children. The battle had been fought and the victory won. There was no alternative save one, and that was to flee in the direction in which the cannon were pointing. In that direction the main body have gone, and each breeze, as it comes o'er the plains across which they have traveled, brings back tidings of the sufferings, hardships and death which have overtaken them in their journey to the 'Holy Land.'—Such is life—such is the lot of man.

Wishing to take a view from the steeple, which seemed to tower into the very heavens, we commenced climbing the stairway, and after various and intricate windings and turnings, we found ourself standing upon the highest accessible point where thousands stood before us. The sight from this aerial position, was inconceivably grand; and we must leave its description to those who wield a readier pen than ours. We placed our name within the uppermost dome, along with hundreds of others from all parts of the habitable globe, and made our way to earth again. Now, this gigantic building presents to the beholder a heap of ruins, while its architects and builders are scattered to the four quarters of the earth, heaping execrations upon those who in defiance of law, drove them from their habitations and their homes.—Monmouth Atlas.

FIRE AND DESTRUCTION OF THE MORMON TEMPLE.

On Monday, the 9th instant, our citizens were awakened by the alarm of fire, which, when first discovered, was bursting out through the spire of the Temple, near the small door that opened from the east side to the roof on the main building.

The fire was seen first about 3 o'clock in the morning, and not until it had taken such hold of the timbers and roof, as to make useless any effort to extinguish it.

The materials of the inside were so dry, and the fire spread so rapidly, that a few minutes were sufficient to wrap this famed edifice in a sheet of flames. It was a sight too full of mournful sublimity. The mass of material which had been gathered there by the labor of many years, afforded a rare opportunity for this element to play off some of its wildest sports. Although the morning was tolerably dark, still, when the flames shot upward, the spire, the streets, and the houses for a mile distant, were lighted up, so as to render even the smallest objects discernable. The glare of this vast torch, pointing sky-wards, indiscribably contrasted with the universal gloom and darkness around it—and men looked on with faces sad, as if the crumbling ruins below were consuming all their hopes. It was evidently the work of an incendiary.

There had been on the evening previous, a meeting in the lower room; but no person was in the upper part where the fire was first discovered. Who he was, and what could have been his motives, we have now no idea. Some feeling infinitely more unenviable than that of the individual who put the torch to the beautiful Ephesian structure of old, must have possessed him. To destroy a work of art at once the most elegant in its constructure, and the most renowned in its celebrity, of any in the whole west, would, we should think, require a mind of more than ordinary depravity, and we feel assured that no one in this community could have been so lost to every consideration of interest, as to become the author of the deed. Admit that it was a monument of folly, and of evil, yet it was, to say the least of it, a splendid and a harmless one.

Its loss, no doubt, will be more forcibly felt by the people of this place than any other; because, even the most dreamy, will hardly think of soon seeing another such an ornament—and, because it was on the eve of changing hands, and being converted into a commodious building of useful education, such as the west greatly needs, and such as no one ought to be envious of.—Nauvoo Patriot.

THE MORMON TEMPLE IN RUINS.

By an extra Statesman which was brought to us last evening by the Editor of the Davenport Gazette, we have the astounding intelligence that that magnificent specimen of architecture, the Mormon Temple at Nauvoo, was entirely consumed by fire on yesterday morning at 4 o'clock. Mr. Saunders informed us that as he came by, it was a heap of ruins. The walls were standing, but were completely calcined and rendered useless. Even the mystical oxen, with the baptismal font in the basement, had shared the same fate.

The fire was discovered issuing from the elegant and towering cupola, and was no doubt the work of some nefarious incendiary.—This edifice was the wonder of Illinois. It was beautifully situated on an eminence in Nauvoo, and could be seen from a great distance from all points of the compass. Its cost was over a million of dollars. As a work of art and a memorial of Mormon delusion, it should have stood for ages. None but the most depraved heart could have applied the torch to effect its destruction. It was still in possession of the Mormons. Their inability to give a clear and undisputed title has hitherto prevented them from disposing of it to the Catholics.—Burlington Hawk Eye.

CASE OF THE SLAVE GIRLS.

A meeting will be held in the Tabernacle this evening, for the purpose of presenting the case of two Christian girls held in slavery in Alexandria, Va., and about to be sent to the southern market.—The father of these two girls, whose name is Paul Edmondson, was in the city a week or two ago, endeavoring to raise funds for their release. He is seventy years of age, having a family of fourteen children. Five of the daughters have purchased their freedom, and the two in question, with four brothers, were on board the schooner Pearl, when she was retaken. One of these brothers has since become free, three have been sold and taken south, and the young girl, by the open confession of those who hold them, are destined for a fate even worse than slavery itself. The price demanded for them by these dealers in human flesh is $2,250, and negotiations have been going on for some time with a view to prevent their being taken away before the sum could be raised.

On the 12th inst., it was finally arranged that they should remain, on condition that their friends would deposit $500, and agree to forfeit it if the sum is not made up.—N. Y. Eve. Post, 23d.

☞ We only wish our readers to understand that this is in a christian and a republican country. The men engaged in such speculations are honest in the sight of the law, and religious in the sight of the church. They can neither be punished by one, nor disciplined by the other. The sympathy of poor human nature, which is better than either christianity or law, is all they can hope from. We dare not trust ourself to comment. [Ed.

ESTRAY.

Came into the inclosure of the subscriber, in Voree, about the 1st of Nov. inst. a light brindle cow, with a little white on the tail and belly, supposed to be five years old. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take her away.

Voree, Nov. 21st, 1848. JAMES J. STRANG.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 37.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. NOV. 30, 1848. [WHOLE No. 101.

GOSPEL HERALD,
PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.
TERMS:
TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.
All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. BURGESS TO MR. STRANG.—No. 2.

Racine, November 16th, 1848.

MR. JAMES J. STRANG,—SIR:—I received your second communication before I had fairly answered your first.

29. In paragraph 29 your next proposition is, that "man learned articulate language of God, and man's schoolmaster was a being superior to man." I have no doubt that the schoolmaster was superior to the scholar in whatever the scholar learned from him, but this by no means proves the schoolmaster to be a supernatural being. If a superhuman being in any other sense, then nature may be said to be superhuman in whatever it is superior to the human. I believe, too, that a child is one of the most imitative animals in nature. Long before they can imitate distinctly the language of man, they will imitate other animals, or, in short, any other sound in nature within the compass of their voice.

30. Do you not wonder that God should have troubled himself to teach Adam such a variety of languages? But, perhaps, you do not think the Mosaic account of creation was written by divine influence. You may not believe that all the varieties of the human race proceeded from one man and woman. You may not believe that infinite power, wisdom and goodness made such a beggarly commencement of our race as to oblige a brother and sister to take each other as husband and wife, which the same God afterwards strictly forbids. And our modern phisiologists think wisely, as its tendency is to degenerate, not improve our race.

31. You say man could not originate articulate language himself. Is it more original than lighting a fire, cooking, smoking or even wickedness, making tools and machines, or any thing by which man is peculiarly distinguished? The same arguments which you apply to prove language to be of supernatural origin would prove cooking, smoking, wickedness, &c., to be of supernatural origin also. Would not this lead us to inquire where this "being possessed of intelligence, motive and will" learned to articulate? Perhaps some other being taught him, and so on beyond the bounds of proof or probability. Is this less assumption than what in Paley and Chalmers you condemn?

32. As I admit the natural language of all animals, I do not think it necessary to follow you through every paragraph to reply to all your positions, but I will answer those which I think you wish me to notice most particularly, and should I omit any thing of which you desire additional notice, please remind me of it.

33. In par. 3 you say, "man by nature has no articulate language." I think you will allow that we have by nature all the faculties necessary for articulation, with great love of imitation, and sufficient air withal to vibrate as we will, having all the essentials of articulation. I want to see if there are not some sounds at least that man has learned from nature. My strong faith in nature, of which I know something, leads me to seek the origin of language in nature rather than in the supernatural, of which I know that I know nothing.

34. Is there not a curious similarity in some of our words to the sounds which they represent in nature? For example, thunder, dunder in the Dutch, tonnire in French, (my knowledge is too limited to illustrate this point as I could wish,) the lightning's flash, the thunder's roll, slap, crash, splash, &c. I have read in the shipwreck in Byron's Don Juan quite a masterpiece in that way, but have not the work or the memory to quote it. Now there's the sound C and S. Don't you think we might learn that sound from a serpent or a goose, without making Gods of them? But our vanity kicks at the idea of having a goose for a teacher. Then comes the duck, crying, quack, quack, quack, quack, till I begin to think whether he means me, for presuming to think I could discuss divinity. What with the maaa of one animal, and the baaa of another, and the wooo of one bird, and the cuccoo of another, I cannot help thinking that nature is better entitled to be called schoolmaster or mistress than all the rest of supernatural beings that ever peopled the regions of imagination. From nature we were born, by her we are sustained, and to her we must return, and, judging from appearances, to be regenerated or born again, and again, and again, eternally.

35. I think I have shown that some sounds of our language were most probably learnt from nature, while you but affirm they came from the supernatural. Another objection is, that language is progressive. Did it come from God? Could man improve it? This would be to make man superior to God, the natural superior to the supernatural. Another objection is, the variety of languages.—Would not a wise parent have given us one perfect language, instead of a number of imperfect ones? More than any one of his children could possibly learn in a lifetime. As I said before, God is not wise, or he did not do it.

36. Even admitting that our language was perfect and not progressive, would that indicate its supernatural origin? while there are plenty of examples in nature of the perfect and non-progressive, and of the imperfect and progressive also. Yet we cannot trace the origin of either beyond the bounds of nature, to which they seem inseparably allied. Do not plants and animals contain evidences of progress towards perfection, from birth to maturity? and at maturity of perfection without progress?

37. In par. 43 you cite the case of a boy found in the swamps of Alabama, and in par. 45 of Caspar Hausar. In both you show examples of persons with the faculties of imitation, but who had been effectually excluded from the sounds of articulate language. I never supposed that a person confined in solitude would have originated a perfect language any more than I think he would originate a steam engine. Both appear to me to be the work of society, where each, having the advantage of the experience of many, sees one thing in advance of his fellows. A new application of the powers of nature for the promotion of our happiness, while the linguist finds a new combination of sounds expressive of the new born thought.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 37.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. NOV. 30, 1848. [WHOLE No. 101.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. BURGESS TO MR. STRANG.—No. 2.

Racine, November 16th, 1848.

MR. JAMES J. STRANG,—SIR:—I received your second communication before I had fairly answered your first.

29. In paragraph 29 your next proposition is, that "man learned articulate language of God, and man's schoolmaster was a being superior to man." I have no doubt that the schoolmaster was superior to the scholar in whatever the scholar learned from him, but this by no means proves the schoolmaster to be a supernatural being. If a superhuman being in any other sense, then nature may be said to be superhuman in whatever it is superior to the human. I believe, too, that a child is one of the most imitative animals in nature. Long before they can imitate distinctly the language of man, they will imitate other animals, or, in short, any other sound in nature within the compass of their voice.

30. Do you not wonder that God should have troubled himself to teach Adam such a variety of languages? But, perhaps, you do not think the Mosaic account of creation was written by divine influence. You may not believe that all the varieties of the human race proceeded from one man and woman. You may not believe that infinite power, wisdom and goodness made such a beggarly commencement of our race as to oblige a brother and sister to take each other as husband and wife, which the same God afterwards strictly forbids. And our modern phisiologists think wisely, as its tendency is to degenerate, not improve our race.

31. You say man could not originate articulate language himself. Is it more original than lighting a fire, cooking, smoking or even wickedness, making tools and machines, or any thing by which man is peculiarly distinguished? The same arguments which you apply to prove language to be of supernatural origin would prove cooking, smoking, wickedness, &c., to be of supernatural origin also. Would not this lead us to inquire where this "being possessed of intelligence, motive and will" learned to articulate? Perhaps some other being taught him, and so on beyond the bounds of proof or probability. Is this less assumption than what in Paley and Chalmers you condemn?

32. As I admit the natural language of all animals, I do not think it necessary to follow you through every paragraph to reply to all your positions, but I will answer those which I think you wish me to notice most particularly, and should I omit any thing of which you desire additional notice, please remind me of it.

33. In par. 3 you say, "man by nature has no articulate language." I think you will allow that we have by nature all the faculties necessary for articulation, with great love of imitation, and sufficient air withal to vibrate as we will, having all the essentials of articulation. I want to see if there are not some sounds at least that man has learned from nature. My strong faith in nature, of which I know something, leads me to seek the origin of language in nature rather than in the supernatural, of which I know that I know nothing.

34. Is there not a curious similarity in some of our words to the sounds which they represent in nature? For example, thunder, dunder in the Dutch, tonnire in French, (my knowledge is too limited to illustrate this point as I could wish,) the lightning's flash, the thunder's roll, slap, crash, splash, &c. I have read in the shipwreck in Byron's Don Juan quite a masterpiece in that way, but have not the work or the memory to quote it. Now there's the sound C and S. Don't you think we might learn that sound from a serpent or a goose, without making Gods of them? But our vanity kicks at the idea of having a goose for a teacher. Then comes the duck, crying, quack, quack, quack, quack, till I begin to think whether he means me, for presuming to think I could discuss divinity. What with the maaa of one animal, and the baaa of another, and the wooo of one bird, and the cuccoo of another, I cannot help thinking that nature is better entitled to be called schoolmaster or mistress than all the rest of supernatural beings that ever peopled the regions of imagination. From nature we were born, by her we are sustained, and to her we must return, and, judging from appearances, to be regenerated or born again, and again, and again, eternally.

35. I think I have shown that some sounds of our language were most probably learnt from nature, while you but affirm they came from the supernatural. Another objection is, that language is progressive. Did it come from God? Could man improve it? This would be to make man superior to God, the natural superior to the supernatural. Another objection is, the variety of languages.—Would not a wise parent have given us one perfect language, instead of a number of imperfect ones? More than any one of his children could possibly learn in a lifetime. As I said before, God is not wise, or he did not do it.

36. Even admitting that our language was perfect and not progressive, would that indicate its supernatural origin? while there are plenty of examples in nature of the perfect and non-progressive, and of the imperfect and progressive also. Yet we cannot trace the origin of either beyond the bounds of nature, to which they seem inseparably allied. Do not plants and animals contain evidences of progress towards perfection, from birth to maturity? and at maturity of perfection without progress?

37. In par. 43 you cite the case of a boy found in the swamps of Alabama, and in par. 45 of Caspar Hausar. In both you show examples of persons with the faculties of imitation, but who had been effectually excluded from the sounds of articulate language. I never supposed that a person confined in solitude would have originated a perfect language any more than I think he would originate a steam engine. Both appear to me to be the work of society, where each, having the advantage of the experience of many, sees one thing in advance of his fellows. A new application of the powers of nature for the promotion of our happiness, while the linguist finds a new combination of sounds expressive of the new born thought.

And Typo multiplies impressions corresponding to the words of man, and circulates them throughout the habitable globe. Judging our future progress by the past, does it indicate any thing but the progressive development of the powers of nature and human nature? Thus extending our faith and hope in nature, which so bountifully rewards our toil; and contracting continually our faith n the supernatural, so barren for the benefit of man.

38. And here I would observe how limited are the attributes of your deity, compared to the omnipotent, omnipresent, omniscient deity of our fathers'. There seems scarcely enough left of him to swear by, let alone to revere. Though I must do you the justice to say that you extend his family relations far beyond the confines of the orthodox. I believe the Greeks had Gods as numerous as the powers of nature, but the God of Israel allowed not the worship of any but himself. Have a care, sir, how you speak of others in conjunction with the great "I AM." Do not these things show that we make our Gods, instead of our Gods making us? I think AS OUR KNOWLEDGE OF NATURE ADVANCES, OUR FAITH IN THE SUPERNATURAL RECEDES.

39. In reply to par. 47, I think it more probable that as all nations have been found with articulate languages, and only a few persons (the exceptions) without them, that national languages have been the work of nations through successive generations, proved by their continual progress with the inventions of all ages.—How far the sounds we use differ from those used by our fathers, may be partially seen by the change of spelling; but the difference between the sounds we use and those used by our first parents is more than we can determine.

40. In par. 48 you say, "it is hardly conceivable that a man destitute of language should know the want of it." I think just the reverse. When do you feel the want of a word most to express an idea? When you have it, or when you want to have it. And you say further, "it is not by any means conceivable that a people destitute of language should possess arts and sciences." Is not the desire or want of knowledge the cause of the successful endeavor to attain it? and the desire for language to express it the probable cause of the successful effort in its formation?

41. In par. 50 you ask, "can I dream that such A being should invent a language?" &c. I have said I thought language was the work of society. And here I would remark that the idea in nature always precedes the name, and, consequently, as ideas multiply, words to represent them are multiplied also. The child seeks the name after the object, not before.

42. What do we mean by the word "invent," but a new combination or application of the parts and powers of nature to effect a desired result? What is the desired result in the use of language? To express our thoughts, feelings or desires. Other animals express their feelings of joy, grief, &c., in a limited manner corresponding to their desires. But we desire to tell the causes of our joy and grief, our thoughts, calculations, ideas of consequences, causes, &c., and we use arbitrary sounds within the compass of our voice, expressive of the same. Here consists all the mystery of "invention."

43. As sound or articulation depends on the form of the vibrating surface, and the material of which it is composed and the medium by which it is acted on or put in motion, to originate a new sound we must originate a new form. Are there more forms in nature than the plane and the curve? Can we do more than transfer the forms already possessed? or, by a new combination of form, produce a new combination of sound, but no new sound or form whatever?

44. In par. 49 I think you use the pronouns in such a manner as to require the inference that as man is weak individually he could not collectively originate a language. Mankind have many languages. How they were formed is best shown by the way in which they are extended and reformed.

45. In par. 54 you say, "thus philosophy accords with all tradition, and justifies the divine record, that man was made out of the dust of the earth." I see by Genesis chap. 2, ver. 19 and 20, (to which I presume you allude,) "and out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field, and brought them unto Adam to see what he would call them; and whatsoever he called every living creature, that was the name thereof. And Adam gave name to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field." Where is the evidence in "philosophy, tradition" or the "divine records" of God having taught articulate language to man? Yours for the promotion of truth, EDWIN BURGESS.

CATHOLIC DISCUSSION.

MR. STRANG TO MR. RAFFERTY.—No. 7.

MR. RAFFERTY:—I have read your second letter, (called out by my private note,) and have turned back and read your introductory letter carefully over, and I cannot ascertain what that certain question was upon which you sought information of me. So far from it, it clearly appears to me that you sought to give information, and taking that view of the matter I give you credit for a good degree of ability in stating and defending the faith of your church.

The body of your letter is made up of affirmations, well arranged and skillfully stated, concerning the Roman Catholic Church, all designed to show that it is the true church of Christ, and in the end you ask for information concerning its extinction. I should infer from the letter that that was the point of it, and the issue between us was on my affirmation that the Apostolic Church, established by Christ on earth, was extinct, but you have precluded my so understanding you by saying that I have branched off on almost every thing else but the real question at issue; whereas my six letters are all on that one question. And further, you say the information sought by you is known to me; whereas you dispute the extinction of the Apostolic church, and therefore hold that it is not known to any one.

I have not taken a zig zag course in treating your letter, or the points embraced in it, but have, in a straight forward manner, met its points and proved its assertions false. In my first I showed that the priesthood, in virtue of which Peter was head of the church, did not exist in the Roman Church, and that the Popes were not his successors. In my 2d I showed that the Church was not built on Peter, as a foundation, but on the revelation of the word of God. In my 3d I showed that the Roman Church have no priesthood.—In my 4th I have shown that the Roman Church do not keep up the external forms of an Apostolic call to the priesthood. In my 5th I have shown that the Roman Church have not even the pattern or shadow of the Apostolic hierarchy. In my 6th I have shown that the Roman Church have departed from the faith, and adopted instead of it a leading article in the distinctive creed of heathenism.

If this is not perfectly apropos in showing that the Roman Church is not the Church of Christ, will you please tell me what is? And if it is in point at all, it is conclusive. As you do not claim that any other church is the true church, if I have shown that the Roman is not the true, as between us I have shown that the true Apostolic Church is extinct. To you I did not deem it necessary to say any thing of the Protestant churches. For as they are all derived from the Roman, if it had not the authority of God, they could not derive such authority from it, and if it had such authority, it used it against them for their schisms and heresies.

With you I look upon all the various orders of sectaries as things of the time to pass away. The true church is the foundation and source of all true and permanent reforms. But I have yet to learn that the Roman church has any of the elements of reform. The ablest of her champions, the Rev. John Milner, in his great work, the "End of Religious Controversy," makes her retrogressive, or, at the very best, stationary.

I perfectly concur with you, that there can be but one true religion; and in saying so I wish to be understood that there is but one true church of God on earth, and out of it there is no salvation.—Besides the elaborate reasons I have given heretofore for believing

And Typo multiplies impressions corresponding to the words of man, and circulates them throughout the habitable globe. Judging our future progress by the past, does it indicate any thing but the progressive development of the powers of nature and human nature? Thus extending our faith and hope in nature, which so bountifully rewards our toil; and contracting continually our faith n the supernatural, so barren for the benefit of man.

38. And here I would observe how limited are the attributes of your deity, compared to the omnipotent, omnipresent, omniscient deity of our fathers'. There seems scarcely enough left of him to swear by, let alone to revere. Though I must do you the justice to say that you extend his family relations far beyond the confines of the orthodox. I believe the Greeks had Gods as numerous as the powers of nature, but the God of Israel allowed not the worship of any but himself. Have a care, sir, how you speak of others in conjunction with the great "I AM." Do not these things show that we make our Gods, instead of our Gods making us? I think AS OUR KNOWLEDGE OF NATURE ADVANCES, OUR FAITH IN THE SUPERNATURAL RECEDES.

39. In reply to par. 47, I think it more probable that as all nations have been found with articulate languages, and only a few persons (the exceptions) without them, that national languages have been the work of nations through successive generations, proved by their continual progress with the inventions of all ages.—How far the sounds we use differ from those used by our fathers, may be partially seen by the change of spelling; but the difference between the sounds we use and those used by our first parents is more than we can determine.

40. In par. 48 you say, "it is hardly conceivable that a man destitute of language should know the want of it." I think just the reverse. When do you feel the want of a word most to express an idea? When you have it, or when you want to have it. And you say further, "it is not by any means conceivable that a people destitute of language should possess arts and sciences." Is not the desire or want of knowledge the cause of the successful endeavor to attain it? and the desire for language to express it the probable cause of the successful effort in its formation?

41. In par. 50 you ask, "can I dream that such A being should invent a language?" &c. I have said I thought language was the work of society. And here I would remark that the idea in nature always precedes the name, and, consequently, as ideas multiply, words to represent them are multiplied also. The child seeks the name after the object, not before.

42. What do we mean by the word "invent," but a new combination or application of the parts and powers of nature to effect a desired result? What is the desired result in the use of language? To express our thoughts, feelings or desires. Other animals express their feelings of joy, grief, &c., in a limited manner corresponding to their desires. But we desire to tell the causes of our joy and grief, our thoughts, calculations, ideas of consequences, causes, &c., and we use arbitrary sounds within the compass of our voice, expressive of the same. Here consists all the mystery of "invention."

43. As sound or articulation depends on the form of the vibrating surface, and the material of which it is composed and the medium by which it is acted on or put in motion, to originate a new sound we must originate a new form. Are there more forms in nature than the plane and the curve? Can we do more than transfer the forms already possessed? or, by a new combination of form, produce a new combination of sound, but no new sound or form whatever?

44. In par. 49 I think you use the pronouns in such a manner as to require the inference that as man is weak individually he could not collectively originate a language. Mankind have many languages. How they were formed is best shown by the way in which they are extended and reformed.

45. In par. 54 you say, "thus philosophy accords with all tradition, and justifies the divine record, that man was made out of the dust of the earth." I see by Genesis chap. 2, ver. 19 and 20, (to which I presume you allude,) "and out of the ground the Lord God formed every beast of the field, and brought them unto Adam to see what he would call them; and whatsoever he called every living creature, that was the name thereof. And Adam gave name to all cattle, and to the fowl of the air, and to every beast of the field." Where is the evidence in "philosophy, tradition" or the "divine records" of God having taught articulate language to man? Yours for the promotion of truth, EDWIN BURGESS.

CATHOLIC DISCUSSION.

MR. STRANG TO MR. RAFFERTY.—No. 7.

MR. RAFFERTY:—I have read your second letter, (called out by my private note,) and have turned back and read your introductory letter carefully over, and I cannot ascertain what that certain question was upon which you sought information of me. So far from it, it clearly appears to me that you sought to give information and taking that view of the matter I give you credit for a good degree of ability in stating and defending the faith of your church.

The body of your letter is made up of affirmations, well arranged and skillfully stated, concerning the Roman Catholic Church, all designed to show that it is the true church of Christ, and in the end you ask for information concerning its extinction. I should infer from the letter that that was the point of it, and the issue between us was on my affirmation that the Apostolic Church, established by Christ on earth, was extinct, but you have precluded me so understanding you by saying that I have branched off on almost every thing else but the real question at issue; whereas my six letters are all on that one question. And further, you say the information sought by you is known to me; whereas you dispute the extinction of the Apostolic church, and therefore hold that it is not known to any one.

I have not taken a zig zag course in treating your letter, or the points embraced in it, but have, in a straight forward manner, met its points and proved its assertions false. In my first I showed that the priesthood, in virtue of which Peter was head of the church, did not exist in the Roman Church, and that the Popes were not his successors. In my 2d I showed that the Church was not built on Peter, as a foundation, but on the revelation of the word of God. In my 3d I showed that the Roman Church have no priesthood.—In my 4th I have shown that the Roman Church do not keep up the external forms of an Apostolic call to the priesthood. In my 5th I have shown that the Roman Church have not even the pattern or shadow of the Apostolic hierarchy. In my 6th I have shown that the Roman Church have departed from the faith, and adopted instead of it a leading article in the distinctive creed of heathenism.

If this is not perfectly apropos in showing that the Roman Church is not the Church of Christ, will you please tell me what is? And if it is in point at all, it is conclusive. As you do not claim that any other church is the true church, if I have shown that the Roman is not the true, as between us I have shown that the true Apostolic Church is extinct. To you I did not deem it necessary to say any thing of the Protestant churches. For as they are all derived from the Roman, if it had not the authority of God, they could not derive such authority from it, and if it had such authority, it used it against them for their schisms and heresies.

With you I look upon all the various orders of sectaries as things of the time to pass away. The true church is the foundation and source of all true and permanent reforms. But I have yet to learn that the Roman church has any of the elements of reform. The ablest of her champions, the Rev. John Milner, in his great work, the "End of Religious Controversy," makes her retrogressive, or, at the very best, stationary.

I perfectly concur with you, that there can be but one true religion; and in saying so I wish to be understood that there is but one true church of God on earth, and out of it there is no salvation.—Besides the elaborate reasons I have given heretofore for believing and knowing that the Roman church is not that church, and those I propose to give in carrying on this discussion in regular order, I give briefly and nearly in your words, that the Roman church is not the true church. First. Because it is not adapted to different ages and nations, but only to half civilized nations and to the ages of non-progression. Second. Because it affords people no reasonable ground of certainty in regard to their faith. Third. Because its method of instruction is not adapted to the nature of man. Fourth. Because it shows an unaccountable and ridiculous partiality on the part of the Savior, and vindictive hatred by God to the human race, and holds them forth as a pair of vindictive tyrants, seeking an excuse for tormenting the creatures they have made. Fifth. Because, as a christian society, its leading characteristics are rebellion against God. I cannot return your sixth reason upon you, for I do not know which creed you speak of, and of course do not know which is the ninth article. I claim to myself the credit of violating nearly every article of the creed of St. Athanasius. My recollection is that the Nicene creed is much the same thing.

If the Catholic clergy are well satisfied with your ability to defend the faith of the church, as you seem to think, why do they refuse to publish or even to notice the discussion? This fact is decisive. Your long silence, after your first, gave good reason to believe that they had shut your mouth. If they have not, they DARE NOT have the discussion go before their followers. Milner's "END OF CONTROVERSY" they will trust every where, because he gained a perfect victory over every thing bearing the name of Protestantism. But your correspondence with the Mormon prophet they will trust no where, because they feel that I have not left you an inch of ground to stand upon.

The question you ask concerning my quotation of the fifth chapt. of Heb. shows that you do not know what I have written. If you have read my articles, you are aware that I maintained that both a call by revelation and an ordination by the hands of those who have the authority are requisite to confer a valid priesthood. Do you flatter yourself that you can get rid of the former by asking a vain question concerning the latter? I have shown that the Catholic clergy have no priesthood, because they are not called by revelation. Can you get over that by barely suggesting that I have not said as much as might be said on some other point?

There is no use in attempting to flinch from the true issue. As a debater, attempting to maintain the authority of the Roman church, you are bound to follow me through and show either that the Popes of Rome are SUCCESSORS to ST. PETER IN THE APOSTLESHIP, or that Peter held the keys of the kingdom in virtue of the Bishopric, and not the Apostleship. You are bound to show that Christ did found the church on Peter, the man, or that the Roman church is now founded on revelation. You are bound to show either that the Roman church is governed now not by a Pope, but by Apostles, or that the Apostles did not transmit their authority to successors, but to inferiors. You are bound to show also that the faith of the church has been changing, evanescent and transitory, and that that is now a truth in christianity which was once a gross heresy, and that the very grossness of heathenism has become a Godly truth.

These are matters that neither you nor the Catholic clergy dare meet. Evidently you supposed you were entering the lists with some kind of new fangled Protestantism, deriving its religion from Catholicity, and then calling its mother the whore of Babylon and the mother of harlots. I beg to inform you that I am none of these. I am no upstart who, in defiance of the authority of the church, are trying to reform the church. My foundation is the rock that ages have not removed. I build not on the errors, faults or failings of others, but on the truths which God has revealed, and that dispensation of the gospel which he has committed to me. The controversy between us is not because, like a Protestant, I am less than a Catholic, but because, like a saint, I am more. The same weapons that you use on them with success, with many more I turn on you with effect.

I shall proceed as time admits to show other points in which the Roman church comes short of the Apostolic pattern. In the mean time I remain truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

POSTAGE ON LETTERS AND PAPERS SENT TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.—The following is compiled from the circular of the Post Master General of Oct. 2d, 1848:—

"Letters may be sent unpaid or pre-paid to Bremen, 34 cents; Hamburgh, 40; Oldenburgh, 39; Hanover, 40; Lubec, 46; Austria, 52; Coburgh, 46; Darmstadt, 46; Baden, 52; Brunswick, 40; Prussia, 46; Saxony, 46; Gotha, 46; Cassel, 46; Bavaria, 56; Frankfort, on the Maine, 46; Wurtemburgh, 46. Single letters limited to half ounce, except Austria, Baden and Bavaria, which are limited to quarter ounce. Altona, 40 cents; Keil, 45; Copenhagen and Denmark generally, 56; Stockholm and farthest part of Sweden, 73; Basle and Switzerland generally, 55; Bergen, Christiana and farthest part of Norway, 62; St. Petersburgh, or Cronstdat, 58; Alexandria, Cairo or Greece, 71; Eastern towns of Italy, 52; Constantinople, 71. Single letters quarter ounce, except in Sweden, Denmark and Russia, half ounce.

"It is recommended to pay on letters to all these countries, only the United States postage, which is 34 cents on all single rate letters. To France the rate is 10 cents under ½ oz., except in British or American packet ships, when the rate is 34 cents, and must be pre-paid. To Canada over 300 miles from the line, must be pre-paid 10 cents. British possessions, (except Canada,) including Nova Scotia, must be pre-paid 34 cents. To Canada, under 300 miles from the line, must be pre-paid 5 cents. Newspapers and pamphlets to all the above places must be pre-paid 6 cents each, except Canada and France, which are 3 cents, and those for the Continent should be enveloped with narrow bands, otherwise they will be rated letter postage on the Continent."

THE TWO SEXES.—The following true and interesting paragraphs are extracted from an article by Mrs. Sigourney, whose mind is the dwelling of life and beauty:—

"Man might be initiated into the varieties and mysteries of needle-work; taught to have patience with the feebleness and waywardness of infancy, and to steal with noiseless step about the chamber of the sick; and woman might be instructed to contend for the palm of science; to pour forth eloquence in Senates, or to wade 'through fields of slaughter to a throne.' Yet revolting of the soul would attend this violence of nature, this abuse of physical and intellectual energy; while the beauty of social order would be defaced and the fountain of earthly felicity broken.

"We arrive, therefore, at the conclusion, the sexes are intended for different spheres, and constructed in conformity to the respective destinations by Him who bids the oak brave the fury of the tempest and the Alpine flower lean its cheek on the bosom of eternal snow.—But disparity does not necessarily imply inferiority. The high places of the earth, with their pomp and glory, are indeed accessible only to the monarch of ambition, or the grasp of power; yet those who pass, faithful and with unapplauded zeal, through the humble round of duty, are not unnoticed by the 'Great Taskmaster's eye,' and their endowment, through accounted poverty among men, may prove durable riches in the Kingdom of Heaven."

TEXT.—Owe no man any thing. Keep out of debt. Avoid it as you would war, pestilence and famine. Shun it as you would the devil.

and knowing that the Roman church is not that church, and those I propose to give in carrying on this discussion in regular order, I give briefly and nearly in your words, that the Roman church is not the true church. First. Because it is not adapted to different ages and nations, but only to half civilized nations and to the ages of non-progression. Second. Because it affords people no reasonable ground of certainty in regard to their faith. Third. Because its method of instruction is not adapted to the nature of man. Fourth. Because it shows an unaccountable and ridiculous partiality on the part of the Savior, and vindictive hatred by God to the human race, and holds them forth as a pair of vindictive tyrants, seeking an excuse for tormenting the creatures they have made. Fifth. Because, as a christian society, its leading characteristics are rebellion against God. I cannot return your sixth reason upon you, for I do not know which creed you speak of, and of course do not know which is the ninth article. I claim to myself the credit of violating nearly every article of the creed of St. Athanasius. My recollection is that the Nicene creed is much the same thing.

If the Catholic clergy are well satisfied with your ability to defend the faith of the church, as you seem to think, why do they refuse to publish or even to notice the discussion? This fact is decisive. Your long silence, after your first, gave good reason to believe that they had shut your mouth. If they have not, they DARE NOT have the discussion go before their followers. Milner's "END OF CONTROVERSY" they will trust every where, because he gained a perfect victory over every thing bearing the name of Protestantism. But your correspondence with the Mormon prophet they will trust no where, because they feel that I have not left you an inch of ground to stand upon.

The question you ask concerning my quotation of the fifth chapt. of Heb. shows that you do not know what I have written. If you have read my articles, you are aware that I maintained that both a call by revelation and an ordination by the hands of those who have the authority are requisite to confer a valid priesthood. Do you flatter yourself that you can get rid of the former by asking a vain question concerning the latter? I have shown that the Catholic clergy have no priesthood, because they are not called by revelation. Can you get over that by barely suggesting that I have not said as much as might be said on some other point?

There is no use in attempting to flinch from the true issue. As a debater, attempting to maintain the authority of the Roman church, you are bound to follow me through and show either that the Popes of Rome are SUCCESSORS TO ST. PETER IN THE APOSTLESHIP, or that Peter held the keys of the kingdom in virtue of the Bishopric, and not the Apostleship. You are bound to show that Christ did found the church on Peter, the man, or that the Roman church is now founded on revelation. You are bound to show either that the Roman church is governed now not by a Pope, but by Apostles, or that the Apostles did not transmit their authority to successors, but to inferiors. You are bound to show also that the faith of the church has been changing, evanescent and transitory, and that that is now a truth in christianity which was once a gross heresy, and that the very grossness of heathenism has become a Godly truth.

These are matters that neither you nor the Catholic clergy dare meet. Evidently you supposed you were entering the lists with some kind of new fangled Protestantism, deriving its religion from Catholicity, and then calling its mother the whore of Babylon and the mother of harlots. I beg to inform you that I am none of these. I am no upstart who, in defiance of the authority of the church, are trying to reform the church. My foundation is the rock that ages have not removed. I build not on the errors, faults or failings of others, but on the truths which God has revealed, and that dispensation of the gospel which he has committed to me. The controversy between us is not because, like a Protestant, I am less than a Catholic, but because, like a saint, I am more. The same weapons that you use on them with success, with many more I turn on you with effect.

I shall proceed as time admits to show other points in which the Roman church comes short of the Apostolic pattern. In the mean time I remain truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

POSTAGE ON LETTERS AND PAPERS SENT TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES.—The following is compiled from the circular of the Post Master General of Oct. 2d, 1848:—

"Letters may be sent unpaid or pre-paid to Bremen, 34 cents; Hamburgh, 40; Oldenburgh, 39; Hanover, 40; Lubec, 46; Austria, 52; Coburgh, 46; Darmstadt, 46; Baden, 52; Brunswick, 40; Prussia, 46; Saxony, 46; Gotha, 46; Cassel, 46; Bavaria, 56; Frankfort, on the Maine, 46; Wurtemburgh, 46. Single letters limited to half ounce, except Austria, Baden and Bavaria, which are limited to quarter ounce. Altona, 40 cents; Keil, 45; Copenhagen and Denmark generally, 56; Stockholm and farthest part of Sweden, 73; Basle and Switzerland generally, 55; Bergen, Christiana and farthest part of Norway, 62; St. Petersburgh, or Cronstadt, 58; Alexandria, Cairo or Greece, 71; Eastern towns of Italy, 52; Constantinople, 71. Single letters quarter ounce, except in Sweden, Denmark and Russia, half ounce.

"It is recommended to pay on letters to all these countries, only the United States postage, which is 34 cents on all single rate letters. To France the rate is 10 cents under ½ oz., except in British or American packet ships, when the rate is 34 cents, and must be pre-paid. To Canada over 300 miles from the line, must be pre-paid 10 cents. British possessions, (except Canada,) including Nova Scotia, must be pre-paid 34 cents. To Canada, under 300 miles from the line, must be pre-paid 5 cents. Newspapers and pamphlets to all the above places must be pre-paid 6 cents each, except Canada and France, which are 3 cents, and those for the Continent should be enveloped with narrow bands, otherwise they will be rated letter postage on the Continent."

THE TWO SEXES.—The following true and interesting paragraphs are extracted from an article by Mrs. Sigourney, whose mind is the dwelling of life and beauty:—

"Man might be initiated into the varieties and mysteries of needle-work; taught to have patience with the feebleness and waywardness of infancy, and to steal with noiseless step about the chamber of the sick; and woman might be instructed to contend for the palm of science; to pour forth eloquence in Senates, or to wade 'through fields of slaughter to a throne.' Yet revolting of the soul would attend this violence of nature, this abuse of physical and intellectual energy; while the beauty of social order would be defaced and the fountain of earthly felicity broken.

"We arrive, therefore, at the conclusion, the sexes are intended for different spheres, and constructed in conformity to the respective destinations by Him who bids the oak brave the fury of the tempest and the Alpine flower lean its cheek on the bosom of eternal snow.—But disparity does not necessarily imply inferiority. The high places of the earth, with their pomp and glory, are indeed accessible only to the monarch of ambition, or the grasp of power; yet those who pass, faithful and with unapplauded zeal, through the humble round of duty, are not unnoticed by the 'Great Taskmaster's eye,' and their endowment, through accounted poverty among men, may prove durable riches in the Kingdom of Heaven."

TEXT.—Owe no man any thing. Keep out of debt. Avoid it as you would war, pestilence and famine. Shun it as you would the devil.

Hate it with a perfect hatred. Abhor it with an entire and absolute abhorrence.

Dig potatoes, break stones, peddle tin ware, do any thing that is honest and useful, rather than run in debt. As you value comfort, quiet, independence, keep out of debt. As you value good digestion, a healthy appetite, a placid temper, a smooth pillow, sweet sleep, pleasant dreams, and happy wakings, keep out of debt. Debt is the hardest task-master, the most cruel of all oppressors. It is a millstone about the neck. It is an incubus on the heart. It spreads a cloud over the whole firmament of a man's being. It eclipses the sun, it blots out the stars, it dims and defaces the beautiful blue of the sky. It breaks up the harmony of nature, and turns to dissonance all the voices of its melody. It furrows the forehead with premature wrinkles, it plucks the eye of its light, it drags all nobleness and kindness out of the port and bearing of a man. It takes the soul out of his laugh, and all stateliness and freedom from his walk. Come not under its accursed dominion. Pass it by as you would pass a leper, or one smitten by the plague. Touch it not. Taste not of its fruit, for it shall turn to bitterness and ashes on your lips. Finally, I say to each and all, but especially to you, young men, keep out of debt.

CHOLERA.

Our intelligence regarding this prevailing scourge of the human race, reaches to the 15th of August, from Trebizond; 19th from Constantinople; and 21st from Smyrna. At Trebizond it seemed to be on the decline, though it carried off 600 of 1200 attacked. Among the deaths are Mrs. Stoddard, the wife of an American missionary, and a Capuchin friar. At Constantinople the disease continued much the same; but at Smyrna the deaths were some 30 per diem. Scarcely any attacked survived, and death had ensued after, in some cases only a few minutes, and in most cases, only a few hours. Unlike the general character of the disease, it has manifested itself more among the higher than the lower orders, and a greater proportion of Europeans have been attacked than at Constantinople. At Magnesia, eight hours distant from Smyrna, the deaths number thirty-five daily. Nearly two thirds of the town population of Smyrna have fled to Bournabat and Boedja, and even carpenters are not to be found to make fruit drums and opinm chests, to the great impediment of trade. From Egypt the accounts from Cairo are to the 10th August, and from Alexandria to the 21st idem, both showing a decrease. The returns from the former report 202 cases on the 15th, 103 on the 16th, 184 on the 17th, 103 on the 18th, and 174 on the 19th. From Alexandria,97 cases on the 19th, 75 on the 20th, and 190 on the 21st.

It appears from official reports that the cholera has spread to Esthonia and Lithunia. At Riga, the number of persons who have been seized with the cholera, from the time it broke out to the 18th of August amounts to 5,926, of whom 3,840 recovered, 1,914 died, and 582 are still under treatment. The epidemic has been more fatal at Mittan; of 780 persons who were attacked, up to the 31st of August, 303 have died, and only 54 have recovered. Since the beginning of July the cholera has also broken out in Siberia,where it had not penetrated in former years. At Stettin where it broke out on the 10th, there had been 204 victims up to the 30th. On the 23d of August there were at St. Petersburg 42 new cases, 37 recoveries, and 15 deaths. The number under treatment has diminished to 438. At Larrissa, Serres, and Natolia, the cholera is also raging with great intensity, and great numbers are dying.—Ex. paper.

BURNING OF THE MORMON TEMPLE.

We regret to state, that on the morning of the 9th instant, the Temple of the Mormons at Nauvoo was destroyed by fire. However much the religion of the Mormons may be condemned, every good citizen will condemn this act of the incendiary as one of the grossest barbarism. Situated on the bluff of the river, it commanded a prospect as far as the eye could reach, and as lovely as the eye ever rested upon. Strangers from all parts of the country were attracted to the place, to see this monument of misdirccted labor and religious error. A few years would in all probability have converted it into a temple of science. Its destruction has inflicted no material injury on the Mormons,—to the surrounding country, it will be a serious loss. The citizens on both sides of the river reprobate the act as wanton and malicious in the extreme.

The fire presented a most sublime spectacle. It commenced in the cupola, and as the flames shot up to the sky, they threw a lurid glare into the surrounding darkness. Great volumes of smoke and flame burst from the windows, and the crash of the falling timbers was distinctly heard on the opposite side of the river. The interior of the building was like a furnace; the walls of solid masonry were heated throughout and cracked by the intense heat. The melted zinc and lead were dropping from its huge blocks during the day. On Tuesday morning the walls were too hot to be touched. The naked walls still stand, and if not demolished by the hand of man, for centuries may stand, a monument of the enthusiasm of its misguided worshippers. Its destruction is a decided comment on the spirit of the nineteenth century.—Keokuk Register.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Prussia.—We have Berlin papers to the 16th. Some disturbances had taken place there. Several persons had been shot by the burgher guard, who were called out.

The Danubian principalities.—On the 26th ult. the Turks entered Bucharest, and committed great excesses: 200 persons lost their lives. The Turks took possession of all parts of the town, and gave themselves up to the most dreadful excesses. The constitution has been abolished, and the laws re-established. In one word, the re-action is triumphant.—Ex. paper.

☞ Money is now defined to be a composition for taking stains out of character.

State of Wisconsin, } In Justices Court.
Walworth county, ss. }

Gilbert Watson, }
vs. } Before Wm. P. Lyon, J. P.
Seth Hamlin. }

To the above named defendant,—Sir:—Take notice, that a writ of attachment has been issued against you by the above named Justice, in favor of the above named plaintiff, and that your property has been attached to satisfy the demand of the said plaintiff; and unless you appear before the said Justice on the 16th day of December next at one o'clock, P. M., at his office in the village of Lyons in said county, judgment will be rendered against you, and your property will be sold to pay the debt of the plaintiff. By order of the Court. GILBERT WATSON, Plaintiff.

November 25th, 1848. 37m.

ESTRAY.

Came into the inclosure of the subscriber, in Voree, about the 1st of Nov. inst. a light brindle cow, with a little white on the tail and belly, supposed to be five years old. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take her away.

Voree, Nov. 21st, 1848. JAMES J. STRANG.

Hate it with a perfect hatred. Abhor it with an entire and absolute abhorrence.

Dig potatoes, break stones, peddle tin ware, do any thing that is honest and useful, rather than run in debt. As you value comfort, quiet, independence, keep out of debt. As you value good digestion, a healthy appetite, a placid temper, a smooth pillow, sweet sleep, pleasant dreams, and happy wakings, keep out of debt. Debt is the hardest task-master, the most cruel of all oppressors. It is a millstone about the neck. It is an incubus on the heart. It spreads a cloud over the whole firmament of a man's being. It eclipses the sun, it blots out the stars, it dims and defaces the beautiful blue of the sky. It breaks up the harmony of nature, and turns to dissonance all the voices of its melody. It furrows the forehead with premature wrinkles, it plucks the eye of its light, it drags all nobleness and kindness out of the port and bearing of a man. It takes the soul out of his laugh, and all stateliness and freedom from his walk. Come not under its accursed dominion. Pass it by as you would pass a leper, or one smitten by the plague. Touch it not. Taste not of its fruit, for it shall turn to bitterness and ashes on your lips. Finally, I say to each and all, but especially to you, young men, keep out of debt.

CHOLERA.

Our intelligence regarding this prevailing scourge of the human race, reaches to the 15th of August, from Trebizond; 19th from Constantinople; and 21st from Smyrna. At Trebizond it seemed to be on the decline, though it carried off 600 of 1200 attacked. Among the deaths are Mrs. Stoddard, the wife of an American missionary, and a Capuchin friar. At Constantinople the disease continued much the same; but at Smyrna the deaths were some 30 per diem. Scarcely any attacked survived, and death had ensued after, in some cases only a few minutes, and in most cases, only a few hours. Unlike the general character of the disease, it has manifested itself more among the higher than the lower orders, and a greater proportion of Europeans have been attacked than at Constantinople. At Magnesia, eight hours distant from Smyrna, the deaths number thirty-five daily. Nearly two thirds of the town population of Smyrna have fled to Bournabat and Boedja, and even carpenters are not to be found to make fruit drums and opinm chests, to the great impediment of trade. From Egypt the accounts from Cairo are to the 10th August, and from Alexandria to the 21st idem, both showing a decrease. The returns from the former report 202 cases on the 15th, 103 on the 16th, 184 on the 17th, 103 on the 18th, and 174 on the 19th. From Alexandria, 97 cases on the 19th, 75 on the 20th, and 190 on the 21st.

It appears from official reports that the cholera has spread to Esthonia and Lithunia. At Riga, the number of persons who have been seized with the cholera, from the time it broke out to the 18th of August amounts to 5,926, of whom 3,840 recovered, 1,914 died, and 582 are still under treatment. The epidemic has been more fatal at Mittan; of 780 persons who were attacked, up to the 31st of August, 303 have died, and only 54 have recovered. Since the beginning of July the cholera has also broken out in Siberia, where it had not penetrated in former years. At Stettin where it broke out on the 10th, there had been 204 victims up to the 30th. On the 23d of August there were at St. Petersburg 42 new cases, 37 recoveries, and 15 deaths. The number under treatment has diminished to 438. At Larrissa, Serres, and Natolia, the cholera is also raging with great intensity, and great numbers are dying.—Ex. paper.

BURNING OF THE MORMON TEMPLE.

We regret to state, that on the morning of the 9th instant, the Temple of the Mormons at Nauvoo was destroyed by fire. However much the religion of the Mormons may be condemned, every good citizen will condemn this act of the incendiary as one of the grossest barbarism. Situated on the bluff of the river, it commanded a prospect as far as the eye could reach, and as lovely as the eye ever rested upon. Strangers from all parts of the country were attracted to the place, to see this monument of misdirected labor and religious error. A few years would in all probability have converted it into a temple of science. Its destruction has inflicted no material injury on the Mormons,—to the surrounding country, it will be a serious loss. The citizens on both sides of the river reprobate the act as wanton and malicious in the extreme.

The fire presented a most sublime spectacle. It commenced in the cupola, and as the flames shot up to the sky, they threw a lurid glare into the surrounding darkness. Great volumes of smoke and flame burst from the windows, and the crash of the falling timbers was distinctly heard on the opposite side of the river. The interior of the building was like a furnace; the walls of solid masonry were heated throughout and cracked by the intense heat. The melted zinc and lead were dropping from its huge blocks during the day. On Tuesday morning the walls were too hot to be touched. The naked walls still stand, and if not demolished by the hand of man, for centuries may stand, a monument of the enthusiasm of its misguided worshippers. Its destruction is a decided comment on the spirit of the nineteenth century.—Keokuk Register.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Prussia.—We have Berlin papers to the 16th. Some disturbances had taken place there. Several persons had been shot by the burgher guard, who were called out.

The Danubian principalities.—On the 26th ult. the Turks entered Bucharest, and committed great excesses: 200 persons lost their lives. The Turks took possession of all parts of the town, and gave themselves up to the most dreadful excesses. The constitution has been abolished, and the laws re-established. In one word, the re-action is triumphant.—Ex. paper.

☞ Money is now defined to be a composition for taking stains out of character.

State of Wisconsin, } In Justices Court.
Walworth county, ss. }

Gilbert Watson, }
vs. } Before Wm. P. Lyon, J. P.
Seth Hamlin. }

To the above named defendant,—Sir:—Take notice, that a writ of attachment has been issued against you by the above named Justice, in favor of the above named plaintiff, and that your property has been attached to satisfy the demand of the said plaintiff; and unless you appear before the said Justice on the 16th day of December next at one o'clock, P. M., at his office in the village of Lyons in said county, judgment will be rendered against you, and your property will be sold to pay the debt of the plaintiff. By order of the Court. GILBERT WATSON, Plaintiff.

November 25th, 1848. 37m.

ESTRAY.

Came into the inclosure of the subscriber, in Voree, about the 1st of Nov. inst. a light brindle cow, with a little white on the tail and belly, supposed to be five years old. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take her away.

Voree, Nov. 21st, 1848. JAMES J. STRANG.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 38.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, DEC. 7, 1848. [WHOLE No. 101.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Beaver Island, October 25th, 1848.

MR. EDITOR:—As various and diversified reports have gone abroad in regard to Beaver Island, being represented by some as a fertile, productive and beautiful place, of easy access to steamboats, while, on the other hand, it is represented as being entirely non est inventus, situated far from the steamboat channel, insomuch that they seldom ever call there at all—I propose, in as brief a manner as possible, to state a few truths, without either underrating or overrating the facts. What I say shall be truth, all truth, and nothing but the truth. As regards the fertility of the soil, I shall only say that we have as yet scarcely given it a trial, other than in the potatoe crop, but finer potatoes I never saw in any country than is raised here, and they are always in good demand at 50 cents per bushel. I see no reason why that other crops should not do well. You might inquire why that we have not given other crops a trial. You must recollect that the Island is as yet a new place, covered with thick timber. And the truth is, there is so much other business in good demand that we have not as yet taken time to clear and fence.

We have, to be sure, raised corn and other garden vegetables, not however enough to call them crops, merely garden sauce. We shall probably by another season be prepared to give crops generally a trial. We can clear our land (only give us time) for nothing by chopping the timber into cord wood, which is never worth less than 50 cents per cord. There has been this season a dock built on the west side of the bay, and the probability now is that there will next season be one built on the south side of the bay.—There is where the most of the hard wood lies. Wood could be put on a dock there 25 cents per cord cheaper than on the dock which has been here for years, because it is now drawn to the water's edge and unloaded, then reloaded on a scow and taken across the bay, which does not cost less than 25 cents per cord. It was last year the same way on the west side of the bay. Wood amounts to $1,25 per cord on the wharf, and a scarce article at that. It is sold as fast as it possibly can be got on, and a little more so, as the fellow said.

I have taken a list of all the steam crafts that have arrived here this season so far, with the respective periods at which they arrived. The whole number of arrivals up to the present date is fifty-three, and that under the most disparaging circumstances. The wood, especially on this side, (the west side,) has been universally poor, having been cut some two years it has lost much of its substance. And further, there was no certainty of their getting any of that, in consequence of there not being teams enough on the Island to draw it fast enough. Just about half of the boats call at each dock. It is by no means seldom that there is to be seen a boat at each wharf. The propeller Oregon has called almost regular.—She would have called at every trip up and down, could she have had good wood. So also would the St. Joseph, both of which stop at the new dock. While, on the other side, the Republic and the Oneida most generally call.

Now provided that these boats could have been sure of good wood, without any risk of disappointment, three of them would have been regular in their calls, and probably the fourth. Last year we had but one regular boat. Two would be a great plenty for a place like this, with the transient ones that would inevitably call. This is a brief statement, and I believe without exaggeration. Let us now briefly notice the objections made against the Island. It is said by our transient visitors generally that the Island is unproductive. Now I am not at all surprised at this. At the present landing place immediately back they strike a pine forest, and, as a natural consequence, the soil is sand, but they ought to recollect that they are on a large Island, larger than three common sized townships. Perhaps they do not know this fact, or realize it if they do know it. But let them just go back a short distance, and they will find something besides pine. On the south of the bay they would not even have to go back. There tillable land comes within a few rods of the lake. With these remarks in regard to the Island, I shall close, wishing to all well wishers peace, prosperity and success. Yours respectfully, GREELY THE 7TH.

P. S. Since writing the above there has been seven more arrivals, making 60. The largest number that called any one month was 12, in October. The next was 11, in September.

For the Gospel Herald.

"And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." 1 Cor. xiii. 13.

Yes, charity is the greatest. It is the bond of perfectness. But faith is the first grand moving principle of all intelligences. It is the main spring of all our actions, of all our doings, of our very existence. Yes, of the existence of the great ruler of all creation.—Without it we could not exist. And without it God himself could not exist for one moment. Yes, it requires faith in the great Jehovah to arrange the heavens and the earth, to create men, to sustain the heavenly orbs, the vast systems of worlds, the animal and vegetable kingdom. Yea, in fact, every thing in heaven, earth or hades that live, move or have a being. But in sweet communion with faith is hope, which is an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast.

Yes, how beautifully they blend together. We live by faith, we act by faith, and every thing we do we do by faith. The same with hope. We live in hope, we work in hope, lie down to rest in hope, arise in the morning refreshed in hope: "For the creature (man) was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope." Rom. viii. 20. We sow in hope, we reap in hope. In hope the merchant leaves his native home and friends, and launches upon "the deep, deep sea" in quest of foreign climes to procure their treasures, and in hope returns to his home laden with the blessings of different and distant countries. Indeed, as Paul said while contemplating the same

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 38.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, DEC. 7, 1848. [WHOLE No. 101.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

Beaver Island, October 25th, 1848.

MR. EDITOR:—As various and diversified reports have gone abroad in regard to Beaver Island, being represented by some as a fertile, productive and beautiful place, of easy access to steamboats, while, on the other hand, it is represented as being entirely non est inventus, situated far from the steamboat channel, insomuch that they seldom ever call there at all—I propose, in as brief a manner as possible, to state a few truths, without either underrating or overrating the facts. What I say shall be truth, all truth, and nothing but the truth. As regards the fertility of the soil, I shall only say that we have as yet scarcely given it a trial, other than in the potatoe crop, but finer potatoes I never saw in any country than is raised here, and they are always in good demand at 50 cents per bushel. I see no reason why that other crops should not do well. You might inquire why that we have not given other crops a trial. You must recollect that the Island is as yet a new place, covered with thick timber. And the truth is, there is so much other business in good demand that we have not as yet taken time to clear and fence.

We have, to be sure, raised corn and other garden vegetables, not however enough to call them crops, merely garden sauce. We shall probably by another season be prepared to give crops generally a trial. We can clear our land (only give us time) for nothing by chopping the timber into cord wood, which is never worth less than 50 cents per cord. There has been this season a dock built on the west side of the bay, and the probability now is that there will next season be one built on the south side of the bay.—There is where the most of the hard wood lies. Wood could be put on a dock there 25 cents per cord cheaper than on the dock which has been here for years, because it is now drawn to the water's edge and unloaded, then reloaded on a scow and taken across the bay, which does not cost less than 25 cents per cord. It was last year the same way on the west side of the bay. Wood amounts to $1,25 per cord on the wharf, and a scarce article at that. It is sold as fast as it possibly can be got on, and a little more so, as the fellow said.

I have taken a list of all the steam crafts that have arrived here this season so far, with the respective periods at which they arrived. The whole number of arrivals up to the present date is fifty-three, and that under the most disparaging circumstances. The wood, especially on this side, (the west side,) has been universally poor, having been cut some two years it has lost much of its substance. And further, there was no certainty of their getting any of that, in consequence of there not being teams enough on the Island to draw it fast enough. Just about half of the boats call at each dock. It is by no means seldom that there is to be seen a boat at each wharf. The propeller Oregon has called almost regular.—She would have called at every trip up and down, could she have had good wood. So also would the St. Joseph, both of which stop at the new dock. While, on the other side, the Republic and the Oneida most generally call.

Now provided that these boats could have been sure of good wood, without any risk of disappointment, three of them would have been regular in their calls, and probably the fourth. Last year we had but one regular boat. Two would be a great plenty for a place like this, with the transient ones that would inevitably call. This is a brief statement, and I believe without exaggeration. Let us now briefly notice the objections made against the Island. It is said by our transient visitors generally that the Island is unproductive. Now I am not at all surprised at this. At the present landing place immediately back they strike a pine forest, and, as a natural consequence, the soil is sand, but they ought to recollect that they are on a large Island, larger than three common sized townships. Perhaps they do not know this fact, or realize it if they do know it. But let them just go back a short distance, and they will find something besides pine. On the south of the bay they would not even have to go back. There tillable land comes within a few rods of the lake. With these remarks in regard to the Island, I shall close, wishing to all well wishers peace, prosperity and success. Yours respectfully, GREELY THE 7TH.

P. S. Since writing the above there has been seven more arrivals, making 60. The largest number that called any one month was 12, in October. The next was 11, in September.

For the Gospel Herald.

"And now abideth faith, hope, charity, these three; but the greatest of these is charity." 1 Cor. xiii. 13.

Yes, charity is the greatest. It is the bond of perfectness. But faith is the first grand moving principle of all intelligences. It is the main spring of all our actions, of all our doings, of our very existence. Yes, of the existence of the great ruler of all creation.—Without it we could not exist. And without it God himself could not exist for one moment. Yes, it requires faith in the great Jehovah to arrange the heavens and the earth, to create men, to sustain the heavenly orbs, the vast systems of worlds, the animal and vegetable kingdom. Yea, in fact, every thing in heaven, earth or hades that live, move or have a being. But in sweet communion with faith is hope, which is an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast.

Yes, how beautifully they blend together. We live by faith, we act by faith, and every thing we do we do by faith. The same with hope. We live in hope, we work in hope, lie down to rest in hope, arise in the morning refreshed in hope: "For the creature (man) was made subject to vanity, not willingly, but by reason of him who hath subjected the same in hope." Rom. viii. 20. We sow in hope, we reap in hope. In hope the merchant leaves his native home and friends, and launches upon "the deep, deep sea" in quest of foreign climes to procure their treasures, and in hope returns to his home laden with the blessings of different and distant countries. Indeed, as Paul said while contemplating the same subject: "Hope is the anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, reaching within the vail, where Jesus the forerunner has gone."—But what are faith and hope without charity? They are nothing but sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. O! that charity which purifies the heart and is the bond of perfectness, is the greatest of all. It is the sum of the whole matter. It exists in the bosom of the great God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in all the vast works of creation, in the minutest object the God of nature has formed. It is God himself. For God is love. H. P. BROWN.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 4.

Voree, Dec. 2d, 1848.

DEAR SIR:—In reading your article number two, on the existence of God, in reply to my argument that man learned language of God, I find that you have relied principally on these two assertions: 1st. That man learned language by hearing natural sounds, such as thunder and the voice of animals. 2d. That language is progressive, and therefore could not have been received from a superior at some past period.

108. If man derived his language from beasts, birds and from natural sounds, he has derived from that which they are not in possession of. For beasts, birds and various natural objects make and utter sounds, but they are none of them articulate sounds, and are destitute of meaning. Neither in sound or in the purpose of the sound is there any likeness. Among the fifty thousand words of the English language you have instanced less than a dozen as having a sound corresponding to natural sounds. Yet you have, in these few words, gone beyond the fact. There is nothing in the voice of the serpent or the goose which would teach man S or C.—The fact that these letters are so unlike in sound (though representing the same sound in some words) is conclusive. Neither serpent or goose can articulate either. The only point of similarity is this: The goose and serpent both hiss. And man, in speaking these letters, (to which his organs are not naturally adapted,) sometimes lisps, and the lisp approximates to a hiss.

109. It is only because articulate language is not natural to him, and he has not by nature organs for articulation, that he resembles them at all. So, too, you may write maaa and baaa for a sheep, and woou for I know not what, and bow wow for the bark of a dog, but there is no real similarity in the sound of the word written and the noise signified. You would hear these words read by a thousand different persons and never suspect one of them of mimicking sheep, dogs or any other animals. So we may write "quack" for the voice of a duck, but you never mistake that word spoken by man for the voice of that fowl. There is not a similarity in the sound. There is not a similarity between articulate and inarticulate sounds. Our use of words, so unlike the voices of animals to designate and signify the sounds they make, is the strongest possible evidence that articulate language was not derived from natural sounds.

110. In the instance of the word thunder in English and tonnire in French you exhibit the lameness of this position very forcibly.—Thunder and tonnire do not sound similar to one another, and consequently cannot be similar to the same thing. But the sound of thunder is so exceedingly various that it is impossible that any one sound should be its natural representative. No articulate sound is ever similar to it. This fact is proved by the fact that in theatrical performances, when it is necessary to imitate it, the human voice is never employed for that purpose.

111. Man learns to imitate many natural sounds, both of animals and of inanimate nature. But his mimickry makes no part of his articulate language. Whenever he imitates nature he ceases to speak. Not one of all the natural sounds is a word in articulate language.

112. If I could even concede that there was a similarity in the words which represent certain natural sounds and in the sounds represented, yet it would not help to carry out your idea of the natural origin of articulate language. This mode of reasoning would only account for the origin of such words as represent sounds, a very small class of words in the vocabulary of any language. Can you imagine any similarity in the word blue and the thing represented by it? in the word truth and the fact represented by it?

113. What similarity is there in the word goodness and the thing? What in the word sin and the act? What in the word THING and the object? What is the point of similarity between the word and, if and but, and the ideas represented by them? Or if you do not mean that sounds in nature have taught men this part of language, what part of nature did?

114. I am aware that much has been said by different writers of the similarity of language, and the thing expressed by it, in particular words and sentences. A critical examination will reduce this similarity to a very narrow compass. The couplet,

"When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,
The line too labors, and the words move slow."

has been given as an example of sound corresponding with sense.—There is not one articulate sound in this sentence which would not be perfectly appropriate in expressing any sense, no matter how different. The author, by a skillful selection of short syllables, has put it in the power of the reader to make the sound correspond with the single idea of slow motion.

115. The following is the exact opposite:—

"Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main."

Here a skillful combination of short syllables, which the variety of English synonyms puts in the reach of the author, enables the reader to make the sound correspond with the single idea of swiftness.

116. Pursuing the skillful selections of Mr. Murray, we find the following example of a noisy stanza to express the idea of certain work, attended with great noise:—

"Loud sounds the axe, redoubling strokes on strokes;
On all sides round the forest hurls her oaks
Headlong. Deep echoing groan the thickets brown;
Then rustling, crackling, crashing, thunder down."

In this example the sole similarity of sound to sense consists in the fact that the author has selected those words to express his ideas, which are spoken with a full quick sound. So far from there being a real likeness in our sounds and the ideas expressed by them, it is an evidence of ability and skill in a writer to so combine his words as to produce some trifling resemblance. Should any one say, "in cutting down the oak trees all round the repeated blows of the axe make a great noise, and in the fall there is a very noisy cracking and crushing of limbs and old dry brush and bushes, with a noise like a clap of thunder when the tree strikes the ground," he would, by the use of different words, express the same idea without the similarity of sound and sense.

117. The similarity supposed to exist in the word and sound of thunder is in the u-n-d, consequently under, sunder, blunder, conundrum, and I know not how many more words, are similar in sound to the idea of thunder, and just as similar as the word thunder.—And therefore they ought to signify the same thing, if the argument of a natural origin of articulate language is good for anything. If the word crash has any similarity in sound to the idea it expresses, so has the word ash a similarity to the same thing. But according to my idea of sounds the words hemlock and baswood come just as near expressing the idea of a crash as does the word ash. I have subject: "Hope is the anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, reaching within the vail, where Jesus the forerunner has gone."—But what are faith and hope without charity? They are nothing but sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. O! that charity which purifies the heart and is the bond of perfectness, is the greatest of all. It is the sum of the whole matter. It exists in the bosom of the great God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in all the vast works of creation, in the minutest object the God of nature has formed. It is God himself. For God is love. H. P. BROWN.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 4.

Voree, Dec. 2d, 1848.

DEAR SIR:—In reading your article number two, on the existence of God, in reply to my argument that man learned language of God, I find that you have relied principally on these two assertions: 1st. That man learned language by hearing natural sounds, such as thunder and the voice of animals. 2d. That language is progressive, and therefore could not have been received from a superior at some past period.

108. If man derived his language from beasts, birds and from natural sounds, he has derived from that which they are not in possession of. For beasts, birds and various natural objects make and utter sounds, but they are none of them articulate sounds, and are destitute of meaning. Neither in sound or in the purpose of the sound is there any likeness. Among the fifty thousand words of the English language you have instanced less than a dozen as having a sound corresponding to natural sounds. Yet you have, in these few words, gone beyond the fact. There is nothing in the voice of the serpent or the goose which would teach man S or C.—The fact that these letters are so unlike in sound (though representing the same sound in some words) is conclusive. Neither serpent or goose can articulate either. The only point of similarity is this: The goose and serpent both hiss. And man, in speaking these letters, (to which his organs are not naturally adapted,) sometimes lisps, and the lisp approximates to a hiss.

109. It is only because articulate language is not natural to him, and he has not by nature organs for articulation, that he resembles them at all. So, too, you may write maaa and baaa for a sheep, and woov for I know not what, and bow wow for the bark of a dog, but there is no real similarity in the sound of the word written and the noise signified. You would hear these words read by a thousand different persons and never suspect one of them of mimicking sheep, dogs or any other animals. So we may write "quack" for the voice of a duck, but you never mistake that word spoken by man for the voice of that fowl. There is not a similarity in the sound. There is not a similarity between articulate and inarticulate sounds. Our use of words, so unlike the voices of animals to designate and signify the sounds they make, is the strongest possible evidence that articulate language was not derived from natural sounds.

110. In the instance of the word thunder in English and tonnire in French you exhibit the lameness of this position very forcibly.—Thunder and tonnire do not sound similar to one another, and consequently cannot be similar to the same thing. But the sound of thunder is so exceedingly various that it is impossible that any one sound should be its natural representative. No articulate sound is ever similar to it. This fact is proved by the fact that in theatrical performances, when it is necessary to imitate it, the human voice is never employed for that purpose.

111. Man learns to imitate many natural sounds, both of animals and of inanimate nature. But his mimickry makes no part of his articulate language. Whenever he imitates nature he ceases to speak. Not one of all the natural sounds is a word in articulate language.

112. If I could even concede that there was a similarity in the words which represent certain natural sounds and in the sounds represented, yet it would not help to carry out your idea of the natural origin of articulate language. This mode of reasoning would only account for the origin of such words as represent sounds, a very small class of words in the vocabulary of any language. Can you imagine any similarity in the word blue and the thing represented by it? in the word truth and the fact represented by it?

113. What similarity is there in the word goodness and the thing? What in the word sin and the act? What in the word THING and the object? What is the point of similarity between the word and, if and but, and the ideas represented by them? Or if you do not mean that sounds in nature have taught men this part of language, what part of nature did?

114. I am aware that much has been said by different writers of the similarity of language, and the thing expressed by it, in particular words and sentences. A critical examination will reduce this similarity to a very narrow compass. The couplet,

"When Ajax strives some rock's vast weight to throw,
The line too labors, and the words move slow."

has been given as an example of sound corresponding with sense.—There is not one articulate sound in this sentence which would not be perfectly appropriate in expressing any sense, no matter how different. The author, by a skillful selection of short syllables, has put it in the power of the reader to make the sound correspond with the single idea of slow motion.

115. The following is the exact opposite:—

"Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main."

Here a skillful combination of short syllables, which the variety of English synonyms puts in the reach of the author, enables the reader to make the sound correspond with the single idea of ~~motion~~.

116. Pursuing the skillful selections of Mr. Murray, we find the following example of a noisy stanza to express the idea of certain work, attended with great noise:—

"Loud sounds the axe, redoubling strokes on strokes;
On all sides round the forest hurls her oaks
Headlong. Deep echoing groan the thickets brown;
Then rustling, crackling, crashing, thunder down."

In this example the sole similarity of sound to sense consists in the fact that the author has selected those words to express his ideas, which are spoken with a full quick sound. So far from there being a real likeness in our sounds and the ideas expressed by them, it is an evidence of ability and skill in a writer to so combine his words as to produce some trifling resemblance. Should any one say, "in cutting down the oak trees all round the repeated blows of the axe make a great noise, and in the fall there is a very noisy cracking and crushing of limbs and old dry brush and bushes, with a noise like a clap of thunder when the tree strikes the ground," he would, by the use of different words, express the same idea without the similarity of sound and sense.

117. The similarity supposed to exist in the word and sound of thunder is in the u-n-d, consequently under, sunder, blunder, conundrum, and I know not how many more words, are similar in sound to the idea of thunder, and just as similar as the word thunder.—And therefore they ought to signify the same thing, if the argument of a natural origin of articulate language is good for anything. If the word crash has any similarity in sound to the idea it expresses, so has the word ash a similarity to the same thing. But according to my idea of sounds the words hemlock and baswood come just as near expressing the idea of a crash as does the word ash. I have witnessed many a crash both in the natural and the mechanical, but never in any of them did I hear the letters c-r-a-s-h or any of them uttered either separately or combined into a word.

118. The sum of the whole matter is this: That very few words represent the idea of a sound, and no others can have anything similar to the thing they signify. 2d. The few words that do represent sounds are not like the sounds they represent. 3d. That the same sounds are used to express every variety of idea by a very trifling variation in their combination. 4th. There are no articulate sounds in nature. Consequently man could not have obtained articulate language by imitating nature.

119. To this I might add, further, that man is not constituted for the uttering of articulate sounds. The adaptation of the speaking organs to it is the work of long and painful effort. All of us find a difficulty in uttering some of them. And most of us speak many of them imperfectly, or not at all, all our lives. Whereas we can utter all the sounds of our natural language from infancy without experience or an instructor. Nor is there any connection whatever between our natural and articulate language. If man, destitute of articulate language, could by any manner of means feel the want of any other language than that of the passions as he has it by nature, and therefore endeavor to improve, the improvement he would attempt would necessarily and inevitably be by extending the use of his natural language.

120. The very imitativeness which you have appealed to (par. 29) would lead him to imitate the natural expressions of other animals, as does the monkey, instead of inventing a new mode of expressing ideas. And if articulate language was formed in imitation of natural sounds, the words articulated would be like natural sounds; whereas there is not one voice in all visible nature, animate or inanimate, which approximates to the articulate. And the articulate language is not a contingent or improvement of the natural language, but is a distinct faculty, to which the natural is only a contingent.

121. In par. 31 you inquire if my argument to prove that articulate language is supernatural does not also prove "cooking, making tools, &c., supernatural?" Have it so, if you please. I shall not question it until you show them natural. Further, you inquire where this "being possessed of intelligence, motive and will learned to articulate?" Of whom did the robin learn to sing, or the child to cry? There is nothing done in nature but what is natural to something. They to whom it is natural do it untaught. Man cannot speak untaught. Therefore it is not natural to him.

122. A further reason given by you for holding that language is the creature of society is, that it is progressive. This is mere assertion. That it is mutative I shall not question. That as new ideas grow up some apparently new combinations of sound are brought into use to express them, I am perfectly aware. But whether language is capable of expressing ideas more perfectly now than two thousand years ago is a question of a different kind. All writers on universal grammar agree that the ancient languages were quite the most regular in the formation of their words. Many of them are praised for the richness, copiousness and precision of their expression. And with all the improvements of modern times the new sciences constantly find their vocabulary in the ancient languages.

123. But the probability is that originally there was what you seem to think divine wisdom would dictate—one perfect language, from which all modern languages are retrogressive derivations.—Having not the least doubt of such a fact, I shall not enter upon the examination of it here, because it makes no part of the question at issue. With all the pretended progression of modern times, it has not added one to the number of articulate sounds. And though it has changed the combination of them, it cannot be shown that it has diminished the number by a single one, and the modern combinations being far less convenient and much more irregular than the ancient, the pretended progression melts away to injurious changes.

124. And it is a curious and important fact that through all the mutations of articulate combinations without the addition, or, so far as we know, the loss of one single sound, no man has ever spoken one single articulate word till it was taught to him. There being in nature a certain number of articulate sounds, that number cannot be increased or diminished. Man being destitute of the natural knowledge of these, never sets himself to using them as he does to laugh and cry. Not being naturally found to use them, he learns them with difficulty, and perhaps fails on some entirely, especially if he is not set to learning them in early life, while the organs of speech are subject to great changes. Having learned this language of those that possess it, he can teach it to his posterity.—He could no more take it up in the first instance than could any other animal. But those to whom it is natural could no more be without it than could the bird without his song, or the child without his voice of crying.

125. In par. 40 you say you do think "it conceivable that a man destitute of language should know the want of it." Now articulate language is not analogous to anything in nature but itself.—Does man ever desire a thing which is not in existence and is not analogous to anything in existence? If he can desire such a thing, give an example. If he cannot, then he could not desire an articulate language till he knew that some being possessed it.

126. It is true that I feel the want of a word most when I want it, and not when I have it. But this is not in point to prove that a man destitute of language feels the want of it. I know the use of it, he does not. If your argument be sound, the horse feels the want of words vastly more than I do, for I have the use of several thousand, and he not one. Do you believe he troubles himself for want of words as men do, and mourns because he cannot go to school with the children and learn to talk? Emigrants coming into this country generally learn to speak English, because, having a language, they know the use of it. Animals perfectly destitute of it have no desire to learn it, because they do not know the use of it.—These facts show that society could have no motive to commence or attempt the invention of an articulate language. Consequently it could not originate in man individually or collectively.

127. Man's desires in the mere state of nature, totally destitute of improvement, have not that unlikeness to the brute which you represent; (par. 42;) but if they had, his desire and his attempt at the remedy of his natural defects would be to improve what he possessed, or to get something that some body else possessed.—That is, he would either endeavor to improve his natural language, or to obtain a better one that some other being was possessed of; not to make some new thing of the formation or use of which he had not the slightest idea.

Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

More Territory.—It is confidently stated that a proposition is before the Senate, in secret session, for the purchase of the territorial rights, privileges, &c., of the Hudson's Bay and Pujent's Sound companies, at one million of dollars. The proposition of these English companies has the sanction of the British Government, and is strongly pressed upon the Senate by Mr. Secretary Buchanan. The correspondent of the Journal states that the proposition meets favor with Webster, Calhoun, Benton and Hannegan.—Ex. paper.

witnessed many a crash both in the natural and the mechanical, but never in any of them did I hear the letters c-r-a-s-h or any of them uttered either separately or combined into a word.

118. The sum of the whole matter is this: That very few words represent the idea of a sound, and no others can have anything similar to the thing they signify. 2d. The few words that do represent sounds are not like the sounds they represent. 3d. That the same sounds are used to express every variety of idea by a very trifling variation in their combination. 4th. There are no articulate sounds in nature. Consequently man could not have obtained articulate language by imitating nature.

119. To this I might add, further, that man is not constituted for the uttering of articulate sounds. The adaptation of the speaking organs to it is the work of long and painful effort. All of us find a difficulty in uttering some of them. And most of us speak many of them imperfectly, or not at all, all our lives. Whereas we can utter all the sounds of our natural language from infancy without experience or an instructor. Nor is there any connection whatever between our natural and articulate language. If man, destitute of articulate language, could by any manner of means feel the want of any other language than that of the passions as he has it by nature, and therefore endeavor to improve, the improvement he would attempt would necessarily and inevitably be by extending the use of his natural language.

120. The very imitativeness which you have appealed to (par. 29) would lead him to imitate the natural expressions of other animals, as does the monkey, instead of inventing a new mode of expressing ideas. And if articulate language was formed in imitation of natural sounds, the words articulated would be like natural sounds; whereas there is not one voice in all visible nature, animate or inanimate, which approximates to the articulate. And the articulate language is not a contingent or improvement of the natural language, but is a distinct faculty, to which the natural is only a contingent.

121. In par. 31 you inquire if my argument to prove that articulate language is supernatural does not also prove "cooking, making tools, &c., supernatural?" Have it so, if you please. I shall not question it until you show them natural. Further, you inquire where this "being possessed of intelligence, motive and will learned to articulate?" Of whom did the robin learn to sing, or the child to cry? There is nothing done in nature but what is natural to something. They to whom it is natural do it untaught. Man cannot speak untaught. Therefore it is not natural to him.

122. A further reason given by you for holding that language is the creature of society is, that it is progressive. This is mere assertion. That it is mutative I shall not question. That as new ideas grow up some apparently new combinations of sound are brought into use to express them, I am perfectly aware. But whether language is capable of expressing ideas more perfectly now than two thousand years ago is a question of a different kind. All writers on universal grammar agree that the ancient languages were quite the most regular in the formation of their words. Many of them are praised for the richness, copiousness and precision of their expression. And with all the improvements of modern times the new sciences constantly find their vocabulary in the ancient languages.

123. But the probability is that originally there was what you seem to think divine wisdom would dictate—one perfect language, from which all modern languages are retrogressive derivations.—Having not the least doubt of such a fact, I shall not enter upon the examination of it here, because it makes no part of the question at issue. With all the pretended progression of modern times, it has not added one to the number of articulate sounds. And though it has changed the combination of them, it cannot be shown that it has diminished the number by a single one, and the modern combinations being far less convenient and much more irregular than the ancient, the pretended progression melts away to injurious changes.

124. And it is a curious and important fact that through all the mutations of articulate combinations without the addition, or, so far as we know, the loss of one single sound, no man has ever spoken one single articulate word till it was taught to him. There being in nature a certain number of articulate sounds, that number cannot be increased or diminished. Man being destitute of the natural knowledge of these, never sets himself to using them as he does to laugh and cry. Not being naturally found to use them, he learns them with difficulty, and perhaps fails on some entirely, especially if he is not set to learning them in early life, while the organs of speech are subject to great changes. Having learned this language of those that possess it, he can teach it to his posterity.—He could no more take it up in the first instance than could any other animal. But those to whom it is natural could no more be without it than could the bird without his song, or the child without his voice of crying.

125. In par. 40 you say you do think "it conceivable that a man destitute of language should know the want of it." Now articulate language is not analogous to anything in nature but itself.—Does man ever desire a thing which is not in existence and is not analogous to anything in existence? If he can desire such a thing, give an example. If he cannot, then he could not desire an articulate language till he knew that some being possessed it.

126. It is true that I feel the want of a word most when I want it, and not when I have it. But this is not in point to prove that a man destitute of language feels the want of it. I know the use of it, he does not. If your argument be sound, the horse feels the want of words vastly more than I do, for I have the use of several thousand, and he not one. Do you believe he troubles himself for want of words as men do, and mourns because he cannot go to school with the children and learn to talk? Emigrants coming into this country generally learn to speak English, because, having a language, they know the use of it. Animals perfectly destitute of it have no desire to learn it, because they do not know the use of it.—These facts show that society could have no motive to commence or attempt the invention of an articulate language. Consequently it could not originate in man individually or collectively.

127. Man's desires in the mere state of nature, totally destitute of improvement, have not that unlikeness to the brute which you represent; (par. 42;) but if they had, his desire and his attempt at the remedy of his natural defects would be to improve what he possessed, or to get something that some body else possessed.—That is, he would either endeavor to improve his natural language, or to obtain a better one that some other being was possessed of; not to make some new thing of the formation or use of which he had not the slightest idea.

Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

More Territory.—It is confidently stated that a proposition is before the Senate, in secret session, for the purchase of the territorial rights, privileges, &c., of the Hudson's Bay and Pujent's Sound companies, at one million of dollars. The proposition of these English companies has the sanction of the British Government, and is strongly pressed upon the Senate by Mr. Secretary Buchanan. The correspondent of the Journal states that the proposition meets favor with Webster, Calhoun, Benton and Hannegan.—Ex. paper.

☞ The following suggestive remarks are from the "Western World" for October:—

"Since our last issue the steamship California has left our shores for the Pacific, the first of a line to traverse the coast of California, Oregon, and Panama. The simple fact of her departure, with perhaps some sterotyped compliment to her builders and owners, is all that is said on the occasion. But is a pregnant fact; one whose results will be incalculably great. Just look at it a moment. Yonder lies the bright and blue Pacific, under whose almost cloudless sky repose whole Archipelagoes of fair and fertile islands: vieing in beauty with the classic isles of the Levant, as one star vies with another in brilliancy. Well, well do we know them and their manifold beauties. We knew them first in those now distant days, when swarms of dark eyed damsels swarm out to the ship the moment the hoarse cable grated throu' the hawser; when they were to the general fancy, (what they were not, however, in fact,) but a synonyme of Arcadian purity and simplicity. We have known them since they commenced their rapid career of civilization; since many a cottage of coral has taken the place of the cocoa hovel, and the modest dress of the European that of the demoralizing tapa. We have long thought that Polynesia, ("region of many islands,") would one day furnish the most desirable residences in the world, but not until some way of reaching them were at command other than by the long, dangerous, and expensive Cape Horn route. Let the California steamers be successful, and we shall soon bring the Pacific coast and island within a short, cheap and pleasant journey. Thither will the enterprising of all trades and classes repair, as their interests, pleasures and tastes may prompt, deterred by no long and perilous sea voyage.

Still farther Westward, just opposite the coast of California, lies populous China. Her instinct is to trade. It is the very law of her life. She is Conneticut on a vastly extended scale. Her ports are closed by the jealous power-holders, not by the people. They have a world of good things to part with in exchange for the world of good things we could send them. Once let a busy Yankee commerce find its way to Oregon and California, supplied and animated by rapid and regular steam communication with the United States, and a branch traffic would at once spring up with those noble and populous seaports which line the Northeastern coast of China. As long as the Pacific was so far distant, when the voyage thither was round the bleak and dangerous "Horn" resources at which we thus most imperfectly glanced, were almost beyond our reach. The steamboat, however, will change the face of this whole matter.—The mines of coal which have long been known to exist on the "West coast," will be worked; sequestered islands will become colonies; and the great peak of Mount ou Roah, (magnificent compeer of the topmost of the Himmalayas,) will be the landmark of fleets of busy vessels engaged in a delightful and lucrative commerce. We look upon the departure of the steamship California as a fact of deep significance, and such it will be found.

THE ENGLISH ESTABLISHMENT.—A recent pamphlet, published in England, states that the clergy of the established church of England, Wales and Ireland received for their service, £8,896,000. Their churches embrace six millions four hundred thousand people. The clergy of all the other demominations of the Christian Church in the same countries, embracing fourteen millions six hundred thousand people, receive, according to the statement in the pamphlet just referred to, only £1,024,000. Can this state of things endure? will it be perpetuated? The expense of sustaining the clergy in all the other countries in Christendom, including France, the United States, Spain, Portugal, Hungary, Italy, Austria, Switzerland, Prussia, Germany, Small States Holland, Netherlands, Denmark, Sweden, Russia, Christians in Turkey, South America, &c., &c., with a population of 198,728,000 is estimated at £8,842,000—a sum less than the amount expended in support of the English establishment.—Ex paper.

HOT SPRINGS OF ARKANSAS.—These springs are one among the wonders of creation. They are worthy a travel of many hundred miles merely to look at. They are located in Hot Spring county, fifty-five miles west of Little Rock, on a creek which empties into the Washita river, six miles distant, in latitude 34½. The creek, which rises in the mountains some four miles above, winds its way between two hills, running north and south, with a valley between, which is in some places fifty, and in some one hundred yards wide. On the side of one of the hills, which is very precipitous, and rises to the height of four hundred feet, the Hot Springs break out in various positions from the margin of the creek to the summit of the hill. The number of springs is said to be about seventy-five or eighty, within a space of a few hundred yards; but the number is not uniform, new springs breaking out and old ones filling up. There are numerous cold water springs within a few yards of the hot ones. The heat of the water is sufficient to scald a hog or fowl, to boil eggs or wash clothes, without the aid of fire.

The creek is so much heated by the springs that horses and cattle will not drink of it for a mile below. The United States claim the Hot Springs as a reservation; individuals claim them under preemption. The consequence is that only temporary improvements are or will be made until the title is confirmed. These Springs are destined to attract great attention for their invaluable healing properties, as well as natural curiosity. In the same vicinity is the Magnetic Cave, a large bed of magnetic rock, and the Crystal mountain, where beautiful crystals of various forms are found.—In several of the mountains are found the best quarries of whetstone known in the United States. Accommodations for invalids are greatly improved the present year.—Nashville Whig.

From the New York Express.

We have taken much interest in the perusal of an elaborate series of papers, recently laid before the London Board of Health, which prescribe an alleged infallible remedy for Asiatic Cholera. It was communicated for publication by a distinguished officer of rank and long resident of India. The details are exceedingly minute and lengthy, but we shall endeavor to give a condensed and comprehensive recapitulation of the material parts, for the information of our readers. His first information as regards Cholera, we are told, was derived from reading an Arabic work of great antiquity, and the frequent perusal of oriental works on medicine, with a learned native physician of the principal Hakeem (physician) of the old Nawab of Oude. The remedies prescribed for the cure of the disease were carefully written down in his memorandom book.—His narrative is thus continued:—

"When the cholera broke out in Bengal in 1817, it did not, till after some time, strike me that it was the same disease of which I had read, and the faith I had in oriental medicine did not shake my confidence in the remedies prescribed by our medical men. But I was at length undeceived; and after long experience became impressed with the conviction that no remedy had been discovered worthy of reliance, having tried everything that had been favorably spoken of, not always indeed without success, but in the main with signal failure, so much so, that when a case was brought to me, my experience justified a hope, but, on the contrary, complete despair."

He was now convinced that this was the disease of which he had been reading, and procured information from the source above nam-

☞ The following suggestive remarks are from the "Western World" for October:—

"Since our last issue the steamship California has left our shores for the Pacific, the first of a line to traverse the coast of California, Oregon, and Panama. The simple fact of her departure, with perhaps some sterotyped compliment to her builders and owners, is all that is said on the occasion. But is a pregnant fact; one whose results will be incalculably great. Just look at it a moment. Yonder lies the bright and blue Pacific, under whose almost cloudless sky repose whole Archipelagoes of fair and fertile islands: vieing in beauty with the classic isles of the Levant, as one star vies with another in brilliancy. Well, well do we know them and their manifold beauties. We knew them first in those now distant days, when swarms of dark eyed damsels swarm out to the ship the moment the hoarse cable grated throu' the hawser; when they were to the general fancy, (what they were not, however, in fact,) but a synonyme of Arcadian purity and simplicity. We have known them since they commenced their rapid career of civilization; since many a cottage of coral has taken the place of the cocoa hovel, and the modest dress of the European that of the demoralizing tapa. We have long thought that Polynesia, ("region of many islands,") would one day furnish the most desirable residences in the world, but not until some way of reaching them were at command other than by the long, dangerous, and expensive Cape Horn route. Let the California steamers be successful, and we shall soon bring the Pacific coast and island within a short, cheap and pleasant journey. Thither will the enterprising of all trades and classes repair, as their interests, pleasures and tastes may prompt, deterred by no long and perilous sea voyage.

Still farther Westward, just opposite the coast of California, lies populous China. Her instinct is to trade. It is the very law of her life. She is Conneticut on a vastly extended scale. Her ports are closed by the jealous power-holders, not by the people. They have a world of good things to part with in exchange for the world of good things we could send them. Once let a busy Yankee commerce find its way to Oregon and California, supplied and animated by rapid and regular steam communication with the United States, and a branch traffic would at once spring up with those noble and populous seaports which line the Northeastern coast of China. As long as the Pacific was so far distant, when the voyage thither was round the bleak and dangerous "Horn" resources at which we thus most imperfectly glanced, were almost beyond our reach. The steamboat, however, will change the face of this whole matter.—The mines of coal which have long been known to exist on the "West coast," will be worked; sequestered islands will become colonies; and the great peak of Mount ou Roah, (magnificent compeer of the topmost of the Himmalayas,) will be the landmark of fleets of busy vessels engaged in a delightful and lucrative commerce. We look upon the departure of the steamship California as a fact of deep significance, and such it will be found.

The English Establishment.—A recent pamphlet, published in England, states that the clergy of the established church of England, Wales and Ireland received for their service, £8,896,000. Their churches embrace six millions four hundred thousand people. The clergy of all the other demominations of the Christian Church in the same countries, embracing fourteen millions six hundred thousand people, receive, according to the statement in the pamphlet just referred to, only £1,024,000. Can this state of things endure? will it be perpetuated? The expense of sustaining the clergy in all the other countries in Christendom, including France, the United States, Spain, Portugal, Hungary, Italy, Austria, Switzerland, Prussia, Germany, Small States Holland, Netherlands, Denmark, Sweden, Russia, Christians in Turkey, South America, &c., &c., with a population of 198,728,000 is estimated at £8,842,000—a sum less than the amount expended in support of the English establishment.—Ex paper.

Hot Springs of Arkansas.—These springs are one among the wonders of creation. They are worthy a travel of many hundred miles merely to look at. They are located in Hot Spring county, fifty-five miles west of Little Rock, on a creek which empties into the Washita river, six miles distant, in latitude 34½. The creek, which rises in the mountains some four miles above, winds its way between two hills, running north and south, with a valley between, which is in some places fifty, and in some one hundred yards wide. On the side of one of the hills, which is very precipitous, and rises to the height of four hundred feet, the Hot Springs break out in various positions from the margin of the creek to the summit of the hill. The number of springs is said to be about seventy-five or eighty, within a space of a few hundred yards; but the number is not uniform, new springs breaking out and old ones filling up. There are numerous cold water springs within a few yards of the hot ones. The heat of the water is sufficient to scald a hog or fowl, to boil eggs or wash clothes, without the aid of fire.

The creek is so much heated by the springs that horses and cattle will not drink of it for a mile below. The United States claim the Hot Springs as a reservation; individuals claim them under preemption. The consequence is that only temporary improvements are or will be made until the title is confirmed. These Springs are destined to attract great attention for their invaluable healing properties, as well as natural curiosity. In the same vicinity is the Magnetic Cave, a large bed of magnetic rock, and the Crystal mountain, where beautiful crystals of various forms are found.—In several of the mountains are found the best quarries of whetstone known in the United States. Accommodations for invalids are greatly improved the present year.—Nashville Whig.

From the New York Express.

We have taken much interest in the perusal of an elaborate series of papers, recently laid before the London Board of Health, which prescribe an alleged infallible remedy for Asiatic Cholera. It was communicated for publication by a distinguished officer of rank and long resident of India. The details are exceedingly minute and lengthy, but we shall endeavor to give a condensed and comprehensive recapitulation of the material parts, for the information of our readers. His first information as regards Cholera, we are told, was derived from reading an Arabic work of great antiquity, and the frequent perusal of oriental works on medicine, with a learned native physician of the principal Hakeem (physician) of the old Nawab of Oude. The remedies prescribed for the cure of the disease were carefully written down in his memorandom book.—His narrative is thus continued:—

"When the cholera broke out in Bengal in 1817, it did not, till after some time, strike me that it was the same disease of which I had read, and the faith I had in oriental medicine did not shake my confidence in the remedies prescribed by our medical men. But I was at length undeceived; and after long experience became impressed with the conviction that no remedy had been discovered worthy of reliance, having tried everything that had been favorably spoken of, not always indeed without success, but in the main with signal failure, so much so, that when a case was brought to me, my experience justified a hope, but, on the contrary, complete despair."

He was now convinced that this was the disease of which he had been reading, and procured information from the source above named, and he accordingly determined to try the remedy prescribed by the Arabian doctors. This he did, and with the most signal success, even in the most aggravated and desperate cases. This ancient remedy for the most destructive disease of either ancient or modern times, does not consist of rare or numerous ingredients.—They are articles in common use by the Asiatics, and can be procured easily in Europe and America; namely, asafœtida, opium, black pepper, (pulverized.) We subjoin the recipe without any abbreviation, and commend it at least to the investigation and consideration of practitioners in general, and the Board of Health in particular:—

"CURE FOR THE CHOLERA.—Ingredients—Asafœtida, opium, black paper, pulverized. These ingredients, more or less pure, will be found in every town and village.

"The dose for an adult is from a grain and a half to two grains of each, made into a pill. This according as the ingredients are pure or otherwise. If pure 1½ grains will suffice.

"The medicine should be made up into pills of one dose each, and kept for use in a phial well closed, as it is of great importance to check the disease the instant of its attack.

"The best mode of administering the pill is not by swallowing it whole, lest it be rejected in that state, but by chewing it and swallowing it with the moisture of the mouth, and a very little brandy and water to wash it down. The next best way of administering the medicine is by bruising the pill in a spoonful of brandy and water, and then swallowing it.

"Much liquid must not be given; but to relieve the thirst, which is great, brandy and water by spoonfuls occasionally is the best mode.

"The dose should be repeated every half or three quarters of an hour, according to the urgency of the symptoms, until they have been subdued. From three to five doses have generally been sufficient for this, although as many as eight have been given before health has been restored in bad cases.

"Should great prostration of strength prevail, with spasm or without spasm, after the other symptoms (vomiting, purging, &c.,) have been subdued, the medicine must not be wholly left off, but given in half or quarter doses, so as to keep up the strength and restore the pulse.

"Friction, with stimulating liniment of some kind, ought to be applied carefully to the stomach, abdomen, legs and arms; and when pain in the stomach has been severe, and there was reason to fear congestion of the liver, eight or ten grains of calomel have been given with good effect.

"In cases of collapse and great protraction of strength, application of the tourniquet to the arms and legs has been recomended, in order, as it were, to husband the vital power by limiting the extent of the circulation. This may be tried, using a ligature of tape or other substance, if the tourniquet be not available.

"The favorable symptoms of recovery are restoration of the pulse, returning warmth of the body, and sleep; and after being refreshed by sleep, the recovery being complete, a dose of castor oil may be given."

FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.—It is now said to be generally understood, that the princes of the house of Orleans renounce all pretensions to the throne of France, even if the monarchy should be re-established in favor of the Duke of Bordeaux. As yet Prince Louis Napoleon has decidedly the best chances for the Presidency. The Legitimists would vote for him from hatred to the Republic, and many of the Socialists would give him their vote in expectation that he would be induced to favor that party. The decree of banishment against the Bonaparte family has been abrogated.

Eight hundred colonists left Paris on the 15th for Algeria. They departed amidst the cheers of thousands. Two bodies of colonists are to leave each week.

The Parisian police have discovered and apprehended a band of robbers, whose leader kept a regular set of books, in which each thief was credited with the amount produced by the articles which he had stolen, and was debited with his receipts and his share of the joint expenses, while an engagement book contained a list of the theatres, churches, and other places which were to be visited on certain days by particular members of the gang.

ITALY.—Letters from Milan, of the 12th, mention a conflict which has taken place between the Hungarians and Croats in that city.—400 Hungarians had deserted from Milan, and were proceeding towards Switzerland. Gen. Oudinot had left Milan.

AUSTRIA.—The Emperor has retired to Olmutz, in Moravia. He carries with him an effective force, and from that point he will be able to rouse the countless thousands of Sclavonians who are ready to carry on war against their German fellow subjects. A civil war, more frightful than ever recorded in history, seems upon the point of bursting forth.

INTERESTING FACTS.

A bell rung under water returns a tone as distinct as if rung in the air.

Stop one ear with the finger, and press the other to the end of a long stick of deal wood, and if a watch be held at the other end of the wood, ticking will be heard, be the wood or stick ever so long.

Tie a poker on the middle of a strip of flannel two or three feet long, and press thumbs or fingers into your ears, while you swing the poker against an iron fender, and you will hear a souud like that of a very heavy church bell.

These experiments prove that water, wood and flannel are good conductors of sound, for the sound of the bell, the water and the fender, pass through the water, and along the deal and flannel to the ear.

It must be observed, that a body while in the act of sounding is in a state of vibration, which it communicates to the surrounding air; the undulations of the air affect the ear, and excite in us the sense of sound. Sound of all kinds, it is ascertained, travels at the rate of 13 miles in a minute; the softest whisper travels as fast as the most tremendous thunder. The knowledge of this fact has been applied to the measurement of distances.

Suppose a ship fire a gun in distress, the light of which is seen ashore, or by another vessel, twenty seconds before the report is heard, it is known to be at a distance of twenty times 1142 feet, or little more than four and a half miles.

Again, if I see a vivid flash of lightning, and in two seconds hear a tremendous clap of thunder, I know that the thunder cloud is not more than 760 yards from the place where I am, and should instantly retire from an exposed situation.

The pulse of a healthy person beats about 75 in a minute; if, therefore, between a flash of lightning and the thunder I can feel 1, 2, 3, 4 beats of my pulse, I know that the clouds are 900, 1800 2700 feet from me.

Sound, like light, after it has reflected from several places, may be collected into one point as a focus, where it will be more audible than in any other part. On this principle whispering galleries are constructed.

Speaking trumpets and those intended to assist the hearing of deaf persons, depend on the reflection of sound from the sides of the trumpet, and also upon its being confined and prevented from spreading in every direction. A speaking trumpet, to have its full effect, must be directed in a line toward the hearer. The report of a gun is much louder when it is pointed towards a person than one placed in a contrary direction.

ed, and he accordingly determined to try the remedy prescribed by the Arabian doctors. This he did, and with the most signal success, even in the most aggravated and desperate cases. This ancient remedy for the most destructive disease of either ancient or modern times, does not consist of rare or numerous ingredients.—They are articles in common use by the Asiatics, and can be procured easily in Europe and America; namely, asafœtida, opium, black pepper, (pulverized.) We subjoin the recipe without any abbreviation, and commend it at least to the investigation and consideration of practitioners in general, and the Board of Health in particular:—

"CURE FOR THE CHOLERA.—Ingredients—Asafœtida, opium, black paper, pulverized. These ingredients, more or less pure, will be found in every town and village.

"The dose for an adult is from a grain and a half to two grains of each, made into a pill. This according as the ingredients are pure or otherwise. If pure 1½ grains will suffice.

"The medicine should be made up into pills of one dose each, and kept for use in a phial well closed, as it is of great importance to check the disease the instant of its attack.

"The best mode of administering the pill is not by swallowing it whole, lest it be rejected in that state, but by chewing it and swallowing it with the moisture of the mouth, and a very little brandy and water to wash it down. The next best way of administering the medicine is by bruising the pill in a spoonful of brandy and water, and then swallowing it.

"Much liquid must not be given; but to relieve the thirst, which is great, brandy and water by spoonfuls occasionally is the best mode.

"The dose should be repeated every half or three quarters of an hour, according to the urgency of the symptoms, until they have been subdued. From three to five doses have generally been sufficient for this, although as many as eight have been given before health has been restored in bad cases.

"Should great prostration of strength prevail, with spasm or without spasm, after the other symptoms (vomiting, purging, &c.,) have been subdued, the medicine must not be wholly left off, but given in half or quarter doses, so as to keep up the strength and restore the pulse.

"Friction, with stimulating liniment of some kind, ought to be applied carefully to the stomach, abdomen, legs and arms; and when pain in the stomach has been severe, and there was reason to fear congestion of the liver, eight or ten grains of calomel have been given with good effect.

"In cases of collapse and great protraction of strength, application of the tourniquet to the arms and legs has been recomended, in order, as it were, to husband the vital power by limiting the extent of the circulation. This may be tried, using a ligature of tape or other substance, if the tourniquet be not available.

"The favorable symptoms of recovery are restoration of the pulse, returning warmth of the body, and sleep; and after being refreshed by sleep, the recovery being complete, a dose of castor oil may be given."

FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.—It is now said to be generally understood, that the princes of the house of Orleans renounce all pretensions to the throne of France, even if the monarchy should be re-established in favor of the Duke of Bordeaux. As yet Prince Louis Napoleon has decidedly the best chances for the Presidency. The Legitimists would vote for him from hatred to the Republic, and many of the Socialists would give him their vote in expectation that he would be induced to favor that party. The decree of banishment against the Bonaparte family has been abrogated.

Eight hundred colonists left Paris on the 15th for Algeria. They departed amidst the cheers of thousands. Two bodies of colonists are to leave each week.

The Parisian police have discovered and apprehended a band of robbers, whose leader kept a regular set of books, in which each thief was credited with the amount produced by the articles which he had stolen, and was debited with his receipts and his share of the joint expenses, while an engagement book contained a list of the theatres, churches, and other places which were to be visited on certain days by particular members of the gang.

ITALY.—Letters from Milan, of the 12th, mention a conflict which has taken place between the Hungarians and Croats in that city.—400 Hungarians had deserted from Milan, and were proceeding towards Switzerland. Gen. Oudinot had left Milan.

AUSTRIA.—The Emperor has retired to Olmutz, in Moravia. He carries with him an effective force, and from that point he will be able to rouse the countless thousands of Sclavonians who are ready to carry on war against their German fellow subjects. A civil war, more frightful than ever recorded in history, seems upon the point of bursting forth.

INTERESTING FACTS.

A bell rung under water returns a tone as distinct as if rung in the air.

Stop one ear with the finger, and press the other to the end of a long stick of deal wood, and if a watch be held at the other end of the wood, ticking will be heard, be the wood or stick ever so long.

Tie a poker on the middle of a strip of flannel two or three feet long, and press thumbs or fingers into your ears, while you swing the poker against an iron fender, and you will hear a sound like that of a very heavy church bell.

These experiments prove that water, wood and flannel are good conductors of sound, for the sound of the bell, the water and the fender, pass through the water, and along the deal and flannel to the ear.

It must be observed, that a body while in the act of sounding is in a state of vibration, which it communicates to the surrounding air; the undulations of the air affect the ear, and excite in us the sense of sound. Sound of all kinds, it is ascertained, travels at the rate of 13 miles in a minute; the softest whisper travels as fast as the most tremendous thunder. The knowledge of this fact has been applied to the measurement of distances.

Suppose a ship fire a gun in distress, the light of which is seen ashore, or by another vessel, twenty seconds before the report is heard, it is known to be at a distance of twenty times 1142 feet, or little more than four and a half miles.

Again, if I see a vivid flash of lightning, and in two seconds hear a tremendous clap of thunder, I know that the thunder cloud is not more than 760 yards from the place where I am, and should instantly retire from an exposed situation.

The pulse of a healthy person beats about 75 in a minute; if, therefore, between a flash of lightning and the thunder I can feel 1, 2, 3, 4 beats of my pulse, I know that the clouds are 900, 1800 2700 feet from me.

Sound, like light, after it has reflected from several places, may be collected into one point as a focus, where it will be more audible than in any other part. On this principle whispering galleries are constructed.

Speaking trumpets and those intended to assist the hearing of deaf persons, depend on the reflection of sound from the sides of the trumpet, and also upon its being confined and prevented from spreading in every direction. A speaking trumpet, to have its full effect, must be directed in a line toward the hearer. The report of a gun is much louder when it is pointed towards a person than one placed in a contrary direction.

THE ASIATIC CHOLERA.

The approach of this dreadful scourge, its slow but sure progress westward, and consequently its apprehended re-appearance on the American continent, have been the subject of much comment in various journals of this country and England. The following article from the London Morning Chronicle, describing its origin and former course through the Old World, with some prominent peculiarities of the disease, is full of interest, and commends itself strongly to the attention of the reader :—

"The unknown must be blended with the terrible to produce the sublimity of fear; traditionary impressions of by-gone horrors grow week and faint as contemporary witnesses die away; and an entire nation cannot be thrown into a phrenzied state of alarm in 1848, by precisely the same cause, and in precisely the same manner as in 1832. The threatened approach of the Asiatic cholera is contemplated with the most perfected calmness, almost amounting to indifference, this time; and we are far from wishing to disturb an equanimity, which may do something to avert, and a great deal to mitigate the evil. And, at the same time, it is best to familiarize ourselves with its features, however loathsome, and be prepared to recognize and grapple with it from the first hour it manifests itself. The East Indies are its birth and resting place. It broke out in the Delta of the Ganges in 1817, and arrived in England in 1831, occupying sixteen years on the journal. Just sixteen years have elapsed since it disappeared from England, and started fresh from the Bengalese. Its comet-like course, therefore, would seem to be subject to rules, although these have hitherto baffled science. Nothing can be more irregular than its course. It jumps over enormous spaces, and then retraces its steps, as if to repair the omission. It runs down one bank of a river for several hundred miles, and never touches the other bank. It has dealt the same with streets.

"In Paris, it has happened that all the inmates in the upper and lower stories of a house lay dying whilst not a single person in the middle stories fell ill. We have on record, (says Col. Rowls, as quoted in Mr. Chailiee's pamphlet,) an instance of one side of a ship in Madras roads being struck by cholera, while the other side was untouched; nor did the men on the side not attacked by it afterwards suffer, although they attended upon their afflicted companions and buried them, that is, threw them into the sea as they successively died. This gentleman adds that the cholera is considered by the native Indian doctors to arise from animal miasma, consisting of migratory insects analogous to those known as blights. But this theory has found no favor with the medicinal men of Europe, who, however we rejoice to say, have at length decided, by an overwhelming weight of experience and authority, that the disease is not contagious. Science has its heroes as well as war, and its martyrs as well as religion. More than one French physician placed himself in direct contact with a patient in the worst stage, in order to bring the contagion question to the proof,

"The first known case in Great Britain broke out in Sunderland, in October, 1831. The greatest number of deaths was in the densly populated quarters near the river; but the average mortality of the metropolis was not much increased, and the bills of mortality lead to the conclusion that the influenza is as destructive in this country as the cholera. The scene of the most fearful ravages of the cholera was France, or rather Paris, which it reached on March 2d, 1832; passing over the intervening localities, and springing from the English to the French capitol at a bound.

"Terror at first did not seem to keep pace with the danger. The plague had surprised the Parisians in the midst of the festivities of Mid-Lent, and the intrepid French character seemed first to brave the destructive malady. The streets and boulevards were thronged with masks as usual; the promenaders mustered in great numbers.—People amused themselves with looking at caricatures in the shop windows, the subject of which was the cholera morbus. The theatres were filled in the evening.

"There were young men, who, in the extravagance of their foolhardiness, plunged into unusual excesses. Since we are to die tomorrow, they said, let us exhaust all the joys of life to-day. Most of these rash youths passed from the masked ball to the Hotel Dieu, and died before sunset next day. The higher classes were not spared in Paris; and as many of them as could find the necessary conveyances took flight. But the royal family set a noble example by remaining; and the heir apparent, the lamented Duke of Orleans, made a persoual tour of inspection through the hospitals. Cassimir Perier (the President of the council) accompanied him, and this was an incontestible proof of courage on the part of a man who had long carried the seeds of death within him, whose nerves were irritable to excess, and who shuddered at the mere idea of a coffin. He never recovered from the impression, and he died three weeks afterwards.

"There was a period when the deaths in Paris were calculated at 1300 or 1400 a day. Hearses fell short, and recourse was had to artillery wagons. These having no springs, the violent jolting burst the coffins, the bodies were thrown out, and the pavement was stained with them. The people went mad with terror, believed the wildest fictions, and indulged in the most dreadful atrocities. It was rumored that the deaths were all owing to poison, and that there was no such thing as cholera at all. Then you might behold all the horrid secrets of modern civilization displayed in the rolling billows of a seething population. From those darksome quarters where misery hides its forgotten head, the capitol is suddenly inundated by multitudes of bare armed men, whose gloomy faces glared with hate. What sought they? What did they demand? They never told this, only they explored the city with prying eyes, and run about with ferocious mutterings. Murders soon occurred.

"A Jew was killed because he laughed in a strange manner and carried a packet of white powder (which turned out to be camphor) in his hand. A young man was butchered for looking into a wine seller's window, and a coal-porter made his dog tear the dead body. Private subscriptions poured in on all sides; every imaginable precaution was taken by the authorities; the medical men made superhuman efforts, but no common method of treatment having been agreed upon, the most opposite systems were pursued, even in the same hospital or the same ward. The attendants had to execute directly opposite orders for cases perfectly identical; the patient who was dosed with punch, saw ice given to the man in the next bed, and thinking himself used only as a subject for experiments, he died with rage in his heart.

"Although no specific has yet been discovered, it seems agreed that the stimulating mode of treatment is the best. Bad or unwholesome food of every sort is mentioned as a predisposing cause."

By the latest advices from Europe it appears to be steadily advancing in the course it took in 1831, and, says a London correspondent of the Washington National Era, "the hope that it will be arrested in its progress is altogether visionary." But there are several facts which render its approach less a subject of alarm than it was formerly. More accurate knowledge has been obtained as to the manner in which it is propagated, and surer remedies have been discovered. The Sanitary Commission, appointed by the English Government to investigate this subject, have made a report, in which they say :—

"The Asiatic cholera appears to be carried by a poison diffused in the atmosphere, which acts with peculiar intensity on the mucus membrane of the alimentary canal. The irritation set up in the membrane, in most cases, is not violent at first, but if it be allowed to continue unchecked many hours, it produces such a change in

THE ASIATIC CHOLERA.

The approach of this dreadful scourge, its slow but sure progress westward, and consequently its apprehended re-appearance on the American continent, have been the subject of much comment in various journals of this country and England. The following article from the London Morning Chronicle, describing its origin and former course through the Old World, with some prominent peculiarities of the disease, is full of interest, and commends itself strongly to the attention of the reader:—

"The unknown must be blended with the terrible to produce the sublimity of fear; traditionary impressions of by-gone horrors grow week and faint as contemporary witnesses die away; and an entire nation cannot be thrown into a phrenzied state of alarm in 1848, by precisely the same cause, and in precisely the same manner as in 1832. The threatened approach of the Asiatic cholera is contemplated with the most perfected calmness, almost amounting to indifference, this time; and we are far from wishing to disturb an equanimity, which may do something to avert, and a great deal to mitigate the evil. And, at the same time, it is best to familiarize ourselves with its features, however loathsome, and be prepared to recognize and grapple with it from the first hour it manifests itself. The East Indies are its birth and resting place. It broke out in the Delta of the Ganges in 1817, and arrived in England in 1831, occupying sixteen years on the journal. Just sixteen years have elapsed since it disappeared from England, and started fresh from the Bengalese. Its comet-like course, therefore, would seem to be subject to rules, although these have hitherto baffled science. Nothing can be more irregular than its course. It jumps over enormous spaces, and then retraces its steps, as if to repair the omission. It runs down one bank of a river for several hundred miles, and never touches the other bank. It has dealt the same with streets.

"In Paris, it has happened that all the inmates in the upper and lower stories of a house lay dying whilst not a single person in the middle stories fell ill. We have on record, (says Col. Rowls, as quoted in Mr. Chailiee's pamphlet,) an instance of one side of a ship in Madras roads being struck by cholera, while the other side was untouched; nor did the men on the side not attacked by it afterwards suffer, although they attended upon their afflicted companions and buried them, that is, threw them into the sea as they successively died. This gentleman adds that the cholera is considered by the native Indian doctors to arise from animal miasma, consisting of migratory insects analogous to those known as blights. But this theory has found no favor with the medicinal men of Europe, who, however we rejoice to say, have at length decided, by an overwhelming weight of experience and authority, that the disease is not contagious. Science has its heroes as well as war, and its martyrs as well as religion. More than one French physician placed himself in direct contact with a patient in the worst stage, in order to bring the contagion question to the proof,

"The first known case in Great Britain broke out in Sunderland, in October, 1831. The greatest number of deaths was in the densly populated quarters near the river; but the average mortality of the metropolis was not much increased, and the bills of mortality lead to the conclusion that the influenza is as destructive in this country as the cholera. The scene of the most fearful ravages of the cholera was France, or rather Paris, which it reached on March 2d, 1832; passing over the intervening localities, and springing from the English to the French capitol at a bound.

"Terror at first did not seem to keep pace with the danger. The plague had surprised the Parisians in the midst of the festivities of Mid-Lent, and the intrepid French character seemed first to brave the destructive malady. The streets and boulevards were thronged with masks as usual; the promenaders mustered in great numbers.—People amused themselves with looking at caricatures in the shop windows, the subject of which was the cholera morbus. The theatres were filled in the evening.

"There were young men, who, in the extravagance of their foolhardiness, plunged into unusual excesses. Since we are to die tomorrow, they said, let us exhaust all the joys of life to-day. Most of these rash youths passed from the masked ball to the Hotel Dieu, and died before sunset next day. The higher classes were not spared in Paris; and as many of them as could find the necessary conveyances took flight. But the royal family set a noble example by remaining; and the heir apparent, the lamented Duke of Orleans, made a persoual tour of inspection through the hospitals. Cassimir Perier (the President of the council) accompanied him, and this was an incontestible proof of courage on the part of a man who had long carried the seeds of death within him, whose nerves were irritable to excess, and who shuddered at the mere idea of a coffin. He never recovered from the impression, and he died three weeks afterwards.

"There was a period when the deaths in Paris were calculated at 1300 or 1400 a day. Hearses fell short, and recourse was had to artillery wagons. These having no springs, the violent jolting burst the coffins, the bodies were thrown out, and the pavement was stained with them. The people went mad with terror, believed the wildest fictions, and indulged in the most dreadful atrocities. It was rumored that the deaths were all owing to poison, and that there was no such thing as cholera at all. Then you might behold all the horrid secrets of modern civilization displayed in the rolling billows of a seething population. From those darksome quarters where misery hides its forgotten head, the capitol is suddenly inundated by multitudes of bare armed men, whose gloomy faces glared with hate. What sought they? What did they demand? They never told this, only they explored the city with prying eyes, and run about with ferocious mutterings. Murders soon occurred.

"A Jew was killed because he laughed in a strange manner and carried a packet of white powder (which turned out to be camphor) in his hand. A young man was butchered for looking into a wine seller's window, and a coal-porter made his dog tear the dead body. Private subscriptions poured in on all sides; every imaginable precaution was taken by the authorities; the medical men made superhuman efforts, but no common method of treatment having been agreed upon, the most opposite systems were pursued, even in the same hospital or the same ward. The attendants had to execute directly opposite orders for cases perfectly identical; the patient who was dosed with punch, saw ice given to the man in the next bed and thinking himself used only as a subject for experiments, he died with rage in his heart.

"Although no specific has yet been discovered, it seems agreed that the stimulating mode of treatment is the best. Bad or unwholesome food of every sort is mentioned as a predisposing cause."

By the latest advices from Europe it appears to be steadily advancing in the course it took in 1831, and, says a London correspondent of the Washington National Era, "the hope that it will be arrested in its progress is altogether visionary." But there are several facts which render its approach less a subject of alarm than was formerly. More accurate knowledge has been obtained as the manner in which it is propagated, and surer remedies have been discovered. The Sanitary Commission, appointed by the English Government to investigate this subject, have made a report, in which they say:—

"The Asiatic cholera appears to be carried by a poison diffused in the atmosphere, which acts with peculiar intensity on the mucous membrane of the alimentary canal. The irritation set up in this membrane, in most cases, is not violent at first, but if it be allowed to continue unchecked many hours, it produces such a change the membrane, that the thin and colorless portion of the blood is poured out from it with the same rapidity as it would be if an opening were made in the great vein of the arm.

"The Commission have also ascertained the fact that the cholera is not contagious, but is propagated by impure air, caused by a neglect of drainage, and the accumulation of filth. Thus, that community which is the cleanest, and not that which is least exposed to contact with its victims, is most likely to escape the scourge.

"The premonitory symptoms of this disease afford timely warning for the use of effectual remedies. The first symptom is a looseness of the bowels. This may be accompanied with pains in the bowels, or it may not. If proper remedies are applied at this period, the disease is generally and easily checked."

MAN—HIS MENTAL POWER.

[Extract from a speech of Horace Mann.]

Now a man is weak in his muscles: he is strong only in his faculties. In physical strength how much superior is an ox or a horse to man—in fleetness, the dromedary or the eagle. It is through mental stength only that man becomes the superior and governor of animals. But it was not the design of providence that the work of the world should be performed by muscular strength. God has filled the earth and imbued the elements with energies of greater power than all the inhabitants of a thousand planets like ours.—Whence come our necessaries and our luxuries? those comforts and appliances that make the difference between the houseless, wandering tribe of Indians, in the far West, and a New England village? They do not come wholly or principally from the original, unassisted strength of the human arm, but from the employment, through intelligence and skill, of those great natural forces with which the bountiful Creator has filled every part of the material universe. Caloric, gravitation, expansibility, compressibility, electricity, chemical affinities and repulsion, spontaneous velocities—these are the mighty agents which the intellect of man harnesses to the car of improvement. The application of water, wind, and steam, to the propulsion of machinery, and to the transportation of men and merchandize from place to place, has added ten thousand fold to the actual products of human industry. How small the wheel which the stoutest laborer can turn, and how soon will he be weary! Compare this with a wheel driving a thousand spindles or looms, which a stream of water can turn, and never tire.—A locomotive will take five hundred men, and bear them on their journey hundreds of miles a day. Look at these same five hundred men, starting from the same post, and attempting the same distance, with all the equestrian's toil and tardiness. The cotton mills of Massachusetts will turn out more cloth in one day than could have been manufactured by all the inhabitants of the eastern continent during the tenth century. On an element, which in ancient times was supposed to be exclusively within the control of the gods, and deemed impious for human power to intrude, even there the gigantic forces of nature, which human science and skill have enlisted in their service, confront and overcome the raging of the elements—breasting and careering triumphantly around the globe. The velocity of winds, the weight of waters, and the rage of steam, are powers, each one of which is infinitely stronger than all the strength of all the nations and races of mankind, were it gathered into a single arm. And all these energies are given us on one condition—the condition of intelligence—that is, of education. Had God intended that the work of the world should be done by human bones and sinews, He would have given us an arm as solid and as strong as the shaft of a steam engine, and enabled us to stand, day and night, and turn the crank of a steamship while sailing to Liverpool and Calcutta. Had God designed the human muscles to do the work of the world, then, instead of the ingredients of gun powder or gun cotton, and the expansive force of heat, He would have given us hands which could take a granite quarry and break its solid acres in suitable symmetrical blocks, as easily as we now open an orange. Had He intended us for bearing burdens, He would have given us Atlantean shoulders, by which we could carry the vast freights of rail car and steam ship as a porter carries his pack. He would have given us lungs by which we could blow fleets before us, as wings to sweep the ocean wastes. But instead of iron arms, and Atlantean shoulders, and the lungs of Boreas, he has given us mind, a soul, a capacity of knowledge, and thus of appropriating all these energies of nature to our own use.—Instead of a telescopic and microscopic eye, He has given us power to invent the telescope and microscope. Instead of ten thousand fingers, He has given us genius inventive of the power loom and the printing press. Without a cultivated intellect man is among the weakest of all the dynamical forces of nature; with a cultivated intellect he commands them all.

A thousand slaves may stand by a river, and to them it is only an object of fear or of superstition. An intelligent man surpasses the ancient idea of a river god; he stands by the Penobscott, the Kennebec, the Merrimac or the Connecticut; he commands each to do more work than could be performed by a hundred thousand men—to saw timber, to make cloth, to grind corn—and they obey.—Ignorant slaves stand upon a coal mine, and to them it is only a worthless part of the inanimate earth. An intelligent man uses the same mine to print a million of books. Slaves will seek to obtain the same crop from the same field year after year, though the pabulum of that crop is exhausted; the intelligent man, with his chemist's eye, sees not only the minutest atoms of the earth, but the imponderable gases that permeate it, and he is rewarded with a luxurient harvest. Nor are these advantages confined to those departments of nature where her mightiest forces are brought into requisition. In accomplishing whatever requires delicacy and precision, nature is as much more perfect than men, as she is more powerful in whatever requires strength. Whether in great or in small operations, all the improvement in the mechanical and the useful arts comes as directly from intelligence as a bird comes out of a shell, or the beautiful colors of a flower out of the sunshine.—The slaveworker is forever prying at the short end of Nature's lever, and using the back instead of the edge, of her finest instruments.

THE TELEGRAPH WEST.—The Telegraph line, between Milwaukee and Waukesha, is now in full and successful operation. The posts are nearly all up from Waukesha to Janesville, and five tons of wire, for this line, are expected in the Globe. The wire will be stretched to Janesville, early in December, and it is designed to extend the line to Galena as speedily as possible. A branch line from Whitewater to Madison will be completed by the 15th or 20th of January. Madison will then be in communication with Milwaukee and the East. The office of the Western Telegraph line is in the same room of Holton's Brick Block, Spring street, as that of the Eastern line.—Wis. Standard.

ROBBERY OF THE PATENT OFFICE.—The Patent Office at Washington was robbed during the night of the 6th ult., of the gold snuff box, set with diamonds, presented by the emperor of Russia; a pearl necklace; gold sword scabbard, and a great variety of gold and silver coin—the whole valued at $30,000. Mr. Burke, Commissioner of Patents, offers a reward of one thousand dollars for the apprehension of the robbers and recovery of the property.—Wisconsin Standard.

the membrane, that the thin and colorless portion of the blood is poured out from it with the same rapidity as it would be if an opening were made in the great vein of the arm.

"The Commission have also ascertained the fact that the cholera is not contagious, but is propagated by impure air, caused by a neglect of drainage, and the accumulation of filth. Thus, that community which is the cleanest, and not that which is least exposed to contact with its victims, is most likely to escape the scourge.

"The premonitory symptoms of this disease afford timely warning for the use of effectual remedies. The first symptom is a looseness of the bowels. This may be accompanied with pains in the bowels, or it may not. If proper remedies are applied at this period, the disease is generally and easily checked."

MAN—HIS MENTAL POWER.

[Extract from a speech of Horace Mann.]

Now a man is weak in his muscles: he is strong only in his faculties. In physical strength how much superior is an ox or a horse to man—in fleetness, the dromedary or the eagle. It is through mental stength only that man becomes the superior and governor of animals. But it was not the design of providence that the work of the world should be performed by muscular strength. God has filled the earth and imbued the elements with energies of greater power than all the inhabitants of a thousand planets like ours.—Whence come our necessaries and our luxuries? those comforts and appliances that make the difference between the houseless, wandering tribe of Indians, in the far West, and a New England village? They do not come wholly or principally from the original, unassisted strength of the human arm, but from the employment, through intelligence and skill, of those great natural forces with which the bountiful Creator has filled every part of the material universe. Caloric, gravitation, expansibility, compressibility, electricity, chemical affinities and repulsion, spontaneous velocities—these are the mighty agents which the intellect of man harnesses to the car of improvement. The application of water, wind, and steam, to the propulsion of machinery, and to the transportation of men and merchandize from place to place, has added ten thousand fold to the actual products of human industry. How small the wheel which the stoutest laborer can turn, and how soon will he be weary! Compare this with a wheel driving a thousand spindles or looms, which a stream of water can turn, and never tire.—A locomotive will take five hundred men, and bear them on their journey hundreds of miles a day. Look at these same five hundred men, starting from the same post, and attempting the same distance, with all the equestrian's toil and tardiness. The cotton mills of Massachusetts will turn out more cloth in one day than could have been manufactured by all the inhabitants of the eastern continent during the tenth century. On an element, which in ancient times was supposed to be exclusively within the control of the gods, and deemed impious for human power to intrude, even there the gigantic forces of nature, which human science and skill have enlisted in their service, confront and overcome the raging of the elements—breasting and careering triumphantly around the globe. The velocity of winds, the weight of waters, and the rage of steam, are powers; each one of which is infinitely stronger than all the strength of all the nations and races of mankind, were it gathered into a single arm. And all these energies are given us on one condition—the condition of intelligence—that is, of education. Had God intended that the work of the world should be done by human bones and sinews, He would have given us an arm as solid and as strong as the shaft of a steam engine, and enabled us to stand, day and night, and turn the crank of a steamship while sailing to Liverpool and Calcutta. Had God designed the human muscles to do the work of the world, then, instead of the ingredients of gun powder or gun cotton, and the expansive force of heat, He would have given us hands which could take a granite quarry and break its solid acres in suitable symmetrical blocks, as easily as we now open an orange. Had He intended us for bearing burdens, He would have given us Atlantean shoulders, by which we could carry the vast freights of rail car and steam ship as a porter carries his pack. He would have given us lungs by which we could blow fleets before us, as wings to sweep the ocean wastes. But instead of iron arms, and Atlantean shoulders, and the lungs of Boreas, he has given us mind, a soul, a capacity of knowledge, and thus of appropriating all these energies of nature to our own use.—Instead of a telescopic and microscopic eye, He has given us power to invent the telescope and microscope. Instead of ten thousand fingers, He has given us genius inventive of the power loom and the printing press. Without a cultivated intellect man is among the weakest of all the dynamical forces of nature; with a cultivated intellect he commands them all.

A thousand slaves may stand by a river, and to them it is only an object of fear or of superstition. An intelligent man surpasses the ancient idea of a river god; he stands by the Penobscott, the Kennebec, the Merrimac or the Connecticut; he commands each to do more work than could be performed by a hundred thousand men—to saw timber, to make cloth, to grind corn—and they obey.—Ignorant slaves stand upon a coal mine, and to them it is only a worthless part of the inanimate earth. An intelligent man uses the same mine to print a million of books. Slaves will seek to obtain the same crop from the same field year after year, though the pabulum of that crop is exhausted; the intelligent man, with his chemist's eye, sees not only the minutest atoms of the earth, but the imponderable gases that permeate it, and he is rewarded with a luxurient harvest. Nor are these advantages confined to those departments of nature where her mightiest forces are brought into requisition. In accomplishing whatever requires delicacy and precision, nature is as much more perfect than men, as she is more powerful in whatever requires strength. Whether in great or in small operations, all the improvement in the mechanical and the useful arts comes as directly from intelligence as a bird comes out of a shell, or the beautiful colors of a flower out of the sunshine.—The slaveworker is forever prying at the short end of Nature's lever, and using the back instead of the edge, of her finest instruments.

THE TELEGRAPH WEST.—The Telegraph line, between Milwaukee and Waukesha, is now in full and successful operation. The posts are nearly all up from Waukesha to Janesville, and five tons of wire, for this line, are expected in the Globe. The wire will be stretched to Janesville, early in December, and it is designed to extend the line to Galena as speedily as possible. A branch line from Whitewater to Madison will be completed by the 15th or 20th of January. Madison will then be in communication with Milwaukee and the East. The office of the Western Telegraph line is in the same room of Holton's Brick Block, Spring street, as that of the Eastern line.—Wis. Standard.

ROBBERY OF THE PATENT OFFICE.—The Patent Office at Washington was robbed during the night of the 6th ult., of the gold snuff box, set with diamonds, presented by the emperor of Russia; a pearl necklace; gold sword scabbard, and a great variety of gold and silver coin—the whole valued at $30,000. Mr. Burke, Commissioner of Patents, offers a reward of one thousand dollars for the apprehension of the robbers and recovery of the property.—Wisconsin Standard.

THE MONARCHIES OF EUROPE.

We see in Vienna, the capitol of Austria, the people rising, the army fraternizing with them, and driving the Emperor and his Cabinet out of the metropolis, and cruelly murdering the Minister of the War Department. We see Hungary and other Austrian provinces in arms, and in a frightful state of revolution. The petty princes of Germany have been compelled to come under a single confederacy. Prussia and Denmark have been at war—outbreaks have occurred in Berlin and Frankfort, and in several other parts of the continent. Sicily is at war with Naples, and Russia threatens war against England and France, if either interfere against the interests of Naples, as if England and France had not as much right to interfere as Russia has to order them to abstain. Lombardy and Venice, from Austria, may form an independent kingdom; in short, thrones appear everywhere to be crumbling to pieces—the people are determined to have a change of Government. If revolutions were confined to a siugle monarchy, a confederacy of kings could restore order; but each sovereign has enough to do to keep his own people in order, and the army, in many instances, is losing its fidelity to the sovereign.—New York Star.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.—The following is the result of the political canvass, which has just passed. It will be seen that Gen. Taylor is elected President by a respectable majority. Cass has just half the States nevertheless. Van Buren has not a single electoral vote, but he had a large popular vote, and by it has probably changed the result in some States:—

TAYLOR.		CASS.
Massachusetts	12	Maine	9
Connecticut	6	New Hampshire	6
Rhode Island	4	Ohio	23
Vermont	6	Indiana	12
Delaware	3	Missouri	7
New Jersey	7	Virginia	17
Maryland	8	South Carolina	9
Pennsylvania	26	Alabama	9
New York	36	Illinois	9
Kentucky	12	Texas	4
Tennessee	13	Iowa	4
Georgia	10	Mississippi	6
Louisiana	6	Wisconsin	4
North Carolina	11	Michigan	5
Florida	3	Arkansas	3
	163		127

☞ There is a very singular circumstance in Shelby county, Texas, of a well that has been burning about twelve months, at the former residence of Judge Rusk. When he moved from the place, he laid some logs over the well from which he had used water for several years. Some time after the woods caught fire, and the timber, burning, fell in, and ignited a substance, supposed to be stone coal. The rainy seasons have not extinguished it, but it has burnt incessantly. It does not give a very agreeable feeling to the visitor, for it is neither sublime nor beautiful; but from the deep rumbling noise that is heard—the sulphurous smell, and the dark cloud of smoke that is continually rising, a beholder is forcibly convinced that there is actually fire and brimstone in the subterranean regions. Various results are conjectured; perhaps some geologist can give comfort to the anxious minds of the surrounding inhabitants, by showing what will be the final termination of the burning well.—Galveston Prebyterian.

NEVER GIVE UP.

Never give up—it is wiser and better
Always to hope than once to despair.
Fling off the load of doubts' cankering fetters,
And break the dark spell of tyrannical care.

Never give up, or your burden may sink you;
Providence kindly has mingled the cup;
And in all trials, or troubles, bethink you,
The watchword of life is, never give up.

Never give up—there are chances and changes,
Helping the hopeful, a hundred to one;
And through the chaos, high wisdom arranges,
Ever success, if you'll only hope on.

Never give up, for the wisest is boldest,
Knowing that providence mingles the cup;
And of all the maxims the best is the oldest,
Is the true watchword, never give up.

Never give up, though the grape shot may rattle,
Or the full thunder cloud over you burst;
Stand like a rock, and the storm or the battle
Little shall harm you, though doing their worst.

Never give up, if adversity presses,
Providence wisely has mingled the cup;
And the best counsel in all your distresses,
Is the stout watchword of never give up. A. C.

POETRY.

In life's rosy morning,
In manhood's firm prime,
Let this be the motto
Your footsteps to guide:
In storm and in sunshine,
Whatever assail,
We'll onward and conquer,
And NEVER SAY FAIL.

DIED,

At Racine, November 4th, 1848, sister Livonia Butterfield, in her 34th year.

STATE OF WISCONSIN, } In Justices Court.
Walworth county, ss. }

Gilbert Watson, } Before Wm. P. Lyon, J. P. vs.
Seth Hamlin. }

To the above named defendant,—Sir:—Take notice, that a writ of attachment has been issued against you by the above named Justice, in favor of the above named plaintiff, and that your property has been attached to satisfy the demand of the said plaintiff; and unless you appear before the said Justice on the 16th day of December next at one o'clock, P. M., at his office in the village of Lyons in said county, judgment will be rendered against you, and your property will be sold to pay the debt of the plaintiff. By order of the Court. GILBERT WATSON, Plaintiff.

November 25th, 1848. 37m.

ESTRAY.

Came into the inclosure of the subscriber, in Voree, about the 1st of Nov. inst. a light brindle cow, with a little white on the tail and belly, supposed to be five years old. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take her away.

Voree, Nov. 21st, 1848. JAMES J. STRANG.

THE MONARCHIES OF EUROPE.

We see in Vienna, the capitol of Austria, the people rising, the army fraternizing with them, and driving the Emperor and his Cabinet out of the metropolis, and cruelly murdering the Minister of the War Department. We see Hungary and other Austrian provinces in arms, and in a frightful state of revolution. The petty princes of Germany have been compelled to come under a single confederacy. Prussia and Denmark have been at war—outbreaks have occurred in Berlin and Frankfort, and in several other parts of the continent. Sicily is at war with Naples, and Russia threatens war against England and France, if either interfere against the interests of Naples, as if England and France had not as much right to interfere as Russia has to order them to abstain. Lombardy and Venice, from Austria, may form an independent kingdom; in short, thrones appear everywhere to be crumbling to pieces—the people are determined to have a change of Government. If revolutions were confined to a siugle monarchy, a confederacy of kings could restore order; but each sovereign has enough to do to keep his own people in order, and the army, in many instances, is losing its fidelity to the sovereign.—New York Star.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.—The following is the result of the political canvass, which has just passed. It will be seen that Gen. Taylor is elected President by a respectable majority. Cass has just half the States nevertheless. Van Buren has not a single electoral vote, but he had a large popular vote, and by it has probably changed the result in some States:—

TAYLOR.		CASS.
Massachusetts	12	Maine	9
Connecticut	6	New Hampshire	6
Rhode Island	4	Ohio	23
Vermont	6	Indiana	12
Delaware	3	Missouri	7
New Jersey	7	Virginia	17
Maryland	8	South Carolina	9
Pennsylvania	26	Alabama	9
New York	36	Illinois	9
Kentucky	12	Texas	4
Tennessee	13	Iowa	4
Georgia	10	Mississippi	6
Louisiana	6	Wisconsin	4
North Carolina	11	Michigan	5
Florida	3	Arkansas	3
	163		127

☞ There is a very singular circumstance in Shelby county, Texas, of a well that has been burning about twelve months, at the former residence of Judge Rusk. When he moved from the place, he laid some logs over the well from which he had used water for several years. Some time after the woods caught fire, and the timber, burning, fell in, and ignited a substance, supposed to be stone coal. The rainy seasons have not extinguished it, but it has burnt incessantly. It does not give a very agreeable feeling to the visitor, for it is neither sublime nor beautiful; but from the deep rumbling noise that is heard—the sulphurous smell, and the dark cloud of smoke that is continually rising, a beholder is forcibly convinced that there is actually fire and brimstone in the subterranean regions. Various results are conjectured; perhaps some geologist can give comfort to the anxious minds of the surrounding inhabitants, by showing what will be the final termination of the burning well.—Galveston Presbyterian.

NEVER GIVE UP.

Never give up—it is wiser and better
Always to hope than once to despair.
Fling off the load of doubts' cankering fetters,
And break the dark spell of tyrannical care.

Never give up, or your burden may sink you;
Providence kindly has mingled the cup;
And in all trials, or troubles, bethink you,
The watchword of life is, never give up.

Never give up—there are chances and changes,
Helping the hopeful, a hundred to one;
And through the chaos, high wisdom arranges,
Ever success, if you'll only hope on.

Never give up, for the wisest is boldest,
Knowing that providence mingles the cup;
And of all the maxims the best is the oldest,
Is the true watchword, never give up.

Never give up, though the grape shot may rattle,
Or the full thunder cloud over you burst;
Stand like a rock, and the storm or the battle
Little shall harm you, though doing their worst.

Never give up, if adversity presses,
Providence wisely has mingled the cup;
And the best counsel in all your distresses,
Is the stout watchword of never give up. A. C.

POETRY.

In life's rosy morning,
In manhood's firm prime,
Let this be the motto
Your footsteps to guide:
In storm and in sunshine,
Whatever assail,
We'll onward and conquer,
And NEVER SAY FAIL.

DIED,

At Racine, November 4th, 1848, sister Livonia Butterfield, in her 34th year.

STATE OF WISCONSIN, Walworth county, ss. } In Justices Court.

Gilbert Watson, vs. Seth Hamlin. } Before Wm. P. Lyon, J. P.

To the above named defendant,—Sir:—Take notice, that a writ of attachment has been issued against you by the above named Justice, in favor of the above named plaintiff, and that your property has been attached to satisfy the demand of the said plaintiff; and unless you appear before the said Justice on the 16th day of December next at one o'clock, P. M., at his office in the village of Lyons in said county, judgment will be rendered against you, and your property will be sold to pay the debt of the plaintiff. By order of the Court. GILBERT WATSON, Plaintiff.

November 25th, 1848. 37m.

ESTRAY.

Came into the inclosure of the subscriber, in Voree, about the 1st of Nov. inst. a light brindle cow, with a little white on the tail and belly, supposed to be five years old. The owner is requested to prove property, pay charges and take her away.

Voree, Nov. 21st, 1848. JAMES J. STRANG.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 39.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. DEC. 14, 1848. [WHOLE No. 103.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

From Ackerman's First Book of Natural History.

DIFFERENT RACES OF MANKIND.

The whole world is supposed to contain about ten hundred and fourteen millions of human beings. Those who are of the same general structure and color, form a race. There are five great varieties of races, which derive their names from the grand divisions of the earth that they chiefly inhabit. They are the European or White race, American or Red race, Asiatic or Mongolian race, Malay race, and African or Negro race.

The Sacred Scriptures inform us that all these races are the children of the same first parents; that the delicate European and the jet black African are brothers, descended from the same ancestry.—The difference between these races has been produced like that which we see in horses, dogs, and many other animals, partly by the difference of climate and food, and partly by other causes unknown.

Variety of color seems to depend on external causes principally, for while the Moorish ladies, who are shut up in their houses and are rarely exposed to the sun's rays, have complexions of the most dazzling whiteness, the women of the lower ranks, even in their youth, acquire a color approaching that of soot. The mountaineers of Abyssinia are as fair as the Spaniards, while the inhabitants of the plains are almost black.

Some naturalists have supposed that the original color of the human race was black; but this supposition is undoubtedly untrue, for we see in the case of the negroes when transported from their native burning regions to those countries situated in mild and temperate climates, that they do not retain their original sooty color from generation to generation, but become considerably lighter in appearance. We often hear of white children with black parents, but never hear of black children with white parents; consequently we may conclude that white is the color most natural to mankind. We should also remember that that portion of the earth upon which our first parents were created, is now the native land of the most beautiful people upon the face of the earth—the Circassians.

EUROPEAN RACE.

This race have regular features and forms; the face is straight and oval, the mouth usually small, although the tongues of some are remarkably long; the nose thin; the hair long; and the cheeks more or less red. It includes the Europeans and all their descendants in both hemispheres, as well as the Turks, Circassians, Persians, Jews, Abyssinians, the natives of Hindoostan, and the Moors who inhabit the northern part of Africa. Over such a great extent of country, there is much difference in the features, complexion and size; but this race is the most beautiful, and surpasses all others in knowledge, activity and courage: and with this race have originated the most valuable institutions, and the most important and useful inventions.

The Turks are ignorant, have wild and extravagant notions of religion, possess great self-importance; are treacherous to their enemies, and think nothing of violating their vows made to friends.—Those who know more languages than their own, often conceal the knowledge, to avoid the disgrace attached to it. The best name bestowed upon a christian, is dog; and even this is sometimes changed for other terms of reproach. A soldier of the Turkish foot guards, who attended upon foreigners, was called a hog driver; thus showing their contempt for foreign nations. But in describing the Turks, we should not forget that they have one national virtue, that of honesty. Their words are as good security in their commercial dealings, as bonds in other countries. Children are sent to make purchases and are seldom wronged, and the shops are secured only with a string in the master's absence.

Many of their customs show a very degraded state of society.—Mutes, or the deaf and dumb, are sought for by the Pachas, as acceptable presents to the Sultan; and there are many of these servants at his palace, who can see, but not tell; suffer, but not complain. Dwarfs and deformed persons are also attached to the court, as in various eastern countries.

The Moors of Barbary are proverbial for their cruelty, indolence, ignorance and fanaticism. The inhabitants of the cities are as indolent as the Turks. Merchandize is measured by the arm, from the elbow. The females, when they would honor a person of high standing, raise sudden and piercing shrieks, and the manners and customs generally are those of a very rude state of society.

The houses of the Jews, in Barbary, and all their sacred relations, are open to every Moor who will violate them. A Jew may be pelted and beaten by men and boys, and when riding, if he meets a Moor, he is forced to dismount to show respect to the rude barbarian. The Moors are much attached to their horses, and they use a bit that will stop the horse in an instant, when going at full speed.

The extent of their education is to read in the Koran, the Mohammedan bible, and write. The boys at school use a board and piece of chalk, with which they write.

AMERICAN RACE.

The original natives of America form a second race, not less different in color, than distinct in habitation, from the rest of mankind. All the tribes of this vast continent, except the Esquimaux Indians, which resemble the Laplanders, are of a red or copper color. They have black, thick straight hair, and thin beards, which they, in general, like the Mongul and Malay nations, pull out by the roots.—They have high cheek bones, small noses, and the eyes are deeply seated in the head. They paint the body and face with various colors, and consider the hair upon any portion of their bodies, except the head, as a deformity. All the Indians have a serious appearance, and however cruel to their enemies, they are kind and just to their friends and to each other.

In the southern part of South America is found the tallest race of men in the world, called Patagonians. They are often nearly seven feet in height and rarely less than six feet.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 39.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, DEC. 14, 1848. [WHOLE No. 103.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

From Ackerman's First Book of Natural History.

DIFFERENT RACES OF MANKIND.

The whole world is supposed to contain about ten hundred and fourteen millions of human beings. Those who are of the same general structure and color, form a race. There are five great varieties of races, which derive their names from the grand divisions of the earth that they chiefly inhabit. They are the European or White race, American or Red race, Asiatic or Mongolian race, Malay race, and African or Negro race.

The Sacred Scriptures inform us that all these races are the children of the same first parents; that the delicate European and the jet black African are brothers, descended from the same ancestry.—The difference between these races has been produced like that which we see in horses, dogs, and many other animals, partly by the difference of climate and food, and partly by other causes unknown.

Variety of color seems to depend on external causes principally, for while the Moorish ladies, who are shut up in their houses and are rarely exposed to the sun's rays, have complexions of the most dazzling whiteness, the women of the lower ranks, even in their youth, acquire a color approaching that of soot. The mountaineers of Abyssinia are as fair as the Spaniards, while the inhabitants of the plains are almost black.

Some naturalists have supposed that the original color of the human race was black; but this supposition is undoubtedly untrue, for we see in the case of the negroes when transported from their native burning regions to those countries situated in mild and temperate climates, that they do not retain their original sooty color from generation to generation, but become considerably lighter in appearance. We often hear of white children with black parents, but never hear of black children with white parents; consequently we may conclude that white is the color most natural to mankind. We should also remember that that portion of the earth upon which our first parents were created, is now the native land of the most beautiful people upon the face of the earth—the Circassians.

EUROPEAN RACE.

This race have regular features and forms; the face is straight and oval, the mouth usually small, although the tongues of some are remarkably long; the nose thin; the hair long; and the cheeks more or less red. It includes the Europeans and all their descendants in both hemispheres, as well as the Turks, Circassians, Persians, Jews, Abyssinians, the natives of Hindoostan, and the Moors who inhabit the northern part of Africa. Over such a great extent of country, there is much difference in the features, complexion and size; but this race is the most beautiful, and surpasses all others in knowledge, activity and courage: and with this race have originated the most valuable institutions, and the most important and useful inventions.

The Turks are ignorant, have wild and extravagant notions of religion, possess great self-importance; are treacherous to their enemies, and think nothing of violating their vows made to friends.—Those who know more languages than their own, often conceal the knowledge, to avoid the disgrace attached to it. The best name bestowed upon a christian, is dog; and even this is sometimes changed for other terms of reproach. A soldier of the Turkish foot guards, who attended upon foreigners, was called a hog driver; thus showing their contempt for foreign nations. But in describing the Turks, we should not forget that they have one national virtue, that of honesty. Their words are as good security in their commercial dealings, as bonds in other countries. Children are sent to make purchases and are seldom wronged, and the shops are secured only with a string in the master's absence.

Many of their customs show a very degraded state of society.—Mutes, or the deaf and dumb, are sought for by the Pachas, as acceptable presents to the Sultan; and there are many of these servants at his palace, who can see, but not tell; suffer, but not complain. Dwarfs and deformed persons are also attached to the court, as in various eastern countries.

The Moors of Barbary are proverbial for their cruelty, indolence, ignorance and fanaticism. The inhabitants of the cities are as indolent as the Turks. Merchandize is measured by the arm, from the elbow. The females, when they would honor a person of high standing, raise sudden and piercing shrieks, and the manners and customs generally are those of a very rude state of society.

The houses of the Jews, in Barbary, and all their sacred relations, are open to every Moor who will violate them. A Jew may be pelted and beaten by men and boys, and when riding, if he meets a Moor, he is forced to dismount to show respect to the rude barbarian. The Moors are much attached to their horses, and they use a bit that will stop the horse in an instant, when going at full speed.

The extent of their education is to read in the Koran, the Mohammedan bible, and write. The boys at school use a board and piece of chalk, with which they write.

AMERICAN RACE.

The original natives of America form a second race, not less different in color, than distinct in habitation, from the rest of mankind. All the tribes of this vast continent, except the Esquimaux Indians, which resemble the Laplanders, are of a red or copper color. They have black, thick straight hair, and thin beards, which they, in general, like the Mongul and Malay nations, pull out by the roots.—They have high cheek bones, small noses, and the eyes are deeply seated in the head. They paint the body and face with various colors, and consider the hair upon any portion of their bodies, except the head, as a deformity. All the Indians [illegible] serious appearance, and however cruel to their enemies, [illegible] kind and just to their friends and to each other.

In the southern part of South America is found the tallest race of men in the world, called Patagonians. They are often nearly seven feet in height and rarely less than six feet.

The native Americans are said to be more backward in facing danger than the people of Europe; but no sooner does it appear unavoidable, than their courage is excited to a great height, and they are ready to suffer or inflict the most cruel tortures, displaying the utmost composure during the greatest agonies; a remarkable instance of which was exhibited by Guatimozin, one of the kings of Mexico. At the time the Spaniards, with the cruel Cortez at their head, took the city of Mexico, they were greatly disappointed in not finding the expected treasures of gold and silver. They therefore suspected that the king had caused his treasures to be concealed, and in order to make him tell where he had secreted them, the cruel Spaniards placed Guatimozin and his chief minister upon a bed of live coals. His minister, unable to endure this dreadful agony, uttered a shriek and turned his eye upon the king, as if asking permission to disclose the secret. To this the king replied calmly, "Am I on a bed of roses?" This rebuke silenced the minister, and he said no more, patiently enduring his agonies till he was freed by death.

Though many of the Indian tribes are equal in stature to the Europeans, still they are far from being as strong, which is probably owing, in some degree, to the climate and the scantiness or bad quality of their food. Most of these people, like savage nations in general, lead a wild, independent and wandering life; subsisting on the animals which they kill in the chase, on wild fruit, roots, and fish.

This mode of living produces in them a peculiar train of virtues and vices; patience and hospitality, indolence and rapacity, content and sincerity, which also mark the character of the savage in every part of the world.

ASIATIC RACE.

This race comprises the Tartars, Chinese, Japanese, Mongolians, Siberians, Fins, Laplanders of Europe, and the Esquimaux Indians of America; they all probably originated from the Tartars. Their general characteristics are, heads almost square, wide mouths, high cheek bones, small flat noses, their eyes little, and sunk in their heads, large thick eye brows, and their color more or less yellow.—The Tartars are extremely strong and very robust; their thighs are large, and their legs short. The Calmucks are the ugliest of all this race. All the Tartar tribes lead a wandering life, and dwell in tents made of hair and skins. They build no towns, and only cultivate the ground to a small extent for the purpose of raising millet, which they eat with mares' milk.

Tartars live principally upon horse flesh and the flesh of camels. Their principal wealth consists in horses, in the management and care of which the greater part of their time is employed, and they at last bring them to such perfect obedience that they seem to understand every motion of their riders. They practice robbery by profession, and think it not dishonorable so long as they do not practice it on their own tribe.

The Laplanders, Esquimaux Indians, Greenlanders, &c., resemble each other in their manners, stature and ignorance. They are generally not above four feet in height. Among all these nations the women are as deformed as the men, and so nearly do they resemble each other that it is difficult to distinguish them.

The Danish Laplanders have a large black cat, to which they tell all their secrets, and which they consult in all their affairs. Among the Swedish Laplanders there was formerly, in every family, a drum for consulting with the devil. Although these nations are robust and nimble, yet they are so cowardly that they never can be brought into the battle field.

They make use of skates nearly three feet long and six inches broad. With these they skate upon the icy snow so rapidly that they easily overtake the swiftest animals. Upon these skates they descend the steepest mountains, and climb the most craggy precipices; and in these exercises the women are not less skillful than the men. They live principally on dried fish, the flesh of reindeer and bears. Their bread is composed of pounded fish bones, mixed with the inside tender bark of the pine tree.

The Chinese possess little honor or benevolence; and the females, as in all unenlightened countries, have to suffer a life of labor and seclusion, and are the slaves rather than the companions of man. The chief garment is a long loose robe, reaching almost to the ground, over which is worn a silk girdle with a knife in a sheath, and the two sticks, which are used instead of forks, suspended therefrom. Their teeth are colored yellow or green, and the nails of the higher classes are permitted to grow several inches in length, which are preserved in bamboo sheaths. The shoes of a Chinese lady are about four inches in length, and two in breadth. This deformity is considered a beauty; and a female thus mutilated can walk only with the greatest difficulty.

MALAY AND NEGRO RACES.

The Malay race has a dark brown complexion, with large features, broad noses and large mouths. This race includes the inhabitants of Malacca, Australia, Polynesia and the Asiatic islands. Those who live in the hottest of these islands are almost as black as negroes, as the Papoos of New Guinea; but the most of them have much better forms and features.

The Negroes form the fifth and most distinct race of mankind.—This gloomy race is found to blacken all Africa south of the tropic of Cancer, with the exception of Abyssinia, the inhabitants of which are olive colored.

The Negroes are as remarkable for the smoothness of their skin, as for their jet black color. Their hair is short, wooly and soft; and the beard is also similar to the hair, but it soon turns gray, which the hair is never known to do; so that many have white beards and black hair at the same time. Their eyes are of a deep hazel color, their noses flat and short, their lips thick, mouth wide, and their teeth of an ivory whiteness.

The Negro nations differ from each other like those of the other races. The Negroes also have their own particular countries celebrated for the beauty of their inhabitants, as well as Europeans.—Those of Guinea are considered the homliest of the black tribes, and they emit an unpleasant odor, while those of Mozambique are considered the most beautiful, and have no disagreeable smell.

Farther southward the inhabitants become somewhat paler, and are called Caffres, though in their features there is little or no difference. The Hottentots form another nation, and inhabit the most southern part. They are of a brown olive color, and their cheek bones are so prominent as to cause the face to appear almost triangular.

The climate seems to weaken their mental powers still more than those of the body, and in general they are found to be stupid, indolent and mischievous. Those colonies of Arabians who settled in the inland parts of Africa have lost their beauty, forgotten their ancient learning, and can scarcely be distinguished from the original inhabitants. The Portuguese, who about two centuries since settled along this coast, have become almost as black as the Negroes, and are said by some travelers to be even more barbarous.

The foundations of society have been broken up, and the character of the Negroes much depraved, by the inhuman slave trade.

For the Gospel Herald.

JEALOUSY.

This daughter of hell is known by her works. She lurks in secret places, and whispers suspiciously of the virtuous and the innocent. She accuses the faithful of selfishness, and the upright of in-

The native Americans are said to be more backward in facing danger than the people of Europe; but no sooner does it appear unavoidable, than their courage is excited to a great height, and they are ready to suffer or inflict the most cruel tortures, displaying the utmost composure during the greatest agonies; a remarkable instance of which was exhibited by Guatimozin, one of the kings of Mexico. At the time the Spaniards, with the cruel Cortez at their head, took the city of Mexico, they were greatly disappointed in not finding the expected treasures of gold and silver. They therefore suspected that the king had caused his treasures to be concealed, and in order to make him tell where he had secreted them, the cruel Spaniards placed Guatimozin and his chief minister upon a bed of live coals. His minister, unable to endure this dreadful agony, uttered a shriek and turned his eye upon the king, as if asking permission to disclose the secret. To this the king replied calmly, "Am I on a bed of roses?" This rebuke silenced the minister, and he said no more, patiently enduring his agonies till he was freed by death.

Though many of the Indian tribes are equal in stature to the Europeans, still they are far from being as strong, which is probably owing, in some degree, to the climate and the scantiness or bad quality of their food. Most of these people, like savage nations in general, lead a wild, independent and wandering life; subsisting on the animals which they kill in the chase, on wild fruit, roots, and fish.

This mode of living produces in them a peculiar train of virtues and vices; patience and hospitality, indolence and rapacity, content and sincerity, which also mark the character of the savage in every part of the world.

ASIATIC RACE.

This race comprises the Tartars, Chinese, Japanese, Mongolians, Siberians, Fins, Laplanders of Europe, and the Esquimaux Indians of America; they all probably originated from the Tartars. Their general characteristics are, heads almost square, wide mouths, high cheek bones, small flat noses, their eyes little, and sunk in their heads, large thick eye brows, and their color more or less yellow.—The Tartars are extremely strong and very robust; their thighs are large, and their legs short. The Calmucks are the ugliest of all this race. All the Tartar tribes lead a wandering life, and dwell in tents made of hair and skins. They build no towns, and only cultivate the ground to a small extent for the purpose of raising millet, which they eat with mares' milk.

Tartars live principally upon horse flesh and the flesh of camels. Their principal wealth consists in horses, in the management and care of which the greater part of their time is employed, and they at last bring them to such perfect obedience that they seem to understand every motion of their riders. They practice robbery by profession, and think it not dishonorable so long as they do not practice it on their own tribe.

The Laplanders, Esquimaux Indians, Greenlanders, &c., resemble each other in their manners, stature and ignorance. They are generally not above four feet in height. Among all these nations the women are as deformed as the men, and so nearly do they resemble each other that it is difficult to distinguish them.

The Danish Laplanders have a large black cat, to which they tell all their secrets, and which they consult in all their affairs. Among the Swedish Laplanders there was formerly, in every family, a drum for conversing with the devil. Although these nations are robust and nimble, yet they are so cowardly that they never can be brought into the battle field.

They make use of skates nearly three feet long and six inches broad. With these they skate upon the icy snow so rapidly that they easily overtake the swiftest animals. Upon these skates they descend the steepest mountains, and climb the most craggy precipices; and in these exercises the women are not less skillful than the men. They live principally on dried fish, the flesh of reindeer and bears. Their bread is composed of pounded fish bones, mixed with the inside tender bark of the pine tree.

The Chinese possess little honor or benevolence; and the females, as in all unenlightened countries, have to suffer a life of labor and seclusion, and are the slaves rather than the companions of man. The chief garment is a long loose robe, reaching almost to the ground, over which is worn a silk girdle with a knife in a sheath, and the two sticks, which are used instead of forks, suspended therefrom. Their teeth are colored yellow or green, and the nails of the higher classes are permitted to grow several inches in length, which are preserved in bamboo sheaths. The shoes of a Chinese lady are about four inches in length, and two in breadth. This deformity is considered a beauty; and a female thus mutilated can walk only with the greatest difficulty.

MALAY AND NEGRO RACES.

The Malay race has a dark brown complexion, with large features, broad noses and large mouths. This race includes the inhabitants of Malacca, Australia, Polynesia and the Asiatic islands. Those who live in the hottest of these islands are almost as black as negroes, as the Papoos of New Guinea; but the most of them have much better forms and features.

The Negroes form the fifth and most distinct race of mankind.—This gloomy race is found to blacken all Africa south of the tropic of Cancer, with the exception of Abyssinia, the inhabitants of which are olive colored.

The Negroes are as remarkable for the smoothness of their skin, as for their jet black color. Their hair is short, wooly and soft; and the beard is also similar to the hair, but it soon turns gray, which the hair is never known to do; so that many have white beards and black hair at the same time. Their eyes are of a deep hazel color, their noses flat and short, their lips thick, mouth wide, and their teeth of an ivory whiteness.

The Negro nations differ from each other like those of the other races. The Negroes also have their own particular countries celebrated for the beauty of their inhabitants, as well as Europeans.—Those of Guinea are considered the homliest of the black tribes, and they emit an unpleasant odor, while those of Mozambique are considered the most beautiful, and have no disagreeable smell.

Farther southward the inhabitants become somewhat paler, and are called Caffres, though in their features there is little or no difference. The Hottentots form another nation, and inhabit the most southern part. They are of a brown olive color, and their cheek bones are so prominent as to cause the face to appear almost triangular.

The climate seems to weaken their mental powers still more than those of the body, and in general they are found to be stupid, indolent and mischievous. Those colonies of Arabians who settled in the inland parts of Africa have lost their beauty, forgotten their ancient learning, and can scarcely be distinguished from the original inhabitants. The Portuguese, who about two centuries since settled along this coast, have become almost as black as the Negroes, and are said by some travelers to be even more barbarous.

The foundations of society have been broken up, and the character of the Negroes much depraved, by the inhuman slave trade.

For the Gospel Herald.

JEALOUSY.

This daughter of hell is known by her works. She lurks in secret places, and whispers suspiciously of the virtuous and the innocent. She accuses the faithful of selfishness, and the upright of iniquity. Of the prudent she says that he will never accomplish his work, and of the zealous that he is an enthusiast. She lays snares for the righteous, and makes the meek an offender for a word. She delights in secrets, and feeds her lovers thereon. She speaks evil of dignities, and disrespectfully of the Lord's anointed. It is her meat to create distrust between friends, and her drink to break the ties of brotherhood. She is ever ready to prove her assertions by her favorite witnesses, viz.: "they said," and "a very confidential friend." By these, with her own insinuations "that I know something," and a secret confidentially whispered in the ear, she too often succeeds in leading the doubting or the unwary astray. My son, hearken not unto her whisperings, for they are iniquitous.—They who hearken unto them have no rest. Sleep departs from their eyes, and slumber from their eye lids. She leads them in the ways of death, and in the paths of hell. WISDOM.

THE TURKISH EMPIRE.

The present condition of the Turkish empire is full of interest, both in a political and prophetic point of view; the following remarks by Dr. Durbin, who lately visited the East, shows that the Moslem power is ready to fall.

We find in the internal condition of Turkey the same state of decay, and the same dependence upon Christian powers. The Pacha of Egypt was but very lately hovering over the capitol of the Sultan, and would have driven his master out of the seraglio, had not the diplomatic notes and the cannon of the Christian powers arrested his progress, and driven him out of Asia Minor and Syria, and confined him to Egypt. The Turkish government has no power to preserve order within its provinces; and to be under the protection of the consulate of any Christian power, is of vastly greater advantange than to be under the shield of the Ottoman Empire.

The external and internal and political weakness of the Turks is not more striking than the decay of their religion, trade, manufacture, and population. The charm of their faith is broken by the destruction of their political power; and infinitely, with respect to their own religion, is spread widely among all, but particularly the upper classes. The decline of their religion inspires even the Christian with a momentary sadness, when he sees every where the mosques and religious monuments fallen to decay, and not a hand lifted to restore the crumbling walls, or prop the tottering domes.—Commerce and manufactures have well nigh become extinct throughout the empire, and exist now only where they have been preserved by the native Christians, or revived Frank enterprise. Decay of trade has produced a great decrease and depreciation of coin, so that a Spanish dollar, that had only been worth five piasters formerly, was, when I was in the East, worth twenty-two piasters at Alexandria, twenty-four at Smyrna, and twenty-seven at Constantinople.

But the decrease of the population is the most marked symptom of decay. At first, this decrease occurred chiefly among the native Christians, who melted away under the intolerable oppression of the Moslems; but for the last few centuries, it has taken place among the Moslems themselves. The traveler is struck with astonishment, and filled with melancholy as he beholds the crowded and countless cemeteries, and vast solitudes, where, but a few generations past, flourished populous cities, towns, and villages; the turbans on the tombstones testify that a Mohammedan, and not a Christian population is buried there. So I found it everywhere in Palestine, Syria, and Asia Minor, and so Mr. Walsh describes it for a distance of three hundred miles from the capitol, through Roumelia to the Danube naturally one of the most fertile portions of the earth.

There is not a road in Palestine or Syria along which even an ox-cart could be drawn for a mile, except on the level surface of some natural valley; and everywhere in Asia Minor the traveler stumbles on the broken pavements, now disused, which at once attests the former prosperity and present decay of the country.

The extent of this decay of population cannot be accurately ascertained, as no census is ever taken. The various countries composing the empire possess natural capabilities sufficient to support the declarations of history, that they teemed with population at the time of their first subjection to the Mohammedan power. Compare their condition now with what it was then, we shall not exaggerate the decrease of population when we say, that three-fourths of it has disappeared, and the progress of decay is increasing, rather than diminishing. It is impossible to proximate with certainty the present population of Turkey. The Divine Providence seems to indicate that the days of the Empire of the False Prophet are numbered.

The general expectation, the prevailing presentiment among the Turks themselves, and the irresistible decay of the empire, point to dissolution. The fearful consequences apprehended from the attempt of the great powers to distribute the various countries of Turkey among themselves, suggest the restoration of Christian states upon the soil where Christianity first triumphed, and long held dominion. The black and bloody history of Mohammedanism is a sufficient warrant for Christian powers to put an end to its political existence; and if not, let them withdraw their support from Turkey, and give countenance to the efforts of her Christian subjects, and these will soon number her days, and restore the dominion of the cross from Albania to Akabah, and from the Euphrates to the Mediterranean.

WEAR A SMILE.—Which will you do—smile and make others happy, or be crabbed and make every one around you miserable?—The amount of happiness you can produce is incalculable if you show a smiling face, a kind heart, and speak pleasant words.—Wear a pleasent countenance; let joy beam in your eyes, and love glow on your forehead. There is no joy like that which springs from a kind act or a pleasant deed—and you may feel it at night when you rest, at morning when you rise, and through all the day, when about your business.

"A smile; who will refuse a smile,
The sorrowing heart to cheer?
And turn to love the heart of guile,
And check the falling tear?

A pleasant smile for every face,
Oh, 'tis a blessed thing;
It will the lines of care erase,
And spots of beauty bring."

HONESTY.—Two years ago last August I visited the city of New York for the first time in my life. While passing over on the Amboy steamboat a number of news-boys came round offering papers for sale. As usual I bought two or three, and paid in cents.—In a few minutes I was deeply engaged in the search for news of the nations, when I was disturbed by a news-boy jogging me and saying, "one of the cents you gave me was a quarter," reaching it out at the same time. I gave him the money, with many thanks and good wishes, and have never heard of him since; but it is safe to say he is prospering in some honorable occupation. I should like to see his honest face again.

☞ In a letter to the Peace Congress at Brussels, Mr. Cobden estimates the total armed force of Europe, exclusive of national guards, police, &c., at 2,350,000 men, and the total expense at £200,000,000 sterling per annum.—Ex. Paper.

iquity. Of the prudent she says that he will never accomplish his work, and of the zealous that he is an enthusiast. She lays snares for the righteous, and makes the meek an offender for a word. She delights in secrets, and feeds her lovers thereon. She speaks evil of dignities, and disrespectfully of the Lord's anointed. It is her meat to create distrust between friends, and her drink to break the ties of brotherhood. She is ever ready to prove her assertions by her favorite witnesses, viz.: "they said," and "a very confidential friend." By these, with her own insinuations "that I know something," and a secret confidentially whispered in the ear, she too often succeeds in leading the doubting or the unwary astray. My son, hearken not unto her whisperings, for they are iniquitous.—They who hearken unto them have no rest. Sleep departs from their eyes, and slumber from their eye lids. She leads them in the ways of death, and in the paths of hell. WISDOM.

THE TURKISH EMPIRE.

The present condition of the Turkish empire is full of interest, both in a political and prophetic point of view; the following remarks by Dr. Durbin, who lately visited the East, shows that the Moslem power is ready to fall.

We find in the internal condition of Turkey the same state of decay, and the same dependence upon Christian powers. The Pacha of Egypt was but very lately hovering over the capitol of the Sultan, and would have driven his master out of the seraglio, had not the diplomatic notes and the cannon of the Christian powers arrested his progress, and driven him out of Asia Minor and Syria, and confined him to Egypt. The Turkish government has no power to preserve order within its provinces; and to be under the protection of the consulate of any Christian power, is of vastly greater advantange than to be under the shield of the Ottoman Empire.

The external and internal and political weakness of the Turks is not more striking than the decay of their religion, trade, manufacture, and population. The charm of their faith is broken by the destruction of their political power; and infinitely, with respect to their own religion, is spread widely among all, but particularly the upper classes. The decline of their religion inspires even the Christian with a momentary sadness, when he sees everywhere the mosques and religious monuments fallen to decay, and not a hand lifted to restore the crumbling walls, or prop the tottering domes.—Commerce and manufactures have well nigh become extinct throughout the empire, and exist now only where they have been preserved by the native Christians, or revived Frank enterprise. Decay of trade has produced a great decrease and depreciation of coin, so that a Spanish dollar, that had only been worth five piasters formerly, was, when I was in the East, worth twenty-two piasters at Alexandria, twenty-four at Smyrna, and twenty-seven at Constantinople.

But the decrease of the population is the most marked symptom of decay. At first, this decrease occurred chiefly among the native Christians, who melted away under the intolerable oppression of the Moslems; but for the last few centuries, it has taken place among the Moslems themselves. The traveler is struck with astonishment, and filled with melancholy as he beholds the crowded and countless cemeteries, and vast solitudes, where, but a few generations past, flourished populous cities, towns, and villages; the turbans on the tombstones testify that a Mohammedan, and not a Christian population is buried there. So I found it everywhere in Palestine, Syria, and Asia Minor, and so Mr. Walsh describes it for a distance of three hundred miles from the capitol, through Roumelia to the Danube naturally one of the most fertile portions of the earth.

There is not a road in Palestine or Syria along which even an ox-cart could be drawn for a mile, except on the level surface of some natural valley; and everywhere in Asia Minor the traveler stumbles on the broken pavements, now disused, which at once attests the former prosperity and present decay of the country.

The extent of this decay of population cannot be accurately ascertained, as no census is ever taken. The various countries composing the empire possess natural capabilities sufficient to support the declarations of history, that they teemed with population at the time of their first subjection to the Mohammedan power. Compare their condition now with what it was then, we shall not exaggerate the decrease of population when we say, that three-fourths of it has disappeared, and the progress of decay is increasing, rather than diminishing. It is impossible to proximate with certainty the present population of Turkey. The Divine Providence seems to indicate that the days of the Empire of the False Prophet are numbered.

The general expectation, the prevailing presentiment among the Turks themselves, and the irresistible decay of the empire, point to dissolution. The fearful consequences apprehended from the attempt of the great powers to distribute the various countries of Turkey among themselves, suggest the restoration of Christian states upon the soil where Christianity first triumphed, and long held dominion. The black and bloody history of Mohammedanism is a sufficient warrant for Christian powers to put an end to its political existence; and if not, let them withdraw their support from Turkey, and give countenance to the efforts of her Christian subjects, and these will soon number her days, and restore the dominion of the cross from Albania to Akabah, and from the Euphrates to the Mediterranean.

WEAR A SMILE.—Which will you do—smile and make others happy, or be crabbed and make every one around you miserable?—The amount of happiness you can produce is incalculable if you show a smiling face, a kind heart, and speak pleasant words.—Wear a pleasent countenance; let joy beam in your eyes, and love glow on your forehead. There is no joy like that which springs from a kind act or a pleasant deed—and you may feel it at night when you rest, at morning when you rise, and through all the day, when about your business.

"A smile; who will refuse a smile,
The sorrowing heart to cheer?
And turn to love the heart of guile,
And check the falling tear?

A pleasant smile for every face,
Oh, 'tis a blessed thing;
It will the lines of care erase,
And spots of beauty bring."

HONESTY.—Two years ago last August I visited the city of New York for the first time in my life. While passing over on the Amboy steamboat a number of news-boys came round offering papers for sale. As usual I bought two or three, and paid in cents.—In a few minutes I was deeply engaged in the search for news of the nations, when I was disturbed by a news-boy jogging me and saying, "one of the cents you gave me was a quarter," reaching it out at the same time. I gave him the money, with many thanks and good wishes, and have never heard of him since; but it is safe to say he is prospering in some honorable occupation. I should like to see his honest face again.

☞ In a letter to the Peace Congress at Brussels, Mr. Cobden estimates the total armed force of Europe, exclusive of national guards, police, &c., at 2,350,000 men, and the total expense at £200,000,000 sterling per annum.—Ex. Paper.

DEPRECIATION OF LIFE.

The consequences of violations of the law of life, are seen in the diseases, the debility, and the premature death that come upon almost all mankind. Threescore and ten are the years appointed for man; but few and feeble are they who thus fulfill their days on earth; and it needs no prophet to tell us that, until we learn to live according to God's appointments, we must fall short of this measure.

The average duration of life differs very widely in different places, and still more widely among different classes of society. But in all it is short of nature's intention. The average age of all, who died in Massachusetts during three years, ending May, 1844, was 33.74 years. And from calculations made from the records of various periods, the average duration of life was, in England and Wales,	33.74 years.

Prussia,	27.67 "
Sweden,	27.00 "
Russia,	19.18 "
Concord, Mass.,	38.87 "
Dorchester, "	32.54 "
Plympton, "	40.88 "
Louisville, Ky.,	17.87 "

In the most favored of these towns and countries there was an average loss of three-sevenths of life, and the most unfavored more than five-sevenths.

In analyzing the people into different classes, according to their social condition, it is found that the burden of death lies much heavier upon the poor and the ignorant than upon the prosperous and the intelligent. The Report of the Poor Laws' Commissioners upon the sanitary condition of the laboring classes of England presents some astonishing facts in illustration of this position. The average of life of the families, including fathers, mothers, and children, of the comfortable and poor, was, in

	Comfortable.	Poor.
Derby,	49 years.	21 years.
Bethnal Green,	45 "	16 "
Liverpool,	35 "	15 "

The same was shown in other parts of England. I found similar facts in Dorchester, Mass. I analyzed the bills of mortality for twenty-seven years, and found the average age of farmers, who owned their farms, including parents and their families, was 45 years.

Of the poor,	27 "

In Concord, Massachusetts, the age of the comfortable was 44 years.

Of the poor,	24 "

Wherever I have been able to obtain the facts, I have found a similar difference of value of life among the prosperous and among the indigent. I doubt not the same would be shown in Hartford, and throughout this and all the other States. Here we have the irresistible fact, that from the wealthy and intelligent, from two-sevenths to one-half their life is taken away, and among the poor from one-half to four-fifths is lost.

Nor is this all, that we fall short of our destiny on earth. Even this short period, averaging throughout the world much less than thirty-five years, is diminished at every stage, reduced at every turn, taxed throughout with innumerable burdens. The whole catalogue of diseases, whose name is legion, is born by our race.

Deduct the months during which we are prostrated by disease, and under the control of others—deduct the seasons when, though we are not diseased, yet are invalids, with constitutions broken and powers wasted, dragging on a wearisome existence in premature old age—deduct the periods when our energies are somewhat paralyzed, and our strength so far reduced below its just standard, that we cannot enter upon the full tide of active business, which men in health freely venture upon, and therefore enjoy less and accomplish less than other men—deduct the periods when we are slightly ailing, whether from cold, from headache, or other trifling cause, when our frames are sluggish and our resolutions dormant, when we cannot do in the day and the hour, its own appointed work—deduct the times when we are heavy, stupid and inactive, when our energies are absorbed in digesting improper or excessive food—lastly, deduct the moments when we are irritable in temper, timid of purpose, or gloomy in spirit, when our moral powers are weakened and disturbed, and our mental faculties confused or oppressed—add to all these deductions the thirty or forty years that we lose by premature death, and then deduct the whole from a complete human life, threescore and ten years from two thousand, five hundred and fifty-five days of health, unimpaired by any sickness, and unalloyed by any pain; and it is wofully manifest how small a portion of our natural destiny we obtained out of the means and faculties which a generous Providence has placed in and about us.

Seeing that our short comings of life are so great and so manifest, it is worth a serious inquiry to learn the cause, and a resolute endeavor to remove it.

It cannot be questioned, that this depreciation and shortening of life are mainly chargeable to the general ignorance of the conditions of our existence on earth, and to a consequent failure to fulfill them. The knowledge of the Laws of Physical Life has not been and is not now considered requisite for the conduct of our lives. Nor are the young instructed in these, in order to prepare them to meet and avert the ills that flesh is heir to. Physiology has not been included among the necessary studies of our schools, nor have men in older life thought it worth their while to attend to it. The laws of gravitation are so universally understood, that no man is so simple as to dig his ditch for water to run up hill. All are so familiar with the laws of mechanics as to make a ready and correct use of the inclined plane, the screw, and the wheel and axle.

Chemistry and its words have become almost as familiar as household words; and in our employments, and in our domestic operations its principles are not usually violated. But the principles of Physiology have been regarded as belonging to one of the occult sciences, which might interest the student, but had nothing to do with the practice of every day life.

We therefore see men managing their farms and carrying on their mechanical operations in wisdom, while they manage their own bodies in folly. Before a man assumes the care of a machine, he examines its parts, he learns its uses, the means of its movement, and the purposes to which it is to be applied. With this knowledge, he is ready for his responsibilty. He provides the proper material, with which it is to move; and that upon which it is to operate. But for the management of his own vital machinery he makes no preparation. Hence he makes such mistakes in the conduct and use of his own body, as he would be ashamed to show in regard to his wagons, his water-wheels, or his spinning-jenny.

If a man, when he has woven his web, should put into his loom a parcel of sticks and wire, and then set the loom in motion, just for the pleasure of seeing it move, or perhaps in the hope that the loom would, out of these hard materials, make cloth as well as out of cotton and wool, he would do a very foolish act; but not more foolish than, when he has eaten enough for nutrition, he eats indigestible and innutritious matters, just for the pleasure of eating. No engineer would pour upon the gudgeons and pistons of his engine acids instead of oil, just for a change, because this would be in opposition to his knowledge of the laws of mechanics, and spoil his machine. Yet he will pour wine and brandy, and tobacco

DEPRECIATION OF LIFE.

The consequences of violations of the law of life, are seen in the diseases, the debility, and the premature death that come upon almost all mankind. Threescore and ten are the years appointed for man; but few and feeble are they who thus fulfill their days on earth; and it needs no prophet to tell us that, until we learn to live according to God's appointments, we must fall short of this measure.

The average duration of life differs very widely in different places, and still more widely among different classes of society. But in all it is short of nature's intention. The average age of all, who died in Massachusetts during three years, ending May, 1844, was 33.74 years. And from calculations made from the records of various periods, the average duration of life was, in England and Wales,	33.74 years.

Prussia,	27.67 "
Sweden,	27.00 "
Russia,	19.18 "
Concord, Mass.,	38.87 "
Dorchester, "	32.54 "
Plympton, "	40.88 "
Louisville, Ky.,	17.87 "

In the most favored of these towns and countries there was an average loss of three-sevenths of life, and the most unfavored more than five-sevenths.

In analyzing the people into different classes, according to their social condition, it is found that the burden of death lies much heavier upon the poor and the ignorant than upon the prosperous and the intelligent. The Report of the Poor Laws' Commissioners upon the sanitary condition of the laboring classes of England presents some astonishing facts in illustration of this position. The average of life of the families, including fathers, mothers, and children, of the comfortable and poor, was, in

	Comfortable.	Poor.
Derby,	49 years.	21 years.
Bethnal Green,	45 "	16 "
Liverpool,	35 "	15 "

The same was shown in other parts of England. I found similar facts in Dorchester, Mass. I analyzed the bills of mortality for twenty-seven years, and found the average age of farmers, who owned their farms, including parents and their families, was 45 years.

Of the poor,	27 "

In Concord, Massachusetts, the age of the comfortable was 44 years.

Of the poor,	24 "

Wherever I have been able to obtain the facts, I have found a similar difference of value of life among the prosperous and among the indigent. I doubt not the same would be shown in Hartford, and throughout this and all the other States. Here we have the irresistible fact, that from the wealthy and intelligent, from two-sevenths to one-half their life is taken away, and among the poor from one-half to four-fifths is lost.

Nor is this all, that we fall short of our destiny on earth. Even this short period, averaging throughout the world much less than thirty-five years, is diminished at every stage, reduced at every turn, taxed throughout with innumerable burdens. The whole catalogue of diseases, whose name is legion, is born by our race.

Deduct the months during which we are prostrated by disease, and under the control of others—deduct the seasons when, though we are not diseased, yet are invalids, with constitutions broken and powers wasted, dragging on a wearisome existence in premature old age—deduct the periods when our energies are somewhat paralyzed, and our strength so far reduced below its just standard, that we cannot enter upon the full tide of active business, which men in health freely venture upon, and therefore enjoy less and accomplish less than other men—deduct the periods when we are slightly ailing, whether from cold, from headache, or other trifling cause, when our frames are sluggish and our resolutions dormant, when we cannot do in the day and the hour, its own appointed work—deduct the times when we are heavy, stupid and inactive, when our energies are absorbed in digesting improper or excessive food—lastly, deduct the moments when we are irritable in temper, timid of purpose, or gloomy in spirit, when our moral powers are weakened and disturbed, and our mental faculties confused or oppressed—add to all these deductions the thirty or forty years that we lose by premature death, and then deduct the whole from a complete human life, threescore and ten years from two thousand, five hundred and fifty-five days of health, unimpaired by any sickness, and unalloyed by any pain; and it is wofully manifest how small a portion of our natural destiny we obtained out of the means and faculties which a generous Providence has placed in and about us.

Seeing that our short comings of life are so great and so manifest, it is worth a serious inquiry to learn the cause, and a resolute endeavor to remove it.

It cannot be questioned, that this depreciation and shortening of life are mainly chargeable to the general ignorance of the conditions of our existence on earth, and to a consequent failure to fulfill them. The knowledge of the Laws of Physical Life has not been and is not now considered requisite for the conduct of our lives. Nor are the young instructed in these, in order to prepare them to meet and avert the ills that flesh is heir to. Physiology has not been included among the necessary studies of our schools, nor have men in older life thought it worth their while to attend to it. The laws of gravitation are so universally understood, that no man is so simple as to dig his ditch for water to run up hill. All are so familiar with the laws of mechanics as to make a ready and correct use of the inclined plane, the screw, and the wheel and axle.

Chemistry and its words have become almost as familiar as household words; and in our employments, and in our domestic operations its principles are not usually violated. But the principles of Physiology have been regarded as belonging to one of the occult sciences, which might interest the student, but had nothing to do with the practice of every day life.

We therefore see men managing their farms and carrying on their mechanical operations in wisdom, while they manage their own bodies in folly. Before a man assumes the care of a machine, he examines its parts, he learns its uses, the means of its movement, and the purposes to which it is to be applied. With this knowledge, he is ready for his responsibilty. He provides the proper material, with which it is to move; and that upon which it is to operate. But for the management of his own vital machinery he makes no preparation. Hence he makes such mistakes in the conduct and use of his own body, as he would be ashamed to show in regard to his wagons, his water-wheels, or his spinning-jenny.

If a man, when he has woven his web, should put into his loom a parcel of sticks and wire, and then set the loom in motion, just for the pleasure of seeing it move, or perhaps in the hope that the loom would, out of these hard materials, make cloth as well as out of cotton and wool, he would do a very foolish act; but not more foolish than, when he has eaten enough for nutrition, he eats indigestible and innutritious matters, just for the pleasure of eating. No engineer would pour upon the gudgeons and pistons of his engine acids instead of oil, just for a change, because this would be in opposition to his knowledge of the laws of mechanics, and spoil his machine. Yet he will pour wine and brandy, and tobacco juice into his stomach, and tobacco smoke into his lungs, which are infinitely more delicate organs than anything of wood or iron.

If a dyer should use his old dyes over and over, and expect to produce fast and deep colors, or if the chemist should use acids over and over, and expect to produce good salts, he would show himself so ignorant of his business as to lose employment. Yet men will breathe air over and over, and seem to expect that, by these imperfect means, they shall purify the blood.

If the laws of life were as well understood as the laws of matter, we should see no more mistakes in the management of our bodies, than we do in the management of our machinery; and if Physiology were as well taught in school and elsewhere as Natural Philosophy, its principles would be as familiar, and as ready for use.

The remedy, then, for these evils and errors, is to incorporate the study of Physiology in the course of universal education. Give this science a prominence in all our schools, in proportion to its importance, to its bearing upon human health and human life.—Then will men be saved great suffering, and be so far prepared to fulfill their natural destiny on earth.—Dr. Jarvis.

ECONOMY OF TIME.

Most of the men who have died enormously rich, acquired their wealth not in huge windfalls, but by minute and careful accumulations. It was not one vast sum bequeathed to them after another which overwhelmed them with opulence, but it was the loose money which most men would lavish away—the little sums which many would not deem worth looking after—the pennies and shillings of which some would keep no reckoning, these were the items which, year after year, piled up, reared the pyramid of their fortune. From these money makers let us learn the nobler avarice of time. A German critic could repeat the Iliad in Greek. How many weeks did he bestow on the task of committing it to memory? He had no weeks to spare for such a purpose, for he was a physician in busy practice; but he contrived to master it all during the brief snatches of time, when passing from one patient's door to another. In the life of Dr. Mason Good, a feat of similar industry is recorded. His translation of Lucretius (a Latin poet) was composed in the streets of London, during his extensive walks to visit his numerous patients. Another instance of literary industry is recorded of Dr. Burney, the musician; with the help of pocket grammars and dictionaries, he acquired considerable knowledge of the Italian and French languages, when passing from one place to another to give professional instructions. In order to achieve some good work which you have much at heart, you may not be able to secure an entire week, or even an uninterrupted day. But try what you can make of the broken fragments of time. Glean up its golden dust; those raspings and pairings of precious duration, those leavings of days and remnants of hours, which so many sweep out as the waste of existence.

Perhaps if you be a miser of moments, if you be frugal and hoard up odd minutes, and half hours, and unexpected holydays, your careful gleanings may eke out a long and useful life, and you may die at last, richer in existence than multitudes whose time is all their own. The time which some men waste in superfluous slumber, idle visits, and desultory application, were it all redeemed, would give them wealth of leisure, and enable to execute undertakings, for which they deem a less worried life than theirs essential. When a person says, I have no time to pray—no time to read the Bible—no time to improve my mind, nor do any kind turn for a neighbor, he may be saying what he thinks, but he should not think what he says.

☞ The poor of England are every day becoming a darker and deeper problem for the statesmen of that country to solve. Many of them still refuse to look the fact in the face that it is British institutions that are grinding down the British people, and annually adding to the fearful amount of poverty and crime. The London Herald thus pictures the early training of thousands of the metroplis, and this is paradise compared to the training of the minds:—

"It is idle to talk of secular education—it is idle to talk of religious instruction, whilst the great mass of the people have no homes.—How are we to teach, how are we to instruct; what can the schoolmaster achieve, what the preacher when the intellects which the one would elevate, and the hearts which the other would teach, are left to the cruel training of the streets? Thousands and tens of thousands of our children have no other education, no other christianity, than the education and christianity of the pavement. The hard flag-stones are their text-book, the foul gutter is their Pierian spring. They lisp blasphemy and indecency; they take God's name in vain before they know the meaning of the words they utter. Savages, in the midst of civilization, they are more irreclaimable than the savages of the wild and the desert. It is the want of a home that has made them so. They are hardened, because from their very infancy they have been environed by indurating circumstances. Within the softening influences of domesticity it has never been theirs to abide. They have been turned adrift when scarcely able to walk unaided. Another infant has taken its place at its mother's breast; and the child of two years has made its acquaintance with the pavement. And so commences that out-of-door education, which fills our streets with profligate women and thieves."

☞ Ackerman's First Book of Natural History—Mark Miller Racine, Wis., Cady & Burgess, N. Y., 1848, pp. 286. This is a useful elementary book for schools, got up in the best mechanical style, embelished with numerous cuts. In its arrangement the work is adapted to the wants of schools in a line of science hitherto scarcely studied. In its arrangement only the most interesting parts of nature are treated of; beginning with the planetary and starry system, then the philosophy of storms, volcanoes and various phenomena of inanimate nature; then of the different races of men; afterwards of the various kinds of beasts, birds, fishes, reptiles and insects, and of their instincts and habits, and finally of the external senses, &c. The following concerning the stormy petrel, a little bird that gives warning of storms at sea, is too good not to be repeated:—

"O'er the deep! o'er the deep!
Where the whale, and the shark, and the sword-fish sleep—
Outflying the blast and the driving rain,
The Petrel telleth her tale—in vain:
For the mariner curseth the wandering bird,
Who bringeth him news of the storm unheard.
Ah! thus does the prophet, of good or ill,
Meet hate from the creature he serveth still!
Yet he ne'er falters. So, Petrel, spring
Once more o'er the wave on thy stormy wing!"

On another page we copy the article on the various races of men, and regret that we have not the cuts to accompany it.

THE WISCONSIN FARMER.—Mark Miller, Esq., of Racine, proposes to issue monthly on and after the first of Jan. next an agricultural paper, bearing the above title. From Mr Miller's past experience as a publisher, his means in hand, and his skill, not only as a printer, put also as an engraver, we look for a first rate paper, worth many times the subscription price, which is only 50 cents. The publisher promises his patrons from 5 to 8 engravings in each No. Subscriptions received at Sheldon's, Burlington.

juice into his stomach, and tobacco smoke into his lungs, which are infinitely more delicate organs than anything of wood or iron.

If a dyer should use his old dyes over and over, and expect to produce fast and deep colors, or if the chemist should use acids over and over, and expect to produce good salts, he would show himself so ignorant of his business as to lose employment. Yet men will breathe air over and over, and seem to expect that, by these imperfect means, they shall purify the blood.

If the laws of life were as well understood as the laws of matter, we should see no more mistakes in the management of our bodies, than we do in the management of our machinery; and if Physiology were as well taught in school and elsewhere as Natural Philosophy, its principles would be as familiar, and as ready for use.

The remedy, then, for these evils and errors, is to incorporate the study of Physiology in the course of universal education. Give this science a prominence in all our schools, in proportion to its importance, to its bearing upon human health and human life.—Then will men be saved great suffering, and be so far prepared to fulfill their natural destiny on earth.—Dr. Jarvis.

ECONOMY OF TIME.

Most of the men who have died enormously rich, acquired their wealth not in huge windfalls, but by minute and careful accumulations. It was not one vast sum bequeathed to them after another which overwhelmed them with opulence, but it was the loose money which most men would lavish away—the little sums which many would not deem worth looking after—the pennies and shillings of which some would keep no reckoning, these were the items which, year after year, piled up, reared the pyramid of their fortune. From these money makers let us learn the nobler avarice of time. A German critic could repeat the Iliad in Greek. How many weeks did he bestow on the task of committing it to memory? He had no weeks to spare for such a purpose, for he was a physician in busy practice; but he contrived to master it all during the brief snatches of time, when passing from one patient's door to another. In the life of Dr. Mason Good, a feat of similar industry is recorded. His translation of Lucretius (a Latin poet) was composed in the streets of London, during his extensive walks to visit his numerous patients. Another instance of literary industry is recorded of Dr. Burney, the musician; with the help of pocket grammars and dictionaries, he acquired considerable knowledge of the Italian and French languages, when passing from one place to another to give professional instructions. In order to achieve some good work which you have much at heart, you may not be able to secure an entire week, or even an uninterrupted day. But try what you can make of the broken fragments of time. Glean up its golden dust; those raspings and pairings of precious duration, those leavings of days and remnants of hours, which so many sweep out as the waste of existence.

Perhaps if you be a miser of moments, if you be frugal and hoard up odd minutes, and half hours, and unexpected holydays, your careful gleanings may eke out a long and useful life, and you may die at last, richer in existence than multitudes whose time is all their own. The time which some men waste in superfluous slumber, idle visits, and desultory application, were it all redeemed, would give them wealth of leisure, and enable to execute undertakings, for which they deem a less worried life than theirs essential. When a person says, I have no time to pray—no time to read the Bible—no time to improve my mind, nor do any kind turn for a neighbor, he may be saying what he thinks, but he should not think what he says.

☞ The poor of England are every day becoming a darker and deeper problem for the statesmen of that country to solve. Many of them still refuse to look the fact in the face that it is British institutions that are grinding down the British people, and annually adding to the fearful amount of poverty and crime. The London Herald thus pictures the early training of thousands of the metroplis, and this is paradise compared to the training of the minds:—

"It is idle to talk of secular education—it is idle to talk of religious instruction, whilst the great mass of the people have no homes.—How are we to teach, how are we to instruct; what can the schoolmaster achieve, what the preacher when the intellects which the one would elevate, and the hearts which the other would teach, are left to the cruel training of the streets? Thousands and tens of thousands of our children have no other education, no other christianity, than the education and christianity of the pavement. The hard flag-stones are their text-book, the foul gutter is their Pierian spring. They lisp blasphemy and indecency; they take God's name in vain before they know the meaning of the words they utter. Savages, in the midst of civilization, they are more irreclaimable than the savages of the wild and the desert. It is the want of a home that has made them so. They are hardened, because from their very infancy they have been environed by indurating circumstances. Within the softening influences of domesticity it has never been theirs to abide. They have been turned adrift when scarcely able to walk unaided. Another infant has taken its place at its mother's breast; and the child of two years has made its acquaintance with the pavement. And so commences that out-of-door education, which fills our streets with profligate women and thieves."

☞ Ackerman's First Book of Natural History—Mark Miller Racine, Wis., Cady & Burgess, N. Y., 1848, pp. 286. This is a useful elementary book for schools, got up in the best mechanical style, embelished with numerous cuts. In its arrangement the work is adapted to the wants of schools in a line of science hitherto scarcely studied. In its arrangement only the most interesting parts of nature are treated of; beginning with the planetary and starry system, then the philosophy of storms, volcanoes and various phenomena of inanimate nature; then of the different races of men; afterwards of the various kinds of beasts, birds, fishes, reptiles and insects, and of their instincts and habits, and finally of the external senses, &c. The following concerning the stormy petrel, a little bird that gives warning of storms at sea, is too good not to be repeated:—

"O'er the deep! o'er the deep!
Where the whale, and the shark, and the sword-fish sleep—
Outflying the blast and the driving rain,
The Petrel telleth her tale—in vain:
For the mariner curseth the wandering bird,
Who bringeth him news of the storm unheard.
Ah! thus does the prophet, of good or ill,
Meet hate from the creature he serveth still!
Yet he ne'er falters. So, Petrel, spring
Once more o'er the wave on thy stormy wing!"

On another page we copy the article on the various races of men, and regret that we have not the cuts to accompany it.

THE WISCONSIN FARMER.—Mark Miller, Esq., of Racine, proposes to issue monthly on and after the first of Jan. next an agricultural paper, bearing the above title. From Mr Miller's past experience as a publisher, his means in hand, and his skill, not only as a printer, but also as an engraver, we look for a first rate paper, worth many times the subscription price, which is only 50 cents. The publisher promises his patrons from 5 to 8 engravings in each No. Subscriptions received at Sheldon's, Burlington.

THE LEADING PERIODICAL IN AMERICA.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK, FOR 1849.

Edited by S. J. Hale, Grace Greenwood, and L. A. Godey. A Novelette by Miss E. Leslie, who contributes to every number.—N. P. Willis' Original Scriptural Poetry. T. S. Arthur, who contributes to every number, Illustrative of Crome's Sketches of American Character.

Agreeable to the practice of last year the publisher will issue as good a number in each month as he does in January. This is a novel feature in magazine publishing. During the whole of last year he gave more engravings and more reading matter than any of his contemporaries, and will continue to do so next year. Those who subscribe to Godey's Lady's Book, may do so under the assurance that they will receive more for their money in the Magazine alone than by subscribing for any other work. To this is added and included in the same $3, the Lady's Dollar Newspaper, which contains in one month nearly, if not quite, as much reading matter as the other monthlies. There are peculiarities about Godey's Lady's Book for the Ladies that no other Magazine possesses. There is a Mezzotint and Line Engraving in each number—both by the best artists. There is a Colored Fashion Plate, with a full description. This feature is peculiar to Godey, as no other Magazine has them every month. Then there is a plate of Caps, Bonnets, Chemisettes—Equestrian for Ladies, with Engravings. The Ladies' Work table, with designs for knitting, netting, crochet, and all other kinds of work. Music, beautifully printed on tinted paper, which may be taken out and bound. Colored Modern Cottages and colored Flower Pieces occasionally.

In addition, we shall have in every number one of "Crome's Sketches of American Characteristics," a most amusing series, now first given to the American public. These will be illustrated in every number, by a story from the powerful pen of T. S. Arthur, Esq. "The Changes of Fashion," illustrated by Fay Robinson, Esq.—This series will be very interesting to the ladies. "The applicability of the Fine Arts to Domestic Uses," is another series of engravings now in preparation, and will be published during the year. Religion and History. Our superior Artists, Walters, Tucket, Pease and Welch, are now engaged upon a set of plates illustrative of these two subjects. Our Music. Prepared expressly for us—mostly original, and beautifully printed, has long commanded a decided preference over that of any other Magazine.

TERMS.—For $3 we will send the Lady's Book, containing more reading than any other monthly, and the Lady's Dollar Newspaper published twice a month, which contains as much reading as any of the $3 periodicals of the day—making three publications in one month, or if the subscriber prefers the following splendid engravings to the Lady's Dollar Newspaper, (although we would not advise it, as engravings cannot be sent through the mail without being crushed or creased,) we will send the beautiful plates containing the portraits of Harriet Newell, Fanny Forester, Mrs. Stewart, Mrs. Ann H. Judson and Mrs. E. B. Dwight, and the plate of Christ weeping over Jerusalem, The Opening of the sepulchre, Deliverance of St. Peter, and The Rebuke. If preferred to the newspaper or plates, we will send Miss Leslie's novel of Amelia, and any three of Mrs. Grey's or Miss Pickering's popular novels.

For $5 we will send two copies of the Lady's Book, and a set of the plates to each subscriber. For $10 we will send five copies of the Lady's Book, and a copy to the person sending the club, and a set of plate to each. For $20 11 copies of the Book, and a set of plate to each subscriber, and a copy of the Book to the person send the club.

For $1 we will send the Lady's Book 4 months, and for 25 cents any one No., postage to be paid on all orders. Address, L. A. GODEY, 113 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN GERMANY.—The German Diet, in session at Frankfort, have adopted as a fundamental law for all the German nations, among other articles, the following:—

"Every religious community (church) orders and administers its affairs independently; but it remains, like every other society in the State, subject to the laws of the State. No one religious community enjoys, by means of the State, privileges above the rest. Moreover there exists no State church. New religious communities may be formed; it is not necessary that their confession be acknowledged by the State."

BE A GOOD NEIGHBOR.—Some men are always in hot water, and are never on good terms with their neighbors. What is worse than a quarrel with a next-door neighbor? The tooth-ache is nothing to it. You cannot bear any thing from one of his family. If his children are in your yard, or on your fence, they must be driven away with harsh words—poor innocent things, who have not learned the ways of the world. You command your wife, who is perhaps disposed to forgive and forget, never to borrow from, or lend to, the wife of your adversary—never to speak to his children, or to have any thing whatever to do with the family. Does not a man with such a disposition feel miserably?

We pray you be a good neighbor. Overlook the foibles and faults of your friend. If he is morose and sour in his disposition, there is more necessity for you to be forbearing, mild and persuasive. You have but a short time to live; O, then, spend your days in peace. —Ex. paper.

THE SEVEN YEARS' WAR.

This war raged from 1756 to 1763, and most all the European powers were engaged in it. It originated in a dispute between England & France relating to the Canadas; the French encroached on a tract of country claimed by the English, in the wilderness, uncultivated, and unhabited, excepting by savages; and this war has often been called a "strife about so many acres of snow." The miseries which it occasioned in the interior of Europe, have been seldom equaled—and at length, the Grand Seignor invited the European ministers at his Court to hold a conference, and after stating to them the great abhorrence he felt at the bloody war then raging between so many Christian nations, offered his mediation for effecting a general peace! The offer of the Mohammedan peace maker was not accepted, but rejected with pride and scorn, and hostilities were continued, until poverty brought peace. The war is represented by historians, as one of the most successful that England was ever engaged in. One hundred ships of war were taken from the enemy or destroyed, and £12,000,000 sterling acquired in prize money; but these glorious successes cost the nation 250,000 human lives, and upwards of £111,000,000 sterling! The slaughter of the opponent and allies of Great Britain in this dreadful contest, was little less than 800,000 men!—Ex. paper.

Raleigh, C. W., November 1st, 1848.

HIGHLY ESTEEMED BROTHER STRANG:—I write you at this time how the affairs of the church are in this place. When I first came here superstition and sectarian bigotry reigned universal among religious bigots, and the scene was dark, but the clouds are breaking away and a howling is heard among many of the priests and people. Many efforts have been made to stop the progress of the gospel, but with as little effect as they were anciently. I had a few words with a Christian minister (Mr. Plumb) who came to hear me

THE LEADING PERIODICAL IN AMERICA.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK, FOR 1849.

Edited by S. J. Hale, Grace Greenwood, and L. A. Godey. A Novelette by Miss E. Leslie, who contributes to every number.—N. P. Willis' Original Scriptural Poetry. T. S. Arthur, who contributes to every number, Illustrative of Crome's Sketches of American Character.

Agreeable to the practice of last year the publisher will issue as good a number in each month as he does in January. This is a novel feature in magazine publishing. During the whole of last year he gave more engravings and more reading matter than any of his contemporaries, and will continue to do so next year. Those who subscribe to Godey's Lady's Book, may do so under the assurance that they will receive more for their money in the Magazine alone than by subscribing for any other work. To this is added and included in the same $3, the Lady's Dollar Newspaper, which contains in one month nearly, if not quite, as much reading matter as the other monthlies. There are peculiarities about Godey's Lady's Book for the Ladies that no other Magazine possesses. There is a Mezzotint and Line Engraving in each number—both by the best artists. There is a Colored Fashion Plate, with a full description. This feature is peculiar to Godey, as no other Magazine has them every month. Then there is a plate of Caps, Bonnets, Chemisettes—Equestrian for Ladies, with Engravings. The Ladies' Work table, with designs for knitting, netting, crochet, and all other kinds of work. Music, beautifully printed on tinted paper, which may be taken out and bound. Colored Modern Cottages and colored Flower Pieces occasionally.

In addition, we shall have in every number one of "Crome's Sketches of American Characteristics," a most amusing series, now first given to the American public. These will be illustrated in every number, by a story from the powerful pen of T. S. Arthur, Esq. "The Changes of Fashion," illustrated by Fay Robinson, Esq.—This series will be very interesting to the ladies. "The applicability of the Fine Arts to Domestic Uses," is another series of engravings now in preparation, and will be published during the year. Religion and History. Our superior Artists, Walters, Tucket, Pease and Welch, are now engaged upon a set of plates illustrative of these two subjects. Our Music. Prepared expressly for us—mostly original, and beautifully printed, has long commanded a decided preference over that of any other Magazine.

Terms.—For $3 we will send the Lady's Book, containing more reading than any other monthly, and the Lady's Dollar Newspaper published twice a month, which contains as much reading as any of the $3 periodicals of the day—making three publications in one month, or if the subscriber prefers the following splendid engravings to the Lady's Dollar Newspaper, (although we would not advise it, as engravings cannot be sent through the mail without being crushed or creased,) we will send the beautiful plates containing the portraits of Harriet Newell, Fanny Forester, Mrs. Stewart, Mrs. Ann H. Judson and Mrs. E. B. Dwight, and the plate of Christ weeping over Jerusalem, The Opening of the sepulchre, Deliverance of St. Peter, and The Rebuke. If preferred to the newspaper or plates, we will send Miss Leslie's novel of Amelia, and any three of Mrs. Grey's or Miss Pickering's popular novels.

For $5 we will send two copies of the Lady's Book, and a set of the plates to each subscriber. For $10 we will send five copies of the Lady's Book, and a copy to the person sending the club, and a set of plate to each. For $20 11 copies of the Book, and a set of plate to each subscriber, and a copy of the Book to the person send the club.

For $1 we will send the Lady's Book 4 months, and for 25 cents any one No., postage to be paid on all orders. Address, L. A. GODEY, 113 Chestnut street, Philadelphia.

Religious Liberty in Germany.—The German Diet, in session at Frankfort, have adopted as a fundamental law for all the German nations, among other articles, the following:—

"Every religious community (church) orders and administers its affairs independently; but it remains, like every other society in the State, subject to the laws of the State. No one religious community enjoys, by means of the State, privileges above the rest. Moreover there exists no State church. New religious communities may be formed; it is not necessary that their confession be acknowledged by the State."

Be a Good Neighbor.—Some men are always in hot water, and are never on good terms with their neighbors. What is worse than a quarrel with a next-door neighbor? The tooth-ache is nothing to it. You cannot bear any thing from one of his family. If his children are in your yard, or on your fence, they must be driven away with harsh words—poor innocent things, who have not learned the ways of the world. You command your wife, who is perhaps disposed to forgive and forget, never to borrow from, or lend to, the wife of your adversary—never to speak to his children, or to have any thing whatever to do with the family. Does not a man with such a disposition feel miserably?

We pray you be a good neighbor. Overlook the foibles and faults of your friend. If he is morose and sour in his disposition, there is more necessity for you to be forbearing, mild and persuasive. You have but a short time to live; O, then, spend your days in peace. —Ex. paper.

THE SEVEN YEARS' WAR.

This war raged from 1756 to 1763, and most all the European powers were engaged in it. It originated in a dispute between England & France relating to the Canadas; the French encroached on a tract of country claimed by the English, in the wilderness, uncultivated, and unhabited, excepting by savages; and this war has often been called a "strife about so many acres of snow." The miseries which it occasioned in the interior of Europe, have been seldom equaled—and at length, the Grand Seignor invited the European ministers at his Court to hold a conference, and after stating to them the great abhorrence he felt at the bloody war then raging between so many Christian nations, offered his mediation for effecting a general peace! The offer of the Mohammedan peace maker was not accepted, but rejected with pride and scorn, and hostilities were continued, until poverty brought peace. The war is represented by historians, as one of the most successful that England was ever engaged in. One hundred ships of war were taken from the enemy or destroyed, and £12,000,000 sterling acquired in prize money; but these glorious successes cost the nation 250,000 human lives, and upwards of £111,000,000 sterling! The slaughter of the opponent and allies of Great Britain in this dreadful contest, was little less than 800,000 men!—Ex. paper.

Raleigh, C. W., November 1st, 1848.

Highly Esteemed Brother Strang:—I write you at this time how the affairs of the church are in this place. When I first came here superstition and sectarian bigotry reigned universal among religious bigots, and the scene was dark, but the clouds are breaking away and a howling is heard among many of the priests and people. Many efforts have been made to stop the progress of the gospel, but with as little effect as they were anciently. I had a few words with a Christian minister (Mr. Plumb) who came to hear me for the purpose of debate. After hearing me he refused to debate with me publicly, but said he would do it in writing. I then showed him your challenge in the Herald No. 16. He said he would send you a letter and debate with you through the Herald. I have not seen him since. He has shot himself out of my congregations at least.

The prospect here is good at present. The honest are listening. My relatives here are convinced of the truth, with many more of the honest. I have a large circuit here, and calls are made continually on me for preaching more than I can possibly fill. I never saw as much need of preaching here as now. I have calls at Long Point, where I formerly labored. The brethren there want me to come. I do not see how I can, unless you can send an Elder to assist me. I would be glad if you could send fifty. They all could be employed in West Canada. Do not fail in sending one if possible, and that as soon as possible. I have found one Mormon on my circuit. He came from near Brockville. Yours in the everlasting covenant,

JOHN SHIPPY.

HUDSON BAY COMPANY.—A letter from Washington says:—"It is reported that Mr. Buchanan has declined to resume the negotiation with the agents of the Hudson Bay Company, for the purchase of their actual possessory rights, and their far more extensive claims in Oregon. It would appear that the British Government has interposed with an injunction upon the officers of the company, restraining them from transferring to the United States any of the rights secured to it by the treaty. The principal of these is the right to the free navigation of the Columbia. This looks as if the British Government intended to assert some national rights in that territory.—It is not at all unlikely that serious trouble will grow out of the British pretensions in that quarter under the treaty. The idea of giving up the point of an exclusive navigation of that river, is no more be entertained than a proposition to open the Mississippi to the unrestricted commerce of the world."

☞ The slave trade is as brisk as ever, and some of the nautical men recently examined on this subject, give the opinion that no amount of naval force will extirpate it. Some recommend that the captains of every slaver taken shall be hung at the yard arm. The trade is now carried on along a region of about eight hundred miles of the African coast; and Capt. Matson, after visiting portions of the coast, going seventy miles into the interior, states that the majority of the slaves exported were not captured in wars undertaken for that purpose; that those wars very seldom or ever take place south of the equator, and that nearly one half of the slaves were children or young persons sold by their parents. Out of 1683 slaves captured by him 1033 were children, a very great majority of whom were sold by their parents! North of the equater is the region of the slave hunts, or wars undertaken for the purpose of obtaining slaves for sale.—Post.

JAMAICA, PORTO RICO AND YUCATAN.—By the arrival at New York of the British Mail Packet Forth, later advices have been received from the West India Islands.

From Jamaica dates are to the 23d. The principal topic of interest is said to be the question of continuing or stopping supplies from the Colony to the Home Government. The Jamaica Despatch advocates the absolute stoppage of all further revenues to the British Government while, what it terms the suicidal legislation, is persisted in by parliament, which it asserts, has already brought ruin upon the prospects of the Islanders. The Governor has issued a call for the assembling of the Legislature on the 30th inst., and the question is expected to be the absorbing one.

PORTO RICO.—The passengers from Porto Rico give a dreadful account of the state of the Island. A revolt of the slaves was expected every moment. A general massacre of the whites was expected to be one result of the insurrection. The Spaniards fear that the slaves will receive aid from Haytia, as the Haytians have threatened to make a descent upon Porto Rico.

SMITH'S FIRST BOOK IN GEOGRAPHY:—An excellent work for young students. It is printed on thick strong paper, in large open and elegant type, with a bold, beautiful cut to almost every page; has numerous and most excellent maps; is adapted to the capacity of children without being in the least childish in its style. On the whole, it is the best Geography for children we have ever seen, and is a useful work for men. Sold at Miller's new book store, Racine.

Potosi, Grant Co., Wis., November 27th, 1848.

MUCH ESTEEMED BROTHER AND PROPHET OF THE MOST HIGH:—After my best respects to you and the brethren at Voree, I would inform you that I have made some arrangements with the brethren here to collect tithing. I have done this without any orders from you. We thought it best to do something in tithing. I proposed keeping a treasurer, and whenever I received five dollars to forward it to you. If I am right in so doing well and good, if not, inform me better. Every little helps. There is now five dollars in the treasury, which will go in this letter to be credited as follows:—Ethan Griffith $1,00. David Powell $3,00. Henry H. Deam $1,00. I shall not weary your patience by reading a long letter, but remain your obedient in the Lord's work, H. H. DEAM.

☞ Right, and an excellent example to others. Money received. [ED.

THE BELIEVER'S PRIVILEGE.—The Gospel's glory is, that it is the ministration of the Spirit. The great privilege of believers is, that the Lord manifests himself to them as he doth not to the world. When he manifests his authority in the command, it is then powerful; when he manifests his goodness and truth in the promise, it is full of sweetness; when he manifests his wrath in the threatening, it awes the soul; when he manifests his glory in the face of Christ, it is ravishing, reforming, attracting.—Ex. paper.

☞ Ebenezer Page, one of the Twelve, intends to charter a boat and bring an entire load of the saints to Beaver and Voree next May. They will start from Fort Plain, on the Erie canal.—Emigrants from any part of New York will find this their best chance of coming up.

☞ A Calcutta paper mentions that the supreme criminal court of Bengal, is occupied in trying a man named Doodoo Meah, the head of a new sect of Mahommedans called Faraez, who maintain that the earth is common to all who dwell thereon, and that no one has a right to exact rents or taxes from its cultivators. More than 60 of Doodoo Meah's disciples are to be tried as soon as the prosecution of their teachers is ended.—Ex paper.

☞ The physicians at Constantinople have recommended the use of figs with great success, as a preventive of cholera. The fruit is said to exercise a healing influence upon the stomach and bowels, and is highly useful in diseases which manifest themselves in a derangement of the digestive functions, and commonly precede an attack of the cholera.

for the purpose of debate. After hearing me he refused to debate with me publicly, but said he would do it in writing. I then showed him your challenge in the Herald No. 16. He said he would send you a letter and debate with you through the Herald. I have not seen him since. He has shot himself out of my congregations at least.

The prospect here is good at present. The honest are listening. My relatives here are convinced of the truth, with many more of the honest. I have a large circuit here, and calls are made continually on me for preaching more than I can possibly fill. I never saw as much need of preaching here as now. I have calls at Long Point, where I formerly labored. The brethren there want me to come. I do not see how I can, unless you can send an Elder to assist me. I would be glad if you could send fifty. They all could be employed in West Canada. Do not fail in sending one if possible, and that as soon as possible. I have found one Mormon on my circuit. He came from near Brockville. Yours in the everlasting covenant,

JOHN SHIPPY.

Hudson Bay Company.—A letter from Washington says:—"It is reported that Mr. Buchanan has declined to resume the negotiation with the agents of the Hudson Bay Company, for the purchase of their actual possessory rights, and their far more extensive claims in Oregon. It would appear that the British Government has interposed with an injunction upon the officers of the company, restraining them from transferring to the United States any of the rights secured to it by the treaty. The principal of these is the right to the free navigation of the Columbia. This looks as if the British Government intended to assert some national rights in that territory.—It is not at all unlikely that serious trouble will grow out of the British pretensions in that quarter under the treaty. The idea of giving up the point of an exclusive navigation of that river, is no more be entertained than a proposition to open the Mississippi to the unrestricted commerce of the world."

☛ The slave trade is as brisk as ever, and some of the nautical men recently examined on this subject, give the opinion that no amount of naval force will extirpate it. Some recommend that the captains of every slaver taken shall be hung at the yard arm. The trade is now carried on along a region of about eight hundred miles of the African coast; and Capt. Matson, after visiting portions of the coast, going seventy miles into the interior, states that the majority of the slaves exported were not captured in wars undertaken for that purpose; that those wars very seldom or ever take place south of the equator, and that nearly one half of the slaves were children or young persons sold by their parents. Out of 1683 slaves captured by him 1033 were children, a very great majority of whom were sold by their parents! North of the equater is the region of the slave hunts, or wars undertaken for the purpose of obtaining slaves for sale.—Post.

Jamaica, Porto Rico and Yucatan.—By the arrival at New York of the British Mail Packet Forth, later advices have been received from the West India Islands.

From Jamaica dates are to the 23d. The principal topic of interest is said to be the question of continuing or stopping supplies from the Colony to the Home Government. The Jamaica Despatch advocates the absolute stoppage of all further revenues to the British Government while, what it terms the suicidal legislation, is persisted in by parliament, which it asserts, has already brought ruin upon the prospects of the Islanders. The Governor has issued a call for the assembling of the Legislature on the 30th inst., and the question is expected to be the absorbing one.

Porto Rico.—The passengers from Porto Rico give a dreadful account of the state of the Island. A revolt of the slaves was expected every moment. A general massacre of the whites was expected to be one result of the insurrection. The Spaniards fear that the slaves will receive aid from Haytia, as the Haytians have threatened to make a descent upon Porto Rico.

Smith's First Book in Geography:—An excellent work for young students. It is printed on thick strong paper, in large open and elegant type, with a bold, beautiful cut to almost every page; has numerous and most excellent maps; is adapted to the capacity of children without being in the least childish in its style. On the whole, it is the best Geography for children we have ever seen, and is a useful work for men. Sold at Miller's new book store, Racine.

Potosi, Grant Co., Wis., November 27th, 1848.

Much Esteemed Brother and Prophet of the Most High:—After my best respects to you and the brethren at Voree, I would inform you that I have made some arrangements with the brethren here to collect tithing. I have done this without any orders from you. We thought it best to do something in tithing. I proposed keeping a treasurer, and whenever I received five dollars to forward it to you. If I am right in so doing well and good, if not, inform me better. Every little helps. There is now five dollars in the treasury, which will go in this letter to be credited as follows:—Ethan Griffith $1,00. David Powell $3,00. Henry H. Deam $1,00. I shall not weary your patience by reading a long letter, but remain your obedient in the Lord's work, H. H. DEAM.

☛ Right, and an excellent example to others. Money received. [Ed.

The Believer's Privilege.—The Gospel's glory is, that it is the ministration of the Spirit. The great privilege of believers is, that the Lord manifests himself to them as he doth not to the world. When he manifests his authority in the command, it is then powerful; when he manifests his goodness and truth in the promise, it is full of sweetness; when he manifests his wrath in the threatening, it awes the soul; when he manifests his glory in the face of Christ, it is ravishing, reforming, attracting.—Ex. paper.

☛ Ebenezer Page, one of the Twelve, intends to charter a boat and bring an entire load of the saints to Beaver and Voree next May. They will start from Fort Plain, on the Erie canal.—Emigrants from any part of New York will find this their best chance of coming up.

☛ A Calcutta paper mentions that the supreme criminal court of Bengal, is occupied in trying a man named Doodoo Meah, the head of a new sect of Mahommedans called Farees, who maintain that the earth is common to all who dwell thereon, and that no one has a right to exact rents or taxes from its cultivators. More than 60 of Doodoo Meah's disciples are to be tried as soon as the prosecution of their teachers is ended.—Ex paper.

☛ The physicians at Constantinople have recommended the use of figs with great success, as a preventive of cholera. The fruit is said to exercise a healing influence upon the stomach and bowels, and is highly useful in diseases which manifest themselves in a derangement of the digestive functions, and commonly precede an attack of the cholera.

THE VENAL SANCTUARY.

BY THE REV. JAMES GILBORNE LYONS, L. L. D.

Where in our churches is the place of the poor? I ask this question with shame and sorrow. Where is the place for the poor? Admit that here and there a poor person has a seat. Where is it? Is he invited to sit with us "in a good place?" or do we say to him, "stand thou there, or sit under my footstool?"—Right Rev. Bishop Ives.

"I will bring your sanctuaries unto desolation." Lev. xxvi. 31.

I trod the hallowed ground that bore
A Christian temple tall and proud,
When at each wide and lofty door
Went streaming in a gorgeous crowd:—
A welcome day bid all rejoice—
A fair and ancient festival,
And the glad organ's mighty voice
Shook the strong roof and Gothic wall.

Full many a token mark'd the fold,
Where rich and high believers met,
The sacred volume clasp'd in gold,
The costly robe, and drowsy seat:—
Priests, people, altar, chancel, choir,
Arch, column, window, porch and gate—
That ample fane from vault to spire
Look'd solemn all the calmy great.

But mark! An old and weary man—
A stranger clad "in raiment vile,"
With falling steps and features wan,
Went tottering up the fair broad aisle:—
They cast him out—Oh faithless race!
On a rude bench—unseen—remote,—
Found guilty, in that hour and place,
Of—a lean purse and threadbare coat!

Yes! and if He who sav'd the lost
Stood fainting on that haughty floor,
Array'd in weeds of little cost,
Meek as He sought our world before,
In spite of words which none might blame,
And works of goodness freely done,
That sordid post of wrong and shame
Would greet—Jehovah's only Son.

Oh for a prophet's tongue or pen
To warn the great in wealth and birth,
Who build their God a house, and then
Plant there—the meanest pomps of earth:—
To brand that Church which spurns the poor
From every vain and venal pew,
Where "cloth'd in purple" herd secure,
To kneel or sleep—the lordly few!

Give me the shed, low, bare and plain,
Where love and humble truth abide,
Rather than earth's most noble fane
Defil'd by selfish pomp and pride:—
Give me the damp and desert sod,
Wall'd in by dark old forest trees,
Roof'd over by the skies of God,
But perish temples such as these!

☞ The abolition of slavery in Missouri, through gradual emancipation, is being discussed in the St. Louis papers.

IMPORTANT INDIAN TREATY.—Wm. Medill, Superintendent of Indian affairs, passed through this city last night, having bought out all the right of the Menominee Indians in Wisconsin territory, by which the United States have acquired the title to 4,000,000 acres of territory in Wisconsin, embracing land on the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, and laid down in the recent maps as parts of Brown, Portage and Wisconsin counties. It embraces Little and Big Bull Falls, Whitney's Mills, &c.

The treaty is a very fair one for both parties. The Indians get about $300,000; and, out of this, a specific sum is set apart for a manual labor school, a grist mill, blacksmith's shop, and the support of a miller for fifteen years. The Indians remove themselves, and thus save those swindling operations which are gone into by contractors in their removal. There are no reservations for speculators. Thus the whole matter is a plain business transaction between the Indians and the Government. There are no reserves in the matter to make trouble.—Chicago Democrat.

EXPORT OF BREADSTUFFS.—The shipments of Breadstuffs from New York for Europe for the week ending Oct. 30th, were 42,537 barrels of flour, 109,460 bushels of corn, and 5,712 bushels of wheat. The shipments from Philadelphia for the week ending Oct. 27th were 12,251 barrels of flour, 1,040 barrels of meal, 1,040 barrels of meal, 18,812 bushels of wheat, and 36,352 bushels of corn. The total exports of Breadstuffs from this country from Sept. 1st up to the latest dates is, 197,860 barrels flour, 12,055 barrels meal, 356,844 bushels wheat, 2,418,566 bushels corn.

ASSASSINATIONS IN ROME.—Lately, assassinations and attempted assassinations have been of constant occurrence in Rome. An American bishop was severely wounded, and a priest was murdered in the public streets. The Rev. Mr. Hearne, late of Manchester, England, was stabbed while taking an evening walk, but he succeeded in arresting his assassin as he aimed a second blow.—Wisconsin Standard.

TREASURE TROVE.—A person in England lately rumaging among his family documents, found written on the back of an old deed some words indicating that a pot of gold was buried in a certain place in the garden. It was at first regarded as a hoax, but on digging up the spot an iron pot came to light containing 15,000 guineas, and a scrap of parchment much decayed, on which was written —"The devil shall have it sooner than Cromwell."

DIED,

In Concord, Jackson county, Mich., on the 20th ult., L. D. GRAHAM. Also, in Parmer, Mich., on the 23d ult., JOHN GRAHAM both of dysentery.

STATE OF WISCONSIN, Walworth county, ss. } In Justices Court.

Gilbert Watson, vs. Seth Hamlin. } Before Wm. P. Lyon, J. P.

To the above named defendant,—Sir:—Take notice, that a writ of attachment has been issued against you by the above named Justice, in favor of the above named plaintiff, and that your property has been attached to satisfy the demand of the said plaintiff; and unless you appear before the said Justice on the 15th day of December next at one o'clock, P. M., at his office in the village of Lyons in said county, judgment will be rendered against you, and your property will be sold to pay the debt of the plaintiff. By order of the Court. GILBERT WATSON, Plaintiff.

November 25th, 1848. 37m.

THE VENAL SANCTUARY.

BY THE REV. JAMES GILBORNE LYONS, L. L. D.

Where in our churches is the place of the poor? I ask this question with shame and sorrow. Where is the place for the poor? Admit that here and there a poor person has a seat. Where is it? Is he invited to sit with us "in a good place?" or do we say to him, "stand thou there, or sit under my footstool?"—Right Rev. Bishop Ives.

"I will bring your sanctuaries unto desolation." Lev. xxvi. 31.

I trod the hallowed ground that bore
A Christian temple tall and proud,
When at each wide and lofty door
Went streaming in a gorgeous crowd:—
A welcome day bid all rejoice—
A fair and ancient festival,
And the glad organ's mighty voice
Shook the strong roof and Gothic wall.

Full many a token mark'd the fold,
Where rich and high believers met,
The sacred volume clasp'd in gold,
The costly robe, and drowsy seat:—
Priests, people, altar, chancel, choir,
Arch, column, window, porch and gate—
That ample fane from vault to spire
Look'd solemn all the calmy great.

But mark! An old and weary man—
A stranger clad "in raiment vile,"
With failing steps and features wan,
Went tottering up the fair broad aisle:—
They cast him out—Oh faithless race!
On a rude bench—unseen—remote,—
Found guilty, in that hour and place,
Of—a lean purse and threadbare coat!

Yea! and if He who sav'd the lost
Stood fainting on that haughty floor,
Array'd in weeds of little cost,
Meek as He sought our world before,
In spite of words which none might blame,
And works of goodness freely done,
That sordid post of wrong and shame
Would greet—Jehovah's only Son.

Oh for a prophet's tongue or pen
To warn the great in wealth and birth,
Who build their God a house, and then
Plant there—the meanest pomps of earth:—
To brand that Church which spurns the poor
From every vain and venal pew,
Where "cloth'd in purple" herd secure,
To kneel or sleep—the lordly few!

Give me the shed, low, bare and plain,
Where love and humble truth abide,
Rather than earth's most noble fane
Defil'd by selfish pomp and pride:—
Give me the damp and desert sod,
Wall'd in by dark old forest trees,
Roof'd over by the skies of God,
But perish temples such as these!

The abolition of slavery in Missouri, through gradual emancipation, is being discussed in the St. Louis papers.

IMPORTANT INDIAN TREATY.—Wm. Medill, Superintendent of Indian affairs, passed through this city last night, having bought out all the right of the Menominee Indians in Wisconsin territory, by which the United States have acquired the title to 4,000,000 acres of territory in Wisconsin, embracing land on the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, and laid down in the recent maps as parts of Brown, Portage and Wisconsin counties. It embraces Little and Big Bull Falls, Whitney's Mills, &c.

The treaty is a very fair one for both parties. The Indians get about $300,000; and, out of this, a specific sum is set apart for a manual labor school, a grist mill, blacksmith's shop, and the support of a miller for fifteen years. The Indians remove themselves, and thus save those swindling operations which are gone into by contractors in their removal. There are no reservations for speculators. Thus the whole matter is a plain business transaction between the Indians and the Government. There are no reserves in the matter to make trouble.—Chicago Democrat.

EXPORT OF BREADSTUFFS.—The shipments of Breadstuffs from New York for Europe for the week ending Oct. 30th, were 42,537 barrels of flour, 109,460 bushels of corn, and 5,712 bushels of wheat. The shipments from Philadelphia for the week ending Oct. 27th were 12,251 barrels of flour, 1,040 barrels of meal, 1,040 barrels of meal, 18,812 bushels of wheat, and 36,352 bushels of corn. The total exports of Breadstuffs from this country from Sept. 1st up to the latest dates is, 197,860 barrels flour, 12,055 barrels meal, 356,844 bushels wheat, 2,418,566 bushels corn.

ASSASSINATIONS IN ROME.—Lately, assassinations and attempted assassinations have been of constant occurrence in Rome. An American bishop was severely wounded, and a priest was murdered in the public streets. The Rev. Mr. Hearne, late of Manchester, England, was stabbed while taking an evening walk, but he succeeded in arresting his assassin as he aimed a second blow.—Wisconsin Standard.

TREASURE TROVE.—A person in England lately rumaging among his family documents, found written on the back of an old deed some words indicating that a pot of gold was buried in a certain place in the garden. It was at first regarded as a hoax, but on digging up the spot an iron pot came to light containing 15,000 guineas, and a scrap of parchment much decayed, on which was written —"The devil shall have it sooner than Cromwell."

DIED,

In Concord, Jackson county, Mich., on the 20th ult., L. D. GRAHAM. Also, in Parmer, Mich., on the 23d ult., JOHN GRAHAM both of dysentery.

STATE OF WISCONSIN, Walworth county, ss. } In Justices Court.

Gilbert Watson, vs. Seth Hamlin. } Before Wm. P. Lyon, J. P.

To the above named defendant,—Sir:—Take notice, that a writ of attachment has been issued against you by the above named Justice, in favor of the above named plaintiff, and that your property has been attached to satisfy the demand of the said plaintiff; and unless you appear before the said Justice on the 16th day of December next at one o'clock, P. M., at his office in the village of Lyons in said county, judgment will be rendered against you, and your property will be sold to pay the debt of the plaintiff. By order of the Court. GILBERT WATSON, Plaintiff.

November 25th, 1848. 37m.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 40.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, DEC. 21, 1848. [WHOLE No. 104.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. BURGESS TO MR. STRANG.—No. 3.

Racine December 12th, 1848.

MR. JAMES J. STRANG,—SIR:—In printing my first there are a few errors and omissions. Par. 20, "and making their God after" (the image of) "their own desires," &c. Par. 25, the word (God) seems to me the representative of an unknown cause. Par. 26, here I await your answer, "not want your answer." Perhaps it was the fault of my writing.

47. I shall not accuse you of having "grossly perverted my meaning?" when I quoted Genesis. "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." I said nothing and meant nothing about God making the world out of nothing, nor did I argue as though he did. So all you have said on this subject is nothing to the question at issue. And when you state that in this matter as in others I have fallen into a common error, I think you show too much of that authority which too often takes the place of evidence in the minds of those who are more governed by faith in authority than facts in nature.

48. In par. 58 you say, the writer of the book of Exodus asserts that Moses spoke and God answered him. Can you inform me who wrote the books of Genesis and Exodus? For I presume you do not think that Moses wrote either. And as I take issue of God having been seen and heard, I should like to be informed who testifies to having heard and seen God and Moses talking together.

49. In par. 62 you say, I have most grossly perverted your meaning and captiously suppressed part of your words. I should be glad to learn where, except in misstating the word "authority" for "testimony," for which I am sorry. Let "authority" take the place of "testimony." Then, as mathematicians do not admit "authority" when opposed to them as proof of the question at issue, I take that to be our rule.

50. I must acknowledge I have but little respect for unqualified "authority." By your own showing it is but the judges opinion of the testimony of a witness, and is certainly as likely to be wrong as the testimony itself. Neither appear to me to be sufficient proof of the question at issue. We generally use the best evidence we have to prove our belief true, and I think we never resort to "authority" as proof of truth, while we have anything better to offer.

51. Authority crucified Christ, burnt Catholics and Protestants, Quakers and Witches, made Gallileo say, "the earth does not go round," keeps three million of negro men, women and children in bondage, thousands of years after the miraculous deliverance of the Hebrew slaves from Egypt, and now piously proscribes unorthodox opinions as emanations of evil. Should I admit your testimony and authority as proof sufficient of the question at issue, I too should be "beat before I start." As you say, "a most sage conclusion." 'Tis thus with prophets, priests and men of science. Each sets the other at supreme defiance whene'er they differ, but when they agree they quote each other as authority.

52. In par. 66 you say, testimony proves facts, authority establishes principles. If testimony is contradictory the effect is to leave facts in doubt. But if authority is contradictory the superior must prevail. Now if testimony proves facts, how can it leave them in doubt? If authority is contradictory, how can it establish principles? I think you have reversed the order of things. We generally appeal to facts to prove testimony, and testimony to prove opinions, in the order in which they are formed. So I think principles should establish "authority," not authority principles. The invariable be the test of the variable, not the reverse. If you said a hog weighed 100 lb. and I denied it, I presume we should weigh it, referring to the fact to prove the testimony, rather than the testimony, which could not possibly prove the fact. If testimony and authority are contradictory the effect is to leave both in doubt, as well as the fact in question.

53. If testimony is sufficient proof of a thing affirmed, there are few quacks in medicine or religion but will find plenty to sustain them. Take for example a quack medicine paper and a quack religious paper advertising medicines and means for the extinction of misery and the promotion of happiness at considerable cost to the buyer and profit to the seller. The one injures your body, the other your mind; both rob you of your money by false testimony.—The quack doctor prescribes for you, shows you the medicine, and demands your "credence" and cash. The quack divine prescribes for you, asks your "credence" and cash, shows you nothing, but refers you to some pretended miracle for proof. Is not the common thief a moral man in comparison with either? The doctor promises you health in this world. The divine prophecies your happiness in the world to come. All three rob you, but the thief does not poison you in body or mind. And shall the concurrent testimony of dupes be all that is necessary to make the reception of the quackery of knaves universal? I trust my "knowledge" of the good of these things will be something more than "hearsay" before I take either.

54. One Samuel Adams hired lawyer Bond to close a pathway which ran through his land. The parish authorities claimed the pathway as public property. Bond gained the cause for Adams.—The authorities demanded a new trial, and hired Bond to plead for them. They beat Adams, who demanded a third trial; hired Bond again to plead for him, and beat the authorities, who had Bond struck off the rolls for perjury. I mention this to show the doubtful proof of testimony in ordinary events. Do we not reasonably require something more than testimony to prove the extraordinary?

55. When I said ten men affirming a fact does not make its truth more apparent than one, I meant that ten men affirming the existence of God does not make his existence more apparent than one.—The affirmation of numbers does not make the fact affirmed more perceptible to the mind than when affirmed by one. Numbers of witnesses only increase the probability, not the perception of the truth. All the probabilities imaginable could not make a certainty.

GOSPEL HERALD.

III. No. 40.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, DEC. 21, 1848. [WHOLE No. 104.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. BURGESS TO MR. STRANG.—No. 3.

Racine December 12th, 1848.

MR. JAMES J. STRANG,—SIR:—In printing my first there are a few errors and omissions. Par. 20, "and making their God after" (the image of) "their own desires," &c. Par. 25, the word (God) seems to me the representative of an unknown cause. Par. 26, here I await your answer, "not want your answer." Perhaps it was the fault of my writing.

47. I shall not accuse you of having "grossly perverted my meaning" when I quoted Genesis. "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." I said nothing and meant nothing about God making the world out of nothing, nor did I argue as though he did. So all you have said on this subject is nothing to the question at issue. And when you state that in this matter as in others I have fallen into a common error, I think you show too much of that authority which too often takes the place of evidence in the minds of those who are more governed by faith in authority than facts in nature.

48. In par. 58 you say, the writer of the book of Exodus asserts that Moses spoke and God answered him. Can you inform me who wrote the books of Genesis and Exodus? For I presume you do not think that Moses wrote either. And as I take issue of God having been seen and heard, I should like to be informed who testifies to having heard and seen God and Moses talking together.

49. In par. 62 you say, I have most grossly perverted your meaning and captiously suppressed part of your words. I should be glad to learn where, except in misstating the word "authority" for "testimony," for which I am sorry. Let "authority" take the place of "testimony." Then, as mathematicians do not admit "authority" when opposed to them as proof of the question at issue, I take that to be our rule.

50. I must acknowledge I have but little respect for unqualified "authority." By your own showing it is but the judges opinion of the testimony of a witness, and is certainly as likely to be wrong as the testimony itself. Neither appear to me to be sufficient proof of the question at issue. We generally use the best evidence we have to prove our belief true, and I think we never resort to "authority" as proof of truth, while we have anything better to offer.

51. Authority crucified Christ, burnt Catholics and Protestants, Quakers and Witches, made Gallileo say, "the earth does not go round," keeps three million of negro men, women and children in bondage, thousands of years after the miraculous deliverance of the Hebrew slaves from Egypt, and now piously proscribes unorthodox opinions as emanations of evil. Should I admit your testimony and authority as proof sufficient of the question at issue, I too should be "beat before I start." As you say, "a most sage conclusion." 'Tis thus with prophets, priests and men of science. Each sets the other at supreme defiance whene'er they differ, but when they agree they quote each other as authority.

52. In par. 66 you say, testimony proves facts, authority establishes principles. If testimony is contradictory the effect is to leave facts in doubt. But if authority is contradictory the superior must prevail. Now if testimony proves facts, how can it leave them in doubt? If authority is contradictory, how can it establish principles? I think you have reversed the order of things. We generally appeal to facts to prove testimony, and testimony to prove opinions, in the order in which they are formed. So I think principles should establish "authority," not authority principles. The invariable be the test of the variable, not the reverse. If you said a hog weighed 100 lb. and I denied it, I presume we should weigh it, referring to the fact to prove the testimony, rather than the testimony, which could not possibly prove the fact. If testimony and authority are contradictory the effect is to leave both in doubt, as well as the fact in question.

53. If testimony is sufficient proof of a thing affirmed, there are few quacks in medicine or religion but will find plenty to sustain them. Take for example a quack medicine paper and a quack religious paper advertising medicines and means for the extinction of misery and the promotion of happiness at considerable cost to the buyer and profit to the seller. The one injures your body, the other your mind; both rob you of your money by false testimony.—The quack doctor prescribes for you, shows you the medicine, and demands your "credence" and cash. The quack divine prescribes for you, asks your "credence" and cash, shows you nothing, but refers you to some pretended miracle for proof. Is not the common thief a moral man in comparison with either? The doctor promises you health in this world. The divine prophecies your happiness in the world to come. All three rob you, but the thief does not poison you in body or mind. And shall the concurrent testimony of dupes be all that is necessary to make the reception of the quackery of knaves universal? I trust my "knowledge" of the good of these things will be something more than "hearsay" before I take either.

54. One Samuel Adams hired lawyer Bond to close a pathway which ran through his land. The parish authorities claimed the pathway as public property. Bond gained the cause for Adams.—The authorities demanded a new trial, and hired Bond to plead for them. They beat Adams, who demanded a third trial; hired Bond again to plead for him, and beat the authorities, who had Bond struck off the rolls for perjury. I mention this to show the doubtful proof of testimony in ordinary events. Do we not reasonably require something more than testimony to prove the extraordinary?

55. When I said ten men affirming a fact does not make its truth more apparent than one, I meant that ten men affirming the existence of God does not make his existence more apparent than one.—The affirmation of numbers does not make the fact affirmed more perceptible to the mind than when affirmed by one. Numbers of witnesses only increase the probability, not the perception of the truth. All the probabilities imaginable could not make a certainty.

56. In reply to par. 69, though you do not admit that facts which are not self-evident require proof, when a fact is denied we argue as though they required proof, which I think you admit. I do not say this to give you useless trouble. You say, further, "professing, as I do, to seek truth rather than triumph, I must be beside myself to think of demanding proof of what I know to be true because it is not self-evident." I did not think of demanding proof of what I know to be true, for what I know to be true must be evident to myself.

EDWIN BURGESS.

(To be continued.)

Voree, December 13th, 1848.

DEAR BROTHER:—Bro. ——— ——— brought to me a letter from you (when he came to Conference) in which, among other things, you requested me to write to you, and gave me also a dollar to pay me for my time. This was well; for my time is nearly all occupied in serving my brethren; and with all their kindness my family are sometimes neglected. But as I read your letter, and pocketed the dollar, I said, "the poor have the gospel preached to them." Recollecting the vast amount of requests and inquiries accumulated before me, I could not have it in my heart to change the order of answering. Many of the saints cannot send the dollar, but they have the same need of spiritual aid. It will be a glorious time when there are no more poor among the saints of God; when he shall make them all rich together, in a common possession sufficient for the wants of all. Sometimes I get somewhat discouraged at the prospects before us, fearing that the day of our deliverance is far off, and that the Lord delayeth his coming. But his coming shall be as that of the flood, when men think not. Few will he find having faith. Many will be destroyed, for he will make the earth empty, and there will be few men left.

You speak as though there was a vacuum, a something wanting in your mind. I doubt not nearly all the saints can say the same. Once the shepherds have been careless of the flocks committed to their charge. Now the flocks are careless of the shepherds whom God has set over them. The spiritual leaders are not sustained with the prayers, the faith or the confidence of the saints. We are not a flock in a fold, but a flock scattered, and act like strangers and enemies to one another. We come together in little companies, glance our scorning eyes at one another; a few leaders butt; the lambs are trampled on, trodden under foot and forgotten. It is no wonder we are so poor, diminished and scrawny a flock. No wonder the shepherds have so much trouble with the flock, and with all their trouble do it so little good.

I truly believe more efforts have been made and more pains taken to get members out of the church than to bring members in for the last three years. More to wound and break afresh old wounds than to heal and strengthen. No man can do a good deed but it is attributed to an ill motive. There are very few that calumny does not pursue. However ridiculous a story is put afloat on any one, the man that doubts it is suspected of being particips criminis.—The man that admonishes an offender is deemed contaminated by his association. If he hopes for reform, the vicious will themselves cry him down as the apologist of iniquity. I know of but one way to flee from these evils, and that has been recommended so often in vain that I have hardly a face to repeat it. A little external pressure—persecution from without—would go far to unite us in bonds of brotherhood. It would prevent much apostacy. But these are not the days to try us in patience, but in faith. There are in my acquaintance many saints possessed of an abundance in farms, houses, &c., who are not in the least anxious about gathering. Nothing but persecution will drive them to the places God has appointed for them. Two or three such would put the saints in Voree on a footing of competence and abundance for all time to come. The Order of Enoch have here land enough for one or two thousand.—They need a little help now in paying for it and building on it. By and by they will not need it, or it will be too late. Three thousand dollars judiciously laid out at Beaver gives us the undisputed control and exclusive occupation of the Beaver Islands (sufficient for a small county) for all time to come. Who cares for the kingdom of God as much as for his farm? This lethargy is too deep to rouse men from it on the promises of God.

If it was necessary that a saint should sacrifice houses and land for the sake of the kingdom of God, we might encourage them with the promise of an hundred fold, with persecution also, and in the world to come life everlasting. But one could do that and not sacrifice one cent. Not one in a hundred of the saints but can leave his present residence, making such disposition of his property as circumstances admit of at all times, and come up to one or the other place of gathering and improve his condition. If some great sacrifice was required, possibly some would come. They have only to believe, obey and live. It is too easy. Few will do it. I sometimes almost pray for persecution. It would make the saints love one another. But God governs, and he will accomplish his purposes in wisdom and righteousness. He has long since tried many of us in severe sufferings and persecution, and many stood them whose faith has since failed. There is something of pride in the perilous hour that nerves us for the struggle, but it is a strong faith that, with much goods and no outward peril, can say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." When all the flock hear the shepherd we shall live. Sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

BLEATING OF THE LAMBS.

December 6th, 1848.

DEAR BROTHER:—I am like one astray from the flock. I am where I have not a friend to console me in the affairs of the kingdom. No, not one comforting word do I hear. I would ask, is there one left in Zion that can cheer a drooping mind? I sometimes pause and ask myself, am I one of Christ's little ones? Can I be called the least of his? And must I be left here among the Gentiles to perish alone, not one to bear my burden with me? I do not wish to have you think I want to live without being tried, but to only be where I could meet with those I dearly love, that they might strengthen me, for I am feeble minded and weak, and sometimes I am about to say, I will give up the name of Christ. But, dear brother, this I cannot do, because I have known too much by his holy spirit. He has blessed me with too many dreams to warn me from danger; and I have found that the scripture saith ask, and you shall receive; and I asked for knowledge of this work, and have said I knew it by the spirit of God. But I must confess that I have not that to guide me now, but what I have known that I know and will boldly testify to. It is that which no one can take from me.

I fear by my dream that there is trouble in Voree, but if you have trouble bear it with patience as much so as possible, and remember, although I am but feeble, yet I desire your welfare. Though you are but few in number, as you have Jesus at the helm you will come off conquerors, yea, more than conquerors at last; for if the coming of the Son of Man will be like as it was in the days of Noah, of course there will be but few. I often think of brother Graham's text before the Conference. It was, "fear not little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." What a glorious countenance he wore that evening. I can only look back and be comforted, for nothing but gloomy clouds seem to be gathering over my head.

I do not want you to think I want to be with you because I am

56. In reply to par. 69, though you do not admit that facts which are not self-evident require proof, when a fact is denied we argue as though they required proof, which I think you admit. I do not say this to give you useless trouble. You say, further, "professing, as I do, to seek truth rather than triumph, I must be beside myself to think of demanding proof of what I know to be true because it is not self-evident." I did not think of demanding proof of what I know to be true, for what I know to be true must be evident to myself.

EDWIN BURGESS.

(To be continued.)

Voree, December 13th, 1848.

DEAR BROTHER:—Bro. ——— ——— brought to me a letter from you (when he came to Conference) in which, among other things, you requested me to write to you, and gave me also a dollar to pay me for my time. This was well; for my time is nearly all occupied in serving my brethren; and with all their kindness my family are sometimes neglected. But as I read your letter, and pocketed the dollar, I said, "the poor have the gospel preached to them." Recollecting the vast amount of requests and inquiries accumulated before me, I could not have it in my heart to change the order of answering. Many of the saints cannot send the dollar, but they have the same need of spiritual aid. It will be a glorious time when there are no more poor among the saints of God; when he shall make them all rich together, in a common possession sufficient for the wants of all. Sometimes I get somewhat discouraged at the prospects before us, fearing that the day of our deliverance is far off, and that the Lord delayeth his coming. But his coming shall be as that of the flood, when men think not. Few will he find having faith. Many will be destroyed, for he will make the earth empty, and there will be few men left.

You speak as though there was a vacuum, a something wanting in your mind. I doubt not nearly all the saints can say the same. Once the shepherds have been careless of the flocks committed to their charge. Now the flocks are careless of the shepherds whom God has set over them. The spiritual leaders are not sustained with the prayers, the faith or the confidence of the saints. We are not a flock in a fold, but a flock scattered, and act like strangers and enemies to one another. We come together in little companies, glance our scorning eyes at one another; a few leaders butt; the lambs are trampled on, trodden under foot and forgotten. It is no wonder we are so poor, diminished and scrawny a flock. No wonder the shepherds have so much trouble with the flock, and with all their trouble do it so little good.

I truly believe more efforts have been made and more pains taken to get members out of the church than to bring members in for the last three years. More to wound and break afresh old wounds than to heal and strengthen. No man can do a good deed but it is attributed to an ill motive. There are very few that calumny does not pursue. However ridiculous a story is put afloat on any one, the man that doubts it is suspected of being participis criminis.—The man that admonishes an offender is deemed contaminated by his association. If he hopes for reform, the vicious will themselves cry him down as the apologist of iniquity. I know of but one way to flee from these evils, and that has been recommended so often in vain that I have hardly a face to repeat it. A little external pressure—persecution from without—would go far to unite us in bonds of brotherhood. It would prevent much apostacy. But these are not the days to try us in patience, but in faith. There are in my acquaintance many saints possessed of an abundance in farms, houses, &c., who are not in the least anxious about gathering. Nothing but persecution will drive them to the places God has appointed for them. Two or three such would put the saints in Voree on a footing of competence and abundance for all time to come. The Order of Enoch have here land enough for one or two thousand.—They need a little help now in paying for it and building on it. By and by they will not need it, or it will be too late. Three thousand dollars judiciously laid out at Beaver gives us the undisputed control and exclusive occupation of the Beaver Islands (sufficient for a small county) for all time to come. Who cares for the kingdom of God as much as for his farm? This lethargy is too deep to [illegible] men from it on the promises of God.

If it was necessary that a saint should sacrifice houses and land for the sake of the kingdom of God, we might encourage them with the promise of an hundred fold, with persecution also, and in the world to come life everlasting. But one could do that and not sacrifice one cent. Not one in a hundred of the saints but can leave his present residence, making such disposition of his property as circumstances admit of at all times, and come up to one or the other place of gathering and improve his condition. If some great sacrifice was required, possibly some would come. They have only to believe, obey and live. It is too easy. Few will do it. I sometimes almost pray for persecution. It would make the saints love one another. But God governs, and he will accomplish his purposes in wisdom and righteousness. He has long since tried many of us in severe sufferings and persecution, and many stood them whose faith has since failed. There is something of pride in the perilous hour that nerves us for the struggle, but it is a strong faith that, with much goods and no outward peril, can say, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." When all the flock hear the shepherd we shall live. Sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

BLEATING OF THE LAMBS.

December 6th, 1848.

DEAR BROTHER:—I am like one astray from the flock. I am where I have not a friend to console me in the affairs of the kingdom. No, not one comforting word do I hear. I would ask, is there one left in Zion that can cheer a drooping mind? I sometimes pause and ask myself, am I one of Christ's little ones? Can I be called the least of his? And must I be left here among the Gentiles to perish alone, not one to bear my burden with me? I do not wish to have you think I want to live without being tried, but to only be where I could meet with those I dearly love, that they might strengthen me, for I am feeble minded and weak, and sometimes I am about to say, I will give up the name of Christ. But, dear brother, this I cannot do, because I have known too much by his holy spirit. He has blessed me with too many dreams to warn me from danger; and I have found that the scripture saith ask, and you shall receive; and I asked for knowledge of this work, and have said I knew it by the spirit of God. But I must confess that I have not that to guide me now, but what I have known that I know and will boldly testify to. It is that which no one can take from me.

I fear by my dream that there is trouble in Voree, but if you have trouble bear it with patience as much so as possible, and remember, although I am but feeble, yet I desire your welfare. Though you are but few in number, as you have Jesus at the helm you will come off conquerors, yea, more than conquerors at last; for if the coming of the Son of Man will be like as it was in the days of Noah, of course there will be but few. I often think of brother Graham's text before the Conference. It was, "fear not little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." What a glorious countenance he wore that evening. I can only look back and be comforted, for nothing but gloomy clouds seem to be gathering over my head.

I do not want you to think I want to be with you because I am unwilling to be tried; for I expect God's people will be a tried people. But I see the need of gathering together. I write this to you because I want my spiritual strength renewed. Do not read it and pass me by without writing something to strengthen the feeblest of all the human family. Please give my best respects to all the saints. May the blessings of heaven rest upon them, and may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen. Please excuse my poor writing and bad spelling, for the trouble of my mind is great. The reason of my attempting to write was for comfort and strength from head quarters. Do not forget poor me because I am in Babylon. Do not, I entreat of you, forget a sister who is far away from home.

Bath Mills, Mich., Nov. 24th, 1848.

BROTHER STRANG:—Believing that you feel anxious to hear from those Elders sent out, I would say that I am in the very place you sent me. For I feel it important that men should not only be called of God, as was Aaron, by a prophet, but that they should go when and where the prophet sends. Then by implicitly relying on the promise of their Father in heaven, lo I am with thee, they are sure of success. Thus hath the Lord favored us here, though the Devil growls, priestcraft trembles, sectarians rage, yet we are enabled to so lay before the world the true Apostolic law of induction into the church of Christ, whereby aliens may become citizens of the kingdom, children of God, even sons of God, in that plain unsophisticated way that they become mightily convinced. The long horns of sectarianism are beginning to fall off, and some have already been inducted into the church of Christ, such as I trust will stand up at the coming of Christ, and many more I expect will obey the truth at our Conference next week. There is manifestly a disposition in the Elders in these parts to increase their labors of love, and zealously and understandingly wield the sword of the spirit against the camp of the enemy, and push the battle to the gate with the motto, onward, conquer or die trying. I have been north, preached eight or ten times with great liberty. I think there may be good done yet in Michigan. Brethren, come over and help us. The sickness and death of brother Graham's father and brother have deprived us of the valuable labors of our highly esteemed Apostle S. Graham. His toil and care in their sickness certainly is unparalleled in my acquaintance. If you have two more of the same spirit and faith to send here, Michigan will yield to truth, and we shall fetch up our hundreds. G. BROWNSON.

FAMILY GOVERNMENT.

Why are cases so frequent in which the children of virtuous men grow up vicious and abandoned? There are many nice adjustments necessary to secure the highest and best results in the education of a child, but the principles necessary for tolerable success must be few and simple. There are two, which we wish had a voice loud enough to thunder in the ears of every parent in the country;—there are two, the breach of one or the other of which will explain almost every case of gross failure on the part of virtuous parents, which we have ever known. They are these:—

1. Keep your children from bad company; and,
2. Make them obey you.

There is no time to enlarge on these points; but it seems to us that habits of insubordination at home, and the company of bad boys abroad, are the two great sources of evil, which undo so much of what moral and religious instruction would otherwise effect.—The current of parental interest is setting towards mere instruction to such an extent as to overrate altogether its power; and the immense injury which comes in from such sources as bad company and insudordination, is overlooked and forgotten. What folly to think that a boy can play with the profane, impure passionate boys which herd in the streets, six days in a week, and have the stains all wiped away by being compelled to learn his Sunday-school lesson on the seventh; or that children who made the kitchen or the nursery scenes of riot and noise, from the age of three to eight years, will pe prepared for anything in after life but to carry the spirit of insubordination and riot wherever they may go. No: children should be taught, most certainly, but they must also be taken care of. They must be governed at home, and be kept from contaminating influences from abroad, or they are ruined. If parents ask, How shall we make our children obey? we answer, in the easiest and pleasentest way you can, but at all events MAKE THEM OBEY. If you ask, How shall we keep our boys from bad company? we answer, too in the easiest and pleasentest way you possibly can, but at all events KEEP THEM OUT OF THE STREETS. The alternative, it seems to us, is as clear and decided as any which circumstances ever made up for man; you must govern your children and keep them away from the contamination of vice, or you must expect to spend your old age in mourning over the ruins of your family.—Abbott.

CANADA—ANNEXATION TO THE UNITED STATES.—The following private letter, says the London Daily News, from an intelligent and loyal colonist in the neighborhood of Miramichi (New Brunswick) has been obligingly communicated to us. The writer, we are assured, is a man the sobriety of whose judgment may be relied upon:—

"MIRAMICHI, Oct. 7.— * * * A great change has come over the spirit of our colony within the last twelve months. I can safely say that it is now nearly ripe for annexation to the United States. This may startle you, but it is not less true than strange. You will see no trace of this in our newspapers, a wholesome fear of going too far still operating as a check upon them; but the question is daily and hourly discussed among all classes, is regularly debated in the clubs, and advocated by men of wealth and standing everywhere. A variety of causes have combined to bring about this state of feeling. In the first place the reduction of the duty on Baltic timber however advantageous to England, has completely destroyed our timber trade, and left us without an export.—The threatened abrogation of the navigation laws closed most of our ship yards, and effectually checked that branch of industry.—Free trade is, no doubt, a very good thing for England; but to enjoy it, England must relinquish the idea of possessing colonies, unless they are managed in a manner as widely different as possible from the present system. There can be no question that the West Indias are utterly ruined; and, in another year, we shall be in an equally bankrupt condition. The people here cannot avoid seeing and hearing that the people of the United States are in a most flourishing condition; that there is abundant business of a profitable kind in all the American cities, for all who seek it; and that wages are double at least, what are paid or can possibly be afforded here. Is it strange, then, that thousands, without waiting for events, should leave this colony and proceed "further west," as the phrase goes! Since June last about 5000 person, residents and natives, have left St. John's for Boston, thence to scatter over the Union. From all parts of the province they go also. * * * * About 4000 emigrants from Ireland have landed during the present season, and of these there are not 400 now remaining, all the rest having "gone west." You will notice that Canada has sent two members of council, Infontaine and Sullivan, to Washington, to negotiate a commercial treaty. Mr. Woodward, the member for St. John's in our assembly, was sent by the Reform Club of St. John's, to urge that New Brunswick be put on the same footing as Canada. The Hon. Wm. Young, of Nova Scotia, has gone unwilling to be tried; for I expect God's people will be a tried people. But I see the need of gathering together. I write this to you because I want my spiritual strength renewed. Do not read it and pass me by without writing something to strengthen the feeblest of all the human family. Please give my best respects to all the saints. May the blessings of heaven rest upon them, and may the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen. Please excuse my poor writing and bad spelling, for the trouble of my mind is great. The reason of my attempting to write was for comfort and strength from head quarters. Do not forget poor me because I am in Babylon. Do not, I entreat of you, forget a sister who is far away from home.

Bath Mills, Mich., Nov. 24th, 1848.

Brother Strang:—Believing that you feel anxious to hear from those Elders sent out, I would say that I am in the very place you sent me. For I feel it important that men should not only be called of God, as was Aaron, by a prophet, but that they should go when and where the prophet sends. Then by implicitly relying on the promise of their Father in heaven, lo I am with thee, they are sure of success. Thus hath the Lord favored us here, though the Devil growls, priestcraft trembles, sectarians rage, yet we are enabled to so lay before the world the true Apostolic law of induction into the church of Christ, whereby aliens may become citizens of the kingdom, children of God, even sons of God, in that plain unsophisticated way that they become mightily convinced. The long horns of sectarianism are beginning to fall off, and some have already been inducted into the church of Christ, such as I trust will stand up at the coming of Christ, and many more I expect will obey the truth at our Conference next week. There is manifestly a disposition in the Elders in these parts to increase their labors of love, and zealously and understandingly wield the sword of the spirit against the camp of the enemy, and push the battle to the gate with the motto, onward, conquer or die trying. I have been north, preached eight or ten times with great liberty. I think there may be good done yet in Michigan. Brethren, come over and help us. The sickness and death of brother Graham's father and brother have deprived us of the valuable labors of our highly esteemed Apostle S. Graham. His toil and care in their sickness certainly is unparalleled in my acquaintance. If you have two more of the same spirit and faith to send here, Michigan will yield to truth, and we shall fetch up our hundreds. G. BROWNSON.

FAMILY GOVERNMENT.

Why are cases so frequent in which the children of virtuous men grow up vicious and abandoned? There are many nice adjustments necessary to secure the highest and best results in the education of a child, but the principles necessary for tolerable success must be few and simple. There are two, which we wish had a voice loud enough to thunder in the ears of every parent in the country;—there are two, the breach of one or the other of which will explain almost every case of gross failure on the part of virtuous parents, which we have ever known. They are these:—

1. Keep your children from bad company; and,
2. Make them obey you.

There is no time to enlarge on these points; but it seems to us that habits of insubordination at home, and the company of bad boys abroad, are the two great sources of evil, which undo so much of what moral and religious instruction would otherwise effect.—The current of parental interest is setting towards mere instruction to such an extent as to overrate altogether its power; and the immense injury which comes in from such sources as bad company and insubordination, is overlooked and forgotten. What folly to think that a boy can play with the profane, impure passionate boys which herd in the streets, six days in a week, and have the stains all wiped away by being compelled to learn his Sunday-school lesson on the seventh; or that children who made the kitchen or the nursery scenes of riot and noise, from the age of three to eight years, will pe prepared for anything in after life but to carry the spirit of insubordination and riot wherever they may go. No: children should be taught, most certainly, but they must also be taken care of. They must be governed at home, and be kept from contaminating influences from abroad, or they are ruined. If parents ask, How shall we make our children obey? we answer, in the easiest and pleasentest way you can, but at all events MAKE THEM OBEY. If you ask, How shall we keep our boys from bad company? we answer, too in the easiest and pleasentest way you possibly can, but at all events KEEP THEM OUT OF THE STREETS. The alternative, it seems to us, is as clear and decided as any which circumstances ever made up for man; you must govern your children and keep them away from the contamination of vice, or you must expect to spend your old age in mourning over the ruins of your family.—Abbott.

Canada—Annexation to the United States.—The following private letter, says the London Daily News, from an intelligent and loyal colonist in the neighborhood of Miramichi (New Brunswick) has been obligingly communicated to us. The writer, we are assured, is a man the sobriety of whose judgment may be relied upon:—

"Miramichi, Oct. 7.— * * * A great change has come over the spirit of our colony within the last twelve months. I can safely say that it is now nearly ripe for annexation to the United States. This may startle you, but it is not less true than strange. You will see no trace of this in our newspapers, a wholesome fear of going too far still operating as a check upon them; but the question is daily and hourly discussed among all classes, is regularly debated in the clubs, and advocated by men of wealth and standing everywhere. A variety of causes have combined to bring about this state of feeling. In the first place the reduction of the duty on Baltic timber however advantageous to England, has completely destroyed our timber trade, and left us without an export.—The threatened abrogation of the navigation laws closed most of our ship yards, and effectually checked that branch of industry.—Free trade is, no doubt, a very good thing for England; but to enjoy it, England must relinquish the idea of possessing colonies, unless they are managed in a manner as widely different as possible from the present system. There can be no question that the West Indias are utterly ruined; and, in another year, we shall be in an equally bankrupt condition. The people here cannot avoid seeing and hearing that the people of the United States are in a most flourishing condition; that there is abundant business of a profitable kind in all the American cities, for all who seek it; and that wages are double at least, what are paid or can possibly be afforded here. Is it strange, then, that thousands, without waiting for events, should leave this colony and proceed "further west," as the phrase goes? Since June last about 5000 person, residents and natives, have left St. John's for Boston, thence to scatter over the Union. From all parts of the province they go also. * * * About 4000 emigrants from Ireland have landed during the present season, and of these there are not 400 now remaining, all the rest having "gone west." You will notice that Canada has sent two members of council, Infontaine and Sullivan, to Washington, to negotiate a commercial treaty. Mr. Woodward, the member for St. John's in our assembly, was sent by the Reform Club of St. John's, to urge that New Brunswick be put on the same footing as Canada. The Hon. Wm. Young, of Nova Scotia, has gone on a similar errand. The Hon. Mr. Coles, of the executive council of Prince Edward's Island, has been sent to Washington, to offer to the vessels of the United States the privilege of landing on the Island, and thence prosecuting the fisheries of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, on payment of one dollar per ton for each vessel so employed to the Island treasury. These are but first steps toward a connexion of a more intimate character, and clearly indicate the change of feeling. The apathy of the Colonial office; the utter ignorance which prevails there of the true condition of these colonies, as also the total indifference of government to every thing which would conduce to benefit British North America, disgusts all sensible persons. Downing street is in Cimmerian darkness, and it fancies that because all is quiet every thing goes well, while these colonies are silently but surely slipping away from England.

POMPEII.

The Savior has likened the end of the world to the days of Noah, and of Sodom. They were eating and drinking, planting and building, marrying and giving in marriage, until those events came to pass, and destroyed them,—not knowing, or believing that such destruction was so speedily to overwhelm them. So, says the Savior, will the coming of the Son of Man be.

It is almost impossible to comprehend the awful suddeness of such a catastrophe. We get a faint idea of it in such occurrences as the destruction of the Lexington and Ocean Monarch, by fire, and that of the Atlantic by water; but the scale is so small, that the comparison seems almost at fault. Yet to the individuals who then perished, those events had all the magnitude that the end of the world will have to the individuals who will then perish.

In the destruction of a whole city by a sudden catastrophe, the parallel is more striking. Pompeii and Herculaneum were destroyed about eighteen hundred years since, by an eruption of Mount Vesuvius. The inhabitants of those cities, while about their usual business, or pleasures, must have been startled by the suddenness of that occurrence, as will those living at Christ's advent by his coming.

As Pompeii lay at a greater distance from Vesuvius than Herculaneum, the stream of lava never reached it. It was inhumed by showers of ashes, pumice, and stones, which formed a bed of variable depth from twelve to twenty feet, and which is easily removed; whereas the former city was entombed in ashes and lava to the depth of from seventy to one hundred feet. With the exception of the upper stories of the houses, which were either consumed by red-hot stones ejected from the volcano, or crushed by the weight of the matter collected on their roofs, we behold in Pompeii a flourishing city nearly in the state in which it existed eighteen centuries ago! The buildings unaltered by newer fashions; the paintings undimmed by the leaden touch of Time; household furniture left in the confusion of use; articles even of intrinsic value abandoned in the hurry of escape, yet safe from the robber or scattered about as they fell from the trembling hand which could not stoop or pause for the most valuable possessions; and in some instances the bones of the inhabitants, bearing sad testimony to the suddenness and completeness of the calamity which overwhelmed them. [Pompeii, i. 5, Lib. Entertaining Knowledge.] In the prison, skeletons of unfortunate men were discovered, their leg bones being inclosed in shackles, and are so preserved in the museum at Portici.

"I noticed," says a traveler, "a striking memorial of this mighty eruption, in the forum opposite to the temple to Jupiter; a new altar of white marble, exquisitely beautiful, and apparently just out of the hands of the sculptor, had been erected there; an inclosure was building all around; the mortar just dashed against the side of the walls, was but half spread out; you saw the long sliding stroke of the trowel about to return and obliterate its own track, but it never did return; the hand of the workman was suddenly arrested; and, after the lapse of 1800 years, the whole looks so fresh, that you would almost swear the mason was only gone to dinner, and about to come back immediately, to finish his work!" So will the coming of the Son of Man be.—Advent Herald.

EVIL CONSEQENCES OF SMOKING.

The wide-spread habit of smoking has not yet had due medical attention paid to it and its consequences. It is only by two or three years' observation that Dr. Laycock has become fully aware of the great changes induced in the system by the abuse of tobacco, and of the varied and obscure forms of disease to which especially excessive smoking gave origin. He proceeded to state some of them as they were met with in the pharyngeal mucus membrane, the stomach, the lungs, the heart, the brain, and the nervous system.—The tobacco consumed by habitual smokers varies from half an ounce to twelve ounces per week: the usual quantity from two to three ounces. Inveterate cigar smokers will consume from four to five dozen per week. The first morbid result is an inflammatory condition of the mucus membrane, of the lips and tongue, then the tonsils and pharynx suffer, the mucus membrane becoming dry and congested. If the thorax be examined well, it will be found slightly swollen, with congested veins meandering over the surface, and here and there a streak of mucus. The action of tobacco smoking on the heart is depressing, and some individuals, who feel it in this organ more than others, complain of an uneasy sensation about the left nipple, a distressed feeling, not amounting to faintness, but allied to it. The action of the heart is observed to be feeble and irregular. An uneasy feeling is also experienced in or beneath the pectoral muscles, and oftener on the right side than the left. On the brain, the use of tobacco appears to diminish the rapidity of cerebral action, and check the flow of ideas through the mind. It differs from opium and henbane, and rather excites to wakefulness, like green tea, than composes to sleep; induces a dreaminess which leaves no impression on the memory, leaving a great susceptibility, indicated by a trembling of the hands and irritability of temper. Such are secondary results of smoking.—So are blackness of teeth and gum-biles. There is also a sallow paleness of the complextion, an irresoluteness of disposition, a want of life and energy, and in constant smokers who do not drink, a tendency to pulmonary phthisic. Dr. Wright of Birmingham, in a communication to the author, fully corroborates his opinion; and both agree that smoking produces gastric disorders, coughs, an inflammatory affection of the larynx, and pharynx, diseases of the heart and lowness of the spirits, and, in short, is very injurious to the respiratory, alimentary, nervous system.—English Literary Gazette.

LIFE—ITS TRIALS.—To find one who has passed through life, without sorrow, you must find one who is incapable of love or hatred, of hope or fear—one that has no memory of the past, and no thought of the future—one that has no sympathies with humanity, and no feeling in common with the rest of the species.—Ex paper.

IMPOSTURE.—Just as the paper was going to press we received a communication from Theopholis W. Nixon, and endorsed by several brethren, intended to sustain him as an Elder. We cannot in this No. do more than to caution all the saints to shun him as they would pestilence. In the next No. we have something to say.

BRIGHAMITE PAPER.—Orson Hyde has issued a prospectus for a new paper, to be called the "Frontier Guardian." on a similar errand. The Hon. Mr. Coles, of the executive council of Prince Edward's Island, has been sent to Washington, to offer to the vessels of the United States the privilege of landing on the Island, and thence prosecuting the fisheries of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, on payment of one dollar per ton for each vessel so employed to the Island treasury. These are but first steps toward a connexion of a more intimate character, and clearly indicate the change of feeling. The apathy of the Colonial office; the utter ignorance which prevails there of the true condition of these colonies, as also the total indifference of government to every thing which would conduce to ben fit British North America, disgusts all sensible persons. Downing street is in Cimmerian darkness, and it fancies that because all is quiet every thing goes well, while these colonies are silently but surely slipping away from England.

POMPEII.

The Savior has likened the end of the world to the days of Noah, and of Sodom. They were eating and drinking, planting and building, marrying and giving in marriage, until those events came to pass, and destroyed them,—not knowing, or believing that such destruction was so speedily to overwhelm them. So, says the Savior, will the coming of the Son of Man be.

It is almost impossible to comprehend the awful suddeness of such a catastrophe. We get a faint idea of it in such occurrences as the destruction of the Lexington and Ocean Monarch, by fire, and that of the Atlantic by water; but the scale is so small, that the comparison seems almost at fault. Yet to the individuals who then perished, those events had all the magnitude that the end of the world will have to the individuals who will then perish.

In the destruction of a whole city by a sudden catastrophe, the parallel is more striking. Pompeii and Herculaneum were destroyed about eighteen hundred years since, by an eruption of Mount Vesuvius. The inhabitants of those cities, while about their usual business, or pleasures, must have been startled by the suddenness of the occurrence, as will those living at Christ's advent by his coming.

As Pompeii lay at a greater distance from Vesuvius than Herculaneum, the stream of lava never reached it. It was inhumed by showers of ashes, pumice, and stones, which formed a bed of variable depth from twelve to twenty feet, and which is easily removed; whereas the former city was entombed in ashes and lava to the depth of from seventy to one hundred feet. With the exception of the upper stories of the houses, which were either consumed by red-hot stones ejected from the volcano, or crushed by the weight of the matter collected on their roofs, we behold in Pompeii a flourishing city nearly in the state in which it existed eighteen centuries ago! The buildings unaltered by newer fashions; the paintings undimmed by the leaden touch of Time; household furniture left in the confusion of use; articles even of intrinsic value abandoned in the hurry of escape, yet safe from the robber or scattered about as they fell from the trembling hand which could not stoop or pause for the most valuable possessions; and in some instances the bones of the inhabitants, bearing sad testimony to the suddenness and completeness of the calamity which overwhelmed them. [Pompeii, i. 5, Lib. Entertaining Knowledge.] In the prison, skeletons of unfortunate men were discovered, their leg bones being inclosed in shackles, and are so preserved in the museum at Portici.

"I noticed," says a traveler, "a striking memorial of this mighty eruption, in the forum opposite to the temple to Jupiter; a new altar of white marble, exquisitely beautiful, and apparently just out of the hands of the sculptor, had been erected there; an inclosure was building all around; the mortar just dashed against the side of the walls, was but half spread out; you saw the long sliding stroke of the trowel about to return and obliterate its own track, but it never did return; the hand of the workman was suddenly arrested; and, after the lapse of 1800 years, the whole looks so fresh, that you would almost swear the mason was only gone to dinner, and about to come back immediately, to finish his work!" So will the coming of the Son of Man be.—Advent Herald.

EVIL CONSEQENCES OF SMOKING.

The wide-spread habit of smoking has not yet had due medical attention paid to it and its consequences. It is only by two or three years' observation that Dr. Laycock has become fully aware of the great changes induced in the system by the abuse of tobacco, and of the varied and obscure forms of disease to which especially excessive smoking gave origin. He proceeded to state some of them as they were met with in the pharyngeal mucus membrane, the stomach, the lungs, the heart, the brain, and the nervous system.—The tobacco consumed by habitual smokers varies from half an ounce to twelve ounces per week: the usual quantity from two to three ounces. Inveterate cigar smokers will consume from four to five dozen per week. The first morbid result is an inflammatory condition of the mucus membrane, of the lips and tongue, then the tonsils and pharynx suffer, the mucus membrane becoming dry and congested. If the thorax be examined well, it will be found slightly swollen, with congested veins meandering over the surface, and here and there a streak of mucus. The action of tobacco smoking on the heart is depressing, and some individuals, who feel it in this organ more than others, complain of an uneasy sensation about the left nipple, a distressed feeling, not amounting to faintness, but allied to it. The action of the heart is observed to be feeble and irregular. An uneasy feeling is also experienced in or beneath the pectoral muscles, and oftener on the right side than the left. On the brain, the use of tobacco appears to diminish the rapidity of cerebral action, and check the flow of ideas through the mind. It differs from opium and henbane, and rather excites to wakefulness, like green tea, than composes to sleep; induces a dreaminess which leaves no impression on the memory, leaving a great susceptibility, indicated by a trembling of the hands and irritability of temper. Such are secondary results of smoking.—So are blackness of teeth and gum-biles. There is also a sallow paleness of the complexion, an irresoluteness of disposition, a want of life and energy, and in constant smokers who do not drink, a tendency to pulmonary phthisic. Dr. Wright of Birmingham, in a communication to the author, fully corroborates his opinion; and both agree that smoking produces gastric disorders, coughs, an inflammatory affection of the larynx, and pharynx, diseases of the heart and lowness of the spirits, and, in short, is very injurious to the respiratory, alimentary, nervous system.—English Literary Gazette.

LIFE—ITS TRIALS.—To find one who has passed through life, without sorrow, you must find one who is incapable of love or hatred, of hope or fear—one that has no memory of the past, and no thought of the future—one that has no sympathies with humanity, and no feeling in common with the rest of the species.—Ex paper.

IMPOSTURE.—Just as the paper was going to press we received a communication from Theopholis W. Nixon, and endorsed by several brethren, intended to sustain him as an Elder. We cannot in this No. do more than to caution all the saints to shun him as they would pestilence. In the next No. we have something to say.

BRIGHAMITE PAPER.—Orson Hyde has issued a prospectus for a new paper, to be called the "Frontier Guardian."

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 41.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. DEC. 28, 1848. [WHOLE No. 105.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 5.

Voree, December 18th, 1848.

DEAR SIR :—The first sheet of your No. 3 is received, but as it is to be continued I have concluded not to enter upon the review of it until it is all in my hands, and to proceed with the affirmative proposition that "there is a God, a person possessed of intelligence, motive and will."

129. I undertake to demonstrate, in an absolute manner, not only the being, but the ever-present agency of God in all the phenomena of the material universe. I profess to solve the old problem that has puzzled philosophy in every age, ever uttered by human curiosity, but perhaps never, as yet, answered by pure reason—"What is the true nature of causation?" Beyond all controversy, this must be regarded as the fundemental problem of all real science; for we know nothing, we never can know anything, but causes and effects. All time and eternity form but one vast flowing stream, where these come and go like waves of the sea. All space is but the expanse where these rise and fall in oscillations; as of some etherial fluid of infinite extent, vibrated by a viewless force.

130. All scientific treaties, however pompous their nomenclature, contain but generalizations of these, expressed in mathematical formulas, with greater or less accuracy. I am stating a simple fact, admitted on all hands. Cause and effect are thus corelatives in language and thought. The former is first both in logic and chronology. It is, therefore, the necessary exponent of the latter. Unless its true nature be comprehended, nothing else can possibly be understood. If we err at this great starting point, every subsequent step must prove a blunder in every process of philosophical inquiry.—And accordingly, universal history shows that the false solution of the radical problem has been the fruitful source of all pestilential heresies, both in philosophy and religion.

131. To this mighty question, "what is causation?" four different answers, and no more can be given—the skeptical, the material, the pantheistic, and the rational or philosophic. To assert that man is utterly ignorant of the true nature of causation, is total skepticism. I think there are none who will in a practical sense pretend to any such ignorance. However ignorant mankind may be of what they call original, or primary causes, they have generally determined on evidence satisfactory to most men present and immediate causes.—The skepticism which is affected concerning primary causes is not applied to anything which is matter of practice. Though men may be ignorant of the true cause of many of the phenomena of nature, we never refuse investigation of their causes, nor suggest that they are causeless, or that their causes cannot be known.

132. To predicate the doctrine of invariable sequence, as did Hume and Brown, presents the formula of materialism. Idealism is but another phrase of the same false view; for both idealism and materialism at a certain depth are identical, as they both take for granted, that nature is but a dream-show, a mere conjuror's trick of fleeting appearances, where phenomena have only the tie of antecedent and consequent to bind them together in a union that touches no where and produces nothing.

133. The doctrine of invariable sequence is true in the unintelligent world. In the intelligent the same cause does not invariably produce the same effect. This truth will appear by a very simple experiment. If any physical and unintelligent object is made to move along a certain passage, as for instance rolling a ball down an inclined groove, if you place an obstruction in the passage so that the ball will strike it precisely central, and having equal inclination to pass either way, it passes neither. It would remain quiescent until some new force was applied to it.

134. But if a man or intelligent being is going along a passage and finds an obstruction precisely central, he never lodges against it, but always passes to one side or the other, not because he has any stronger propulsion to the side which he takes than the other, but because intelligence will not remain balanced, as a physical and unintelligent object does.

135. If we answer that emanation is the only causation, we are landed in pure pantheism. All individual existence vanishes away, and with it all proper ideas of right and wrong, of truth and falsehood; and, in fine, all logical predicates of every name and nature; for if nothing remains but invisible unity, every proposition is impossible, since it would be absurd to assert unity of itself.

136. The only remaining conceivable answer, I deem the rational, the philosophic, the true one—that causation resides in mind; that matter never can be a cause; and, therefore, every phenomenon in the universe is, and ever must be, but the effect of intellectual force exerted by pure volition. This view we now proceed to demonstrate, after the rigorous method of the geometricians.

137. Matter both in molecules and masses, is absolutely inert. This property of matter, under the name of vis inertia, is now admitted by all scientific writers on general physics. As many of the atheistical school, however, still affect to deny it, I have concluded to demonstrate its truth by a train of argument as I deem wholly unanswerable. I confine myself in this discussion to an argument a priori exhibited in a mathematical form, and equally satisfactory with the other, to all who will give it a sufficiently patient attention. The argument here is two fold.

138. The force which moves any body multiplied into its quantity of matter, gives the exact numericial measure of its amount of motion. Thus, the power of moving, and the mass moved, may be considered as the two facts, or of which the resultant momentum is the compound product. This proposition is universally recognized as a general law of physic. No skeptic will be found hardy enough to call it in question.

139. Thus, if we consider a given impulse, A as equal to 10, and a given quantity of matter, B as equal to 15, the motion produced will be equal to 150. Then if the impelling force be viewed as the multiplier, and the mass impelled as the multiplicand—let us sup-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 41.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, DEC. 28, 1848. [WHOLE No. 105.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 5.

Voree, December 18th, 1848.

DEAR SIR:—The first sheet of your No. 3 is received, but as it is to be continued I have concluded not to enter upon the review of it until it is all in my hands, and to proceed with the affirmative proposition that "there is a God, a person possessed of intelligence, motive and will."

129. I undertake to demonstrate, in an absolute manner, not only the being, but the ever-present agency of God in all the phenomena of the material universe. I profess to solve the old problem that has puzzled philosophy in every age, ever uttered by human curiosity, but perhaps never, as yet, answered by pure reason—"What is the true nature of causation?" Beyond all controversy, this must be regarded as the fundemental problem of all real science; for we know nothing, we never can know anything, but causes and effects. All time and eternity form but one vast flowing stream, where these come and go like waves of the sea. All space is but the expanse where these rise and fall in oscillations; as of some etherial fluid of infinite extent, vibrated by a viewless force.

130. All scientific treaties, however pompous their nomenclature, contain but generalizations of these, expressed in mathematical formulas, with greater or less accuracy. I am stating a simple fact, admitted on all hands. Cause and effect are thus corelatives in language and thought. The former is first both in logic and chronology. It is, therefore, the necessary exponent of the latter. Unless its true nature be comprehended, nothing else can possibly be understood. If we err at this great starting point, every subsequent step must prove a blunder in every process of philosophical inquiry.—And accordingly, universal history shows that the false solution of the radical problem has been the fruitful source of all pestilential heresies, both in philosophy and religion.

131. To this mighty question, "what is causation?" four different answers, and no more can be given—the skeptical, the material, the pantheistic, and the rational or philosophic. To assert that man is utterly ignorant of the true nature of causation, is total skepticism. I think there are none who will in a practical sense pretend to any such ignorance. However ignorant mankind may be of what they call original, or primary causes, they have generally determined on evidence satisfactory to most men present and immediate causes.—The skepticism which is affected concerning primary causes is not applied to anything which is matter of practice. Though men may be ignorant of the true cause of many of the phenomena of nature, they never refuse investigation of their causes, nor suggest that they are causeless, or that their causes cannot be known.

132. To predicate the doctrine of invariable sequence, as did Hume and Brown, presents the formula of materialism. Idealism is but another phrase of the same false view; for both idealism and materialism at a certain depth are identical, as they both take for granted, that nature is but a dream-show, a mere conjuror's trick of fleeting appearances, where phenomena have only the tie of antecedent and consequent to bind them together in a union that touches no where and produces nothing.

133. The doctrine of invariable sequence is true in the unintelligent world. In the intelligent the same cause does not invariably produce the same effect. This truth will appear by a very simple experiment. If any physical and unintelligent object is made to move along a certain passage, as for instance rolling a ball down an inclined groove, if you place an obstruction in the passage so that the ball will strike it precisely central, and having equal inclination to pass either way, it passes neither. It would remain quiescent until some new force was applied to it.

134. But if a man or intelligent being is going along a passage and finds an obstruction precisely central, he never lodges against it, but always passes to one side or the other, not because he has any stronger propulsion to the side which he takes than the other, but because intelligence will not remain balanced, as a physical and unintelligent object does.

135. If we answer that emanation is the only causation, we are landed in pure pantheism. All individual existence vanishes away, and with it all proper ideas of right and wrong, of truth and falsehood; and, in fine, all logical predicates of every name and nature; for if nothing remains but invisible unity, every proposition is impossible, since it would be absurd to assert unity of itself.

136. The only remaining conceivable answer, I deem the rational, the philosophic, the true one—that causation resides in mind; that matter never can be a cause; and, therefore, every phenomenon in the universe is, and ever must be, but the effect of intellectual force exerted by pure volition. This view we now proceed to demonstrate, after the rigorous method of the geometricians.

137. Matter both in molecules and masses, is absolutely inert. This property of matter, under the name of vis inertia, is now admitted by all scientific writers on general physics. As many of the atheistical school, however, still affect to deny it, I have concluded to demonstrate its truth by a train of argument as I deem wholly unanswerable. I confine myself in this discussion to an argument a priori exhibited in a mathematical form, and equally satisfactory with the other, to all who will give it a sufficiently patient attention. The argument here is two fold.

138. The force which moves any body multiplied into its quantity of matter, gives the exact numerical measure of its amount of motion. Thus, the power of moving, and the mass moved, may be considered as the two facts, or of which the resultant momentum is the compound product. This proposition is universally recognized as a general law of physic. No skeptic will be found hardy enough to call it in question.

139. Thus, if we consider a given impulse, A as equal to 10, and a given quantity of matter, B as equal to 15, the motion produced will be equal to 150. Then if the impelling force be viewed as the multiplier, and the mass impelled as the multiplicand—let us say pose the force reduced to 5, and the motion produced will be equal to 75; if the impelling force be reduced to 2, the motion produced will be equal to 30, and if the force be reduced to nothing, it follows, mathematically, that the motion will be nothing also.

140. But all this seems laboring a perfect truism. For surely, not even Mr. Burgess will venture the insane affirmation that any unintelligent body can, under any circumstances, originate its own motion, or will ever move at all without the application of some extraneous impulse. Thus is the passivity of matter demonstrated as clearly as any theorem in Euclid.

141. But the second argument, tending to the same result, though no more conclusive, is perhaps still more beautiful to a lover of logicial analysis. It may be stated thus in the form of a destructive dilemma, each alternative bifucating into two subsidiary branches of a like character.

142. If matter may be supposed to possess in itself any inherent tendency to move at all, such tendency must necessarily exist either in the molecules or in the masses. Let us first suppose that it is in the molecules. Then if the molecules tend in themselves to motion, such motion must be either in one direction, north, south, or some other course, in free space, or in all directions at the same time.

143. If such tendency to move in the molecules be in one direction alone, they will move only in that direction; and all free motion is ever in the straight line, and as parallel lines can never meet, how far soever either way they be produced, the separate molecules on such a hypothesis could never impinge, cross, or conceivably interfere with each other's action, and there could not possibly be any relative motion in any event; in fine, no perceptible or appreciable motion at all.

144. But if the tendency to move in the molecules be in all directions at the same time, such a tendency would self-evidently amount to a state of equilibrium; and here again, there could be no motion. For it is plain to the capacity of even a child, that if equal forces be exerted against every point of the surface of a billiard ball, such forces would equiponderate with each other, and no effect could result from their conjunctive action.

145. In the second place, let us assume that the tendency to motion is among the masses, which are but aggregates of molecules. On this supposition, the tendency predicated must either be to indefinite expansion—according to the hypothesis of the French materialist, Azais—or to indefinite concentration.

146. Let us particularly bear in mind, at this stage of the argument, that the dilemma in all its branches is based upon the assumption, that there is no such property in matter as inertia, and consequently all motion would be of inconceivable velocity, since there would be no resistance to retard it.

147. If then, the masses of matter tend to indefinite expansion, such a result would be instantaneously consummated: and as space is infinite, all things—the planets, suns, and pale nebulosities of the upper firmament—the rocks, rivers, mountains and seas of this lower sphere, would vanish away in impalpable, viewless haze, like the panorama of a sick man's dream.

148. But if the motion in the masses be only to a common centre, that would also take place, swift as thought, and the whole material of creation would rush with a dreadful crash into one compact solid mass, lifeless and silent.

149. And according to every hypothesis, if inertia be denied, one body could not possibly abrade, or work any change in another: the hand of an infant would suffice to propel a cannon-ball, swift as a thunder-bolt, through the fields of space; but then the obstruction of even a withered weed, or rose leaf floating on the wind, would also stay its motion as easily as the mural side of a granite mountain.

150. Thus the inertia of all matter, whether in the form of molecules or masses, is demonstrated beyond all question. The man who can really believe that matter has power to move itself, must be ignorant of the first principles of natural philosophy.

151. NO EFFECT CAN OCCUR IN THE MATERIAL UNIVERSE WITHOUT MOTION. For, without a change of state, there can be no effect; and there can be no change of state without a change of place, either among molecules or masses; and every change of place implies motion. While the particles of matter continue to occupy the same points in space, the prediction of an effect in reference to them, is positively absurd. All the phenomena of nature imply motion as a necessary condition.

152. We see this truth exemplified in the play of all mechanical powers. We see it in the regular mutations of vegetable and animal life; in the sublime evolutions of the stars; the radiations of vibratory light, heat and imponderable agents. We behold it in the flow of water, the fall of dew, the songs of birds, and the warbles of the wind. It is a great doctrine, preached by the fire-tongue of thunder in the cloud, and chanted nightly by the solemn base of the ocean surge, rolling on a thousand shores.

153. Every insect that cries shrill from its sere autumn leaf, proclaims it; and the little child feels it, as he counts with his fingers the beats of his own heart. In fine, I defy all the skeptics in the world to designate one single, possible effect, in all the circuit of material creation, without motion as an absolute logical condition, strictly and essentially necessary to its manifestation. Now, let us put the two foregoing propositions together in their methodical order, and see what conclusion results.

154. I. Matter cannot move itself, and, of course, cannot move other matter without moving itself first of all. II. There can be no effect without motion. Then doth it follow irresistably that every effect must be produced by mind, as its true and only cause. Thus is our fundamental proposition demonstrated, as we proposed in the beginning of this number.

155. Before we proceed to the second, or special division of the argument, let us pause a moment to consider what is essentially and absolutely implied in the very idea of causation in itself. Every cause, to originate effects, must act, so far forth, at least, as to produce motion. And to act, three things are clearly necessary. The given cause must have the power or will, the knowledge and the desire, or the emotion to act.

156. As this is a point of the highest importance, and rather remote from the process of ordinary thought, I may be permitted to illustrate it by a familiar example. Suppose that I could endue the pen, with which I am tracing these lines, with volition or power to act; that alone would evidently not be sufficient to effect action.—The pen must have something more than simple power. It must know how to act. I must then add the knowledge necessary to the development of its power.

157. But neither will these two properties suffice for the endowment of causation. The pen will not act merely because it has power to act, and knows how to exert its power; it must have some emotion or love, conferring the desire to put forth its power according to its knowledge. I then add on this third quality of emotion, and it will immediately move, if not restrained by the presence of some superior force.

158. All this seems to me as clear as an axiom in geometry.—For surely nothing can act without the power, and that power can never be exerted without volition, and that volition will never be put forth without motive, and that motive must be perceived and be in itself desirable. And these three attributes belong to all causes alike—the power, the motive and the will.

pose the force reduced to 5, and the motion produced will be equal to 75; if the impelling force be re uced to 2, the motion produced will be equal to 30, and if the force be reduced to nothing, it follows, mathematically, that the motion will be nothing also.

140. But all this seems laboring a perfect truism. For surely, not even Mr. Burgess will venture the insane affirmation that any unintelligent body can, under any circumstances, originate its own motion, or will ever move at all without the application of some extraneous impulse. Thus is the passivity of matter demonstrated as clearly as any theorem in Euclid.

141. But the second argument, tending to the same result, though no more conclusive, is perhaps still more beautiful to a lover of logicial analysis. It may be stated thus in the form of a destructive dilemma, each alternative bifucating into two subsidiary branches of a like character.

142. If matter may be supposed to possess in itself any inherent tendency to move at all, such tendency must necessarily exist either in the molecules or in the masses. Let us first suppose that it is in the molecules. Then if the molecules tend in themselves to motion, such motion must be either in one direction, north, south, or some other course, in free space, or in all directions at the same time.

143. If such tendency to move in the molecules be in one direction alone, they will move only in that direction; and all free motion is ever in the straight line, and as parallel lines can never meet, how far soever either way they be produced, the separate molecules on such a hypothesis could never impinge, cross, or conceivably interfere with each other's action, and there could not possibly be any relative motion in any event; in fine, no perceptible or appreciable motion at all.

144. But if the tendency to move in the molecules be in all directions at the same time, such a tendency would self-evidently amount to a state of equilibrium; and here again, there could be no motion. For it is plain to the capacity of even a child, that if equal forces be exerted against every point of the surface of a billiard ball, such forces would equiponderate with each other, and no effect could result from their conjunctive action.

145. In the second place, let us assume that the tendency to motion is among the masses, which are but aggregates of molecules. On this supposition, the tendency predicated must either be to indefinite expansion—according to the hypothesis of the French materialist, Azais—or to indefinite concentration.

146. Let us particularly bear in mind, at this stage of the argument, that the dilemma in all its branches is based upon the assumption, that there is no such property in matter as inertia, and consequently all motion would be of inconceivable velocity, since there would be no resistance to retard it.

147. If then, the masses of matter tend to indefinite expansion, such a result would be instantaneously consummated: and as space is infinite, all things—the planets, suns, and pale nebulosities of the upper firmament—the rocks, rivers, mountains and seas of this lower sphere, would vanish away in impalpable, viewless haze, like the panorama of a sick man's dream.

148. But if the motion in the masses be only to a common centre, that would also take place, swift as thought, and the whole material of creation would rush with a dreadful crash into one compact solid mass, lifeless and silent.

149. And according to every hypothesis, if inertia be denied, one body could not possibly abrade, or work any change in another: the hand of an infant would suffice to propel a cannon-ball, swift as a thunder-bolt, through the fields of space; but then the obstruction of even a withered weed, or rose leaf floating on the wind, would also stay its motion as easily as the mural side of a granite mountain.

150. Thus the inertia of all matter, whether in the form of molecules or masses, is demonstrated beyond all question. The man who can really believe that matter has power to move itself, must be ignorant of the first principles of natural philosophy.

151. NO EFFECT CAN OCCUR IN THE MATERIAL UNIVERSE WITHOUT MOTION. For, without a change of state, there can be no effect; and there can be no change of state without a change of place, either among molecules or masses; and every change of place implies motion. While the particles of matter continue to occupy the same points in space, the prediction of an effect in reference to them, is positively absurd. All the phenomena of nature imply motion as a necessary condition.

152. We see this truth exemplified in the play of all mechanical powers. We see it in the regular mutations of vegetable and animal life; in the sublime evolutions of the stars; the radiations of vibratory light, heat and imponderable agents. We behold it in the flow of water, the fall of dew, the songs of birds, and the warbles of the wind. It is a great doctrine, preached by the fire-tongue of thunder in the cloud, and chanted nightly by the solemn base of the ocean surge, rolling on a thousand shores.

153. Every insect that cries shrill from its sere autumn leaf, proclaims it; and the little child feels it, as he counts with his fingers the beats of his own heart. In fine, I defy all the skeptics in the world to designate one single, possible effect, in all the circuit of material creation, without motion as an absolute logical condition, strictly and essentially necessary to its manifestation. Now, let us put the two foregoing propositions together in their methodical order, and see what conclusion results.

154. I. Matter cannot move itself, and, of course, cannot move other matter without moving itself first of all. II. There can be no effect without motion. Then doth it follow irresistably that every effect must be produced by mind, as its true and only cause. Thus is our fundamental proposition demonstrated, as we proposed in the beginning of this number.

155. Before we proceed to the second, or special division of the argument, let us pause a moment to consider what is essentially and absolutely implied in the very idea of causation in itself. Every cause, to originate effects, must act, so far forth, at least, as to produce motion. And to act, three things are clearly necessary. The given cause must have the power or will, the knowledge and the desire, or the emotion to act.

156. As this is a point of the highest importance, and rather remote from the process of ordinary thought, I may be permitted to illustrate it by a familiar example. Suppose that I could endue the pen, with which I am tracing these lines, with volition or power to act; that alone would evidently not be sufficient to effect action.—The pen must have something more than simple power. It must know how to act. I must then add the knowledge necessary to the development of its power.

157. But neither will these two properties suffice for the endowment of causation. The pen will not act merely because it has power to act, and knows how to exert its power; it must have some emotion or love, conferring the desire to put forth its power according to its knowledge. I then add on this third quality of emotion, and it will immediately move, if not restrained by the presence of some superior force.

158. All this seems to me as clear as an axiom in geometry.—For surely nothing can act without the power, and that power can never be exerted without volition, and that volition will never be put forth without motive, and that motive must be perceived and be in itself desirable. And these three attributes belong to all causes alike—the power, the motive and the will.

159. The conclusion, then, is, inevitable that intellectual force is the cause of all physical motion, and that SOME INTELLIGENT BEING GIVES MOTION TO THE MATERIAL UNIVERSE. This BEING, possessed of intelligence, acting from motive, and by his will, and GOVERNING the UNIVERSE, IS WHOM WE CALL GOD. Names are nothing to the argument. Thus have I have demonstrated the exercise. Call him natural or supernatural, I care not. Say it is one being or many, I I care not. Say it is several equals, or a superior and inferiors, I care not. The intelligent power that gives motion to suns and planets, as well as to mites and molecules, is GOD. Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

☞ It is long since we have called on our patrons for what they owe us, but this is not because we are able to do without it. It is because we do not wish to be forever dunning. If the Herald is deserving of support at all, it deserves a better support than it gets.—We do not say that unless our brethren do better by us it will be suspended, for we do not expect to stop its publication in any probable event. But there are many saints doing good business, living well, and making money, who do not subscribe for the Herald merely because they cannot afford to pay for it, and many more equally well off who read it weekly and never pay one cent for it, who know, or ought to know, that in so doing they are literally taking the bread of life out of the mouths of our children. This number makes one hundred and five issued within three years, and all that time kept up at the cost of the entire loss of one man's labor. Most of the time two persons have toiled incessantly night and day unpaid to keep it up. It is a sin that we should be left to this.

The Herald is now supported by the associated Order of Enoch, who keep it up for the sake of the cause. They are poor and ill able to bear burdens, yet many of the brethren act as though they could bear anything. In endeavoring to bring their expenses within their income, and keep the law of God, tea, coffee, sugar, spices, green and dried fruit, luxuries of every kind, have been dispensed with on their tables. In clothing they have adopted a plainness from which Quakers might learn many lessons. But what is saved in this way will not do every thing. It is not one burden merely that is thrown on them. At the last Conference the Order fed out 130 bushels of grain to the teams of brethren from distant places, for which they never received one cent, and shared the other expenses in proportion. These things ought not to be. We have as much right to some of the things of earth as have others. Should we suspend the publication, many of those who have done nothing to keep it up would accuse us of want of faithfulness.

Now, brother, imagine that the prophet is sitting down by your side before your warm fire, and as the rich bounties of earth come on your table your wife and yourself vie with each other in excuses because it is no better. As you gather round the table, why does he yet linger at the fire? Do you know he has no over coat? not a shred of flannel about him? wears a summer vest? and both coat and pants are half worn? that he wears a straw hat at midwinter? And he has been a prey to rheumatism for years. Well, let him warm by the fire. This is all the clothing he has. But do not help him to more; for if you do as soon as he gets home he will divide with his brethren of the Order of Enoch, who are as bad off as he is. Give him nothing but water to drink. It is so long since he has drank anything else, he might not know what it was. Give him neither cakes, pies or sweet meats. He will remember in bitterness that his children at home can have none. But send on the pay for your paper. It is a simple matter of justice.

Now don't begin to ask how it happens that the Order are poor. They were poor when they associated. Though association gives strength, it does not make present wealth. The Order (about 150 in number, men, women and children) have supported more Elders while preaching the gospel than all the rest of the church. They pay nine-tenths of all the expenses incurred by the church for all purposes. They have kept open house for all visitors to Voree.—They have been an asylum to all who were in want and poverty.—They have suffered the inconvenience of having some over zealous persons come and join themselves to them, who in a short time drew back, producing great embarrassment by breaking up the business they worked at, after stock was provided, and taking away teams and utensils that were in constant requisition.

Whatever was burdensome, the Order of Enoch have borne the burden. That which was profitable, others have had the undisturbed monopoly of. If you care for the kingdom of God, now is the time to do something. Next year it may not be necessary, and it may be too late. Now is the acceptable time. Last summer we took a letter from the P. O. containing an excuse for not paying for the Herald "till a more convenient season." The writer (who owned a good farm) was building a mill, and should use up all his means.—That day we walked thirty miles, and ate but one meal. The three shillings saved buys the paper we print his Herald on, and the printers do the work for nothing.

SMITH'S NEW ARITHMETIC.

This is the most perfect book of its kind which we have seen this many a day. All the rules are made so perfectly simple that a teacher need scarcely make any explanation even to a dull scholar. And with this perfect simplicity, not only is the order of the science of numbers kept up and made clear, but the scientific terms are retained. The study of the science of numbers in times past has been exceedingly dry and dull, but by means of the improvements of the last fifteen years it has become a mere recreation. Sold by M. Miller, at the new book store, Racine.

☞ We have on one or two occasions spoken of Mr. Rafferty, with whom we have a discussion on the Roman Catholic faith, as having been educated for the Roman priesthood. This was in accordance with our information. But Mr. Rafferty peremptorily contradicts it.

☞ No young man can prosper who is not punctual—this you may rely upon. You can as well live under water, as beneath the weight of broken promises. Ye who have been negligent thus far in life, turn over a new leaf, or you will fail and be forever poor. Let this be your motto, engraven on your hearts—"I will be punctual,"—and you will have no trouble, but certainly succeed.

THE HOLY LAND.—The Sultan of Turkey has granted permission to the Jews in Jerusalem, for the first time, to erect a large and elegant synagogue, and a messenger has arrived in this country to solicit aid in carrying out the object. So the Yankee Jews must be ready to fork over. Jerusalem is crowded with Jews from various parts of Europe, who have taken refuge in the Holy City from the existing revolutions. Great events are confidently expected to take place soon after the rearing of the Temple.—Willson's Despatch.

☞ A lie may stagger through a brief existence, as a blackguard edges his way by dint of bullying, through a crowd; but truth, however abused for a time, will triumph and live forever.

MARRIED,

In this place, on the 24th inst., by Pres. JAMES J. STRANG, Mr. FRANCIS COOPER to Miss CATHARINE A. FOX, both of Voree.

159. The conclusion, then, is, inevitable that intellectual force is the cause of all physical motion, and that SOME INTELLIGENT BEING GIVES MOTION TO THE MATERIAL UNIVERSE. This BEING, possessed of intelligence, acting from motive, and by his will, and GOVERNING the UNIVERSE, IS WHOM WE CALL GOD. Names are nothing to the argument. Thus have I have demonstrated the exercise. Call him natural or supernatural. I care not. Say it is one being or many, I care not. Say it is several equals, or a superior and inferiors, I care not. The intelligent power that gives motion to suns and planets, as well as to mites and molecules, is GOD. Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

☞ It is long since we have called on our patrons for what they owe us, but this is not because we are able to do without it. It is because we do not wish to be forever dunning. If the Herald is deserving of support at all, it deserves a better support than it gets.—We do not say that unless our brethren do better by us it will be suspended, for we do not expect to stop its publication in any probable event. But there are many saints doing good business, living well, and making money, who do not subscribe for the Herald merely because they cannot afford to pay for it, and many more equally well off who read it weekly and never pay one cent for it, who know, or ought to know, that in so doing they are literally taking the bread of life out of the mouths of our children. This number makes one hundred and five issued within three years, and all that time kept up at the cost of the entire loss of one man's labor. Most of the time two persons have toiled incessantly night and day unpaid to keep it up. It is a sin that we should be left to this.

The Herald is now supported by the associated Order of Enoch, who keep it up for the sake of the cause. They are poor and ill able to bear burdens, yet many of the brethren act as though they could bear anything. In endeavoring to bring their expenses within their income, and keep the law of God, tea, coffee, sugar, spices, green and dried fruit, luxuries of every kind, have been dispensed with on their tables. In clothing they have adopted a plainness from which Quakers might learn many lessons. But what is saved in this way will not do every thing. It is not one burden merely that is thrown on them. At the last Conference the Order fed out 130 bushels of grain to the teams of brethren from distant places, for which they never received one cent, and shared the other expenses in proportion. These things ought not to be. We have as much right to some of the things of earth as have others. Should we suspend the publication, many of those who have done nothing to keep it up would accuse us of want of faithfulness.

Now, brother, imagine that the prophet is sitting down by your side before your warm fire, and as the rich bounties of earth come on your table your wife and yourself vie with each other in excuses because it is no better. As you gather round the table, why does he yet linger at the fire? Do you know he has no over coat? not a shred of flannel about him? wears a summer vest? and both coat and pants are half worn? that he wears a straw hat at midwinter? And he has been a prey to rheumatism for years. Well, let him warm by the fire. This is all the clothing he has. But do not help him to more; for if you do as soon as he gets home he will divide with his brethren of the Order of Enoch, who are as bad off as he is. Give him nothing but water to drink. It is so long since he has drank anything else, he might not know what it was. Give him neither cakes, pies or sweet meats. He will remember in bitterness that his children at home can have none. But send on the pay for your paper. It is a simple matter of justice.

Now don't begin to ask how it happens that the Order are poor. They were poor when they associated. Though association gives strength, it does not make present wealth. The Order (about 150 in number, men, women and children) have supported more Elders while preaching the gospel than all the rest of the church. They pay nine-tenths of all the expenses incurred by the church for all purposes. They have kept open house for all visitors to Voree.—They have been an asylum to all who were in want and poverty.—They have suffered the inconvenience of having some over zealous persons come and join themselves to them, who in a short time drew back, producing great embarrassment by breaking up the business they worked at, after stock was provided, and taking away teams and utensils that were in constant requisition.

Whatever was burdensome, the Order of Enoch have borne the burden. That which was profitable, others have had the undisturbed monopoly of. If you care for the kingdom of God, now is the time to do something. Next year it may not be necessary, and it may be too late. Now is the acceptable time. Last summer we took a letter from the P. O. containing an excuse for not paying for the Herald "till a more convenient season." The writer (who owned a good farm) was building a mill, and should use up all his means.—That day we walked thirty miles, and ate but one meal. The three shillings saved buys the paper we print his Herald on, and the printers do the work for nothing.

SMITH'S NEW ARITHMETIC.

This is the most perfect book of its kind which we have seen this many a day. All the rules are made so perfectly simple that a teacher need scarcely make any explanation even to a dull scholar. And with this perfect simplicity, not only is the order of the science of numbers kept up and made clear, but the scientific terms are retained. The study of the science of numbers in times past has been exceedingly dry and dull, but by means of the improvements of the last fifteen years it has become a mere recreation. Sold by M. Miller, at the new book store, Racine.

☞ We have on one or two occasions spoken of Mr. Rafferty, with whom we have a discussion on the Roman Catholic faith, as having been educated for the Roman priesthood. This was in accordance with our information. But Mr. Rafferty peremptorily contradicts it.

☞ No young man can prosper who is not punctual—this you may rely upon. You can as well live under water, as beneath the weight of broken promises. Ye who have been negligent thus far in life, turn over a new leaf, or you will fail and be forever poor. Let this be your motto, engraven on your hearts—"I will be punctual,"—and you will have no trouble, but certainly succeed.

THE HOLY LAND.—The Sultan of Turkey has granted permission to the Jews in Jerusalem, for the first time, to erect a large and elegant synagogue, and a messenger has arrived in this country to solicit aid in carrying out the object. So the Yankee Jews must be ready to fork over. Jerusalem is crowded with Jews from various parts of Europe, who have taken refuge in the Holy City from the existing revolutions. Great events are confidently expected to take place soon after the rearing of the Temple.—Willson's Despatch.

☞ A lie may stagger through a brief existence, as a blackguard edges his way by dint of bullying, through a crowd; but truth, however abused for a time, will triumph and live forever.

MARRIED,

In this place, on the 24th inst., by Pres. JAMES J. STRANG, Mr. FRANCIS COOPER to Miss CATHARINE A. FOX, both of Voree.

THEOPHOLIS W. NIXON.

We had hoped we should never again be obliged to notice this individual. It is unpleasant to speak of any of whom we cannot speak well. When individuals are cut off from the church we are disposed to let them entirely alone. However wicked they may have been, if they will not attempt to disturb the peace of the church, we shall do nothing to annoy them; and are perfectly satisfied that they shall work out as good a character as they can wherever they may go. But when such by any means attempt to disturb the peace of the church, they cannot expect us to be silent. We have received the following letter from T. W. Nixon, and upon the same sheet is the following from Ebenezer Page, and still another from Page, Bacon, Stevens and Chidister, and a nota bena and postscript from Nixon. All this we publish just as it came to us, and in the same order:—

"Middlefield, Otsego Co., Nov. 30th, 1848.

BROTHER STRANG AND PAGE:—I commenced preaching some three weeks past in the vicinity of Herkimer to large congregations, on the doctrines held by the Church of Latter Day Saints. Being requested by a minister of the Methodist denomination to produce my license, and not having it, I called on brother Page to tell the circumstance of losing mine in Canada two years ago, which license you gave me shortly after the first Conference held at Voree. Bro. Strang will remember that I wrote to him last winter from Watertown, stating the situation of the branch in the Black River settlement, and requested of him at that time to send or acknowledge my right to build up the kingdom of God. On looking over the 47th number of the 2d volume of the Herald I saw a notice to this effect: 'CAUTION.—One Theopholis W. Nixon is reported at Watertown, N. Y., representing himself as a Mormon Elder. He is a gross impostor and a worthless scamp, long since cut off from the church.' Will brother Strang be so kind as to tell when the said T. W. Nixon was cut off from the church, and for what? I am, sirs, with respect the friend of truth, THEOPHOLIS W. NIXON."

"BRO. STRANG:—Bro. Nixon says he had his license demanded by sister Barker. I do not know as the Elders are under obligation to give up their license to the sisters of the church. If so, I have it to learn. The report from Watertown concerning Bro. Nixon as near as I can learn went from sister Barker, Brownson and wife.—You can appeal to brother Patten for correct information on this subject. If either of them can bring anything against him worthy of notice, he is ready to stand a trial. Bro. Strang, I introduced your son to brother Nixon, and he called him a worthless scamp to his face. I thought I would inform his parents that he hurt brother Nixon's feelings, as he had given no occasion to say so; that when you send him out again he may give his reasons, or make the plaster as large as the wound. I feel disposed to fellowship him until he does so. EBENEZER PAGE."

"BRO. STRANG:—Bro. Nixon came here and found himself in rather unpleasant circumstances, owing to the caution in the Herald published about one year since. Bro. Nixon has preached here twice, and from his appearance, conversation, walk, &c., and from what Bro. Page knows concerning him, we feel disposed to give him the hand of fellowship. As the Herald said he was long since cut off from the church, please tell the time when, what for, and we shall be satisfied. He informs us that he was baptized by Reuben Miller, confirmed and ordained to the office of an Elder by Aaron Smith and yourself, and received license from yourself. We, therefore, in council subscribe to the above,

EBENEZER PAGE, SAMUEL P. BACON,
PALMER H. STEVENS, DENNIS CHIDISTER."

"N. B. Should you think it prudent that I should continue advocating those principles which distinguishes us from Mystery Babylon, mention. NIXON.

Please remember me to brother Patten and family."

☞ We do not know how brother Page could tell any circumstances of Nixon's losing his license in Canada. If such an event ever occurred Page could know nothing of it, only what Nixon told him. It would be but Nixon's story at second hand. Nixon sent a letter from Watertown, N. Y., containing, as in this case, the commendation of some of the saints, whose charity and good nature he had imposed on. At the same time he sent $1,00 for the Herald to be sent to him, and requested a license. Upon this the "caution" contained in the Herald Vol. 2 No. 47 was inserted, and the paper containing it sent to him marked. No excuse can be rendered for continuing to represent himself as an Elder. His first step, if he wishes to obey God and live, is to make reconciliation to the church. Pres. Strang has addressed a private letter to Mr. Nixon at Cooperstown, his nearest P. O., answering all his inquiries, which he is authorized to make such use of as he thinks fit.

As Mr. Nixon did not attend his trial, and was at the time at Chicago, it is quite possible he was ignorant of the decision made on his head until he learned it by the Herald, but he is not ignorant of the cause nor of the complaint. Having sent him a private letter containing all the facts, we do not wish to repeat in the paper what would neither benefit him or the saints. That he is sorry for his faults we do not doubt. But if his sorrow is godly he will confess his faults, and obtain forgiveness. We know he is miserable and disconsolate, and that he wishes a place among the saints.—But he cannot climb over the wall into the sheepfold. So much to Mr. Nixon.

A few words to Elder Page. You question the duty of the Elders to give up their licenses to the sisters. There is not the slightest probability that any sister has ever claimed the authority to take one away. But it is both probable and proper that a sister suspecting a pretended Elder of being an impostor should ask to see his license. You say as near as you can learn the report of Nixon at Watertown went from sister Barker and brother and sister Brownson. Then you cannot learn anything about it. And that is just what any one would suppose, for you was 1,000 miles from Watertown at the time, and have nobody now near you who knows anything on the subject, except Nixon, and conjecture does not count in church discipline. It is oftenest the creature of jealousy. But if he had been reported by brother Brownson, we can see no reason why such a remark should be made on the subject. Who should report him, if not brother Brownson? George Brownson was presiding High Priest of the Black River Conference. As such he was bound to report all impostors who were liable to do injury to the church and all Elders not within his jurisdiction for final discipline who should conduct improperly there.

But the fact was that Nixon sent up a lot of certificates, as in this case, endorsing his character. And a few days afterwards Elder Brownson sent a line saying that such a man was there, and that the spirit of God witnessed to him that he was of the Devil.—We have no doubt it was the spirit of God, for it witnessed the truth, and gave the revelation to the authority which should know it, in order to preserve the purity and dignity of the church. We have no occasion to apply to brother Patten or any other one for "correct information" concerning one upon whom the church has already passed judgment, and the law of God has said that he shall be to us as an heathen man. We do not know how ready Nixon may be to stand a trial on anything "worthy of notice," which brother and sister Brownson and sister Barker may be supposed to alledge against him. He did not show his face here more than two years since when accusations of the gravest kind came up from Southport and Chicago, and were proved against him.

THEOPHOLIS W. NIXON.

We had hoped we should never again be obliged to notice this individual. It is unpleasant to speak of any of whom we cannot speak well. When individuals are cut off from the church we are disposed to let them entirely alone. However wicked they may have been, if they will not attempt to disturb the peace of the church, we shall do nothing to annoy them; and are perfectly satisfied that they shall work out as good a character as they can wherever they may go. But when such by any means attempt to disturb the peace of the church, they cannot expect us to be silent. We have received the following letter from T. W. Nixon, and upon the same sheet is the following from Ebenezer Page, and still another from Page, Bacon, Stevens and Chidister, and a nota bena and postscript from Nixon. All this we publish just as it came to us, and in the same order:—

"Middlefield, Otsego Co., Nov. 30th, 1848.

BROTHER STRANG AND PAGE:—I commenced preaching some three weeks past in the vicinity of Herkimer to large congregations, on the doctrines held by the Church of Latter Day Saints. Being requested by a minister of the Methodist denomination to produce my license, and not having it, I called on brother Page to tell the circumstance of losing mine in Canada two years ago, which license you gave me shortly after the first Conference held at Voree. Bro. Strang will remember that I wrote to him last winter from Watertown, stating the situation of the branch in the Black River settlement, and requested of him at that time to send or acknowledge my right to build up the kingdom of God. On looking over the 47th number of the 2d volume of the Herald I saw a notice to this effect; 'CAUTION.—One Theopholis W. Nixon is reported at Watertown, N. Y., representing himself as a Mormon Elder. He is a gross impostor and a worthless scamp, long since cut off from the church.' Will brother Strang be so kind as to tell when the said T. W. Nixon was cut off from the church, and for what? I am, sirs, with respect the friend of truth, THEOPHOLIS W. NIXON."

"BRO. STRANG:—Bro. Nixon says he had his license demanded by sister Barker. I do not know as the Elders are under obligation to give up their license to the sisters of the church. If so, I have it to learn. The report from Watertown concerning Bro. Nixon as near as I can learn went from sister Barker, Brownson and wife.—You can appeal to brother Patten for correct information on this subject. If either of them can bring anything against him worthy of notice, he is ready to stand a trial. Bro. Strang, I introduced your son to brother Nixon, and he called him a worthless scamp to his face. I thought I would inform his parents that he hurt brother Nixon's feelings, as he had given no occasion to say so; that when you send him out again he may give his reasons, or make the plaster as large as the wound. I feel disposed to fellowship him until he does so. EBENEZER PAGE."

"BRO. STRANG:—Bro. Nixon came here and found himself in rather unpleasant circumstances, owing to the caution in the Herald published about one year since. Bro. Nixon has preached here twice, and from his appearance, conversation, walk, &c., and from what Bro. Page knows concerning him, we feel disposed to give him the hand of fellowship. As the Herald said he was long since cut off from the church, please tell the time when, what for, and we shall be satisfied. He informs us that he was baptized by Reuben Miller, confirmed and ordained to the office of an Elder by Aaron Smith and yourself, and received license from yourself. We, therefore, in council subscribe to the above,

EBENEZER PAGE, SAMUEL P. BACON,
PALMER H. STEVENS, DENNIS CHIDISTER."

"N. B. Should you think it prudent that I should continue advocating those principles which distinguishes us from Mystery Babylon, mention. NIXON.

Please remember me to brother Patten and family."

☞ We do not know how brother Page could tell any circumstances of Nixon's losing his license in Canada. If such an event ever occurred Page could know nothing of it, only what Nixon told him. It would be but Nixon's story at second hand. Nixon sent a letter from Watertown, N. Y., containing, as in this case, the commendation of some of the saints, whose charity and good nature he had imposed on. At the same time he sent $1,00 for the Herald to be sent to him, and requested a license. Upon this the "caution" contained in the Herald Vol. 2 No. 47 was inserted, and the paper containing it sent to him marked. No excuse can be rendered for continuing to represent himself as an Elder. His first step, if he wishes to obey God and live, is to make reconciliation to the church. Pres. Strang has addressed a private letter to Mr. Nixon at Cooperstown, his nearest P. O., answering all his inquiries, which he is authorized to make such use of as he thinks fit.

As Mr. Nixon did not attend his trial, and was at the time at Chicago, it is quite possible he was ignorant of the decision made on his head until he learned it by the Herald, but he is not ignorant of the cause nor of the complaint. Having sent him a private letter containing all the facts, we do not wish to repeat in the paper what would neither benefit him or the saints. That he is sorry for his faults we do not doubt. But if his sorrow is godly he will confess his faults, and obtain forgiveness. We know he is miserable and disconsolate, and that he wishes a place among the saints.—But he cannot climb over the wall into the sheepfold. So much to Mr. Nixon.

A few words to Elder Page. You question the duty of the Elders to give up their licenses to the sisters. There is not the slightest probability that any sister has ever claimed the authority to take one away. But it is both probable and proper that a sister suspecting a pretended Elder of being an impostor should ask to see his license. You say as near as you can learn the report of Nixon at Watertown went from sister Barker and brother and sister Brownson. Then you cannot learn anything about it. And that is just what any one would suppose, for you was 1,000 miles from Watertown at the time, and have nobody now near you who knows anything on the subject, except Nixon, and conjecture does not count in church discipline. It is oftenest the creature of jealousy. But if he had been reported by brother Brownson, we can see no reason why such a remark should be made on the subject. Who should report him, if not brother Brownson? George Brownson was presiding High Priest of the Black River Conference. As such he was bound to report all impostors who were liable to do injury to the church and all Elders not within his jurisdiction for final discipline who should conduct improperly there.

But the fact was that Nixon sent up a lot of certificates, as in this case, endorsing his character. And a few days afterwards Elder Brownson sent a line saying that such a man was there, and that the spirit of God witnessed to him that he was of the Devil.—We have no doubt it was the spirit of God, for it witnessed the truth, and gave the revelation to the authority which should know it, in order to preserve the purity and dignity of the church. We have no occasion to apply to brother Patten or any other one for "correct information" concerning one upon whom the church has already passed judgment, and the law of God has said that he shall be to us as an heathen man. We do not know how ready Nixon may be to stand a trial on anything "worthy of notice," which brother and sister Brownson and sister Barker may be supposed to alledge against him. He did not show his face here more than two years since when accusations of the gravest kind came up from Southport and Chicago, and were proved against him.

What you mean by requiring of the Herald to give reasons for saying that Nixon was an impostor and a scamp, long since cut off from the church, or make the plaster as large as the wound, we are utterly at a loss to understand. We can make nothing at all of it, unless it is that you intend to charge the editor with slandering Nixon, and demand of us satisfaction therefor. A little experience will doubtless convince you that the Herald, as the official organ of the church, is more worthy of credence than every adventurer and impostor who may think proper to call himself a saint, and pretend to have suffered injustice at our hands.

Brothers Page, Bacon, Stevens and Chidister say, "we feel disposed to give him the hand of fellowship;" and brother Page says, "I feel disposed to fellowship him until" the Herald gives reasons, &c. You probably did not consider, when writing this, that it was a simple declaration of schism; that it is equivalent to saying you will disregard the acts of the church, until those by whom they are done prove to your satisfaction that they did what they ought to have done in the premises. We do not consider it our duty every time an excommunicated person says he is a good saint and has been unjustly dealt by to take him into our fellowship until the high council or some other tribunal prove that they have cut him off, and that he deserved it. We have so much respect for the priesthood that God has set in the church that when we learn that they have delivered one over to the buffetings of Satan, we have as little thought of fellowshiping the man as his keeper. Such are to us heathen. If they have any disposition to godliness they will return to the church in humility and penitence. If any injustice has unwittingly been done them in the administration of God's law, they will go to the superior authority to rectify it. Not run round among the scattered saints to sow discord, and practice hypocritical piety.

We have not the least disposition to go back and state when and what for Theopholis W. Nixon was cut off from the church. We published nearly a year since that he was "a gross impostor and a worthless scamp, (then,) long since cut off from the church." If you think there has been "no occasion to say so," we have no disposition to add proof or explanations; satisfied that if the question of the duty of respecting authority is to be put to the test of experience you could not well get a subject who will sooner justify his condemnation. We have not the least disposition to treat your communication with unkindness. We presume you did not appreciate the consequence of declaring fellowship for an excommunicated person. In answer to a communication of a different kind, we should be happy to give you any information you might desire.

Our counsel to you is, to fellowship whom the church fellowship, and with such as she has cast cut to have nothing to do; no, not so much as to eat; remembering that unto us whom God has made ministers of the dispensation of the fulness of times HE has committed the keys of his kingdom, and the power that whomsoever we bind on earth shall be bound in heaven. As shepherds of the whole flock of God, we have warned both the sheep and the lambs of this impostor, this wolf in sheep's clothing. While you are fellowshipping him and parleying with us, who shall save you from his devouring? Remember that it is as God's ministers that we have delivered him into the hands of Satan, and not as ministers of our own will. It is not we, but God who has done it.

Mantua, Portage Co., Ohio, Nov. 12th, 1848.

President James J. Strang:—

Dear Sir,—The First President of the Church, the duly appointed successor of Joseph Smith, I have thought of writing for some time, and the sequel of this letter will enable you to determine whether the advice I ask is proper. I now stand a candidate for baptism, and there is none here who is willing to act in the office of his priesthood at present. I might have been baptized by the Elders of the church under the Twelve, but was not willing. In asking counsel I will give an item of my life. From my infancy my parents strove to teach me the fear of the Lord. At ten I united with the Seventh Day Baptist church. I remained a member twenty-three years. Four years ago brother Justus Morse, a High Priest of the church at Nauvoo, came here. Intense curiosity induced me to investigate and know what this was about which the world made so much ado. After long investigation I found that the kingdom of heaven was near at hand. I remained until last August a believer that the church at Nauvoo was the only church of the saints, although I thought not proper to be baptized by any I had seen.

At that time I visited Elder Wm. Wilson, of Hudson, Ohio.—He presented to me the testimonials of your appointment as successor to our beloved prophet Joseph. Upon examination, although slow to believe, I became satisfied of the present state of things; that you was President of the church, and that the sheep had a shepherd. I was filled with joy and pleasure that, after so long darkness, a brighter day had dawned. Brother Wilson did not feel willing to act in his office until he had been to Voree. Feeling desirous of entering the church, I visited Kirtland. The evening of the ninth of this month I called on Elder Amos Babcock, the only member of the church in that place. He did not feel willing there to act in his office, and said that Elder Page was expected there soon.

If I do not find an opportunity soon of coming into the church, I shall visit Voree for that purpose. In coming into the church I desire to walk in all things according to its requirements, and by the grace of God be prepared to do all the duties required at my hand. On this thing I do not need advice, as it is a known duty of all who want salvation to obey the gospel of our Savior. But on another thing I ask advice. I have within ten years past had strong impressions of duty, whether from a right or a wrong spirit I cannot tell, to become a preacher of the gospel, and bear the news of salvation to my fellow men. But no door ever appeared to open. Another thing. When I became convinced of the truth of the work of the last day I was exercised with a laborious travail of mind for my brethren of my former covenant. I loved them as the children of God; and that they might become the heirs of salvation was my intense desire and labor for a long time, and it has been a thing rather visionary with me that I should some time visit that people.

In fine, if I have ever had any desire or impression of duty to go to any people it is to them, but still the will of God be done. Another thing. Arrangements have been made in time past with me and my father's family, now in Rhode Island, for me and family to go there and tarry awhile for our mutual profit and comfort in temporal things, but my object more properly is, that I may have an opportunity of teaching them the way of life, and I should then be in the midst of the people I have spoken of. The time is near by when I desire to be ready to gather with my brethren to a place of safety. And if I have a work to do I desire to be about it. Being entirely away from the church, I know not what to do. I feel anxious to do the will of the Lord. I asked Elder Babcock to counsel me on this. He rather advised me to go, but more particularly advised me to write to you for advice upon this thing, whether to go or not or whether to remove to Voree. I have written to you as the shepherd of the flock. I have opened myself to you as simple as I could, and if, upon reading this, you would deem it proper to send me a word of advice upon these things, it would be received with the deepest satisfaction, for I desire to obey counsel. My prayer to God is, that his blessing may rest upon you and the whole church, and that every member be ready to obey every requirement of heaven. I shall send you one dollar in this letter to be used as you shall

What you mean by requiring of the Herald to give reasons for saying that Nixon was an impostor and a scamp, long since cut off from the church, or make the plaster as large as the wound, we are utterly at a loss to understand. We can make nothing at all of it, unless it is that you intend to charge the editor with slandering Nixon, and demand of us satisfaction therefor. A little experience will doubtless convince you that the Herald, as the official organ of the church, is more worthy of credence than every adventurer and impostor who may think proper to call himself a saint, and pretend to have suffered injustice at our hands.

Brothers Page, Bacon, Stevens and Chidister say, "we feel disposed to give him the hand of fellowship;" and brother Page says, "I feel disposed to fellowship him until" the Herald gives reasons, &c. You probably did not consider, when writing this, that it was a simple declaration of schism; that it is equivalent to saying you will disregard the acts of the church, until those by whom they are done prove to your satisfaction that they did what they ought to have done in the premises. We do not consider it our duty every time an excommunicated person says he is a good saint and has been unjustly dealt by to take him into our fellowship until the high council or some other tribunal prove that they have cut him off, and that he deserved it. We have so much respect for the priesthood that God has set in the church that when we learn that they have delivered one over to the buffetings of Satan, we have as little thought of fellowshiping the man as his keeper. Such are to us heathen. If they have any disposition to godliness they will return to the church in humility and penitence. If any injustice has unwittingly been done them in the administration of God's law, they will go to the superior authority to rectify it. Not run round among the scattered saints to sow discord, and practice hypocritical piety.

We have not the least disposition to go back and state when and what for Theopholis W. Nixon was cut off from the church. We published nearly a year since that he was "a gross impostor and a worthless scamp, (then,) long since cut off from the church." If you think there has been "no occasion to say so," we have no disposition to add proof or explanations; satisfied that if the question of the duty of respecting authority is to be put to the test of experience you could not well get a subject who will sooner justify his condemnation. We have not the least disposition to treat your communication with unkindness. We presume you did not appreciate the consequence of declaring fellowship for an excommunicated person. In answer to a communication of a different kind, we should be happy to give you any information you might desire.

Our counsel to you is, to fellowship whom the church fellowship, and with such as she has cast out to have nothing to do; no, not so much as to eat; remembering that unto us whom God has made ministers of the dispensation of the fulness of times HE has committed the keys of his kingdom, and the power that whomsoever we bind on earth shall be bound in heaven. As shepherds of the whole flock of God, we have warned both the sheep and the lambs of this impostor, this wolf in sheep's clothing. While you are fellowshiping him and parleying with us, who shall save you from his devouring? Remember that it is as God's ministers that we have delivered him into the hands of Satan, and not as ministers of our own will. It is not we, but God who has done it.

Mantua, Portage Co., Ohio, Nov. 12th, 1848.

PRESIDENT JAMES J. STRANG:—

DEAR SIR,—The First President of the Church, the duly appointed successor of Joseph Smith, I have thought of writing for some time, and the sequel of this letter will enable you to determine whether the advice I ask is proper. I now stand a candidate for baptism, and there is none here who is willing to act in the office of his priesthood at present. I might have been baptized by the Elders of the church under the Twelve, but was not willing. In asking counsel I will give an item of my life. From my infancy my parents strove to teach me the fear of the Lord. At ten I united with the Seventh Day Baptist church. I remained a member twenty-three years. Four years ago brother Justus Morse, a High Priest of the church at Nauvoo, came here. Intense curiosity induced me to investigate and know what this was about which the world made so much ado. After long investigation I found that the kingdom of heaven was near at hand. I remained until last August a believer that the church at Nauvoo was the only church of the saints, although I thought not proper to be baptized by any I had seen.

At that time I visited Elder Wm. Wilson, of Hudson, Ohio.—He presented to me the testimonials of your appointment as successor to our beloved prophet Joseph. Upon examination, although slow to believe, I became satisfied of the present state of things; that you was President of the church, and that the sheep had a shepherd. I was filled with joy and pleasure that, after so long darkness, a brighter day had dawned. Brother Wilson did not feel willing to act in his office until he had been to Voree. Feeling desirous of entering the church, I visited Kirtland. The evening of the ninth of this month I called on Elder Amos Babcock, the only member of the church in that place. He did not feel willing there to act in his office, and said that Elder Page was expected there soon. If I do not find an opportunity soon of coming into the church, I shall visit Voree for that purpose. In coming into the church I desire to walk in all things according to its requirements, and by the grace of God be prepared to do all the duties required at my hand. On this thing I do not need advice, as it is a known duty of all who want salvation to obey the gospel of our Savior. But on another thing I ask advice. I have within ten years past had strong impressions of duty, whether from a right or a wrong spirit I cannot tell, to become a preacher of the gospel, and bear the news of salvation to my fellow men. But no door ever appeared to open. Another thing. When I became convinced of the truth of the work of the last day I was exercised with a laborious travail of mind for my brethren of my former covenant. I loved them as the children of God; and that they might become the heirs of salvation was my intense desire and labor for a long time, and it has been a thing rather visionary with me that I should some time visit that people.

In fine, if I have ever had any desire or impression of duty to go to any people it is to them, but still the will of God be done. Another thing. Arrangements have been made in time past with me and my father's family, now in Rhode Island, for me and family to go there and tarry awhile for our mutual profit and comfort in temporal things, but my object more properly is, that I may have an opportunity of teaching them the way of life, and I should then be in the midst of the people I have spoken of. The time is near by when I desire to be ready to gather with my brethren to a place of safety. And if I have a work to do I desire to be about it. Being entirely away from the church, I know not what to do. I feel anxious to do the will of the Lord. I asked Elder Babcock to counsel me on this. He rather advised me to go, but more particularly advised me to write to you for advice upon this thing, whether to go or not or whether to remove to Voree. I have written to you as the shepherd of the flock. I have opened myself to you as simple as I could, and if, upon reading this, you would deem it proper to send me a word of advice upon these things, it would be received with the deepest satisfaction, for I desire to obey counsel. My prayer to God is, that his blessing may rest upon you and the whole church, and that every member be ready to obey every requirement of heaven. I shall send you one dollar in this letter to be used as you shall deem proper, either for yourself or family, the Herald or the church. I need not say I have not the least doubt of your appointment and office as President of the church, as Apostle, Prophet, Seer, Translator and Revelator to the church. My wife stands a candidate for baptism. Although unworthy, I remain a firm believer in the new covenant,

HORACE CHURCH.

☞ You may go to Rhode Island and preach to all, especially the Seventh Day Baptists, first being baptized and ordained. You will act your pleasure about coming here for baptism, or to some other place. On your way to Rhode Island you can call on Stephen Post, at Centreville, Crawford Co., Pa., Lester Brooks, at the Arcole Furnace, Buffalo, N, Y., or Ebenezer Page, Westford, Otsego Co., N. Y., to be baptized and ordained. Bros. Wilson and Babcock ought not to have declined administering baptism. Long neglect of church duties may make them seem improper. But they do not render the administration invalid. [Ed.

From a Review of the Late War between the U. S. and Mexico.

ANCIENT MEXICO.

The following quotations from Prescott's "Conquest of Mexico," —and we cannot quote from this author without commending him for his ability and faithfulness,—may be here introduced with great propriety, as affording in a few words his reflections upon the fall of that ancient empire, and particularly as they embrace the elements of the causes which produced that fall.

After speaking of the wonders of the conquest, of its romantic and legendary features, he says:—

"Yet we cannot regret the fall of an empire which did so little to promote the happiness of its subjects, or the real interests of humanity. Notwithstanding the lustre thrown over its latter days by the glorious defence of its capitol, by the mild munificence of Montezuma, by the dauntless heroism of Guatemozen, the Aztecs were emphatically a fierce and brutal race, little calculated, in their best aspects, to excite our sympathy and regard. Their civilization, such as it was, was not their own, but reflected, perhaps imperfectly, from a race whom they had succeeded in the land. It was in respect to the Aztecs, a generous graft on a vicious stock, and could have brought no fruit to perfection. They ruled over their wide domains with a sword, instead of a sceptre. They did nothing to ameliorate the condition or in any way promote the progress of their vassals. Their vassals were serfs, used only to minister to their pleasure, held in awe by armed garrisons, ground to the dust by imposts in peace, by military conscriptions in war. They did not, like the Romans, whom they resembled in the nature of their conquests, extend the rights of citizenship to the conquered. They did not amalgamate them into one great nation with common rights and interests. They held them as aliens, even those who, in the valley, were gathered round the very walls of the capitol. The Aztec metropolis, the heart of the monarchy, had not a sympathy, not a pulsation, in common with the rest of the body politic. It was a stranger in its own land.

"The Aztecs not only did not not advance the condition of their vassals, but, morally speaking, they did much to degrade it. How can a nation, where human sacrifices prevail, and especially when combined with cannibalism, further the march of civilization? How can the interests of humanity be consulted, where man is leveled to the rank of the brutes that perish? The influence of the Aztecs introduced their superstition into lands before unacquainted with it, or where, at least, it was not established in any great strength. The example of the capitol was contagious. As the latter increased in opulence, the religious celebrations were conducted with still more terrible magnificence—in the same manner as the gladiatorial shows of the Romans increased in pomp with the increasing splendor of the capitol. Men became familiar with scenes of horror and the most loathsome abominations; women and children —the whole nation—became familiar with and assisted at them.— The heart was hardened, the manners were made ferocious, the feeble light of civilization, transmitted from a milder race, was growing fainter and fainter, as thousands and thousands of miserable victims, throughout the empire, were yearly fattened in its cages, sacrificed on its altars, dressed and served at its banquest! The whole land was converted into a vast human shambles! The empire of the Aztecs did not fall before its time."

For our present purpose it is unnecessary to add to the language of Prescott, in regard to ancient Mexico, as it is of greater importance that we should give a more particular attention to

MODERN MEXICO.

Under the most favorable circumstances, a colonial government labors under numerous disadvantages. Detached and insolated from the sources of its own power, it cannot realize that individuality necessary to energy and advancement. Genius can have no encouragement to give birth to enlightened systems of national polity, which, to be developed, requires national concentration, and individual pride lies dormant where the ultimate objects of ambition centre in powers of foreign origin and foreign control. Such evils increase with the increase of population.

This was true of the British American colonies where the people were of common origin and of one blood. But if we look to the condition of the Spanish colonies of North America, before the separation of the viceroyalty of Mexico from the crown of Spain, we shall find the blighting influences of hate, jealousy, and revenge giving character to the motives, and acts of the different races, castes, and orders, and rendering government a military rule, and necessarily destructive to the rights and well being of the people. The outrages of the Spaniards in the overthrow of the Montezumas make the real and traditionary history of the mixed castes and native inhabitants of Mexico, and their hate has been continued for centuries, and but little unabated even to the time of Iturbide. Most of the honors and emoluments of government were given to Europeans, and what was first deemed a system of outrage, was resolved into a system of settled injustice. It was the reign of royalty and ignorance, of selfishness and wrong.

In this condition of things, was it strange that the first revolutionists of Mexico should prove to be robbers and murderers, and that the first efforts of the masses of the people to act for themselves should develop ignorance, intrigues, corruption, criminal frauds, debasing servility, indecision, imbecility, and all that variety of causes which end in anarchy? In the adoption and execution of the "plan of Iguala" and treaty of Cordova, all these fearful developments were made.

An ignorant race is jealous, cowardly, and cruel. It can neither protect the interests of others or conceive of its own. There is nothing in nature more terrific than the rising of an ignorant people, who have been chained down by an unrighteous power. All desire comfort and consideration, and most fail in their wishes, because they have no faith in integrity. Their experience has taught them a most bitter selfishness, and it is the work of time alone that can convey to their benighted minds even the ordinary knowledge of what is due to themselves and to others.

By the third article of the plan of Iguala, all distinction of castes was abolished, so that all individuals, whether Spaniards, Americans, Indians, or Africans, were placed on equal footing. At this time the republican form of government was proposed and urged by several members of the Junta, but the proposition was successfully opposed by Iturbide and others. The views of Iturbide were expressed with an honest manliness highly creditable to him. "Nature," said he, "produces nothing by sudden leaps; she operates by intermediate degrees. The moral world follows the laws of the physical. To think that we could emerge all at once from a state of debasement such as that of slavery, and from a state of ignorance such as has been inflicted on us for three hundred years, during which we had neither books nor instructors, and the possession of knowledge had been thought a sufficient cause for persecution; to think that we could gain information and refinement in a moment, as if by enchantment; that we could acquire every virtue, forget prejudices, and give up false pretensions, was a vain expectation, and could only have entered into the visions of an enthusiast."

In 1822 Iturbide was declared emperor by the people, but before the new government could be fully organized he was deposed by deem proper, either for yourself or family, the Herald or the church. I need not say I have not the least doubt of your appointment and office as President of the church, as Apostle, Prophet, Seer, Translator and Revelator to the church. My wife stands a candidate for baptism. Although unworthy, I remain a firm believer in the new covenant, HORACE CHURCH.

☞ You may go to Rhode Island and preach to all, especially the Seventh Day Baptists, first being baptized and ordained. You will act your pleasure about coming here for baptism, or to some other place. On your way to Rhode Island you can call on Stephen Post, at Centreville, Crawford Co., Pa., Lester Brooks, at the Arcole Furnace, Buffalo, N. Y., or Ebenezer Page, Westford, Otsego Co., N. Y., to be baptized and ordained. Bros. Wilson and Babcock ought not to have declined administering baptism. Long neglect of church duties may make them seem improper. But they do not render the administration invalid. [Ed.

From a Review of the Late War between the U. S. and Mexico.

ANCIENT MEXICO.

The following quotations from Prescott's "Conquest of Mexico," —and we cannot quote from this author without commending him for his ability and faithfulness,—may be here introduced with great propriety, as affording in a few words his reflections upon the fall of that ancient empire, and particularly as they embrace the elements of the causes which produced that fall.

After speaking of the wonders of the conquest, of its romantic and legendary features, he says:—

"Yet we cannot regret the fall of an empire which did so little to promote the happiness of its subjects, or the real interests of humanity. Notwithstanding the lustre thrown over its latter days by the glorious defence of its capitol, by the mild munificence of Montezuma, by the dauntless heroism of Guatemozen, the Aztecs were emphatically a fierce and brutal race, little calculated, in their best aspects, to excite our sympathy and regard. Their civilization, such as it was, was not their own, but reflected, perhaps imperfectly, from a race whom they had succeeded in the land. It was in respect to the Aztecs, a generous graft on a vicious stock, and could have brought no fruit to perfection. They ruled over their wide domains with a sword, instead of a sceptre. They did nothing to ameliorate the condition or in any way promote the progress of their vassals. Their vassals were serfs, used only to minister to their pleasure, held in awe by armed garrisons, ground to the dust by imposts in peace, by military conscriptions in war. They did not, like the Romans, whom they resembled in the nature of their conquests, extend the rights of citizenship to the conquered. They did not amalgamate them into one great nation with common rights and interests. They held them as aliens, even those who, in the valley, were gathered round the very walls of the capitol. The Aztec metropolis, the heart of the monarchy, had not a sympathy, not a pulsation, in common with the rest of the body politic. It was a stranger in its own land.

"The Aztecs not only did not not advance the condition of their vassals, but, morally speaking, they did much to degrade it. How can a nation, where human sacrifices prevail, and especially when combined with cannibalism, further the march of civilization? How can the interests of humanity be consulted, where man is leveled to the rank of the brutes that perish? The influence of the Aztecs introduced their superstition into lands before unacquainted with it, or where, at least, it was not established in any great strength. The example of the capitol was contagious. As the latter increased in opulence, the religious celebrations were conducted with still more terrible magnificence—in the same manner as the gladiatorial shows of the Romans increased in pomp with the increasing splendor of the capitol. Men became familiar with scenes of horror and the most loathsome abominations; women and children —the whole nation—became familiar with and assisted at them.—The heart was hardened, the manners were made ferocious, the feeble light of civilization, transmitted from a milder race, was growing fainter and fainter, as thousands and thousands of miserable victims, throughout the empire, were yearly fattened in its cages, sacrificed on its altars, dressed and served at its banquest! The whole land was converted into a vast human shambles! The empire of the Aztecs did not fall before its time."

For our present purpose it is unnecessary to add to the language of Prescott, in regard to ancient Mexico, as it is of greater importance that we should give a more particular attention to

MODERN MEXICO.

Under the most favorable circumstances, a colonial government labors under numerous disadvantages. Detached and insolated from the sources of its own power, it cannot realize that individuality necessary to energy and advancement. Genius can have no encouragement to give birth to enlightened systems of national polity, which, to be developed, requires national concentration, and individual pride lies dormant where the ultimate objects of ambition centre in powers of foreign origin and foreign control. Such evils increase with the increase of population.

This was true of the British American colonies where the people were of common origin and of one blood. But if we look to the condition of the Spanish colonies of North America, before the separation of the viceroyalty of Mexico from the crown of Spain, we shall find the blighting influences of hate, jealousy, and revenge giving character to the motives, and acts of the different races, castes, and orders, and rendering government a military rule, and necessarily destructive to the rights and well being of the people. The outrages of the Spaniards in the overthrow of the Montezumas make the real and traditionary history of the mixed castes and native inhabitants of Mexico, and their hate has been continued for centuries, and but little unabated even to the time of Iturbide. Most of the honors and emoluments of government were given to Europeans, and what was first deemed a system of outrage, was resolved into a system of settled injustice. It was the reign of royalty and ignorance, of selfishness and wrong.

In this condition of things, was it strange that the first revolutionists of Mexico should prove to be robbers and murderers, and that the first efforts of the masses of the people to act for themselves should develop ignorance, intrigues, corruption, criminal frauds, debasing servility, indecision, imbecility, and all that variety of causes which end in anarchy? In the adoption and execution of the "plan of Iguala" and treaty of Cordova, all these fearful developments were made.

An ignorant race is jealous, cowardly, and cruel. It can neither protect the interests of others or conceive of its own. There is nothing in nature more terrific than the rising of an ignorant people, who have been chained down by an unrighteous power. All desire comfort and consideration, and most fail in their wishes, because they have no faith in integrity. Their experience has taught them a most bitter selfishness, and it is the work of time alone that can convey to their benighted minds even the ordinary knowledge of what is due to themselves and to others.

By the third article of the plan of Iguala, all distinction of castes was abolished, so that all individuals, whether Spaniards, Americans, Indians, or Africans, were placed on equal footing. At this time the republican form of government was proposed and urged by several members of the Junta, but the proposition was successfully opposed by Iturbide and others. The views of Iturbide were expressed with an honest manliness highly creditable to him. "Nature," said he, "produces nothing by sudden leaps; she operates by intermediate degrees. The moral world follows the laws of the physical. To think that we could emerge all at once from a state of debasement such as that of slavery, and from a state of ignorance such as has been inflicted on us for three hundred years, during which we had neither books nor instructors, and the possession of knowledge had been thought a sufficient cause for persecution; to think that we could gain information and refinement in a moment, as if by enchantment; that we could acquire every virtue, forget prejudices, and give up false pretensions, was a vain expectation, and could only have entered into the visions of an enthusiast."

In 1822 Iturbide was declared emperor by the people, but before the new government could be fully organized he was deposed by factionists and banished. In 1824 Mexico became a republic, and a federal constitution was adopted. General Victoria was elected the first President, and he has been succeeded by such men as Pedraza, Guerrero, Bustamente, Santa Anna, Herrera and Paredes, as Presidents or dictators, at best, with scarcely an exception, rival military adventurers, Actuated by no higher motives than those of personal aggrandizement, they manifested no patriotism above party purposes, and but little conscience above self-interest. Having no hold upon the affections of the people, they relied upon no security except military rule, and this was made subject to the greatest treachery, or to the greatest cunning.

Without any settled principles of self-respect above egotism; without independence not subject to an army; without honesty not subject to bribery and duplicity; without knowledge not neutralized by superstition; without religion not subject to vanity and a priesthood; without virtue not debased by licentiousness; without enterprise not blasted by frivolous pride or indulgence; the people of this country have claimed to be acknowledged as free and independent, and to be regarded as within the pale of civilization and Christianity. Without genius or moral power, they have failed to organize a government that is above their own. Their government has been true to its origin. It has been proud without magnanimity, sensitive without honor, extravagant without means, poor without prudence, cruel without courage, and bold without virtue. It has proved false to its sacred trusts; it has impoverished the country, debased the people, connived at riot, robbery and murder, encouraged violence, engendered civil war, and sanctioned treason. It has legalized plunder in the acts of its citizens, and violated treaties in its intercourse with foreign nations. It has imprisoned the free citizens of other countries, robbed the unprotected traveler, executed the innocent stranger, and assassinated the honest minister. We say the government has done all this because such acts have been committed by the citizens of Mexico, and they have been sustained in their wickedness. At no period, hardly, since that Republic has been in existence, have her prisons been without guiltless tenants from our country, and at no period within the memory of man have life and property been safe within its boundaries. Mexico has neglected education and all modern means of reform, and has failed to secure the honest citizen in his rights, and the industrious in the fruits of his labor.

We are free to confess our wonder, that the Republic of Mexico has been preserved so long; that its faithless and barbarous acts should have been permitted by civilized nations to occur so often and without redress; that its people have been spared to live with so little nakedness and starvation. In no way can we account for this exemption from instant accountability, except it be in the indulgent and misguided forbearance of nations. Her weakness and position have been her protection. Her worst enemies have been within her own limits; the great sources of her evils have been in her own rulers; the greatest obstacles to her success have been in the ignorance of her own people.

DECREASE OF POPULATION IN CUBA.—The last number of the Verdad has a searching analysis of the Statistical Report of the Island of Cuba for 1847, which it says the Government, in the "inscrutable wisdom of colonial omnipotence" suppressed. By comparing the population statistics of 1841 with those of 1847, it will be perceived there is a decrease of 112,736 slaves in six years.

	White.	Free Col'd.	Slaves.	Total.
Census of 1841.	418,291	152,838	446,495	1,067,624
Census of 1847.	425,770	159,222	323,750	898,752
Diminution,			112,736	108,872

It will be seen, says the New York Tribune, if La Verdad has quoted correctly the Government returns, that this blotting out a ninth part of the population of this Island has not resulted from war, pestilence or emigration. It is an absolute extinction of over one hundred thousand slaves. They have not passed by emancipation into the ranks of the free colored population, for the increase of that class is but 6,365 on 152,838, a moderate advance through births alone in six years. As little can they have disappeared by emigration, for there is no perceptible departure of colored persons from Cuba—there is no outlet for that class of its inhabitants.—What then becomes of the slaves that vanish from the face of the earth, at the rate of 20,000 a year? Hear the answer of La Verdad, a Spanish American paper printed here, but having its editorials on Cuba prepared in Havanna, within sight and hearing of the palace of the Governor:—

"The real explanation is that the colored race exists in a state of slavery and hardship unfavorable to life, and the country is still less favorable to increase than the cities, on account of the greater severity of labor, the paucity of females in proportion to men, the stinted and inferior quality of food, the harsh exposure and the want of useful sleep. All these are more than sufficient to destroy the faculties of man, moral, intellectual and physical, whatever may be the color of his skin or the latitude of his birth. Add to these causes the horrid slaughter made by the military commissioner of the Government of Cuba, in which eight or ten thousand negroes were murdered in Matanzas and Cardenas alone, by many modes of torture, to verify a supposed conspiracy, which in any case could not have been more than a dozen of the race, and it will be easy to understand the loss of the slave population."

Beaver Island, November 22d, 1848.

DEAR BROTHER:—It is precisely one year this day since I arrived on Beaver Island for the first time, and the health of myself and family has been extremely good; and my faith in the cause of Christ and the holy priesthood of God delivered unto man, and the dispensation of the prophet Joseph and his successors in office, remain firm and unshaken. I pray God that I may always have his spirit to bear me up above the vain things of earth, and to establish and keep firm in my mind the principles of eternal truth and salvation; that I may not be led astray by the fluctuating and changeable notions of poor fallen man. I rejoice to hear that you are in very comfortable circumstances in Voree, and that love generally prevails among you, and that you are moving on with power and in order, and with rapid pace gaining ground over your enemies and over them that would destroy you root and branch. I think God will give us strength to overpower the evil one, and to put Satan behind us. We are getting order established among us. Since prophet Strang was here in June last we have held two meetings regularly on each Sunday. Our present arrangement is, Sunday school beginning at 9 o'clock, A. M., on Sunday, and lasting till 11, at which time our preaching meeting begins, and prayer meeting at evening, also prayer meeting on Thursday evening, and a day school kept by sister Barker. Truly, with love and respect, I remain your friend and brother, M. M. ALDRICH.

N. B. I was up to Chicago and left on the 4th inst., and bought my provisions, and had a very good time. Several think of coming to the Island in the spring. There is plenty of provisions now on the Island. Dodge, Bowers and Cable have brought on a sufficient quantity to supply those that have not. The propeller St. Lawrence of Oswego is now in, and very likely the last boat this fall.

M. M. ALDRICH.

factionists and banished. In 1824 Mexico became a republic, and a federal constitution was adopted. General Victoria was elected the first President, and he has been succeeded by such men as Pedraza, Guerrero, Bustamente, Santa Anna, Herrera and Paredes, as Presidents or dictators, at best, with scarcely an exception, rival military adventurers, Actuated by no higher motives than those of personal aggrandizement, they manifested no patriotism above party purposes, and but little conscience above self-interest. Having no hold upon the affections of the people, they relied upon no security except military rule, and this was made subject to the greatest treachery, or to the greatest cunning.

Without any settled principles of self-respect above egotism; without independence not subject to an army; without honesty not subject to bribery and duplicity; without knowledge not neutralized by superstition; without religion not subject to vanity and a priesthood; without virtue not debased by licentiousness; without enterprise not blasted by frivolous pride or indulgence; the people of this country have claimed to be acknowledged as free and independent, and to be regarded as within the pale of civilization and Christianity. Without genius or moral power, they have failed to organize a government that is above their own. Their government has been true to its origin. It has been proud without magnanimity, sensitive without honor, extravagant without means, poor without prudence, cruel without courage, and bold without virtue. It has proved false to its sacred trusts; it has impoverished the country, debased the people, connived at riot, robbery and murder, encouraged violence, engendered civil war, and sanctioned treason. It has legalized plunder in the acts of its citizens, and violated treaties in its intercourse with foreign nations. It has imprisoned the free citizens of other countries, robbed the unprotected traveler, executed the innocent stranger, and assassinated the honest minister. We say the government has done all this because such acts have been committed by the citizens of Mexico, and they have been sustained in their wickedness. At no period, hardly, since that Republic has been in existence, have her prisons been without guiltless tenants from our country, and at no period within the memory of man have life and property been safe within its boundaries. Mexico has neglected education and all modern means of reform, and has failed to secure the honest citizen in his rights, and the industrious in the fruits of his labor.

We are free to confess our wonder, that the Republic of Mexico has been preserved so long; that its faithless and barbarous acts should have been permitted by civilized nations to occur so often and without redress; that its people have been spared to live with so little nakedness and starvation. In no way can we account for this exemption from instant accountability, except it be in the indulgent and misguided forbearance of nations. Her weakness and position have been her protection. Her worst enemies have been within her own limits; the great sources of her evils have been in her own rulers; the greatest obstacles to her success have been in the ignorance of her own people.

Decrease of Population in Cuba.—The last number of the Verdad has a searching analysis of the Statistical Report of the Island of Cuba for 1847, which it says the Government, in the "inscrutable wisdom of colonial omnipotence" suppressed. By comparing the population statistics of 1841 with those of 1847, it will be perceived there is a decrease of 112,736 slaves in six years.

	White.	Free Col'd.	Slaves.	Total.
Census of 1841.	418,291	152,838	446,495	1,067,624
Census of 1847.	425,770	159,223	323,750	898,753
Diminution,			112,736	168,872

It will be seen, says the New York Tribune, if La Verdad has quoted correctly the Government returns, that this blotting out a ninth part of the population of this Island has not resulted from war, pestilence or emigration. It is an absolute extinction of over one hundred thousand slaves. They have not passed by emancipation into the ranks of the free colored population, for the increase of that class is but 6,365 on 152,838, a moderate advance through births alone in six years. As little can they have disappeared by emigration, for there is no perceptible departure of colored persons from Cuba—there is no outlet for that class of its inhabitants.—What then becomes of the slaves that vanish from the face of the earth, at the rate of 20,000 a year? Hear the answer of La Verdad, a Spanish American paper printed here, but having its editorials on Cuba prepared in Havanna, within sight and hearing of the palace of the Governor:—

"The real explanation is that the colored race exists in a state of slavery and hardship unfavorable to life, and the country is still less favorable to increase than the cities, on account of the greater severity of labor, the paucity of females in proportion to men, the stinted and inferior quality of food, the harsh exposure and the want of useful sleep. All these are more than sufficient to destroy the faculties of man, moral, intellectual and physical, whatever may be the color of his skin or the latitude of his birth. Add to these causes the horrid slaughter made by the military commissioner of the Government of Cuba, in which eight or ten thousand negroes were murdered in Matanzas and Cardenas alone, by many modes of torture, to verify a supposed conspiracy, which in any case could not have been more than a dozen of the race, and it will be easy to understand the loss of the slave population."

Beaver Island, November 22d, 1848.

Dear Brother:—It is precisely one year this day since I arrived on Beaver Island for the first time, and the health of myself and family has been extremely good; and my faith in the cause of Christ and the holy priesthood of God delivered unto man, and the dispensation of the prophet Joseph and his successors in office, remain firm and unshaken. I pray God that I may always have his spirit to bear me up above the vain things of earth, and to establish and keep firm in my mind the principles of eternal truth and salvation; that I may not be led astray by the fluctuating and changeable notions of poor fallen man. I rejoice to hear that you are in very comfortable circumstances in Voree, and that love generally prevails among you, and that you are moving on with power and in order, and with rapid pace gaining ground over your enemies and over them that would destroy you root and branch. I think God will give us strength to overpower the evil one, and to put Satan behind us. We are getting order established among us. Since prophet Strang was here in June last we have held two meetings regularly on each Sunday. Our present arrangement is, Sunday school beginning at 9 o'clock, A. M., on Sunday, and lasting till 11, at which time our preaching meeting begins, and prayer meeting at evening, also prayer meeting on Thursday evening, and a day school kept by sister Barker. Truly, with love and respect, I remain your friend and brother,

M. M. ALDRICH.

N. B. I was up to Chicago and left on the 4th inst., and bought my provisions, and had a very good time. Several think of coming to the Island in the spring. There is plenty of provisions now on the Island. Dodge, Bowers and Cable have brought on a sufficient quantity to supply those that have not. The propeller St. Lawrence of Oswego is now in, and very likely the last boat this fall.

M. M. ALDRICH.

THE FOOD OF MAN.

AND THE NATIVE COUNTRIES OF OUR MOST FAMILIAR PLANTS.

The Potatoe.

The Potatoe is a native of South America, and is still found wild in Chili, Peru, Monte Video, and Mexico. In its wild state, the root is small and bitter. The first mention of it by writers is in 1554; it is now spread over the world. In the time of queen Elizabeth potatoes sold at a shilling a pound, which was higher than 50 cents per pound would be now, and were eaten only by princes.

WHEAT, RYE, OATS, MAIZE, OR INDIAN CORN.

Wheat and Rye originated in Tartary and Siberia, where they are still indigenous. The Oat is found wild only in Abyssinia, which may, therefore, be considered its native country. Maize, or Indian Corn is a native of America, from New England to Paraguay, and was unknown in Europe, till after the discoveries of Columbus. It is now grown in the south of France and Germany, but is not generally known in Europe, Asia or Africa. William Cobbett raised a field of corn in England, which he sold out for seed at a shilling an ear. It was planted in almost every garden in the country, but was a universal failure, the climate being too cold and damp.

THE BREAD FRUIT TREE, COCOA NUT.

The Bread Fruit Tree is a native of the South Sea Islands, or the islands of Oceanica, particularly Otaheite, one of the Georgian Cluster, near the Society Isles. The Cocoa Nut is a native of most places in the torrid zone, and is one of the most valuable trees, as food, clothing, and shelter are afforded by it.

TEA, SUGAR-CANE.

Tea is found a native, no where, except in China and Japan, from which places nearly the whole world is supplied. The Sugar Cane is a native of China, and the art or manner of making sugar from it, was derived from that country.

COFFEE.

Coffee is a native of Arabia, but is now spread into both the East and West Indies. The best coffee is brought from Mocha in Arabia, whence about fourteen millions of pounds are annually exported. St. Domingo in the West Indies, furnishes from forty to fifty millions of pounds yearly.

THE APPLE AND PEACH.

The Apple in all its varieties, is derived from the crab-tree, which is found wild in most parts of the world. The Peach is derived from Persia, where it still grows in its natural state,—small, bitter, and without poisonous qualities.

TOBACCO.

Tobacco is a native of Mexico and South America, and was first introduced into England from Tobago, in the West Indies, in 1586, by Ralph Lane. The smoking of Tobacco was first discovered by Columbus on the island of Cuba, in his first voyage.

ASPARAGUS, CABBAGE, RICE, ONIONS.

Asparagus was first brought from Asia; Cabbage and Lettuce from Holland; Horse Reddish from China; Rice from Ethiopia; Beans from the East Indies and North America; Onions and Garlics are natives of various places, both in Asia and Africa.

THE PEAR AND QUINCE.

The Pear grows wild in Europe, and is now cultivated in all temperate climes. It was known to the Greeks and Romans more than 2,000 years ago. There are more than two hundred varieties of it. The Quince grows wild in Western Asia and some of the neighboring parts of Europe.

THE CHERRY AND CUCUMBER.

The Cherry is the fruit of the prune or plumb kind, the original stock of which is the wild cherry. The best kinds are the May-duke, White-heart, Black Tartarian, Honey-heart, and Black-heart cherries. The cherry was first brought from the southern shore of Turkey in Asia, 2,000 years ago. The cucumber contains seventeen different sorts or species. The common cucumber is a native of the East Indies.

SLAVES IN CHINA.—The Chinese deal largely in slaves, not from Africa, but purchased from families of their own countrymen. The Chinese slaves are seldom driven to incessant toil, but are treated in the manner of hired servants, and are restrained by a sense of justice and propriety from leaving the service of their owners. The supply of slaves to meet the demand is, generally speaking, from such sources as the following: a debtor, hard pushed by his creditor will sometimes sell his wife or children, or even himself, (having no family,) into slavery, to pay his debts. Orphan children, left destitute, are often sold into slavery, merely to procure their support. Parents or guadians will often sell those under their care, either to get rid of the charge, or to make a little money. Very large numbers of slaves are those who, in infancy, or too young to remember, were kidnapped from their friends. For many make it a business to procure young children, and maintain them till adult age, either to sell, or to make them minister to the carnal appetites of the people.—Ex. paper.

GIVE UP ALL FOR CHRIST.

When our Savior was on earth he was accosted by a young man, who asked him, "Good Master! what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" He was young. He was amiable. He was a ruler of the people—but still his uneasy conscience told him that all was not well with him. The blessed Jesus turned to the amiable man, and said—"One thing thou lackest; sell all that thou hast and come and follow me, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven."

The young man was not prepared for this. He wished to save his soul. But when he lifted up his eyes, and looked out upon the rich possessions that lay stretched before him, and then thought of the unseen treasures of which he had only the promise, and which were to be reached through a life of trial and privation, he hesitated. "Do I love this Jesus or my possessions most?" we may imagine him to have reasoned with himself, "can I give them all up for Christ?" He hesitated. The allurements of the world were too strong for him. He turned and went away sorrowful. And when in the awful day of final retribution, the rejected Savior shall spurn such as he was from his presence forever, we fear that the young ruler will "go away sorrowful" once more.—Pres. Treas.

☞ One bad effect of a fondness for litigation is that it has a tendency to produce a disposition to take the law of the land as the standard of morality. This is a great error. The law sanctioned the African slave trade, but did not make it innocent. The law allows you to give to your laborers any wages they may be willing to accept, and to employ them as many hours a day as they are willing to work; but if you take advantage of their necessities to exact from them hard bargains, you shall not be morally guiltless. If you have been a bankrupt, and have received your certificate, the law will not allow your creditors to enforce payment of your debts; but you are, nevertheless, morally bound to pay them, should you ever have the power.—Hunt's Merchants' Magazine.

LEISURE HOURS.—It was a beautiful observation of the late William Hazlit, that "there is room enough in human life to crowd almost every art and science into it." If we pass no day without a line—visit no place without the companion of a book—we may with ease fill libraries or empty them of their contents. The more we do, the more we can do; the more busy we are, the more leisure we have.

THE FOOD OF MAN.

AND THE NATIVE COUNTRIES OF OUR MOST FAMILIAR PLANTS.

The Potato.

The Potatoe is a native of South America, and is still found wild in Chili, Peru, Monte Video, and Mexico. In its wild state, the root is small and bitter. The first mention of it by writers is in 1554; it is now spread over the world. In the time of queen Elizabeth potatoes sold at a shilling a pound, which was higher than 50 cents per pound would be now, and were eaten only by princes.

WHEAT, RYE, OATS, MAIZE, OR INDIAN CORN.

Wheat and Rye originated in Tartary and Siberia, where they are still indigenous. The Oat is found wild only in Abyssinia, which may, therefore, be considered its native country. Maize, or Indian Corn is a native of America, from New England to Paraguay, and was unknown in Europe, till the discoveries of Columbus. It is now grown in the north of France and Germany, but is not generally known in England. William Cobbett raised a field of corn in England, and sent out for seed at a shilling an ear. It was planted in almost every garden in the country, but was a universal failure, the season being too cold and damp.

THE BREAD FRUIT TREE, COCOA NUT.

The Bread Fruit Tree is a native of the South Sea Islands, or the islands of Oceanica, particularly Otaheite, one of the Georgian Cluster, near the Society Isles. The Cocoa Nut is a native of most places in the torrid zone, and is one of the most valuable trees, as food, clothing, and shelter are afforded by it.

TEA, SUGAR-CANE.

Tea is found a native, no where, except in China and Japan, from which places nearly the whole world is supplied. The Sugar Cane is a native of China, and the art or manner of making sugar from it, was derived from that country.

COFFEE.

Coffee is a native of Arabia, but is now spread into both the East and West Indies. The best coffee is brought from Mocha in Arabia, whence about fourteen millions of pounds are annually exported. St. Domingo in the West Indies, furnishes from forty to fifty millions of pounds yearly.

THE APPLE AND PEACH.

The Apple in all its varieties, is derived from the crab-tree, which is found wild in most parts of the world. The Peach is derived from Persia, where it still grows in its natural state,—small, bitter, and without poisonous qualities.

TOBACCO.

Tobacco is a native of Mexico and South America, and was first introduced into England from Tobago, in the West Indies, in 1586, by Ralph Lane. The smoking of Tobacco was first discovered by Columbus on the island of Cuba, in his first voyage.

ASPARAGUS, CABBAGE, RICE, ONIONS.

Asparagus was first brought from Asia; Cabbage and Lettuce from Holland; Horse Reddish from China; Rice from Ethiopia; Beans from the East Indies and North America; Onions and Garlics are natives of various places, both in Asia and Africa.

THE PEAR AND QUINCE.

The Pear grows wild in Europe, and is now cultivated in all temperate climes. It was known to the Greeks and Romans more than 2,000 years ago. There are more than two hundred varieties of it. The Quince grows wild in Western Asia and some of the neighboring parts of Europe.

THE CHERRY AND CUCUMBER.

The Cherry is the fruit of the prune or plumb kind, the original stock of which is the wild cherry. The best kinds are the May-duke, White-heart, Black Tartarian, Honey-heart, and Black-heart cherries. The cherry was first brought from the southern shore of Turkey in Asia, 2,000 years ago. The cucumber contains seventeen different sorts or species. The common cucumber is a native of the East Indies.

SLAVES IN CHINA.—The Chinese deal largely in slaves, not from Africa, but purchased from families of their own countrymen. The Chinese slaves are seldom driven to incessant toil, but are treated in the manner of hired servants, and are restrained by a sense of justice and propriety from leaving the service of their owners. The supply of slaves to meet the demand is, generally speaking, from such sources as the following: a debtor, hard pushed by his creditor will sometimes sell his wife or children, or even himself, (having no family,) into slavery, to pay his debts. Orphan children, left destitute, are often sold into slavery, merely to procure their support. Parents or guadians will often sell those under their care, either to get rid of the charge, or to make a little money. Very large numbers of slaves are those who, in infancy, or too young to remember, were kidnapped from their friends. For many make it a business to procure young children, and maintain them till adult age, either to sell, or to make them minister to the carnal appetites of the people.—Ex. paper.

GIVE UP ALL FOR CHRIST.

When our Savior was on earth he was accosted by a young man, who asked him, "Good Master! what shall I do to inherit eternal life?" He was young. He was amiable. He was a ruler of the people—but still his uneasy conscience told him that all was not well with him. The blessed Jesus turned to the amiable man, and said—"One thing thou lackest; sell all that thou hast and come and follow me, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven."

The young man was not prepared for this. He wished to save his soul. But when he lifted up his eyes, and looked out upon the rich possessions that lay stretched before him, and then thought of the unseen treasures of which he had only the promise, and which were to be reached through a life of trial and privation, he hesitated. "Do I love this Jesus or my possessions most!" we may imagine him to have reasoned with himself, "can I give them all up for Christ?" He hesitated. The allurements of the world were too strong for him. He turned and went away sorrowful. And when in the awful day of final retribution, the rejected Savior shall spurn such as he was from his presence forever, we fear that the young ruler will "go away sorrowful" once more.—Pres. Treas.

☞ One bad effect of a fondness for litigation is that it has a tendency to produce a disposition to take the law of the land as the standard of morality. This is a great error. The law sanctioned the African slave trade, but did not make it innocent. The law allows you to give to your laborers any wages they may be willing to accept, and to employ them as many hours a day as they are willing to work; but if you take advantage of their necessities to exact from them hard bargains, you shall not be morally guiltless. If you have been a bankrupt, and have received your certificate, the law will not allow your creditors to enforce payment of your debts; but you are, nevertheless, morally bound to pay them, should you ever have the power.—Hunt's Merchants' Magazine.

LEISURE HOURS.—It was a beautiful observation of the late William Hazlit, that "there is room enough in human life to crowd almost every art and science into it." If we pass no day without a line—visit no place without the companion of a book—we may with ease fill libraries or empty them of their contents. The more we do, the more we can do; the more busy we are, the more leisure we have.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 42.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. JAN. 4, 1849. [WHOLE No. 106.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

BEAUTIFUL LEGISLATION.

The Congress of the United States has admitted Wisconsin into the Union as a State, and neither abolished the Territorial Government nor provided for its continuance. As the State is but a little over half as large as the Territory was, it is very clear that the Territory yet exists. Indeed, after sleeping over the subject about a year, the old Territorial officers have gone up north, rubbed their eyes open, and discovered again that they have a key to the public crib. So there is an unintended but legally authorized government in the nation. But the Wisconsin Legislature have gone far beyond this. They have made a law for the election of electors of President and Vice President of the United States, without providing for ascertaining who is elected, or for their entering upon the duties of their office; and also made a law regulating elections of county officers, but not authorizing the holding of such elections.—The county officers have been elected throughout the State without authority, and if the old officers have wit enough to discover the fact, they can all hold over until the Legislature authorizes an election. Beautiful government this. Last spring elections were held in some towns and not in others, because it was an open question whether there was legal authority to hold an election.

JUGGLING AMONG STATESMEN.

Mr. Senator Douglass, of Ill., has introduced a bill into the Senate of the United States for the admission of California into the Union as a State. It is silent on the subject of slavery, and as it is well known that the people of California are opposed to slavery, it is doubtles intended that the bill will be acceptable to northern statesmen. A pretty operation it will be, if successful. If two thousand slaves were bought up in the south and drove over to the gold mines they would all sell in a brief time at an immense profit. Adventurers who have gone out merely to make a fortune and return, care little what institutions the country adopt, so they make their fortunes. When labor is worth $30 per day slaves would sell at $2,000, though they might be free in a year, or six months even.

Violence would keep them in slavery without law so long as labor bears a high price. Sympathy, except for gold, cannot be found in such a place. If the fastnesses of the forest offered them any escape, the chain and ball would keep them from it. In such a country money is the only morality. When slaves were once there, there is a great pecuniary interest in keeping them slaves. That interest would swallow up all the moral principle that the State could furnish. Slavery would be introduced while the law authorising the formation of a State government was on its way, and would be guarantied in the constitution. Thank God, we have no interest in these jugglings. But we cannot but be indignant at those who practice them, and scorn those who are gulled by them.

For the Gospel Herald.

Erieus, Canada West, December 13th, 1848.

BELOVED BROTHER STRANG:—Thinking it would not be amiss I write a few lines, which you may insert in your valuable paper if you think proper. I came here according to appointment, and began to preach the gospel to those who sat in darkness. I was soon surrounded by a company of professed christians, who were full of just such religion as many of olden times had who persecuted the saints of God and killed the prophets. They opposed me greatly, and threatened to mob me, but seeing that would not do, they then began to tell all manner of lies about the servants of God, to prejudice the minds of the meek. But, like all who tried to oppose truth anciently, they could not agree in their statements. This the honest soon began to see. The opposers then held council to stop me from preaching by shutting the doors of their school houses against me. They shut two doors against me, but to their astonishment it was the means of having many more opened, which they could not shut. And when they tried to stop the people from hearing, it made them the more anxious to hear.

One Baptist preacher began to be alarmed about his flock, (because, as he said, I had broke up his revival of religion,) and tried to put me down by argument. In this he failed, and many of his hearers acknowledged it. After that a Methodist preacher tried what he could do, and said he would meet me in debate. In that I concurred. Word was given out for a public discussion. Nov. the 28th we met. The house was crowded. The debate opened and continued till he called for a close. The arguments were taken down on both sides by a gentleman belonging to neither party. Many are reading it now, and are anxious to have it printed. It uses up the Methodists complete. It had a good effect, and opened the eyes of many. I have large congregations, and calls on every side more than I can fill. I expect to baptize some next week.—About thirty have said they mean to be baptized and go to Voree. I am breaking new ground where never Mormons stood. I have neither Brighamites or pseudoes to trouble me. Yours in the gospel,

JOHN SHIPPY.

☞ Money received. [ED.

☞ Ebenezer Page contemplates chartering a lake boat to come from Fort Plain, on the Erie canal, to N. Y., to Beaver Island and Racine, to come up in May next, with a company of emigrants. For the encouragement of the poor saints they propose to bring all whether they have means to pay the expense or not. We understand that some of the saints who have the means will "foot the bill." This is an excellent opportunity for all who wish to come up from all places east of there, and from every part of the State of New York. Those in northen Pennsylvania and Ohio would do well to avail themselves of this opportunity. All who wish to do so can communicate with Ebenezer Page, at Westford, N. Y., post paid, and get all needful information. Those in the vicinity of Boston can communicate with Alden Hale at Lowell, Mass.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 42.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. JAN. 4, 1849. [WHOLE No. 106.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

BEAUTIFUL LEGISLATION.

The Congress of the United States has admitted Wisconsin into the Union as a State, and neither abolished the Territorial Government nor provided for its continuance. As the State is but a little over half as large as the Territory was, it is very clear that the Territory yet exists. Indeed, after sleeping over the subject about a year, the old Territorial officers have gone up north, rubbed their eyes open, and discovered again that they have a key to the public crib. So there is an unintended but legally authorized government in the nation. But the Wisconsin Legislature have gone far beyond this. They have made a law for the election of electors of President and Vice President of the United States, without providing for ascertaining who is elected, or for their entering upon the duties of their office; and also made a law regulating elections of county officers, but not authorizing the holding of such elections.—The county officers have been elected throughout the State without authority, and if the old officers have wit enough to discover the fact, they can all hold over until the Legislature authorizes an election. Beautiful government this. Last spring elections were held in some towns and not in others, because it was an open question whether there was legal authority to hold an election.

JUGGLING AMONG STATESMEN.

Mr. Senator Douglass, of Ill., has introduced a bill into the Senate of the United States for the admission of California into the Union as a State. It is silent on the subject of slavery, and as it is well known that the people of California are opposed to slavery, it is doubtles intended that the bill will be acceptable to northern statesmen. A pretty operation it will be, if successful. If two thousand slaves were bought up in the south and drove over to the gold mines they would all sell in a brief time at an immense profit. Adventurers who have gone out merely to make a fortune and return, care little what institutions the country adopt, so they make their fortunes. When labor is worth $30 per day slaves would sell at $2,000, though they might be free in a year, or six months even.

Violence would keep them in slavery without law so long as labor bears a high price. Sympathy, except for gold, cannot be found in such a place. If the fastnesses of the forest offered them any escape, the chain and ball would keep them from it. In such a country money is the only morality. When slaves were once there, there is a great pecuniary interest in keeping them slaves. That interest would swallow up all the moral principle that the State could furnish. Slavery would be introduced while the law authorising the formation of a State government was on its way, and would be guarantied in the constitution. Thank God, we have no interest in these jugglings. But we cannot but be indignant at those who practice them, and scorn those who are gulled by them.

For the Gospel Herald.

Erieus, Canada West, December 13th, 1848.

BELOVED BROTHER STRANG:—Thinking it would not be amiss I write a few lines, which you may insert in your valuable paper if you think proper. I came here according to appointment, and began to preach the gospel to those who sat in darkness. I was soon surrounded by a company of professed christians, who were full of just such religion as many of olden times had who persecuted the saints of God and killed the prophets. They opposed me greatly, and threatened to mob me, but seeing that would not do, they then began to tell all manner of lies about the servants of God, to prejudice the minds of the meek. But, like all who tried to oppose truth anciently, they could not agree in their statements. This the honest soon began to see. The opposers then held council to stop me from preaching by shutting the doors of their school houses against me. They shut two doors against me, but to their astonishment it was the means of having many more opened, which they could not shut. And when they tried to stop the people from hearing, it made them the more anxious to hear.

One Baptist preacher began to be alarmed about his flock, (because, as he said, I had broke up his revival of religion,) and tried to put me down by argument. In this he failed, and many of his hearers acknowledged it. After that a Methodist preacher tried what he could do, and said he would meet me in debate. In that I concurred. Word was given out for a public discussion. Nov. the 28th we met. The house was crowded. The debate opened and continued till he called for a close. The arguments were taken down on both sides by a gentleman belonging to neither party. Many are reading it now, and are anxious to have it printed. It uses up the Methodists complete. It had a good effect, and opened the eyes of many. I have large congregations, and calls on every side more than I can fill. I expect to baptize some next week.—About thirty have said they mean to be baptized and go to Voree. I am breaking new ground where never Mormons stood. I have neither Brighamites or pseudoes to trouble me. Yours in the gospel,

JOHN SHIPPY.

☞ Money received. [Ed.

☞ Ebenezer Page contemplates chartering a lake boat to come from Fort Plain, on the Erie canal, in N. Y., to Beaver Island and Racine, to come up in May next, with a company of emigrants. For the encouragement of the poor saints they propose to bring all whether they have means to pay the expense or not. We understand that some of the saints who have the means will "foot the bill." This is an excellent opportunity for all who wish to come up from all places east of there, and from every part of the State of New York. Those in northen Pennsylvania and Ohio would do well to avail themselves of this opportunity. All who wish to do so can communicate with Ebenezer Page, at Westford, N. Y., post paid, and get all needful information. Those in the vicinity of Boston can communicate with Alden Hale at Lowell, Mass.

WILLIAM AT IT AGAIN.

Philadelphia, November 30th, 1848.

Mr. J. J. Strang,—Dear Brother:—I have just returned from hearing William Smith upon your claims. I will give you a few of his statements. He says, in the first place, that you are an infidel. He says you made the plates yourself, out of an old brass kettle. He says that the illumination was done by using phosphorus, and that you acknowledged it to him. He says you told him that God commanded you to use phosphorus. He said you preached for three hours to show that Christ did all his miracles by similar cheats; that Christ turned the water into wine by having some dough cakes in his pockets, and slipped them in the water; that Joshua made a phosphorus sun and moon, and that all miracles were done by natural means. He says that you wrote the letter of appointment. He also says that there is but eight families in the Order of Enoch. He says you never held a discussion with a Catholic. It is all a lie. He said you was a base impostor and liar.—He also said he never acknowledged you to be a prophet. He only went to Voree to examine your claims. He then turned round to a man he called Hook, and asked him if what he said was not true. Of course Hook said that it was all true.

I will now tell you what Hook says about your teachings. He says that you told one Shaw that the time would come that you would have so much power in the church that men would give up their wives to you. He says that Beaver Island is the place where the spiritual wife system is to be carried out. I will now stop.—William Smith says that he is the Deliverer that shall come out of Zion. He wants to organize a branch here. And that he is the prophet and the great head of the Mormon church. Oh how I would like you or brother Page to be here now. There would be a fine chance for discussion. He says he is going to stay here this winter. Can't you come on this way, or send some one? You can make use of this letter as you think best. Just drop me a few lines immediately. I don't think he can make many converts here. We send our love to you, and may you prosper, is my prayer.—Give my love to brother Haven. I am yours in love,

PETER HESS.

P. S. Brother Strang, the papers do not come regular. I wish you would send me that paper which has an account of the miracles wrought by Christ, which speaks of Joshua making a phosphorus sun and moon, &c. William says he challenges any man to discuss the subject. P. H.

☞ We have heard of men turning political summersets, till the veriest blackguard of the tap room despised their pretensions, but among them all never found the man who could turn as often or cut his corners as short as this same William Smith. If he can get his living among the saints, without taking light fingers along to find articles of trifling value for him, he has an ingenuity we never gave him credit for. Certainly we don't think William would Hook anything except the priesthood, nor do anything else that required labor; though doubtless if he believed one word of his protege's story he would put for Beaver in hot haste. We shall enter into no review of Wm.'s statements. He is on ground where he is perfectly well known. If there is one individual who can believe such a story on his assertion, we say let him. We have no disposition to write a wretch into notoriety, who, boasting of being brother to the prophet, is willing to go about the country delivering lectures on the corruption of Mormons, at a shilling a head.

We should be glad indeed were it true that Wm. never had acknowledged prophet Strang. His name has been a blight and a mildew to our cause from St. Louis to Voree, and from Voree to Salem. Confiding in his professed repentance, we have urged many to suspend their judgment against him till he had an opportunity to earn a reputation. It was not till after he attended two Conferences at Voree, and one at Kirtland, and had preached Strang and Voree from Kirtland to Nauvoo, and had been put on trial for returning to his old habits, that he discovered that Strang was not a true prophet.—Those who read the Voree Herald Vol. 1, will remember that Nos. 6 and 7 are principally made up by William in showing that Strang is the Prophet. The Philadelphia Ledger of some early date in Sept., 1846, contains a communication from him on the subject of Pres. Strang's prophetic office, in which he asserted that fact as strong as any one can possibly deny it. We have now in hand several manuscripts of his writing, containing the same matter. We do not value them at one farthing. And just as little do we value what he may say against us. All his tales about the miracles wrought by deception, we place in the same catalogue with those about the dead man's manuscript, and the philosopher's stone on another page. He that will believe one, will the other. We have not the least doubt that Wm. would endorse the story of the old Nephite and his monkey, the Devil's kick, and the manuscript found, at the same price that he receives for telling that of the brass kettle and cheating miracles.

We do not know what paper you intend in your request. We have an indistinct recollection of an article published about two years since, which alluded to the speculations of infidel philosophers, charging Joshua with making a phosphoric sun and moon, and setting them up. We do not recollect the number of the paper, but it will be found by examining the files from January to March, 1847. It will be time enough for William to challenge discussion when he answers his own testimony. It will be in season for any one to answer him when he presents something that bears the semblance of argument. Since he was here he has several times set himself up as some great one. We do hope he will succeed in getting some followers. It is a pity that one so anxious to lead should have nobody in his train but a Hook. We know of some in the east who seem exceedingly anxious to be deceived, that we think would go well with him. Poor motherless colts, they will hardly be content till they get William for a step dam. May they have much joy while all strain their ears to hear Wm. tell the mysteries of an illumination that he was not within 150 miles of, and knows no more about than does the man in the moon. Again we say, may Wm. succeed. The worst wish we have for any one who believes one word he says is, that he may be his disciple. And we wish no more for ourselves than that such men may always speak of us just as Wm. now speaks of prophet Strang. We hope brother Hess will not do the least act to mar Wm.'s success. If he claims to be the Deliverer that shall come out of Zion, we say amen. It was certainly a great deliverance when he went out. We know of few who could turn away more ungodliness than he did when he turned himself away. And if anybody think better of him, let them keep of their present mind, and we shall be sufficiently revenged.

California.—The excitement in relation to the gold region continues to increase every where as each successive report tends to confirm previous statements as to the richness of the "diggings." Companies are forming every where, and city papers contain many announcements of vessels preparing to start with associated companies "round the Horn." A project of this kind we have heard talked of in this town. The government has received such confirmatory accounts of the richness of the gold region that the President, it is stated, was preparing a message to Congress upon the subject. We might fill columns with the letters written from California, but the following must suffice this week, crowded as we are, as a sample of their uniform style:—

"San Francisco, August 14, 1848.—As to the richness of the

WILLIAM AT IT AGAIN.

Philadelphia, November 30th, 1848.

Mr. J. J. Strang,—Dear Brother:—I have just returned from hearing William Smith upon your claims. I will give you a few of his statements. He says, in the first place, that you are an infidel. He says you made the plates yourself, out of an old brass kettle. He says that the illumination was done by using phosphorus, and that you acknowledged it to him. He says you told him that God commanded you to use phosphorus. He said you preached for three hours to show that Christ did all his miracles by similar cheats; that Christ turned the water into wine by having some dough cakes in his pockets, and slipped them in the water; that Joshua made a phosphorus sun and moon, and that all miracles were done by natural means. He says that you wrote the letter of appointment. He also says that there is but eight families in the Order of Enoch. He says you never held a discussion with a Catholic. It is all a lie. He said you was a base impostor and liar.—He also said he never acknowledged you to be a prophet. He only went to Voree to examine your claims. He then turned round to a man he called Hook, and asked him if what he said was not true. Of course Hook said that it was all true.

I will now tell you what Hook says about your teachings. He says that you told one Shaw that the time would come that you would have so much power in the church that men would give up their wives to you. He says that Beaver Island is the place where the spiritual wife system is to be carried out. I will now stop.—William Smith says that he is the Deliverer that shall come out of Zion. He wants to organize a branch here. And that he is the prophet and the great head of the Mormon church. Oh how I would like you or brother Page to be here now. There would be a fine chance for discussion. He says he is going to stay here this winter. Can't you come on this way, or send some one? You can make use of this letter as you think best. Just drop me a few lines immediately. I don't think he can make many converts here. We send our love to you, and may you prosper, is my prayer.—Give my love to brother Haven. I am yours in love,

PETER HESS.

P. S. Brother Strang, the papers do not come regular. I wish you would send me that paper which has an account of the miracles wrought by Christ, which speaks of Joshua making a phosphorus sun and moon, &c. William says he challenges any man to discuss the subject. P. H.

☞ We have heard of men turning political summersets, till the veriest blackguard of the tap room despised their pretensions, but among them all never found the man who could turn as often or cut his corners as short as this same William Smith. If he can get his living among the saints, without taking light fingers along to find articles of trifling value for him, he has an ingenuity we never gave him credit for. Certainly we don't think William would Hook anything except the priesthood, nor do anything else that required labor; though doubtless if he believed one word of his protege's story he would put for Beaver in hot haste. We shall enter into no review of Wm.'s statements. He is on ground where he is perfectly well known. If there is one individual who can believe such a story on his assertion, we say let him. We have no disposition to write a wretch into notoriety, who, boasting of being brother to the prophet, is willing to go about the country delivering lectures on the corruption of Mormons, at a shilling a head.

We should be glad indeed were it true that Wm. never had acknowledged prophet Strang. His name has been a blight and a mildew to our cause from St. Louis to Voree, and from Voree to Salem. Confiding in his professed repentance, we have urged many to suspend their judgment against him till he had an opportunity to earn a reputation. It was not till after he attended two Conferences at Voree, and one at Kirtland, and had preached Strang and Voree from Kirtland to Nauvoo, and had been put on trial for returning to his old habits, that he discovered that Strang was not a true prophet.—Those who read the Voree Herald Vol. 1, will remember that Nos. 6 and 7 are principally made up by William in showing that Strang is the Prophet. The Philadelphia Ledger of some early date in Sept., 1846, contains a communication from him on the subject of Pres. Strang's prophetic office, in which he asserted that fact as strong as any one can possibly deny it. We have now in hand several manuscripts of his writing, containing the same matter. We do not value them at one farthing. And just as little do we value what he may say against us. All his tales about the miracles wrought by deception, we place in the same catalogue with those about the dead man's manuscript, and the philosopher's stone on another page. He that will believe one, will the other. We have not the least doubt that Wm. would endorse the story of the old Nephite and his monkey, the Devil's kick, and the manuscript found, at the same price that he receives for telling that of the brass kettle and cheating miracles.

We do not know what paper you intend in your request. We have an indistinct recollection of an article published about two years since, which alluded to the speculations of infidel philosophers, charging Joshua with making a phosphoric sun and moon, and setting them up. We do not recollect the number of the paper, but it will be found by examining the files from January to March, 1847. It will be time enough for William to challenge discussion when he answers his own testimony. It will be in season for any one to answer him when he presents something that bears the semblance of argument. Since he was here he has several times set himself up as some great one. We do hope he will succeed in getting some followers. It is a pity that one so anxious to lead should have nobody in his train but a Hook. We know of some in the east who seem exceedingly anxious to be deceived, that we think would go well with him. Poor motherless colts, they will hardly be content till they get William for a step dam. May they have much joy while all strain their ears to hear Wm. tell the mysteries of an illumination that he was not within 150 miles of, and knows no more about than does the man in the moon. Again we say, may Wm. succeed. The worst wish we have for any one who believes one word he says is, that he may be his disciple. And we wish no more for ourselves than that such men may always speak of us just as Wm. now speaks of prophet Strang. We hope brother Hess will not do the least act to mar Wm.'s success. If he claims to be the Deliverer that shall come out of Zion, we say amen. It was certainly a great deliverance when he went out. We know of few who could turn away more ungodliness than he did when he turned himself away. And if anybody think better of him, let them keep of their present mind, and we shall be sufficiently revenged.

California.—The excitement in relation to the gold region continues to increase every where as each successive report tends to confirm previous statements as to the richness of the "diggings." Companies are forming every where, and city papers contain many announcements of vessels preparing to start with associated companies "round the Horn." A project of this kind we have heard talked of in this town. The government has received such confirmatory accounts of the richness of the gold region that the President, it is stated, was preparing a message to Congress upon the subject. We might fill columns with the letters written from California, but the following must suffice this week, crowded as we are, as a sample of their uniform style:—

"San Francisco, August 14, 1848.—As to the richness of the mine, were we to set down half the truth it would be looked upon in other countries as a 'Sinbad' story, or the history of 'Alladin's Lamp,' which required that the possessors should but wish and his wishes were accomplished. Many persons have culled in one day, of the finest grade gold, from three to eight hundred dollars, and for many days together averaged from seventy-five to one hundred and fifty dollars.

"Although this is not universal, yet the general average is so well settled that when a man with his pan or basket does not easily gather thirty to forty dollars in a day he moves to another place; so that including the time spent in moving from place to place and in looking for better 'diggings,' we are of the opinion that we may safely set down an ounce of pure gold (or sixteen dollars) per day to the man. Supposing there are four thousand persons at work they will add to the aggregate wealth of the territory about four thousand ounces, or sixty thousand dollars a day."

Other letters from the Pacific, state that some fifteen millions worth of gold has been gathered.

One says that at the time of writing there were seventeen vessels lying in the harbor of San Francisco, their crews having deserted and gone to the gold region. The excitement along the whole coast was said to be great and was extending.

THE SMALL POX.

We have the Small Pox in our city. We are requested to announce it, and we do so for the benefit of all concerned. We have it, and why should we not, being as we are in a city. New York has had it any day—hour—or minute, for the past thirty years, and we, a sister city, have it now.

Our Board of Health have it—no, have at it—all the time. The Board writes a letter, the Clerk of the Board writes a letter, and the President of the Board writes a letter. They announce it, they pronounce it, they denounce it, and—we have the Small Pox.

It is true that when other cities have it, they do not make quite so much of a fuss about it, nor write a leash (that is the sportsman's term for three) of letters from Clerk, President and Board, separate, collectively, unitedly, but then being older perhaps they don't care about making so much noise in the world, and have other "fish to fry" that prevent their thus spending their time. Burlington is not a city, and perhaps had no right to the small pox, but she had it, made no fuss about it, and it went out without troubling more than one or two persons in the place.

Well, we have got the small pox, and it has made more noise than anything except the fire and incendiary attempts which were rather alarming indeed, but they are forgotten in the new excitement, and the yellow quarantine flag has usurped the place of the red flag of the incendiary. The publication of the letters add to the talk, and we hear of little else.

Our city officers have done their duty well in regard to this disease. They have taken the proper means to prevent its spreading, and they have made the city safe from any real danger. All we object to is the publication of letters calculated to alarm people abroad, and prevent their coming among us. We do not wish it to be unknown that the disease does exist, but we wish it also known that there is no danger to those who come among us, and we think the letters will spread unnecessary alarm. We can assure the public that all necessary precautions have been taken, and properly taken, that our officers are active, vigilant and men of sense, and in the case of the letters only have acted in our opinion without due discretion. We think the letters may cause needless alarm abroad, and can do no good either there or at home.—Racine Advocate.

☞ This is just what we expected, and have often said. We mean what is said about the Small Pox in Burlington. There have been FOURTEEN CASES of Small Pox in the town of Burlington in the last ten weeks, and it made there full as much excitement as it now does in Racine. The family who brought it in were not only wished hanged, damned, &c., but were threatened with violence for the misfortune of being exposed to a contagious disease while on the way up the lakes. But——they were all Mormons—those that had it. And, with two exceptions, they never had any medical attendance. None died, and none were in the slightest danger of dying, except a few that did not have it. Indeed, in some instances, those that were thoroughly broke out kept about their work, and others would but for the danger of infecting others, or producing needless alarm. The only remedy used was that prescribed by that ancient physician, and found in a book often seen, sometimes read, and believed by a very few. James v. 14. If our sectarian readers should read it in the book they doubtless would think it had some hidden meaning; meant anything but what it said. So we will put it in a "newspaper," that they may know what it means:—"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord."

Bunner, of the Advocate, will doubtless laugh when he reads this. But if he will take the least pains when he is out to Burlington, he can learn to his own satisfaction that what we have stated is simple fact. When the disease first appeared among us the prophe. endeavored to quiet the alarm naturally felt on the subject, and assured the public that the disease would pass by so lightly that in one year the same men who had been frightened out of all good sense would deny that the disease had ever been here. Already the Advocate has got our fourteen down to two. If two had died of it, they would have been multiplied to twenty. By the way, it was very kind in him of the Advocate to locate the Small Pox in Burlington instead of Voree. We thank him for the favor. As the cases were about as near one place as the other, and were all among Mormons, we expected new articles of impeachment to be framed against us on the occasion. The former conductor of that paper abused us like wet dogs for a less offence, and his neighbor of the Whig called us hard names because we would not contract with him for a job at more than twice the price other printers asked for the same work. Very pretty.

SAMPLE OF AN ELDER.

We just witnessed such a sample of a minister of the word and power of God, such as is seldom seen. God grant us more such. Elder James Blakeslee, who has been a preacher sixteen years, proclaimed the gospel in twelve States, the Canadas, Great Britain, and the islands of the sea, and has baptized 1,000 converts, just came into our office with a coat on which beat Joseph's coat of many colors. It was very warm, very comfortable indeed, but no man could tell what kind of cloth it was made of. It was literally patched with twenty-three different kinds of cloth, and scarcely two of the same color. Never did we see a patch-work quilt that matched it.

And this man, with talent of a high order, and enterprise sufficient for anything, is most happily engaged in the great work of establishing equality among all the saints, and bringing about a new and better order of things among men; perfectly content with a little deficiency of the luxuries of life; rather proud than ashamed of an old garment well patched, where all are alike. This will do well enough for a man of real talent, but a hair brained fool must have good fashionable clothes or he cannot pass muster in society. God send us more men like brother Blakeslee, who can work, preach, debate and grow fat, and never fear a patched coat. Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth.

mine, were we to set down half the truth it would be looked upon in other countries as a 'Sinbad' story, or the history of 'Alladin's Lamp,' which required that the possessors should but wish and his wishes were accomplished. Many persons have culled in one day, of the finest grade gold, from three to eight hundred dollars, and for many days together averaged from seventy-five to one hundred and fifty dollars.

"Although this is not universal, yet the general average is so well settled that when a man with his pan or basket does not easily gather thirty to forty dollars in a day he moves to another place; so that including the time spent in moving from place to place and in looking for better 'diggings,' we are of the opinion that we may safely set down an ounce of pure gold (or sixteen dollars) per day to the man. Supposing there are four thousand persons at work they will add to the aggregate wealth of the territory about four thousand ounces, or sixty thousand dollars a day."

Other letters from the Pacific, state that some fifteen millions worth of gold has been gathered.

One says that at the time of writing there were seventeen vessels lying in the harbor of San Francisco, their crews having deserted and gone to the gold region. The excitement along the whole coast was said to be great and was extending.

THE SMALL POX.

We have the Small Pox in our city. We are requested to announce it, and we do so for the benefit of all concerned. We have it, and why should we not, being as we are in a city. New York has had it any day—hour—or minute, for the past thirty years, and we, a sister city, have it now.

Our Board of Health have it—no, have at it—all the time. The Board writes a letter, the Clerk of the Board writes a letter, and the President of the Board writes a letter. They announce it, they pronounce it, they denounce it, and—we have the Small Pox.

It is true that when other cities have it, they do not make quite so much of a fuss about it, nor write a leash (that is the sportsman's term for three) of letters from Clerk, President and Board, separate, collectively, unitedly, but then being older perhaps they don't care about making so much noise in the world, and have other "fish to fry" that prevent their thus spending their time. Burlington is not a city, and perhaps had no right to the small pox, but she had it, made no fuss about it, and it went out without troubling more than one or two persons in the place.

Well, we have got the small pox, and it has made more noise than anything except the fire and incendiary attempts which were rather alarming indeed, but they are forgotten in the new excitement, and the yellow quarantine flag has usurped the place of the red flag of the incendiary. The publication of the letters add to the talk, and we hear of little else.

Our city officers have done their duty well in regard to this disease. They have taken the proper means to prevent its spreading, and they have made the city safe from any real danger. All we object to is the publication of letters calculated to alarm people abroad, and prevent their coming among us. We do not wish it to be unknown that the disease does exist, but we wish it also known that there is no danger to those who come among us, and we think the letters will spread unnecessary alarm. We can assure the public that all necessary precautions have been taken, and properly taken, that our officers are active, vigilant and men of sense, and in the case of the letters only have acted in our opinion without due discretion. We think the letters may cause needless alarm abroad, and can do no good either there or at home.—Racine Advocate.

☛ This is just what we expected, and have often said. We mean what is said about the Small Pox in Burlington. There have been FOURTEEN CASES of Small Pox in the town of Burlington in the last ten weeks, and it made there full as much excitement as it now does in Racine. The family who brought it in were not only wished hanged, damned, &c., but were threatened with violence for the misfortune of being exposed to a contagious disease while on the way up the lakes. But——they were all Mormons—those that had it. And, with two exceptions, they never had any medical attendance. None died, and none were in the slightest danger of dying, except a few that did not have it. Indeed, in some instances, those that were thoroughly broke out kept about their work, and others would but for the danger of infecting others, or producing needless alarm. The only remedy used was that prescribed by that ancient physician, and found in a book often seen, sometimes read, and believed by a very few. James v. 14. If our sectarian readers should read it in the book they doubtless would think it had some hidden meaning; meant anything but what it said. So we will put it in a "newspaper," that they may know what it means:—"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord."

Bunner, of the Advocate, will doubtless laugh when he reads this. But if he will take the least pains when he is out to Burlington, he can learn to his own satisfaction that what we have stated is simple fact. When the disease first appeared among us the prophet endeavored to quiet the alarm naturally felt on the subject, and assured the public that the disease would pass by so lightly that in one year the same men who had been frightened out of all good sense would deny that the disease had ever been here. Already the Advocate has got our fourteen down to two. If two had died of it, they would have been multiplied to twenty. By the way, it was very kind in him of the Advocate to locate the Small Pox in Burlington instead of Voree. We thank him for the favor. As the cases were about as near one place as the other, and were all among Mormons, we expected new articles of impeachment to be framed against us on the occasion. The former conductor of that paper abused us like wet dogs for a less offence, and his neighbor of the Whig called us hard names because we would not contract with him for a job at more than twice the price other printers asked for the same work. Very pretty.

SAMPLE OF AN ELDER.

We just witnessed such a sample of a minister of the word and power of God, such as is seldom seen. God grant us more such. Elder James Blakeslee, who has been a preacher sixteen years, proclaimed the gospel in twelve States, the Canadas, Great Britain, and the islands of the sea, and has baptized 1,000 converts, just came into our office with a coat on which beat Joseph's coat of many colors. It was very warm, very comfortable indeed, but no man could tell what kind of cloth it was made of. It was literally patched with twenty-three different kinds of cloth, and scarcely two of the same color. Never did we see a patch-work quilt that matched it.

And this man, with talent of a high order, and enterprise sufficient for anything, is most happily engaged in the great work of establishing equality among all the saints, and bringing about a new and better order of things among men; perfectly content with a little deficiency of the luxuries of life; rather proud than ashamed of an old garment well patched, where all are alike. This will do well enough for a man of real talent, but a hair brained fool must have good fashionable clothes or he cannot pass muster in society. God send us more men like brother Blakeslee, who can work, preach, debate and grow fat, and never fear a patched coat. Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth.

From the Cincinnati Gazette.

CHOLERA—APPROXIMATE CAUSE—A LAW BY WHICH IT IS GOVERNED—A PROPHYLACTIC.

Being neither Pathologist nor Geologist, I undertake with much diffidence to lay before the public a Theory on the subject of the Asiatic Cholera, which originated with me sixteen years since, and then struck me very forcibly as being well founded; and although it varies so widely from the diverse theories of those distinguished men, both of this country and Europe, who have written on the subject, I feel constrained from recent investigation to believe that there is no longer a reasonable doubt of its being well grounded: therefore, in the hope that it may prove the means of saving many from the pangs of that fell destroyer, I submit the following facts and observations:—

When the cholera swept over the Union in 1832–3, it passed around West Tennessee, (where I then resided,) and fell with extreme violence on Middle Tennessee: being aware (by experience) of the great difference in the properties of the waters of the two districts—that of the former being free of all calcareous or magnesian elements, that of the latter strongly impregnated with one or both of them—I was led to believe that those carbonized minerals must have something to do with giving activity to the miasm—or whatever it may be called—of this malignant epidemic;—subsequent investigation has confirmed, as I hope, the truth of the theory, and the following facts, in addition to the foregoing, may be adduced in support of it.

The seaboard of the States of North and South Carolina, and I believe Georgia and Florida, were exempt from cholera, except a few cases in seaports, so far as I can learn: this extensive district comprises a tertiary sand and alluvial region of nearly a thousand miles in extent, embracing the greatest extent of insalubrious country in the Union; but no calcareous water is used there, and if there be any it must be in the rivers having their sources in the upper country.

Huntsville, Ala., was not visited by the epidemic, being based upon sandstone; while it fell with dreadful severity on Fayetville, Pulaski and other places situated on the Blue Limestone (Lower Silurian.) [See Christy's Geological Map.]

"All the places in Middle Tennessee where the Cholera did prevail, have water impregnated with lime." [Letter from Doctor Troost.]

It prevailed here—Cincinnati—and over the lower silurian formations generally, but was arrested in its progress at the sandstone region, near the Scioto river; it was not nearly as fatal at this city as it was at Lexington, Ky., attributable to the fact that at the latter place there is no supply of river water, and the properties of their well water probably differ from that of Cincinnati; the former city being based on a lower portion of the lower silurian, raised at that place to the surface, [Christy's Geol.,] and perhaps affecting the quality of the water injuriously. It was observed here during the prevalence of the cholera in 1832 that the cases generally occurred in that part of the city supplied with calcareous water from wells—the river water much resembles rain water in its elements, except when at a very low stage, it is then quite calcareous.

At Emmetsburg, Md., a secondary sandstone region, there was no cholera. At West point, a granite formation, there was no cholera; it passed around that granitic region, but attacked with great malignity the calcareous region which commences a few miles above, (north,) in the vicinity of Newburg. At Nantucket, tertiary sand, there was no cholera.

"New York is situated over primary rocks—gneiss; the well water was used in 1832, and is believed (much of it) to be quite calcareous, in addition to other bad qualities;" [Dr. C. T. Jackson;] which will account for the prevalence of cholera there, although it was far from assuming its usual malignant form. Dr. Ware says, [Boston Med. Mag. Vol. 1.] "nearly all the subjects complained of cramps, or had been afflicted when first seized; still very few were seen laboring under them so severely as to occasion any marked external demonstration of suffering. In nothing did the cholera in New York differ more from the most common description, than in the absence of any indications of great distress."

Boston has a granitic foundation; few cases of cholera occurred there. "In a fortnight after its appearance, it had numbered but four victims, and but about forty cases altogether occurred." [Boston Med. Mag. Vol. 1.] An epidemic so malignant must be expected to take effect, in a degree, in seaports, by importation from ports where it prevails, and where calcareous water is used, the same being provided for ships use; it is then reduced to mere chlorine; thus, at the State Prison, near Boston, out of one hundred and eighteen cases, not one death occurred! [Encyc. Amer.] "It swept the secondary and tertiary districts of this country, as well as those of Europe, and it passed around the Alps as it did around the primary districts of New England generally, without producing more than a mere cholera tendency, very few fatal cases occurring here (Boston) or in any part of New England." [Extract of a letter from Dr. C. T. Jackson to the writer, Feb. 29, 1818.]

The river St. Lawrence runs over calcareous rock, and there were more deaths there than in New York, although it numbered about one-tenth of the population.

The disease does not attack every calcareous region, for it is a remarkable fact that it passed around all the Cliff Limestone districts that I have heard from; thus at Springfield, (75 miles north,) and Xenia, (55 miles north,) both on the Cliff Limestone, there was no cholera; while at Lebanon, (20 miles south of Xenia,) on the Blue Limestone, it raged with extreme violence. Water passing through different strata of the Cliff Limestone, will be found to vary greatly in its properties; and it may, therefore, in some regions, prove an active agent in producing this disease. The elements of the Silurians likewise vary considerably. The deleterious effects of the carbonates of lime and magnesia may be neutralized by other mineral substances held in solution in the water passing through the Cliff formation. This is a question for medical men to investigate and determine.

Several families in this city during the prevalence of the epidemic in 1832–3, boiled all the water that they used; whereby the carbonates of lime and magnesia (perhaps other matter) were precipitated. Not a member of either of those families was attacked by cholera. It was observed in Paris and London, that no person who were in the habitual use of beer died of the cholera; the brewing process precipitated the carbonates.

It is said that doses of magnesia were usually attended with fatal results in this disease, and at New Orleans "a dose of magnesia is death," was a common remark in 1832.

Many persons are strongly predisposed, to cholera morbus and diarrhœa; such will consult their safety by removing, in time, to a granitic or sandstone region. We hear of cases both here and elsewhere of cholera morbus almost as malignant as cholera asphyxia, although that much dreaded epidemic has not yet reached the western portion of Europe.

It has been remarked that New Orleans is situated on alluvion, and no limestone within hundreds of miles; yet the cholera attacked that city with severity; in answer to which it may be said, that the water of the Mississippi is calcareous; the city is supplied with river water. Travelers going from regions of primary or sandy formations, usually find their bowels affected by Mississippi water.

From the Cincinnati Gazette.

CHOLERA—APPROXIMATE CAUSE—A LAW BY WHICH IT IS GOVERNED—A PROPHYLACTIC.

Being neither Pathologist nor Geologist, I undertake with much diffidence to lay before the public a Theory on the subject of the Asiatic Cholera, which originated with me sixteen years since, and then struck me very forcibly as being well founded; and although it varies so widely from the diverse theories of those distinguished men, both of this country and Europe, who have written on the subject, I feel constrained from recent investigation to believe that there is no longer a reasonable doubt of its being well grounded: therefore, in the hope that it may prove the means of saving many from the pangs of that fell destroyer, I submit the following facts and observations:—

When the cholera swept over the Union in 1832–3, it passed around West Tennessee, (where I then resided,) and fell with extreme violence on Middle Tennessee: being aware (by experience) of the great difference in the properties of the waters of the two districts—that of the former being free of all calcareous or magnesian elements, that of the latter strongly impregnated with one or both of them—I was led to believe that those carbonized minerals must have something to do with giving activity to the miasm—or whatever it may be called—of this malignant epidemic;—subsequent investigation has confirmed, as I hope, the truth of the theory, and the following facts, in addition to the foregoing, may be adduced in support of it.

The seaboard of the States of North and South Carolina, and I believe Georgia and Florida, were exempt from cholera, except a few cases in seaports, so far as I can learn: this extensive district comprises a tertiary sand and alluvial region of nearly a thousand miles in extent, embracing the greatest extent of insalubrious country in the Union; but no calcareous water is used there, and if there be any it must be in the rivers having their sources in the upper country.

Huntsville, Ala., was not visited by the epidemic, being based upon sandstone; while it fell with dreadful severity on Fayetville, Pulaski and other places situated on the Blue Limestone (Lower Silurian.) [See Christy's Geological Map.]

"All the places in Middle Tennessee where the Cholera did prevail, have water impregnated with lime." [Letter from Doctor Troost.]

It prevailed here—Cincinnati—and over the lower silurian formations generally, but was arrested in its progress at the sandstone region, near the Scioto river; it was not nearly as fatal at this city as it was at Lexington, Ky., attributable to the fact that at the latter place there is no supply of river water, and the properties of their well water probably differ from that of Cincinnati; the former city being based on a lower portion of the lower silurian, raised at that place to the surface, [Christy's Geol.,] and perhaps affecting the quality of the water injuriously. It was observed here during the prevalence of the cholera in 1832 that the cases generally occurred in that part of the city supplied with calcareous water from wells—the river water much resembles rain water in its elements, except when at a very low stage, it is then quite calcareous.

At Emmetsburg, Md., a secondary sandstone region, there was no cholera. At West point, a granite formation, there was no cholera; it passed around that granitic region, but attacked with great malignity the calcareous region which commences a few miles above, (north,) in the vicinity of Newburg. At Nantucket, tertiary sand, there was no cholera.

"New York is situated over primary rocks—gneiss; the well water was used in 1832, and is believed (much of it) to be quite calcareous, in addition to other bad qualities;" [Dr. C. T. Jackson;] which will account for the prevalence of cholera there, although it was far from assuming its usual malignant form. Dr. Ware says, [Boston Med. Mag. Vol. 1.] "nearly all the subjects complained of cramps, or had been afflicted when first seized; still very few were seen laboring under them so severely as to occasion any marked external demonstration of suffering. In nothing did the cholera in New York differ more from the most common description, than in the absence of any indications of great distress."

Boston has a granitic foundation; few cases of cholera occurred there. "In a fortnight after its appearance, it had numbered but four victims, and but about forty cases altogether occurred." [Boston Med. Mag. Vol. 1.] An epidemic so malignant must be expected to take effect, in a degree, in seaports, by importation from ports where it prevails, and where calcareous water is used, the same being provided for ships use; it is then reduced to mere chlorine; thus, at the State Prison, near Boston, out of one hundred and eighteen cases, not one death occurred! [Encyc. Amer.] "It swept the secondary and tertiary districts of this country, as well as those of Europe, and it passed around the Alps as it did around the primary districts of New England generally, without producing more than a mere cholera tendency, very few fatal cases occurring here (Boston) or in any part of New England." [Extract of a letter from Dr. C. T. Jackson to the writer, Feb. 29, 1848.]

The river St. Lawrence runs over calcareous rock, and there were more deaths there than in New York, although it numbered about one-tenth of the population.

The disease does not attack every calcareous region, for it is a remarkable fact that it passed around all the Cliff Limestone districts that I have heard from; thus at Springfield, (75 miles north,) and Xenia, (55 miles north,) both on the Cliff Limestone, there was no cholera; while at Lebanon, (20 miles south of Xenia,) on the Blue Limestone, it raged with extreme violence. Water passing through different strata of the Cliff Limestone, will be found to vary greatly in its properties; and it may, therefore, in some regions, prove an active agent in producing this disease. The elements of the Silurians likewise vary considerably. The deleterious effects of the carbonates of lime and magnesia may be neutralized by other mineral substances held in solution in the water passing through the Cliff formation. This is a question for medical men to investigate and determine.

Several families in this city during the prevalence of the epidemic in 1832–3, boiled all the water that they used; whereby the carbonates of lime and magnesia (perhaps other matter) were precipitated. Not a member of either of those families was attacked by cholera. It was observed in Paris and London, that no person who were in the habitual use of beer died of the cholera; the brewing process precipitated the carbonates.

It is said that doses of magnesia were usually attended with fatal results in this disease, and at New Orleans "a dose of magnesia is death," was a common remark in 1832.

Many persons are strongly predisposed to cholera morbus and diarrhœa; such will consult their safety by removing, in time, to a granitic or sandstone region. We hear of cases both here and elsewhere of cholera morbus almost as malignant as cholera asphyxia, although that much dreaded epidemic has not yet reached the western portion of Europe.

It has been remarked that New Orleans is situated on alluvion, and no limestone within hundreds of miles; yet the cholera attacked that city with severity; in answer to which it may be said, that the water of the Mississippi is calcareous; the city is supplied with river water. Travelers going from regions of primary or sandy formations, usually find their bowels affected by Mississippi water.

The Delta of the Nile and that of the former river, much resemble each other in some respects; both passing over a great extent of alluvial country before they reach the sea. The water of the Nile is probably highly calcareous, as the mud of that river is found on analysis, to consist of one-half argillaceous earth; one-fourth carbonate of lime; one-tenth carbon, besides silicia, oxide of iron, and carbonate of magnesia.

Egypt is supposed to have lost 150,000 inhabitants by the cholera in 1831. I have not been able to obtain an analysis of the waters of either of those great rivers.

These facts (numerous others might be adduced) show that there is something in calcareous water imparting activity to the malignant principle inherent in epidemic cholera, and which every one inspires during its prevalence around them; it is therefore a proximate cause of that disease.

I have not yet found an instance of its prevailing over the primary or arenaceous formations—where no calcareous water was used—except in the modified degree before alluded to, and that it will not prevail over such regions may be assumed as a law by which it is governed.

The use of water free from all mineral impurities was, no doubt, the prophylactic which changed the course of the destroyer, in the primary and arenaceous regions all over the Union, and saved those who dwelt therein from disease and death. JOHN LEA.

From the Church of England Magazine.

LAURA BRIDGMAN AND HER BARREL OF FLOUR.

We wonder if any of our young friends have not heard or read something of this interesting American girl? If there are any of our young readers to whom the story of Laura Bridgman is unknown, we would merely say, that she is a young girl, in the Institution of the blind, in Boston, Mass., United States of America, deaf, dumb and blind. Just think of that condition for a moment. Every avenue to her mind is cut off except the sense of feeling. We believe that her sense of smelling is impaired so as to render her insensible to the sweet breath of flowers. Poor girl, had she been born among the heathen she would have been left to perish as a worthless thing, to whom life was of no value. But there were those who saw in her a candidate for immortal glory, a being that could be made to sing, and hear the angels sing in Heaven, and see and taste all the beatitudes enjoyed there by spirits that never were pent in clayed tarbernacles as windowless as hers. And they went to work and educated that single sense of feeling to the nicest susceptibilities. And they made a wooden alphabet, wooden model of ideas of all that had been, or shall be in the world. And these she touched most thoughtfully, as if listening for the music of a new existence: and wonderful! her fingers ends became endowed with faculties almost miraculous, and filled her mind with astonishing revelations of things present past and to come. Her little, white, whispering, loving, listening fingers touched the records of the olden years, beyond the flood, till they felt the branches of the forbidden tree, and the looks of murdered Abel, and the surges that beat against Noah's helmless ark; and the cradle of the Hebrew baby in the bulrushes, and the tremulous base of Sinai, and David's harp, and the face of the infant Emanuel in the manger, and the nails that fastened him to the cross, and their deep prints, that unbelieving Thomas felt after the resurrection; and with his faith, to shorter evidence, she had cried in the voiceless language of her heart, "My Lord! and my God!" How she plied at morning, noon and night, those fingers, wonderful fingers! It seemed that the very finger of God had touched them with miraculous susceptibilities of fellowship with the spirit world and that around her. She put them upon the face of his written word, and felt them thrilled to her heart with the pulsation of great thoughts of love to man. And then she felt, for others' woes.

Poor child! God bless her richly. She reached her short arms to feel after some less happy than she in the condition of this life! some whose fingers' end had not reached such sweet paragraphs of Heaven's mercy as hers had done; some who had not seen, heard or felt what her dumb, silent, deaf fingers have brought into her heart of joy, hope and love. Think of that ye young eyes and ears that daily feast upon the beauty and melody of this outer world.—Within the atmosphere of her quick sensibilities are felt the presence of those whose cup was full of affliction. She put her fingers, with her throbbing sympathies, upon the lean, bloodless faces of the famishing children of Ireland, and her sightless eyes filed with the tears that the blind may shed for griefs they cannot see. And she plied the needle with these fingers, and quickened their industry by placing them upon the slow, sickly pulse of want that wasted her kind at noonday across the ocean. Days and nights too—for days and nights were alike to her wakeful sympathies—and for weeks she wrought on with her needle. And then the embroidery of those fingers was sold to the merchants; would it had been sold to England's queen, to be worn by the young princesses on days of state—it was sold, and its purchase-price a barrel of flour instead of a country's harvest which it was well worth. And that barrel of flour was stowed away among the thousands that freighted the Jamestown on her recent mission of brotherly love to Ireland. That barrel of flour, would that it might be to all the children of want in Ireland what the barrel of meal was to the household of her who entertained the prophet of old. Would at least that those whom it supplies with bread, might know what fingers wrought for their sustenance.

Laura Bridgman and her barrel of flour should teach the world a lesson worth the woes of one year's famine. Let all the children of England and America learn that lesson by heart, and Ireland and the whole family of mankind will be the better for its visitation of want.

☞ Upon examination, we are surprised at the number of German residents in New York. A careful estimate would set them down as at least one-sixth of our city population, and at present, from the revolutionary condition of Germany, they are accumulating among us more rapidly than any other class of foreigners. There is not a trade, profession or avocation in which they are not largely represented, and for their industry, intelligence and sobriety, they are not surpassed by any class of our citizens.

Industry and economy, two of the mainsprings of success, are intuitive to the German race, while their intelligence and philosophic character are proverbial. But few Germans seek the shores of the New World without some means, immediately to invest in trade, and true to their habits in the fatherland, they wisely seek as a general thing, a home and independence in the country. Those who remain in our cities are principally mechanics and artizans, or persons with sufficient means to employ safely in trade. It is seldom we hear of a German failing in business, they are too cautious and prudent in starting, and too persevering in the pursuit of business to stop short of competence.—N. Y. Sun.

☞ We discover by a late number of the Advent Herald that the Millerites are accusing each other of getting SPIRITUAL WIVES No, not each other, but pretenders, apostates or impostors. We have not the least doubt of it. Man, unchanged by the gospel, is much the same every where. All the other sects would be as the same if they knew enough about the scriptures to thus pervert them. The more a man knows of Godliness, the worse he acts when he turns to serve the Devil.

The Delta of the Nile and that of the former river, much resemble each other in some respects; both passing over a great extent of alluvial country before they reach the sea. The water of the Nile is probably highly calcareous, as the mud of that river is found on analysis, to consist of—one-half argillaceous earth; one-fourth carbonate of lime; one-tenth carbon, besides silicia, oxide of iron, and carbonate of magnesia.

Egypt is supposed to have lost 150.000 inhabitants by the cholera in 1831. I have not been able to obtain an analysis of the waters of either of those great rivers.

These facts (numerous others might be adduced) show that there is something in calcareous water imparting activity to the malignant principle inherent in epidemic cholera, and which every one inspires during its prevalence around them; it is therefore a proximate cause of that disease.

I have not yet found an instance of its prevailing over the primary or arenaceous formations—where no calcareous water was used—except in the modified degree before alluded to, and that it will not prevail over such regions may be assumed as a law by which it is governed.

The use of water free from all mineral impurities was, no doubt, the prophylactic which changed the course of the destroyer, in the primary and arenaceous regions all over the Union, and saved those who dwelt therein from disease and death. JOHN LEA.

From the Church of England Magazine.

LAURA BRIDGMAN AND HER BARREL OF FLOUR.

We wonder if any of our young friends have not heard or read something of this interesting American girl? If there are any of our young readers to whom the story of Laura Bridgman is unknown, we would merely say, that she is a young girl, in the Institution of the blind, in Boston, Mass., United States of America, deaf, dumb and blind. Just think of that condition for a moment. Every avenue to her mind is cut off except the sense of feeling. We believe that her sense of smelling is impaired so as to render her insensible to the sweet breath of flowers. Poor girl, had she been born among the heathen she would have been left to perish as a worthless thing, to whom life was of no value. But there were those who saw in her a candidate for immortal glory, a being that could be made to sing, and hear the angels sing in Heaven, and see and taste all the beatitudes enjoyed there by spirits that never were pent in clayed tarbernacles as windowless as hers. And they went to work and educated that single sense of feeling to the nicest susceptibilities. And they made a wooden alphabet, wooden model of ideas of all that had been, or shall be in the world. And these she touched most thoughtfully, as if listening for the music of a new existence: and wonderful! her fingers ends became endowed with faculties almost miraculous, and filled her mind with astonishing revelations of things present past and to come. Her little, white, whispering, loving, listening fingers touched the records of the olden years, beyond the flood, till they felt the branches of the forbidden tree, and the looks of murdered Abel, and the surges that beat against Noah's helmless ark; and the cradle of the Hebrew baby in the bulrushes, and the tremulous base of Sinai, and David's harp, and the face of the infant Emanuel in the manger, and the nails that fastened him to the cross, and their deep prints, that unbelieving Thomas felt after the resurrection; and with his faith, to shorter evidence, she had cried in the voiceless language of her heart, "My Lord! and my God!" How she plied at morning, noon and night, those fingers, wonderful fingers! It seemed that the very finger of God had touched them with miraculous susceptibilities of fellowship with the spirit world and that around her. She put them upon the face of his written word, and felt them thrilled to her heart with the pulsation of great thoughts of love to man. And then she felt for others' woes.

Poor child! God bless her richly. She reached her short arms to feel after some less happy than she in the condition of this life! some whose fingers' end had not reached such sweet paragraphs of Heaven's mercy as hers had done; some who had not seen, heard or felt what her dumb, silent, deaf fingers have brought into her heart of joy, hope and love. Think of that ye young eyes and ears that daily feast upon the beauty and melody of this outer world.—Within the atmosphere of her quick sensibilities are felt the presence of those whose cup was full of affliction. She put her fingers, with her throbbing sympathies, upon the lean, bloodless faces of the famishing children of Ireland, and her sightless eyes filled with the tears that the blind may shed for griefs they cannot see. And she plied the needle with these fingers, and quickened their industry by placing them upon the slow, sickly pulse of want that wasted her kind at noonday across the ocean. Days and nights too—for days and nights were alike to her wakeful sympathies—and for weeks she wrought on with her needle. And then the embroidery of those fingers was sold to the merchants; would it had been sold to England's queen, to be worn by the young princesses on days of state—it was sold, and its purchase-price a barrel of flour instead of a country's harvest which it was well worth. And that barrel of flour was stowed away among the thousands that freighted the Jamestown on her recent mission of brotherly love to Ireland. That barrel of flour, would that it might be to all the children of want in Ireland what the barrel of meal was to the household of her who entertained the prophet of old. Would at least that those whom it supplies with bread, might know what fingers wrought for their sustenance.

Laura Bridgman and her barrel of flour should teach the world a lesson worth the woes of one year's famine. Let all the children of England and America learn that lesson by heart, and Ireland and the whole family of mankind will be the better for its visitation of want.

☞ Upon examination, we are surprised at the number of German residents in New York. A careful estimate would set them down as at least one-sixth of our city population, and at present, from the revolutionary condition of Germany, they are accumulating among us more rapidly than any other class of foreigners. There is not a trade, profession or avocation in which they are not largely represented, and for their industry, intelligence and sobriety, they are not surpassed by any class of our citizens.

Industry and economy, two of the main-springs of success, are intuitive to the German race, while their intelligence and philosophic character are proverbial. But few Germans seek the shores of the New World without some means, immediately to invest in trade, and true to their habits in the fatherland, they wisely seek as a general thing, a home and independence in the country. Those who remain in our cities are principally mechanics and artizans, or persons with sufficient means to employ safely in trade. It is seldom we hear of a German failing in business, they are too cautious and prudent in starting, and too persevering in the pursuit of business to stop short of competence.—N. Y. Sun.

☞ We discover by a late number of the Advent Herald that the Millerites are accusing each other of getting SPIRITUAL WIVES No, not each other, but pretenders, apostates or impostors. We have not the least doubt of it Man, unchanged by the gospel, is much the same every where. All the other sects would be at the same if they knew enough about the scriptures to thus pervert them. The more a man knows of Godliness, the worse he acts when he turns to serve the Devil.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO THE PRINTER OF THE GOSPEL HERALD.

Ashtabula, Ohio, Nov. 19th, 1848.

MR. COOPER,—SIR:— * * * * I think that you will some day wake up to an understanding of your situation, for I think that you have more mind than to remain blind forever.—For your benefit I will give you a short history of Mormonism. I will commence with the golden Bible. It was written in Erie, Pa., as a romance with regard to the ten lost tribes of Israel. From Erie it was sent to Pittsburgh in manuscript to be printed, where Rigdon, the great Apostle of "Mormonism," was at work as a journeyman printer, who stole the manuscript, and with "Jo Smith" commenced one of the greatest systems of fraud and humbug ever got up. Jo Smith learned the manuscript off by heart, and then got a piece of glass and called it the philosopher's stone, with which he would read from the plates, which he found when the Devil kicked him six feet on end. And as for Jo Smith, he was known to be one of the greatest villains in the western part of the State of New York.

As I was saying, he read them to a gaping crowd, and every word was taken down as an oracle from God. Yes, the offspring of the imagination of a man, who died before his work could be printed, was read as the word of God! What profanity! And call you this the only true and legal order of priesthood? From whence do they derive their order? From Jo Smith, I suppose. But ambition and fanaticism will carry some men a great ways. They want to be called Apostle, and want to mislead ignorant and foolish people, and especially when they have got money. That is what they want. And among them is that great Apostle Strang. I will not call him a fool, for he is not one. But his talents ought to be put to a better use than carrying on a system of fraud and deception, excelled only by Mohammed. * * JOHN GIFFORD.

☞ The foregoing letter, written to the printer of the Herald by an old acquaintance, we publish just as a set off to the assertions of Wm. Smith. The only difference we can see in them is that Mr. Gifford probably supposes what he says is true, just as some future fool who repeats Wm.'s tales may think them true. The story of Joseph getting a piece of glass and calling it the PHILOSOPHER'S STONE is doubtless an attempt at the use of the Urim and Thummim. All that is said of the dead man's manuscript, is probably a vague reiteration of the Spaulding story. Mr. Gifford very likely does not know that Sidney Rigdon never was a printer.—Nor that at the time the Spaulding manuscript was in Pittsburgh, Rigdon was a boy on his father's farm. We presume he would not like to know any such fact. Otherwise we would send him the evidence to his heart's content.

By the way, "Jo SMITH" must have been full as smart to learn the whole Book of Mormon by heart as Strang was in endeavoring to make converts by fraudulent miracles, and at the same time teaching that all miracles were cheats. Pray, who would be converted by a miracle, if the doer of it said it was a fraud? And why should a "gaping crowd" think a man's words were an oracle from God, merely because he looked in a glass when he spoke them? Strange that no man can tell a lie, but he sticks up a signboard to show its falsity. We are pleased to see prophet Strang ranked with the prophets, even in calumny, and are not a whit displeased that Mr. Gifford, after repeating stale falsehoods on Joseph, should call him hard names also. If, like the assembly at Ottawa, Wm.'s eastern audiences should require him to begin his Mormon expose with "Old Jo" or return the money, they doubtless could hear something of more prophets than one. However this may be, all who know him know that, rather than fail of a favorite undertaking, he would justify any iniquity under Joseph's cloak.

CALIFORNIA GOLD.

The late discovered gold mines of California have become the lion of the newspaper press; almost the only subject of remark, and a perfect rage among men. There is scarcely a city or large town in the country which is not fitting out a party to go around cape Horn; white adventurers are gathering up in all the west and preparing to assemble early in the spring on the western borders of Missouri and Arkansas, to cross over the mountains, all bound for the gold region. It is not at all improbable that next August 100,000 adventurers may pour themselves into this new El Dorado of the new world.

We have not the slightest doubt of the existence and the productiveness of the mines. We are able to credit the most extravagant tales yet told on the subject, except that which alledges that the gold extends through to the Salt Valley. And the only reason why we do not credit that, is, that it comes from San Francisco, and is not mentioned in the late accounts direct from the Valley.

But this abundance of gold we look upon as a national misfortune. All countries producing precious metals in abundance are poor.—There are no mines in Mexico which produce as much real profit to the possessors, as the salt springs in New York do. All the gold annually dug in all Mexico is of less value than the coal mined in Pennsylvania in half that time. Indeed it is a matter of serious doubt whether California will ever bear as large a population, or as happy a community as it would if the gold was not there. More will rush in immediately of wild adventurers, and again the poor Indian will cry for a land where Christians do not thirst for gold. Wantonness, debauchery, avarice and violence will be the order of the day in this much desired region. Its population will not be citizens having an interest in society and good government, but adventurers who go there to make a fortune and return. Some will return with the treasure they have sought for. More will perish there in the vain struggle.

Moreover, if the gold turns out as abundant as it is reported, it will have a visible influence on the value of the precious metals.—It has been estimated that $15,000,000 have already been obtained. If this be true, under favorable management the mines ought to produce from 50 to $100,000,000 annually. Such an influx of bullion would diminish the value of money one-half. In other words, the dollar continuing of the same weight and fineness will buy but half as much. The nominal value of money would continue the same, but its real value would be diminished by half. Of other articles the nominal value would be greatly increased, while the real value would remain unchanged. This would create a feverish excitement in business, and universal speculation. No class of men would receive any real benefit from it except those who own property, for which they are in debt. They will find the nominal value of their property increased, while the amount of the debt remains unchanged. Consequently less property will pay it. These mines are some six hundred miles beyond the Brighamite settlements in Salt Valley. Naturally they would have the effect to attract many from there. It is not improbable however that many may be induced to go to the Valley in search of gold. We shall see. Certain it is that emigration, crime and misery will pass rapidly over the mountains. If slavery can by any means be extended to California, the cup of her abominations will soon be full.

THE STATE OF AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.

To whatever country we turn our regards, we are at once convinced that the liberty of the press, inscribed on the banner of the late revolutions, finds itself in a state of subjection and servility un-

EXTRACT OF A LETTER TO THE PRINTER OF THE GOSPEL HERALD.

Ashtabula, Ohio, Nov. 19th, 1848.

MR. COOPER,—SIR:— * * * * I think that you will some day wake up to an understanding of your situation, for I think that you have more mind than to remain blind forever.—For your benefit I will give you a short history of Mormonism. I will commence with the golden Bible. It was written in Erie, Pa., as a romance with regard to the ten lost tribes of Israel. From Erie it was sent to Pittsburgh in manuscript to be printed, where Rigdon, the great Apostle of "Mormonism," was at work as a journeyman printer, who stole the manuscript, and with "Jo Smith" commenced one of the greatest systems of fraud and humbug ever got up. Jo Smith learned the manuscript off by heart, and then got a piece of glass and called it the philosopher's stone, with which he would read from the plates, which he found when the Devil kicked him six feet on end. And as for Jo Smith, he was known to be one of the greatest villains in the western part of the State of New York.

As I was saying, he read them to a gaping crowd, and every word was taken down as an oracle from God. Yes, the offspring of the imagination of a man, who died before his work could be printed, was read as the word of God! What profanity! And call you this the only true and legal order of priesthood? From whence do they derive their order? From Jo Smith, I suppose. But ambition and fanaticism will carry some men a great ways. They want to be called Apostle, and want to mislead ignorant and foolish people, and especially when they have got money. That is what they want. And among them is that great Apostle Strang. I will not call him a fool, for he is not one. But his talents ought to be put to a better use than carrying on a system of fraud and deception, excelled only by Mohammed. * * JOHN GIFFORD.

☛ The foregoing letter, written to the printer of the Herald by an old acquaintance, we publish just as a set off to the assertions of Wm. Smith. The only difference we can see in them is that Mr. Gifford probably supposes what he says is true, just as some future fool who repeats Wm.'s tales may think them true. The story of Joseph getting a piece of glass and calling it the PHILOSOPHER'S STONE is doubtless an attempt at the use of the Urim and Thummim. All that is said of the dead man's manuscript, is probably a vague reiteration of the Spaulding story. Mr. Gifford very likely does not know that Sidney Rigdon never was a printer.—Nor that at the time the Spaulding manuscript was in Pittsburgh, Rigdon was a boy on his father's farm. We presume he would not like to know any such fact. Otherwise we would send him the evidence to his heart's content.

By the way, "JO SMITH" must have been full as smart to learn the whole Book of Mormon by heart as Strang was in endeavoring to make converts by fraudulent miracles, and at the same time teaching that all miracles were cheats. Pray, who would be converted by a miracle, if the doer of it said it was a fraud? And why should a "gaping crowd" think a man's words were an oracle from God, merely because he looked in a glass when he spoke them? Strange that no man can tell a lie, but he sticks up a signboard to show its falsity. We are pleased to see prophet Strang ranked with the prophets, even in calumny, and are not a whit displeased that Mr. Gifford, after repeating stale falsehoods on Joseph, should call him hard names also. If, like the assembly at Ottawa, Wm.'s eastern audiences should require him to begin his Mormon expose with "Old Jo" or return the money, they doubtless could hear something of more prophets than one. However this may be, all who know him know that, rather than fail of a favorite undertaking, he would justify any iniquity under Joseph's cloak.

CALIFORNIA GOLD.

The late discovered gold mines of California have become the lion of the newspaper press; almost the only subject of remark, and a perfect rage among men. There is scarcely a city or large town in the country which is not fitting out a party to go around cape Horn: white adventurers are gathering up in all the west and preparing to assemble early in the spring on the western borders of Missouri and Arkansas, to cross over the mountains, all bound for the gold region. It is not at all improbable that next August 100,000 adventurers may pour themselves into this new El Dorado of the new world.

We have not the slightest doubt of the existence and the productiveness of the mines. We are able to credit the most extravagant tales yet told on the subject, except that which alledges that the gold extends through to the Salt Valley. And the only reason why we do not credit that, is, that it comes from San Francisco, and is not mentioned in the late accounts direct from the Valley.

But this abundance of gold we look upon as a national misfortune. All countries producing precious metals in abundance are poor.—There are no mines in Mexico which produce as much real profit to the possessors, as the salt springs in New York do. All the gold annually dug in all Mexico is of less value than the coal mined in Pennsylvania in half that time. Indeed it is a matter of serious doubt whether California will ever bear as large a population, or as happy a community as it would if the gold was not there. More will rush in immediately of wild adventurers, and again the poor Indian will cry for a land where Christians do not thirst for gold. Wantonness, debauchery, avarice and violence will be the order of the day in this much desired region. Its population will not be citizens having an interest in society and good government, but adventurers who go there to make a fortune and return. Some will return with the treasure they have sought for. More will perish there in the vain struggle.

Moreover, if the gold turns out as abundant as it is reported, it will have a visible influence on the value of the precious metals.—It has been estimated that $15,000,000 have already been obtained. If this be true, under favorable management the mines ought to produce from 50 to $100,000,000 annually. Such an influx of bullion would diminish the value of money one-half. In other words, the dollar continuing of the same weight and fineness will buy but half as much. The nominal value of money would continue the same, but its real value would be diminished by half. Of other articles the nominal value would be greatly increased, while the real value would remain unchanged. This would create a feverish excitement in business, and universal speculation. No class of men would receive any real benefit from it except those who own property, for which they are in debt. They will find the nominal value of their property increased, while the amount of the debt remains unchanged. Consequently less property will pay it. These mines are some six hundred miles beyond the Brighamite settlements in Salt Valley. Naturally they would have the effect to attract many from there. It is not improbable however that many may be induced to go to the Valley in search of gold. We shall see. Certain it is that emigration, crime and misery will pass rapidly over the mountains. If slavery can by any means be extended to California, the cup of her abominations will soon be full.

THE STATE OF AFFAIRS IN EUROPE.

To whatever country we turn our regards, we are at once convinced that the liberty of the press, inscribed on the banner of the late revolutions, finds itself in a state of subjection and servility unknown even when the censorship was most formidable. The people have taken the law into their own hands without trial or sentence. No matter what the pretext, whether "Jesuitism" or "Re-action," it overthrows and massacres all that offer any resistance to its tyranny. In Switzerland, the heroes of Propagandism waged a war against the press worthy the best days of French terrorism. At Vienna, the sovereign faction of the students commenced by burning the law which abolished the censorship, and have laid a violent hand upon newspaper editors. It is thus that we are condemned to behold one excess giving birth to another. Every one attempts to be free without being able to control himself. Every one wishes to dominate, and cannot cast off the yoke of his own passions, does not know how to respect the rights and the liberties of others. They commence by putting all authority at defiance, and then pretend that the proletaries and the provinces should respect the constitutional throne and the unity of the empire. And what, after all, is the mainspring of their actions? A servile imitation of that party spirit and misguided notions which have characterized the Paris propaganda, whose handiwork is visible in every commotion in Europe. We have seen it send its legions into the duchy of Baden—excite the civilians against the soldiery of Treves and at Mayence; at Munich it did not disdain the services of a Spanish court san; at Frankfort it paid the claqueurs in the church of St. Paul, and excited pillage and murder in the streets and public squares. At Naples, as at Rome and Milan—at Berlin, as at Vienna—everywhere the propaganda fixes the day and the hour, and pulls the strings that move the puppets—always ready to seize upon every fault or act of negligence of a Government, or take advantage of the misery of the masses. Dull-headed students and the scum of political writers give the signal, the enlightened bourgeoise follow them, until the moment arrives when the mob, who have been made use of for the great object, come, with weapons in their hands, to demand pay for their work. The same comedy is played everywhere, the object of which escapes the discernment of the people, until they are startled at the end, towards which they are dragged along. Barricades at Paris, barricades at Vienna and Berlin; general arming at Paris, comprising thieves and assassins, the same at Vienna and Berlin; down with the military at Paris, down with the military at Berlin and Vienna; Democratic journalists and club leaders proclaim the Republic at Paris, the very same occurs at Vienna, Berlin, and Frankfort. How can the people, then, be astonished, if this liberty, equality, fraternity, so loudly proclaimed, should be every where attended with the same results—anarchy at Berlin and at Vienna; political, social and economical bankruptcy on the banks of the Seine, of the Danube, and of the Spree. But wherefore extend the comparison?

Now that this ultra-Radicalism has been successively put down, at Paris, at Frankfort, and at Vienna, the bandage will fall from the eyes of those who ought, long since, to have discerned their real interests, and perceived the precipice on which they were standing. The public is still excited by the events at Vienna. The issue will prove to the authors of these terrible calamities that they have no hope, and they will be made aware that the only liberty worthy of mankind is that liberty which is based on religion, on morality, and on right. These alone can establish union, confidence, and order, and ensure their blessings to the world.

Unhappily, that era seems still far distant, and without daring to be prophets of bad tidings, we still fear that all is not over. Whatever may be the judgment of history on the sanguinary excesses caused by a handful of unprincipled men, they have, at all events, amply avenged Louis Philippe in France, and Metternich in Austria.—London Morning Chronicle.

☞ The following property is exempt from execution on all process issued out of any court in the State of Wisconsin, without regard to the time when the debt was contracted:—

Family Bible, family pictures, school books or library; seat in church and rites of burial; all wearing apparel of debtor and family; beds, bedsteads and bedding for debtor and family; all stoves and appendages for use of debtor and family; $200,00 of additional household furniture; two cows, ten swine, one yoke of oxen and one horse, or in lieu a span of horses, ten sheep and the wool, &c., from the same; necessary food for all this stock for one year, either provided or growing, or both; one wagon, cart or dray, one sleigh, one plough, one drag, and other farming utensils, including tackle for the teams, to the value of fifty dollars; one year's provisions for debtor and family, and fuel for one year; tools and implements or stock in trade of any mechanic, miner or other person, used and kept for the purpose of carrying on his trade or business to $200,00; library of professional man to same amount. There is also exempt on all process on debts contracted after Jan. 1st, 1849, 40 acres agricultural land, with the improvements thereon, or a town lot of one-fourth of an acre, with the improvements thereon, without reference to the value.

This is decidedly liberal. Forty acres of land, with first rate buildings and improvements, teams, utensils, furniture, &c., according to this catalogue, would make any man decidedly well off, and is more than most men are able to have.

☞ The Mormons in California have laid claim to a large portion of the gold territory, and demand thirty per cent. of the ore taken therefrom. An express has been sent to the Salt Lake settlement, where about 10,000 Mormons are located. There is a rumor that equally rich mines have been discovered in that region.—The thirty per cent. demand of the Mormons is expected to lead to trouble.—Wisconsin Argus.

☞ Humbug. We have seen direct official accounts from the Valley down to October, and no mention made of the gold. Nor is there one-fourth that number there.

Mexico.—A letter from Mexico received at Washington, states that January 1st, 1849, is the time fixed on for the rising against the Government of Herrera. The priesthood are said to be associated with the agents of Santa Anna in this undertaking.—Wisconsin Standard.

Is it not Horrible.—There are in London alone, at present, 80,000 mechanics, and 15,000 laborers out of work. Assuming four persons to each family, there would thus be 380,000 people almost in a state of destitution, with trade bad, and very little appearance of its improving during the winter.—Wisconsin Standard.

The Weather.—We have had several weeks good sleighing, and the prospect is good for more. This is rather a rarity, as we have had none fit for a pleasure ride in five years. The first three winters we spent in Wisconsin we never saw the ground thoroughly covered with snow, and this in 42° 44' latitude.

☞ "The belief," says Richter, "that guardian spirits hover around the paths of men, covers a weighty truth; for every beautiful and good thought which the heart holds is an angel of mercy, purifying and guarding the soul."

☞ He that doeth well, and rightly considers his own work, will find little cause to judge hardly of another.

known even when the censorship was most formidable. The people have taken the law into their own hands without trial or sentence. No matter what the pretext, whether "Jesuitism" or "Re-action," it overthrows and massacres all that offer any resistance to its tyranny. In Switzerland, the heroes of Propagandism waged a war against the press worthy the best days of French terrorism. At Vienna, the sovereign faction of the students commenced by burning the law which abolished the censorship, and have laid a violent hand upon newspaper editors. It is thus that we are condemned to behold one excess giving birth to another. Every one attempts to be free without being able to control himself. Every one wishes to dominate, and cannot cast off the yoke of his own passions, does not know how to respect the rights and the liberties of others. They commence by putting all authority at defiance, and then pretend that the proletaries and the provinces should respect the constitutional throne and the unity of the empire. And what, after all, is the mainspring of their actions? A servile imitation of that party spirit and misguided notions which have characterized the Paris propaganda, whose handiwork is visible in every commotion in Europe. We have seen it send its legions into the duchy of Baden—excite the civilians against the soldiery of Treves and at Mayence; at Munich it did not disdain the services of a Spanish courtisan; at Frankfort it paid the clay teurs in the church of St. Paul, and excited pillage and murder in the streets and public squares. At Naples, as at Rome and Milan—at Berlin, as at Vienna—everywhere the propaganda fixes the day and the hour, and pulls the strings that move the puppets—always ready to seize upon every fault or act of negligence of a Government, or take advantage of the misery of the masses. Dull-headed students and the scum of political writers give the signal, the enlightened bourgeoise follow them, until the moment arrives when the mob, who have been made use of for the great object, come, with weapons in their hands, to demand pay for their work. The same comedy is played everywhere, the object of which escapes the discernment of the people, until they are startled at the end, towards which they are dragged along. Barricades at Paris, barricades at Vienna and Berlin; general arming at Paris, comprising thieves and assassins, the same at Vienna and Berlin; down with the military at Paris, down with the military at Berlin and Vienna; Democratic journalists and club leaders proclaim the Republic at Paris, the very same occurs at Vienna, Berlin, and Frankfort. How can the people, then, be astonished, if this liberty, equality, fraternity, so loudly proclaimed, should be everywhere attended with the same results—anarchy at Berlin and at Vienna; political, social and economical bankruptcy on the banks of the Seine, of the Danube, and of the Spree. But wherefore extend the comparison?

Now that this ultra-Radicalism has been successively put down, at Paris, at Frankfort, and at Vienna, the bandage will fall from the eyes of those who ought, long since, to have discerned their real interests, and perceived the precipice on which they were standing. The public is still excited by the events at Vienna. The issue will prove to the authors of these terrible calamities that they have no hope, and they will be made aware that the only liberty worthy of mankind is that liberty which is based on religion, on morality, and on right. These alone can establish union, confidence, and order, and ensure their blessings to the world.

Unhappily, that era seems still far distant, and without daring to be prophets of bad tidings, we still fear that all is not over. Whatever may be the judgment of history on the sanguinary excesses caused by a handful of unprincipled men, they have, at all events, amply avenged Louis Philippe in France, and Metternich in Austria.—London Morning Chronicle.

☞ The following property is exempt from execution on all process issued out of any court in the State of Wisconsin, without regard to the time when the debt was contracted:—

Family Bible, family pictures, school books or library; seat in church and rites of burial; all wearing apparel of debtor and family; beds, bedsteads and bedding for debtor and family; all stoves and appendages for use of debtor and family; $200,00 of additional household furniture; two cows, ten swine, one yoke of oxen and one horse, or in lieu a span of horses, ten sheep and the wool, &c., from the same; necessary food for all this stock for one year, either provided or growing, or both; one wagon, cart or dray, one sleigh, one plough, one drag, and other farming utensils, including tackle for the teams, to the value of fifty dollars; one year's provisions for debtor and family, and fuel for one year; tools and implements or stock in trade of any mechanic, miner or other person, used and kept for the purpose of carrying on his trade or business to $300,00; library of professional man to same amount. There is also exempt on all process on debts contracted after Jan. 1st, 1849, 40 acres agricultural land, with the improvements thereon, or a town lot of one-fourth of an acre, with the improvements thereon, without reference to the value.

This is decidedly liberal. Forty acres of land, with first rate buildings and improvements, teams, utensils, furniture, &c., according to this catalogue, would make any man decidedly well off, and is more than most men are able to have.

☞ The Mormons in California have laid claim to a large portion of the gold territory, and demand thirty per cent. of the ore taken therefrom. An express has been sent to the Salt Lake settlement, where about 10,000 Mormons are located. There is a rumor that equally rich mines have been discovered in that region.—The thirty per cent. demand of the Mormons is expected to lead to trouble.—Wisconsin Argus.

☞ Humbug. We have seen direct official accounts from the Valley down to October, and no mention made of the gold. Nor is there one-fourth that number there.

Mexico.—A letter from Mexico received at Washington, states that January 1st, 1849, is the time fixed on for the rising against the Government of Herrera. The priesthood are said to be associated with the agents of Santa Anna in this undertaking.—Wisconsin Standard.

Is it not Horrible.—There are in London alone, at present, 80,000 mechanics, and 15,000 laborers out of work. Assuming four persons to each family, there would thus be 380,000 people almost in a state of destitution, with trade bad, and very little appearance of its improving during the winter.—Wisconsin Standard.

The Weather.—We have had several weeks good sleighing, and the prospect is good for more. This is rather a rarity, as we have had none fit for a pleasure ride in five years. The first three winters we spent in Wisconsin we never saw the ground thoroughly covered with snow, and this in 43° 44' latitude.

☞ "The belief," says Richter, "that guardian spirits hover around the paths of men, covers a weighty truth; for every beautiful and good thought which the heart holds is an angel of mercy, purifying and guarding the soul."

☞ He that doeth well, and rightly considers his own work, will find little cause to judge hardly of another.

INDIA.—The advices from India are regarded as highly important in England. The British arms have encountered a serious check in Moultan, a district in the northwestern part of Hindostan: and the intelligence of this misfortune is described in the English papers as coming "like a thunder clap" upon the people of England.

It appears that the Sikhs have shown themselves as little disposed to submit to the British rule as the Affghans did on a former occasion. The British have lately employed large auxilaries in the war against the tribes of the Punjaub.

At the siege of the city of Moultan in September last, when the British were daily expecting the surrender of the place, a body of Sikhs amounting to 5000 abandoned the British army, and went over to the enemy. In consequence of this defection, the British were compelled to raise the siege, and retreat with a heavy loss.

The Sikhs are now in full rebellion all over India, and the British appear to be struck with as deep a consternation as that occasioned by the catastrope at Cabul. Great exertions are making to raise troops at the frontier stations, and at Bombay, to meet this new and unexpected emergency. The Sikh chieftains are animated by the most intense hatred of the English.

The natives opposed to the British in the war in Moultan, appear to have displayed a courage and resolution which astonished their enemies. Many of the battles were attended with horrible carnage. A letter from a person who was present in one of the actions on the 12th September, says:—

At seven in the morning they began to prepare batteries near the building from which on the 9th they repulsed us; they were attacked by one European and two native regiments. The Europeans remembering how their comrades had been foiled, and how they had suffered, fought like furies. They found 400 men in a narrow square and shot and bayoneted every one of them. A mine had been blowed up by them and hundreds of scorched and shattered bodies were found piled over the ground. Sixty of those who had cut down Ensign Lloyd when parleying with them, were destroyed by Her Majesty's 10th—only five of the party escaping; the artillery destroyed 100 in one mass.—Ex. paper.

IDLE VISITS.—The idle lay a very heavy tax upon the industrous, when by frivolous visitations they rob them of their time. Such persons beg their daily happiness from door to door, as beggars their daily bread, and like them sometimes meet with a rebuff. A mere gossip ought not to wonder if we are tired of him, seeing that we are indebted for the honor of his visit soley to the circumstace of his being tired of himself. He sits at home until he has accumulated an insupportable load of ennui, and then sallies forth to distribute it amongst his acquaintances.—Colton.

ANTIQUITIES.—Nineveh was 15 miles by 9, and 40 round, with walls 100 feet high, and thick enough for 3 chariots abreast.

Babylon was 60 miles within the walls, which were 75 feet thick, and 300 feet high, with 100 brazen gates.

The temple Diana, at Ephesus, was 425 feet high, to support the roof. It was 200 years in building.

The largest of the pyramids is 481 feet high, and 663 feet on the side; its base covers eleven acres. The stones are about 30 feet in length and the layers are 208. 360,000 men were employed in its erection.

The labyrinth of Egypt contains 3,000 chambers and 12 halls.

Thebes, in Egypt, presents ruins 27 miles round. It had 100 gates.

Carthage was 25 miles round.

Athens was 25 miles round, and contained 250,000 citizens, 400,000 slaves.

The temple of Delphos was so rich in donations, that it was once plundered of £100,000 sterling; and Nero carried from it 200 statues.

The walls of Rome were 13 miles.

LIVE THEM DOWN.

Brother, art thou poor and lonely,
Toiling, toiling, day by day;
Journeying painfully and slowly,
On thy dark and desert way?
Pause not—though the proud ones frown!
Shrink not, fear not—LIVE THEM DOWN.

Though to Vice thou shalt not pander,
Though to Virtue thou shalt kneel,
Yet thou shalt not escape Slander—
Jibe and lie thy soul must feel—
Jest of wit ing—curse of clown—
Heed not either—LIVE THEM DOWN.

Hate may wield her scourges horrid,
Malice may thy woes deride;
Scorn may bind with thorns thy forehead—
Envy's spear may pierce thy side!
Lo! through Cross shall come the Crown!—
Fear not foemen!—LIVE THEM DOWN!

PARENTAL TEACHING.—If parents would not trust a child upon the back of a wild horse without bit or bridle, let them not permit him to go forth into the world unskilled in self-government. If a child is passionate, teach him by gentle and patient means, to curb his temper. If he is greedy, cultivate liberality in him. If he is selfish, promote generosity. If he is sulky, charm him out of it, by encouraging frank good humor. If he is indolent, accustom him to exertion, and train him so as to perform even onerous duties with alacrity. If pride comes in to make his obedience reluctant, subdue him, either by counsel or discipline. In short give your children the habit of overcoming their besetting sins. Let them acquire from experience that confidence in themselves which gives security to the practiced horseman even on the back of a high-strung steed, and they will triumph over the difficulties and dangers which beset them in the path of life.—Ex. paper.

CANADA SUBSCRIBERS.—We are under the necessity of reminding our Canada subscribers of the duty of perfect promptness in the payment of subscription for the Herald. We pay postage on their papers to the line, and necessarily pay it in advance. Of the $2,00 a year which they pay us, we pay out for postage to the line $1,56, leaving us only 44 cents for 52 papers. By occasionally sending a paper a short time longer than actually paid for in the expectation of a remittance, we have actually paid out more money for our Canada subscribers than we have received from them.

TO PRINTERS.—I have on hand three imposing stones of superior quality, which I wish to dispose of. One is 6 feet by 2 feet 4 inches. One 4 feet by 2 feet 10 inches. And one 3 feet square. These stones are of the best finish, manufactured from the Voree marble quarry. I can also furnish stone ink stands and imposing stones to order on short notice. JAMES J. STRANG.

☞ No man is a finished workman if he is ignorant of the theory on which he practices.

India.—The advices from India are regarded as highly important in England. The British arms have encountered a serious check in Moultan, a district in the northwestern part of Hindostan: and the intelligence of this misfortune is described in the English papers as coming "like a thunder clap" upon the people of England.

It appears that the Sikhs have shown themselves as little disposed to submit to the British rule as the Affghans did on a former occasion. The British have lately employed large auxilaries in the war against the tribes of the Punjaub.

At the siege of the city of Moultan in September last, when the British were daily expecting the surrender of the place, a body of Sikhs amounting to 5000 abandoned the British army, and went over to the enemy. In consequence of this defection, the British were compelled to raise the siege, and retreat with a heavy loss.

The Sikhs are now in full rebellion all over India, and the British appear to be struck with as deep a consternation as that occasioned by the catastrope at Cabul. Great exertions are making to raise troops at the frontier stations, and at Bombay, to meet this new and unexpected emergency. The Sikh chieftains are animated by the most intense hatred of the English.

The natives opposed to the British in the war in Moultan, appear to have displayed a courage and resolution which astonished their enemies. Many of the battles were attended with horrible carnage. A letter from a person who was present in one of the actions on the 12th September, says:—

At seven in the morning they began to prepare batteries near the building from which on the 9th they repulsed us; they were attacked by one European and two native regiments. The Europeans remembering how their comrades had been foiled, and how they had suffered, fought like furies. They found 400 men in a narrow square and shot and bayoneted every one of them. A mine had been blowed up by them and hundreds of scorched and shattered bodies were found piled over the ground. Sixty of those who had cut down Ensign Lloyd when parleying with them, were destroyed by Her Majesty's 10th—only five of the party escaping; the artillery destroyed 100 in one mass.—Ex. paper.

Idle Visits.—The idle lay a very heavy tax upon the industrous, when by frivolous visitations they rob them of their time. Such persons beg their daily happiness from door to door, as beggars their daily bread, and like them sometimes meet with a rebuff. A mere gossip ought not to wonder if we are tired of him, seeing that we are indebted for the honor of his visit soley to the circumstace of his being tired of himself. He sits at home until he has accumulated an insupportable load of ennui, and then sallies forth to distribute it amongst his acquaintances.—Colton.

Antiquities.—Nineveh was 15 miles by 9, and 40 round, with walls 100 feet high, and thick enough for 3 chariots abreast.

Babylon was 60 miles within the walls, which were 75 feet thick, and 300 feet high, with 100 brazen gates.

The temple Diana, at Ephesus, was 425 feet high, to support the roof. It was 200 years in building.

The largest of the pyramids is 481 feet high, and 663 feet on the side; its base covers eleven acres. The stones are about 30 feet in length and the layers are 208. 360,000 men were employed in its erection.

The labyrinth of Egypt contains 3,000 chambers and 12 halls.

Thebes, in Egypt, presents ruins 27 miles round. It had 100 gates.

Carthage was 25 miles round.

Athens was 25 miles round, and contained 250,000 citizens, 400,000 slaves.

The temple of Delphos was so rich in donations, that it was once plundered of £ 00,000 sterling; and Nero carried from it 200 statues.

The walls of Rome were 13 miles.

LIVE THEM DOWN.

Brother, art thou poor and lonely,
Toiling, toiling, day by day;
Journeying painfully and slowly,
Onward dark and desert way?
Pause not—though the proud ones frown!
Shrink not, fear not—LIVE THEM DOWN.

Though to Vice thou shalt not pander,
Though to Virtue thou shalt kneel,
Yet thou shalt not escape Slander—
Jibe and lie thy soul must feel—
Jest of wit ing—curse of clown—
Heed not either—LIVE THEM DOWN.

Hate may wield her scourges horrid,
Malice may thy woes deride;
Scorn may bind with thorns thy forehead—
Envy's spear may pierce thy side!
Lo! through Cross shall come the Crown!—
Fear not foemen!—LIVE THEM DOWN!

Parental Teaching.—If parents would not trust a child upon the back of a wild horse without bit or bridle, let them not permit him to go forth into the world unskilled in self-government. If a child is passionate, teach him by gentle and patient means, to curb his temper. If he is greedy, cultivate liberality in him. If he is selfish, promote generosity. If he is sulky, charm him out of it, by encouraging frank good humor. If he is indolent, accustom him to exertion, and train him so as to perform even onerous duties with alacrity. If pride comes in to make his obedience reluctant, subdue him, either by counsel or discipline. In short give your children the habit of overcoming their besetting sins. Let them acquire from experience that confidence in themselves which gives security to the practiced horseman even on the back of a high-strung steed, and they will triumph over the difficulties and dangers which beset them in the path of life.—Ex. paper.

Canada Subscribers.—We are under the necessity of reminding our Canada subscribers of the duty of perfect promptness in the payment of subscription for the Herald. We pay postage on their papers to the line, and necessarily pay it in advance. Of the $2,00 a year which they pay us, we pay out for postage to the line $1,56, leaving us only 44 cents for 52 papers. By occasionally sending a paper a short time longer than actually paid for in the expectation of a remittance, we have actually paid out more money for our Canada subscribers than we have received from them.

To Printers.—I have on hand three imposing stones of superior quality, which I wish to dispose of. One is 6 feet by 2 feet 4 inches. One 4 feet by 2 feet 10 inches. And one 3 feet square. These stones are of the best finish, manufactured from the Vorce marble quarry. I can also furnish stone ink stands and imposing stones to order on short notice. JAMES J. STRANG.

☛ No man is a finished workman if he is ignorant of the theory on which he practices.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 43.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, JAN. 11, 1849. [WHOLE No. 107.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

REVELATION, GIVEN JAN. SEVENTH, 1849.

Hearken O ye saints, and give ear, for the time to favor Zion is at hand, and the day of her redemption draweth near. Draw near unto me and learn, for the ways of man are foolishness before me. Behold ye shall be one, and if ye are not one ye are none of mine. And ye shall all speak the same thing. Ye are cursed; ye are confounded, because ye have many tongues, like unto Mystery Babylon, and many are running to and fro, speaking in their own wisdom, which is folly before me. By their speech gross darkness filleth the minds of the people. Those whom I have called to preach the gospel to the nations, have left serving me to contend against mine anointed, and I have not strengthened them, neither has their work prospered. They have only accomplished to scatter, and their evil ways follow them.

But I have a few names left in Voree who have not denied my word, nor rebelled against mine authority, nor done despite to mine anointed. And they shall be mine when I come to be glorified on earth. And there are a few in the Isles of the North who have not denied my name. When dominion is given to the saints I will remember their works. Nevertheless, as a people, ye have been slack in serving me. Ye have broken my commandments, and despised mine authority, and my precepts have been to you a vain thing. Ye are a stiff necked and rebellious people, who delight in your own vanities, and prefer your lusts to the chief of the things which God giveth. But such of you as draw near unto me, I will draw near unto them, and will save them. I have given you good gifts, and you have consumed them upon your lusts; I have chastised you, and ye have taken my name in vain; I have called you together to enjoy the blessings of my people, and ye have not heeded my call; I have revealed my authority to those that gathered, and they have spurned it; I have appointed shepherds unto you, and ye have despised them, and have walked in your own ways, where they did not lead you; and because of your rebellious hearts, are you blind, and deaf, that seeing you perceive not, and hearing you understand not.

Ye have robbed me in tithes and in offerings, and have been slothful in building a House unto my name, that I may dwell in it, and in building a Tower of Strength for the defence and the dwelling of Zion. Come, now, therefore, and bring in your tithes, and build a House unto me, that I may reveal most precious things unto you. And make unto me a free will offering, for a strong hold upon the Hill of Promise, according to the pattern which I have shown unto my servant James, and of which he has begun to lay the foundation, and I will show all things unto him in their time: and if ye do these things, I will give you strength that your enemies shall not prevail over you, and this shall be your possession.—Moreover, I have given you the Islands in the great Lakes for a possession. There shall you dwell apart from the Gentiles, and none shall make you afraid. For my law shall be kept there, and judgment shall be rendered against those that despise it.

If ye will therefore possess these things, remember my law, to keep it. Forget not the precepts which I have given you, but act wisely, according to the wisdom which I have revealed unto you; and despise not my word; for it is not a vain thing. I have given you wisdom, with promise. If ye will not live by it, the promise is not unto you. It is a vain thing for you to witness my word, if ye will not regard it, to live by it.

At Voree shall your possessions be purchased with money, and you shall make speed to redeem that which you have purchased. To that end have I blessed you, and you have consumed the blessings on things which are not good for you; yea, even the Order which I have commanded you to establish according to the Order of the church of the first born, have done this. Yet because the chief among them have sought unto me, and have admonished unto faithfulness, and have kept my words, I will yet bless them, and will give them the Kingdom, if they abide in well doing.

Once more I command all my saints to bring in their tithes, according to the law I have given them, and build a house unto me. Whosoever will not do it shall not enter into the house of the Lord. Let mine Apostles call on all the saints, both by word and proclamation, to do this thing. And let faithful and chosen ones be sent unto them, to receive of their tithes for this work, and let the work progress from this time forward.

And send faithful ones unto the saints and call on them to make a freewill offering for the Tower which I have commanded you to build on the Hill of Promise, and let the same be built, that it may be a habitation and a defence for the saints that shall gather together and keep the Order of Enoch, which I have revealed unto my servants, and let a subscription be circulated, that those who have not sold their possessions and cannot yet gather up their goods to the places appointed, may assist in building the towers of Zion, and may obtain an inheritance among the faithful.

And ye shall establish this Order at the stake which I have appointed among the Lamanites, and there shall ye keep it in all your habitations. And I will multiply you, and increase you exceedingly. And those that are strong in my ways will I make patriarchs and rulers in their tribes, and princes in their houses. Their inheritances shall be appointed unto them, and to their houses, and their posterity after them for a perpetual possession. Let many gather to the Islands which I have appointed for your gathering, that this Order may be kept more perfectly; for there will I give you much possession for an inheritance, if ye will go up and possess it. And such as shall be appointed of the Order of Enoch by the voice of the Order shall go up and possess the land, but they shall retain a strong hold at Voree, for it must needs be that they keep a possession there, and my work requires it. And if they do not redeem and preserve it, they must be afflicted with sore affliction. If they are faithful unto me, my strength shall shield them and prosper them.

And let this Order be an example unto all, both to the believing and to the unbelieving; for if they do not walk in my ways more

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 43.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, JAN. 11, 1849. [WHOLE No. 107.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

REVELATION, GIVEN JAN. SEVENTH, 1849.

Hearken O ye saints, and give ear, for the time to favor Zion is at hand, and the day of her redemption draweth near. Draw near unto me and learn, for the ways of man are foolishness before me. Behold ye shall be one, and if ye are not one ye are none of mine. And ye shall all speak the same thing. Ye are cursed; ye are confounded, because ye have many tongues, like unto Mystery Babylon, and many are running to and fro, speaking in their own wisdom, which is folly before me. By their speech gross darkness filleth the minds of the people. Those whom I have called to preach the gospel to the nations, have left serving me to contend against mine anointed, and I have not strengthened them, neither has their work prospered. They have only accomplished to scatter, and their evil ways follow them.

But I have a few names left in Voree who have not denied my word, nor rebelled against mine authority, nor done despite to mine anointed. And they shall be mine when I come to be glorified on earth. And there are a few in the Isles of the North who have not denied my name. When dominion is given to the saints I will remember their works. Nevertheless, as a people, ye have been slack in serving me. Ye have broken my commandments, and despised mine authority, and my precepts have been to you a vain thing. Ye are a stiff necked and rebellious people, who delight in your own vanities, and prefer your lusts to the chief of the things which God giveth. But such of you as draw near unto me, I will draw near unto them, and will save them. I have given you good gifts, and you have consumed them upon your lusts; I have chastised you, and ye have taken my name in vain; I have called you together to enjoy the blessings of my people, and ye have not heeded my call; I have revealed my authority to those that gathered, and they have spurned it; I have appointed shepherds unto you, and ye have despised them, and have walked in your own ways, where they did not lead you; and because of your rebellious hearts, are you blind, and deaf, that seeing you perceive not, and hearing you understand not.

Ye have robbed me in tithes and in offerings, and have been slothful in building a House unto my name, that I may dwell in it, and in building a Tower of Strength for the defence and the dwelling of Zion. Come, now, therefore, and bring in your tithes, and build a House unto me, that I may reveal most precious things unto you. And make unto me a free will offering, for a strong hold upon the Hill of Promise, according to the pattern which I have shown unto my servant James, and of which he has begun to lay the foundation, and I will show all things unto him in their time: and if ye do these things, I will give you strength that your enemies shall not prevail over you, and this shall be your possession.—Moreover, I have given you the Islands in the great Lakes for a possession. There shall you dwell apart from the Gentiles, and none shall make you afraid. For my law shall be kept there, and judgment shall be rendered against those that despise it.

If ye will therefore possess these things, remember my law, to keep it. Forget not the precepts which I have given you, but act wisely, according to the wisdom which I have revealed unto you; and despise not my word; for it is not a vain thing. I have given you wisdom, with promise. If ye will not live by it, the promise is not unto you. It is a vain thing for you to witness my word, if ye will not regard it, to live by it.

At Voree shall your possessions be purchased with money, and you shall make speed to redeem that which you have purchased. To that end have I blessed you, and you have consumed the blessings on things which are not good for you; yea, even the Order which I have commanded you to establish according to the Order of the church of the first born, have done this. Yet because the chief among them have sought unto me, and have admonished unto faithfulness, and have kept my words, I will yet bless them, and will give them the Kingdom, if they abide in well doing.

Once more I command all my saints to bring in their tithes, according to the law I have given them, and build a house unto me. Whosoever will not do it shall not enter into the house of the Lord. Let mine Apostles call on all the saints, both by word and proclamation, to do this thing. And let faithful and chosen ones be sent unto them, to receive of their tithes for this work, and let the work progress from this time forward.

And send faithful ones unto the saints and call on them to make a freewill offering for the Tower which I have commanded you to build on the Hill of Promise, and let the same be built, that it may be a habitation and a defence for the saints that shall gather together and keep the Order of Enoch, which I have revealed unto my servants, and let a subscription be circulated, that those who have not sold their possessions and cannot yet gather up their goods to the places appointed, may assist in building the towers of Zion, and may obtain an inheritance among the faithful.

And ye shall establish this Order at the stake which I have appointed among the Lamanites, and there shall ye keep it in all your habitations. And I will multiply you, and increase you exceedingly. And those that are strong in my ways will I make patriarchs and rulers in their tribes, and princes in their houses. Their inheritances shall be appointed unto them, and to their houses, and their posterity after them for a perpetual possession. Let many gather to the Islands which I have appointed for your gathering, that this Order may be kept more perfectly; for there will I give you much possession for an inheritance, if ye will go up and possess it. And such as shall be appointed of the Order of Enoch by the voice of the Order shall go up and possess the land, but they shall retain a strong hold at Voree, for it must needs be that they keep a possession there, and my work requires it. And if they do not redeem and preserve it, they must be afflicted with sore affliction. If they are faithful unto me, my strength shall shield them and prosper them.

And let this Order be an example unto all, both to the believing and to the unbelieving; for if they do not walk in my ways more perfectly, I will yet cast them off. For the properties of this Order are all mine. He that draws back from this Order and takes away that which he has consecrated, robbeth me, saith the Lord. Nevertheless, now, ye shall not withhold; for he shall be trodden down by whom I will, in my own time. And ye have polluted yourselves by your excess of flesh, which ye have eaten, and by the unclean things and the poisonous drugs which ye have consumed upon your lusts. Behold ye say ye need these things. But I say they are not good for you. Who is man, that he should prefer himself to God? And for these are ye in debt to your enemies. Except I deliver you, they shall oppress you. But the righteous will I establish, and the wicked will I cast off.

Put away covetousness. Remember that all that ye possess is mine. Cast all idlers out of this Order. Let no man call aught his own, nor buy nor sell as though it were his. But let all be the common property of all, as I have given unto you, and let those buy and sell who are appointed by common consent. And this shall be your inheritance, and the inheritance of your children forever. He that is faithful in this little shall be made prince of a village, or ruler of a Tower; and he that is faithful therein shall be made patriarch of a tribe, or ruler of many cities in my kingdom.

And ye shall not provoke one another. But ye shall console and strengthen one another. Ye shall strenghten the weak; for with kindness and much charity will I give you to prevail, and ye shall save them. And ye shall not contend against one another.

Rebel not against my servant James; for I am with him, and I have given unto him the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven. Whosoever receiveth me, receiveth him. Whosoever receiveth him, receiveth those whom I have sent. Whosoever heareth not his words, heareth not mine. Whosoever heareth not his words, hearkeneth not to the words of those whom I have sent. For I have made him the chief shepherd of the whole flock on earth. They that are of the flock hear his voice. If not, they go astray to destruction.

Behold I am his friend; for he has been faithful unto me. And the keys which I have given to him shall not be taken from him in this world, neither in the world to come. They that speak evil of him are enemies unto me, saith the Lord. They have given themselves unto lies, and their hearts to wickedness. For he is meeker than Moses, more patient than Job, and has kept himself unpolluted in the midst of the lustful and ungodly till they have departed from him.

Ye know not his patience, nor his faith, nor his trials and sufferings. How have ye cast your toil on him? Ye have required him to bring redemption to Zion, and prosperity to you when ye lifted not your hands. Because he has not done it, many have reviled him and denied my name. But to as many as are faithful, will I give power to become heirs of the kingdom of heaven. And I have a great work for him to do, and with speed shall he do it, if ye uphold him in faith and confidence and prayer. For my hidden word shall be translated, and given to those that will receive it. And I have called him to this work.

And if my servant George J. Adams will be his counsellor, let him come and dwell near unto my servant James, and assist him in presiding, and in the school of the prophets, and in carrying my word to the saints, and to the nations, and to far countries. But let his dwelling be in the inheritance of the saints. If he do this, I will sustain him and will make him a host, and the head of nations.

Behold my servant William Marks has gone far astray in departing from me, yet I give unto him a little space that he may return and receive my word, and stand in his place; for I remember his work that he has done in the time that is past. If he will return and abide faithful I will make him great, and his possessions shall be great, and he shall possess a city, and his children shall dwell therein; a nation shall call him blessed.

And my servants the Apostles have not filled their mission in preaching my gospel to the nations of the earth, but have betaken themselves to their own work. If they had obeyed me I would have given them a host as the fruit of their labor, and added to them their food, raiment and possessions also. Do I not possess all? and am I impoverished that I cannot reward the faithful? I will provide for him that obeys me, and array him that regards my words.

I have protected you from all your enemies; I have turned men's hearts that they should do good unto you, and not persecute you; I have given you a home in a bountiful land, and ye have not done good according to my abundant mercies, nor regarded me according to my loving kindness. But ye have made youreselves like the Gentiles, and have sought your own ways, and not mine. And now turn unto me all ye my people, lest the disobedient and the rebellious be cut off, and cast out of his possession, and persecution and wrath come on those who are slack in serving me. And I give you chastisement and much sorrow. For your enemies shall be upon you, and ye shall flee before them, if ye turn not to me to be faithful.

CLASSIFICATION OF MANKIND ACCORDING TO THEIR DIFFERENT RELIGIONS.

I. Jews, so called from Judah, the son of Jacob. They hold the religion instituted by Moses and the prophets. The principal sects among the Jews in modern times are—1. Rabbinists, who receive the Talmud. 2. Caraites, who receive the Old Testament. 3. Samaritans, who receive only the Pentateuch.

II. Christians, so called because they profess to hold to the religion taught by Christ and his apostles. They include, 1. Christians of the Oriental or Greek Church; 2. Christians of the Catholic or Latin Church; 3. Protestants, or those who have seceded from the Latin Church.

III. Mohammedans, so called from Mohammed, the son of Abdollah, who lived in the seventh century. They hold that there is one God, and Mohammed is his prophet. They are divided into, 1. Shonites, who received Sonna or tradition; and 2. Shiites, who reject the Sonna.

IV. Druzes, so called from El Druzi, in the 11th century, who did much to establish this sect. They hold there is one God, and that Hakem is that God. The Nazarans Mutualees, appear to be schismatic Druzes, whom the rest of the sect regard as heretical.

V. Yesidees, or worshippers of Satan. They inhabit the mountains near Singa in Mesopatamia. They appear to be a mixed sect.

VI. Wahabees, so called from Addulwahab, an Arabian reformer in the middle of the 18th century. They hold the unity of God, and reject the invocation of saints.

VII. Parsees, so called from Persia, their original country. They hold the tenets of the ancient Magians.

VIII. Brahmanist, so called from their Brahmins, or priests.—They acknowledge Parabrahma as the supreme God; but he has delegated his power to Brahma, Vishnu, Shiva, and a multitude of subordinate deities. They are divided into, 1. Vishnuites, or worshippers of Vishnu—and 2. Shivites, or worshippers of Shiva.

IX. Sikhs, so called from their being disciples or followers of Nanac Shah, (compare Sanscrit sisch, Penjabee Sikh, a disciple or follower,) who lived in the beginning of the sixteenth century.—They renounce the Hindoo distinction of caste.

X. Buddhists, or the worshippers of Buddha. They reject the distinction of caste. They include, 1. Buddhists of Hither India and Ceylon; 2. Buddhists of Farther India; 3. The Buddhists of China and Japan, or Forites; and 4. The Buddhists of Thibet and interior Asia, or Lamaists.

perfectly, I will yet cast them off. For the properties of this Order are all mine. He that draws back from this Order and takes away that which he has consecrated, robbeth me, saith the Lord. Nevertheless, now, ye shall not withhold; for he shall be trodden down by whom I will, in my own time. And ye have polluted yourselves by your excess of flesh, which ye have eaten, and by the unclean things and the poisonous drugs which ye have consumed upon your lusts. Behold ye say ye need these things. But I say they are not good for you. Who is man, that he should prefer himself to God? And for these are ye in debt to your enemies. Except I deliver you, they shall oppress you. But the righteous will I establish, and the wicked will I cast off.

Put away covetousness. Remember that all that ye possess is mine. Cast all idlers out of this Order. Let no man call aught his own, nor buy nor sell as though it were his. But let all be the common property of all, as I have given unto you, and let those buy and sell who are appointed by common consent. And this shall be your inheritance, and the inheritance of your children forever. He that is faithful in this little shall be made prince of a village, or ruler of a Tower; and he that is faithful therein shall be made patriarch of a tribe, or ruler of many cities in my kingdom.

And ye shall not provoke one another. But ye shall console and strengthen one another. Ye shall strenghten the weak; for with kindness and much charity will I give you to prevail, and ye shall save them. And ye shall not contend against one another.

Rebel not against my servant James; for I am with him, and I have given unto him the keys of the Kingdom of Heaven. Whosoever receiveth me, receiveth him. Whosoever receiveth him, receiveth those whom I have sent. Whosoever heareth not his words, heareth not mine. Whosoever heareth not his words, harkeneth not to the words of those whom I have sent. For I have made him the chief shepherd of the whole flock on earth. They that are of the flock hear his voice. If not, they go astray to destruction.

Behold I am his friend; for he has been faithful unto me. And the keys which I have given to him shall not be taken from him in this world, neither in the world to come. They that speak evil of him are enemies unto me, saith the Lord. They have given themselves unto lies, and their hearts to wickedness. For he is meeker than Moses, more patient than Job, and has kept himself unpolluted in the midst of the lustful and ungodly till they have departed from him.

Ye know not his patience, nor his faith, nor his trials and sufferings. How have ye cast your toil on him? Ye have required him to bring redemption to Zion, and prosperity to you when ye lifted not your hands. Because he has not done it, many have reviled him and denied my name. But to as many as are faithful, will I give power to become heirs of the kingdom of heaven. And I have a great work for him to do, and with speed shall he do it, if ye uphold him in faith and confidence and prayer. For my hidden word shall be translated, and given to those that will receive it. And I have called him to this work.

And if my servant George J. Adams will be his counsellor, let him come and dwell near unto my servant James, and assist him in presiding, and in the school of the prophets, and in carrying my word to the saints, and to the nations, and to far countries. But let his dwelling be in the inheritance of the saints. If he do this, I will sustain him and will make him a host, and the head of nations.

Behold my servant William Marks has gone far astray in departing from me, yet I give unto him a little space that he may return and receive my word, and stand in his place; for I remember his work that he has done in the time that is past. If he will return and abide faithful I will make him great, and his possessions shall be great, and he shall possess a city, and his children shall dwell therein; a nation shall call him blessed.

And my servants the Apostles have not filled their mission in preaching my gospel to the nations of the earth, but have betaken themselves to their own work. If they had obeyed me I would have given them a host as the fruit of their labors, and added to them their food, raiment and possessions also. Do I not possess all? and am I impoverished that I cannot reward the faithful? I will provide for him that obeys me, and array him that regards my words.

I have protected you from all your enemies; I have turned men's hearts that they should do good unto you, and not persecute you; I have given you a home in a bountiful land, and ye have not done good according to my abundant mercies, nor regarded me according to my loving kindness. But ye have made yourselves like the Gentiles, and have sought your own ways, and not mine. And now turn unto me all ye my people, lest the disobedient and the rebellious be cut off, and cast out of his possession, and persecution and wrath come on those who are slack in serving me. And I give you chastisement and much sorrow. For your enemies shall be upon you, and ye shall flee before them, if ye turn not to me to be faithful.

CLASSIFICATION OF MANKIND ACCORDING TO THEIR DIFFERENT RELIGIONS.

I. Jews, so called from Judah, the son of Jacob. They hold the religion instituted by Moses and the prophets. The principal sects among the Jews in modern times are—1. Rabbinists, who receive the Talmud. 2. Caraites, who receive the Old Testament. 3. Samaritans, who receive only the Pentateuch.

II. Christians, so called because they profess to hold to the religion taught by Christ and his apostles. They include, 1. Christians of the Oriental or Greek Church; 2. Christians of the Catholic or Latin Church; 3. Protestants, or those who have seceded from the Latin Church.

III. Mohammedans, so called from Mohammed, the son of Abdollah, who lived in the seventh century. They hold that there is one God, and Mohammed is his prophet. They are divided into, 1. Shonites, who received Sonna or tradition; and 2. Shiites, who reject the Sonna.

IV. Druzes, so called from El Druzi, in the 11th century, who did much to establish this sect. They hold there is one God, and that Hakem is that God. The Nazarans Mutualees, appear to be schismatic Druzes, whom the rest of the sect regard as heretical.

V. Yesidees, or worshippers of Satan. They inhabit the mountains near Singa in Mesopatamia. They appear to be a mixed sect.

VI. Wahabees, so called from Addulwahab, an Arabian reformer in the middle of the 18th century. They hold the unity of God, and reject the invocation of saints.

VII. Parsees, so called from Persia, their original country. They hold the tenets of the ancient Magians.

VIII. Brahmanist, so called from their Brahmins, or priests.—They acknowledge Parabrahma as the supreme God; but he has delegated his power to Brahma, Vishnu, Shiva, and a multitude of subordinate deities. They are divided into, 1. Vishnuites, or worshippers of Vishnu—and 2. Shivites, or worshippers of Shiva.

IX. Sikhs, so called from their being disciples or followers of Nanac Shah, (compare Sanscrit sisch, Penjabee Sikh, a disciple or follower,) who lived in the beginning of the sixteenth century.—They renounce the Hindoo distinction of caste.

X. Buddhists, or the worshippers of Buddha. They reject the distinction of caste. They include, 1. Buddhists of Hither India and Ceylon; 2. Buddhists of Farther India; 3. The Buddhists of China and Japan, or Forites; and 4. The Buddhists of Thibet and interior Asia, or Lamaists.

XI. The sect of Tao-see, or of Doctors of Reason, founded by Laotseu, or Lokium, who lived about 600 B. C. They hold the worship of spirits, with a belief in magic, and the existence of a primordial reason. It is the most ancient religion in China.

XII. The followers of Confucius, who lived in the fifth century before Christ. Their religion is based on a philosophic pantheism.—They include the learned of China and of the neighboring countries.

XIII. Sintoists. Their religion is based upon the worship of genii, or inferior deities, called Sin, or Kami, who preside over all things visible and invisible, and are supposed to take more interest in human affairs than the higher gods. The worship paid to the Kamis consists of prayer and sacrifices. Their temples are called miya, and their festivals matsuri. This is the most ancient, although now the predominant, religion in Japan.

XIV. Fetichists, or worshippers of the fetiches, a name given to any animate or inanimate, natural or artificial object, to which rude and barbarous people pay religious homage. They include, 1. Fetichists of Asia and Europe, whose priests are sometimes called Grote; 2. Fetichists of America, whose priests are sometimes called Jugglers; and 3. Fetichists of Oceanica.

☞ We find the foregoing going the rounds of the papers with some little variation, and add, for the information of mankind, one other kind of religion particularly distinguirhed from those by being true. On earth it has no creed set down containing "all that it is necessary for man to believe and to do;" for, singularly enough, the believers in the true religion have not yet found out what it is necessary to believe and to do, but think it is necessary to continually learn and do more and more till they are like God in heaven—perfect as he is perfect. They are not positively opposed to creeds however, for they have already set down several points as matters of established faith. For instance, they not only hold with Jews, christians and many others that there is one God, but they think, singularly enough, that he is just such a God now as he was in the days of Moses, and really pretend that he is alive and attending to the affairs of his kingdom now as usual. Very singular people they are; men call them, in derision, Mormons. It is said, indeed, we find it written in some old books by one Matthew, and several other fishermen, that there was just such a set of people once in the country about Jerusalem. But that was a great while ago. They called them christians then. Some have even pretended that there were such before the flood, led by one Enoch, an old man, whom people pretended was crazy. Very singular people they are! They actually believe in a living God and living Prophets and Apostles.

☞ The following article is from the pen of M. M. Noah:—

THE GOLD FEVER.—A friend asked our advice on the subject of emigrating to California, and trying his luck in gathering gold.—We advised him to stay where he was, in New York, and be contented with a comfortable living here. We know of no greater misfortune to a country, than that bread should be dear and gold plenty. Look at the fate of Sir Walter Raleigh; look at all the expeditions in search of gold; look at the fate of Spain, once the first power in the world, now the last in consequence of her gold and silver mines in Mexico and Peru. No greater calamity can befall a nation or a people, than to be rich in gold and poor in comforts. Here are young men going on a five months voyage round Cape Horn to California—they jump on shore and rush to the shores of the Sacramento river to pick up grains of gold—the more they find, the less is its value. If they are lucky enough to pick up fifty dollars a day, the whole goes for flour and other necessaries, and if they are lucky and collect some thousands in gold and wish to return home they are robbed and murdered on the way. Bands of Indians and banditti will hover around the gold regions, to intercept and rob the industrious gatherers, and finally a revolution will break out among the speculators themselves, and they will cut each others throats. It has not been said without reason, that "gold is the root of all evil," and many a man with a few hundred dollars in hand, a good business, and making a comfortable living, will throw them all up and hasten to California in search of the dross. Suppose he succeeds, he lives in no better security and comfort there than he does here. Rich and poor can secure nothing from wealth but a comfortable living. Can they not secure it here! This gold fever will destroy the profits of many persons, and then the bubble will burst, and we shall hear no more of it.—New York Star.

ENERGY.—Energy is everything. How mean a thing is man with little motive power! All the abilities nature has given him lie useless, like a great and mighty machine, ready at every point of useful action, but not a wheel starts for want of starting power. A great man is like a great machine. He has a great power to set in motion the various and immense projects which he has in hand; little motives can neither start nor stop him; they may set in motion the powers of an ordinary man and render him respectable, nay even a beautiful piece of mechanism, but never a magnificent one. Yet there is one thing that renders man supremely above the machine. By the working of his own mind he can improve and exalt himself; by directing his eye to what is great and good, he may become so. If then, we can become what we wish to be, what high objects should we aim at, and what resolute and energetic effort should we ever make to attain them! —Ex. paper.

☞ We have received the January number of Godey's Lady's Book. It is matchless in its mechanical getting up—unequaled in its embelishments. We commend it to the fair, especially to the reading fair, and that is nearly all.

MUSINGS.

How little do saints care for the work they have enlisted in.—How much do they talk of privations, who have suffered none.—How slight an obstacle will stop their progress. Nine men in ten of those who talk of privations in the service of God have actually suffered more, and would any day bring on themselves more in the pursuit of money than they ever suffered or have any prospect of suffering in the cause of God.

☞ The Twelve are regular tithing collectors for the church. It is to be hoped that they will impress on the saints the necessity of keeping the law of God in this respect, if we would inherit the promises. Brothers J. E. Page, Ebenezer Page, Savage and Graham, are in the field, and are authorized to receive all monies for the church. George Brownson and Alden Hale are specially authorized also to receive monies and property for the church. B. G. Wright, Phineas Wright and Joseph Ketcham will also leave here on missions soon with similar authority. We hope those who love the prosperity of Zion will receive them as becometh saints, and impart to them according to God's commandments.

DUTY.—Till we do our duty to God, we can never do it to man. And what we do to others will be more from spurious motives, than sense of duty or religion in the heart.—T. ADAMS.

☞ The Jews, both here and in Europe, are just now making great efforts to raise subscriptions for rebuilding of the temple—permission to that effect having recently been given them by the Turkish Government.

XI. The sect of Tao[illegible] of Reason, founded by Laotsen, or Lokium, who liv[illegible] C. They hold the worship of spirits, with a belief [illegible] existence of a primordial reason. It is the most [illegible] in China.

XII. The followers of [illegible] [illegible]ived in the fifth century before Christ: Their re[illegible] a philosophic pantheism.—They include the lear[illegible] of the neighboring countries.

XIII. Sintoists. [illegible]sed upon the worship of genii, or inferior deities [illegible] Kami, who preside over all things visible and i[illegible] upposed to take more interest in human affairs th[illegible]. The worship paid to the Kamis consists of [illegible]s. Their temples are called miya, and their fe[illegible] This is the most ancient, although now the p[illegible] in Japan.

XIV. Fetichists. [illegible]s of the fetiches, a name given to any animate or [illegible] or artificial object, to which rude and barbarous pe[illegible]gious homage. They include, 1. Fetichists of As[illegible] whose priests are sometimes called Grote; 2. Fetich[illegible]a, whose priests are sometimes called Jugglers; and [illegible]ts of Oceanica.

☞ We fi[illegible]ng going the rounds of the papers with some little vari[illegible]d, for the information of mankind, one other kind of re[illegible]ularly distinguirhed from those by being true. On earth[illegible]ord set down containing "all that it is necessary for [illegible]ve and to do;" for, singularly enough, the believers in the [illegible]n have not yet found out what it is necessary to believe and [illegible] but think it is necessary to continually learn and do more [illegible] more till they are like God in heaven—perfect as he is perfect. They are not positively opposed to creeds however, for they have already set down several points as matters of established faith. For instance, they not only hold with Jews, christians and many others that there is one God, but they think, singularly enough, that he is just such a God now as he was in the days of Moses, and really pretend that he is alive and attending to the affairs of his kingdom now as usual. Very singular people they are; men call them, in derision, Mormons. It is said, indeed, we find it written in some old books by one Matthew, and several other fishermen, that there was just such a set of people once in the country about Jerusalem. But that was a great while ago. They called them christians then. Some have even pretended that there were such before the flood, led by one Enoch, an old man, whom people pretended was crazy. Very singular people they are! They actually believe in a living God and living Prophets and Apostles.

☞ The following article is from the pen of M. M. Noah:—

THE GOLD FEVER.—A friend asked our advice on the subject of emigrating to California, and trying his luck in gathering gold.—We advised him to stay where he was, in New York, and be contented with a comfortable living here. We know of no greater misfortune to a country, than that bread should be dear and gold plenty. Look at the fate of Sir Walter Raleigh; look at all the expeditions in search of gold; look at the fate of Spain, once the first power in the world, now the last in consequence of her gold and silver mines in Mexico and Peru. No greater calamity can befal! a nation or a people, than to be rich in gold and poor in comforts. Here are young men going on a five months voyage round Cape Horn to California—they jump on shore and rush to the shores of the Sacramento river to pick up grains of gold—the more they find, the less is its value. If they are lucky enough to pick up fifty dollars a day, the whole goes for flour and other necessaries, and if they are lucky and collect some thousands in gold and wish to return home they are robbed and murdered on the way. Bands of Indians and banditti will hover around the gold regions, to intercept and rob the industrious gatherers, and finally a revolution will break out among the speculators themselves, and they will cut each others throats. It has not been said without reason, that "gold is the root of all evil," and many a man with a few hundred dollars in hand, a good business, and making a comfortable living, will throw them all up and hasten to California in search of the dross. Suppose he succeeds, he lives in no better security and comfort there than he does here. Rich and poor can secure nothing from wealth but a comfortable living. Can they not secure it here? This gold fever will destroy the profits of many persons, and then the bubble will burst, and we shall hear no more of it.—New York Star.

ENERGY.—Energy is everything. How mean a thing is man with little motive power! All the abilities nature has given him lie useless, like a great and mighty machine, ready at every point of useful action, but not a wheel starts for want of starting power. A great man is like a great machine. He has a great power to set in motion the various and immense projects which he has in hand; little motives can neither start nor stop him; they may set in motion the powers of an ordinary man and render him respectable, nay even a beautiful piece of mechanism, but never a magnificent one. Yet there is one thing that renders man supremely above the machine. By the working of his own mind he can improve and exalt himself; by directing his eye to what is great and good, he may become so. If then, we can become what we wish to be, what high objects should we aim at, and what resolute and energetic effort should we ever make to attain them? —Ex. paper.

☞ We have received the January number of Godey's Lady's Book. It is matchless in its mechanical getting up—unequaled in its embelishments. We commend it to the fair, especially to the reading fair, and that is nearly all.

MUSINGS.

How little do saints care for the work they have enlisted in.—How much do they talk of privations, who have suffered none.—How slight an obstacle will stop their progress. Nine men in ten of those who talk of privations in the service of God have actually suffered more, and would any day bring on themselves more in the pursuit of money than they ever suffered or have any prospect of suffering in the cause of God.

☞ The Twelve are regular tithing collectors for the church. It is to be hoped that they will impress on the saints the necessity of keeping the law of God in this respect, if we would inherit the promises. Brothers J. E. Page, Ebenezer Page, Savage and Graham, are in the field, and are authorized to receive all monies for the church. George Brownson and Alden Hale are specially authorized also to receive monies and property for the church. B. G. Wright, Phineas Wright and Joseph Ketcham will also leave here on missions soon with similar authority. We hope those who love the prosperity of Zion will receive them as becometh saints, and impart to them according to God's commandments.

DUTY.—Till we do our duty to God, we can never do it to man. And what we do to others will be more from spurious motives, than sense of duty or religion in the heart.—T. ADAMS.

☞ The Jews, both here and in Europe, are just now making great efforts to raise subscriptions for rebuilding of the temple—permission to that effect having recently been given them by the Turkish Government.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. BURGESS TO MR. STRANG.—No. 3.

(Conclusion of No. 3.)

Racine, December 30th, 1848.

Mr. James J. Strang,—Sir:—I am glad to find you did not intend to include works on theology with works on the natural sciences to be appealed to in the first instance as unquestioned truths, so that the admission of the one may be no pretext for the admission of the other.

58. In par. 73 you say, in par. 9 I draw a most sage conclusion. If such errors are for want of understanding, I had better give up discussion. If of mere captiousness, it would be as well to stop talking of love of truth. What kind of evidence is good to prove the rotundity of the earth? The testimony of men of certain facts, and the calculations of mathematicians founded thereon. What kind of evidence then is good to prove the existence of a God?—The testimony of men of facts, and the equally scientific deductions therefrom of his existence.

59. Hard words do not always make strong arguments. My par. 9 referred to your par. 11, in which you said, "whatever proof is always received among men on all subjects, I hold to be good on this, if applicable, to the same extent as in any of the sciences."—In Geology what would be good to prove the existence of limestone, but a lump of it made perceptible to the mind? What would be good to prove the form of the lump, but the form made perceptible to the mind? That which does not make the idea spoken of perceptible to the mind is no proof in science, whatever it may be called in law; and it is not the latter we are discussing. In science we deal with the certain, not the probable. We demonstrate, not imagine things. The rotundity of the earth can only be proved by demonstration, not by testimony. The same with the existence of God. How can you make scientific deductions from mens' testimony of supernatural beings? I should like an example. On which side the captiousness, error or love of truth is, let the reader decide.

60. In par. 74 you say, that, in par. 10, I intimated that the statements of travelers (and you presume therefore all human testimony) should not be received when contrary to experience. Better say what I said, than what you think I intimated. In what I did say I added, "and reason." I care not how brief you express what I said, if the meaning is not perverted, which a comparison of the paragraphs may decide. You add, "then the king of Siam was right in treating the Dutch embassador as a liar, and driving him from his court when he was told of water congealing and men traveling on it," &c. I do not think it right to drive every one away and treat them as liars, because their experience and reason differs from mine, AS IT WOULD NOT BE PROMOTIVE OF HAPPINESS. And I think had the king of Siam reasoned on his experience, he might have observed that fluids become more dense in proportion to their coldness; and being told that the climate of Holland was much colder than Siam, he might have perceived something in his experience to indicate the truth of the Dutch embassadors testimony.

61. Here again water was the thing spoken of as being in a different condition. The existence of the water was evident, not so the existence of God. A piece of ice might have been taken to the king, or the king to the ice. Could we do the same with the supernatural, I should think your reasoning more to the point.

62. In reply to par. 75, you say, "it is untrue that if we are to believe accounts of the supernatural we should be left to the guidance of less than one in a million, who profess to have seen the supernatural." Are there twenty persons in this country in the present age who have seen a supernatural being, or the like proportion in any other country? You say, "a majority of men give their testimony of the supernatural, using that word as I appear in the popular sense." I do not speak of belief and testimony as synonymous. Had I used the word testimony to express belief or hearsay, I should not have said, "we must be left to the guidance of less than one in a million who profess to have seen the supernatural," as I presume the general opinion of mankind as nearly as evident to me as to yourself.

63. You say, further, "the existence of the Antartic continent is proved by less than one in ten millions." Yet who doubts it?—Here what you call proof is the testimony of a witness, which may be proved true or false by an examination of the continent. But how can we examine the supernatural to prove the truth of the testimony? Where then is the parallel? And you ask, who doubts? as though that were a proof of its truth. If so, doubting will be a proof of falsehood. Then what becomes of the Mormon doctrine?

64. In par. 76 you say, "you know nothing whatever of the duty of a parent (or of God) to make the evidence of his existence strong and clear, (I added) in proportion as it was necessary to the happiness of his children, (par. 10.) If you really know nothing whatever of the reciprocal duties of parents and children, I wonder what rules of conduct you teach. Is doing as you would be done by (that is, making others happy as you desire them to make you happy) to be laid aside as false or useless? or is the duty or doing what is due to others for the purpose of making all happy to be one sided only as due to the parent from the child? My experience and reason teach otherwise. If the greatest good ought to prevail, it is the duty of parent and child (and I think God likewise) to promote it by every act in their power. But if the greatest good to all be not the proper object, what test can we have of right or wrong in any case?

65. In par. 77 you say, "you repeat that most of our knowledge of geography and geology is hearsay." Are knowledge and hearsay synonymous? Do I know God exists, when you say so? Will any one know he does not exist, when I deny it? You said, (par. 13,) speaking of testimony as evidence, "it is as good as any person on earth has or can have of geographic or geologic facts." This I denied, as they can examine both. Does the first quotation look like a repetition of the last?

66. The historical evidence which you advance as proof of God's existence is about the weakest evidence we have, as the facts and agents no longer exist which are necessary to prove the truth of the record. In geology, chemistry, &c., the facts do exist which are necessary to prove the truth of our testimony, always within the power of man to examine. Was it the same with the supernatural, I would not say that our belief in the God of the theologians is dependent on the professions of a few SEERS, who generally make a profitable business of their testimony. If God does govern the universe, and our belief of the fact is the most necessary to our happiness, why does not God make it the most evident? What do you seriously think of God's wisdom in letting the eternal happiness of mankind depend on their belief of the testimony of a few seers, to whom he has revealed himself? While the seers know the existence of God, those to whom they testify can only believe. "As the world wags" the believers pay, and the seers receive, which is quite a premium on seeing.

67. In par. 78 you have a curious way of proving the concurring of the testimony of mankind by additional examples of difference.

68. After saying the testimony of all mankind concurs in the existence of God, I wonder that you can cavil at my saying, "the basis of all credence in science are facts in nature which all may examine." Is not this like straining at gnats and swallowing camels? You say, further, the world is dependent for all its knowledge on the subject (of astronomy) upon the favored few astronomers who happened to be favored with telescopes and a knowledge of the

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. BURGESS TO MR. STRANG.—No. 3.

(Conclusion of No. 3.)

Racine, December 30th, 1848.

Mr. James J. Strang,—Sir:—I am glad to find you did not intend to include works on theology with works on the natural sciences to be appealed to in the first instance as unquestioned truths, so that the admission of the one may be no pretext for the admission of the other.

58. In par. 73 you say, in par. 9 I draw a most sage conclusion. If such errors are for want of understanding, I had better give up discussion. If of mere captiousness, it would be as well to stop talking of love of truth. What kind of evidence is good to prove the rotundity of the earth? The testimony of men of certain facts, and the calculations of mathematicians founded thereon. What kind of evidence then is good to prove the existence of a God?—The testimony of men of facts, and the equally scientific deductions therefrom of his existence.

59. Hard words do not always make strong arguments. My par. 9 referred to your par. 11, in which you said, "whatever proof is always received among men on all subjects, I hold to be good on this, if applicable, to the same extent as in any of the sciences."—In Geology what would be good to prove the existence of limestone, but a lump of it made perceptible to the mind? What would be good to prove the form of the lump, but the form made perceptible to the mind? That which does not make the idea spoken of perceptible to the mind is no proof in science, whatever it may be called in law; and it is not the latter we are discussing. In science we deal with the certain, not the probable. We demonstrate, not imagine things. The rotundity of the earth can only be proved by demonstration, not by testimony. The same with the existence of God. How can you make scientific deductions from mens' testimony of supernatural beings? I should like an example. On which side the captiousness, error or love of truth is, let the reader decide.

60. In par. 74 you say, that, in par. 10, I intimated that the statements of travelers (and you presume therefore all human testimony) should not be received when contrary to experience. Better say what I said, than what you think I intimated. In what I did say I added, "and reason." I care not how brief you express what I said, if the meaning is not perverted, which a comparison of the paragraphs may decide. You add, "then the king of Siam was right in treating the Dutch embassador as a liar, and driving him from his court when he was told of water congealing and men traveling on it," &c. I do not think it right to drive every one away and treat them as liars, because their experience and reason differs from mine, as it would not be promotive of happiness. And I think had the king of Siam reasoned on his experience, he might have observed that fluids become more dense in proportion to their coldness; and being told that the climate of Holland was much colder than Siam, he might have perceived something in his experience to indicate the truth of the Dutch embassadors testimony.

61. Here again water was the thing spoken of as being in a different condition. The existence of the water was evident, not so the existence of God. A piece of ice might have been taken to the king, or the king to the ice. Could we do the same with the supernatural, I should think your reasoning more to the point.

62. In reply to par. 75, you say, "it is untrue that if we are to believe accounts of the supernatural we should be left to the guidance of less than one in a million, who profess to have seen the supernatural." Are there twenty persons in this country in the present age who have seen a supernatural being, or the like proportion in any other country? You say, "a majority of men give their testimony of the supernatural, using that word as I appear in the popular sense." I do not speak of belief and testimony as synonymous. Had I used the word testimony to express belief or hearsay, I should not have said, "we must be left to the guidance of less than one in a million who profess to have seen the supernatural," as I presume the general opinion of mankind as nearly as evident to me as to yourself.

63. You say, further, "the existence of the Antartic continent is proved by less than one in ten millions." Yet who doubts it?—Here what you call proof is the testimony of a witness, which may be proved true or false by an examination of the continent. But how can we examine the supernatural to prove the truth of the testimony? Where then is the parallel? And you ask, who doubts? as though that were a proof of its truth. If so, doubting will be a proof of falsehood. Then what becomes of the Mormon doctrine?

64. In par. 76 you say, "you know nothing whatever of the duty of a parent (or of God) to make the evidence of his existence strong and clear, (I added) in proportion as it was necessary to the happiness of his children, (par. 10.) If you really know nothing whatever of the reciprocal duties of parents and children, I wonder what rules of conduct you teach. Is doing as you would be done by (that is, making others happy as you desire them to make you happy) to be laid aside as false or useless? or is the duty or doing what is due to others for the purpose of making all happy to be one sided only as due to the parent from the child? My experience and reason teach otherwise. If the greatest good ought to prevail, it is the duty of parent and child (and I think God likewise) to promote it by every act in their power. But if the greatest good to all be not the proper object, what test can we have of right or wrong in any case?

65. In par. 77 you say, "you repeat that most of our knowledge of geography and geology is hearsay." Are knowledge and hearsay synonymous? Do I know God exists, when you say so? Will any one know he does not exist, when I deny it? You said, (par. 13,) speaking of testimony as evidence, "it is as good as any person on earth has or can have of geographic or geologic facts." This I denied, as they can examine both. Does the first quotation look like a repetition of the last?

66. The historical evidence which you advance as proof of God's existence is about the weakest evidence we have, as the facts and agents no longer exist which are necessary to prove the truth of the record. In geology, chemistry, &c., the facts do exist which are necessary to prove the truth of our testimony, always within the power of man to examine. Was it the same with the supernatural, I would not say that our belief in the God of the theologians is dependent on the professions of a few seers, who generally make a profitable business of their testimony. If God does govern the universe, and our belief of the fact is the most necessary to our happiness, why does not God make it the most evident? What do you seriously think of God's wisdom in letting the eternal happiness of mankind depend on their belief of the testimony of a few seers, to whom he has revealed himself? While the seers know the existence of God, those to whom they testify can only believe. "As the world wags" the believers pay, and the seers receive, which is quite a premium on seeing.

67. In par. 78 you have a curious way of proving the concurring of the testimony of mankind by additional examples of difference.

68. After saying the testimony of all mankind concurs in the existence of God, I wonder that you can cavil at my saying, "the basis of all credence in science are facts in nature which all may examine." Is not this like straining at gnats and swallowing camels? You say, further, the world is dependent for all its knowledge on the subject (of astronomy) upon the favored few astronomers who happened to be favored with telescopes and a knowledge of the higher branches of mathematics, as I unjustly pretend it is for its knowledge of God upon the seers. After distinguishing so clearly the difference between knowledge and opinion or belief, I wonder you can so frequently unintentionally confound them. If you have seen God, you know that he did exist. When you testify the fact to me, I only know that you told me so, but must believe or not, as it appears to me probable or not probable. Does not belief express probability, and knowledge certainty?

69. What would we have believed (not known) of God but from the testimony of the favored seers (you allude to in par. 21 "from Abraham to yourself") of marvelous visions seen most frequently alone, which speaks conviction to credulity. This reminds me forcibly of "Moore's" lines in the "Veil'd Prophet," in "Lalla Rookh," where he says:—

"Ye, too, believers of incredible creeds,
Whose faith enshrines the monsters that it breeds;
Who, bolder e'en than Nimrod, think to rise
By nonsense heap'd on nonsense to the skies.
Ye shall have miracles; aye, sound ones, too;
Heard, seen, attested, everything—but true.
Your preaching zealots, too, inspired to seek
One grace of meaning for the things they speak.
Your martyrs, ready to shed out their blood
For truth, too heavenly to be understood;
And your state priests, sole venders of the lore
That works salvation as on AVA's shore,
Where none but priests are privileged to trade,
In that best marble of which Gods are made.
They shall have mysteries; aye, precious stuff
For knaves to thrive by, mysteries enough—
Dark tangled doctrines, dark as fraud can weave,
Which simple votaries shall on trust receive;
While craftier, feign belief, till they believe
A heaven too you'd have, ye lords of dust,
A splendid paradise, pure souls, ye must.
That prophet, I'll sustain his holy call,
Who finds not heavens to suit the tastes of all—
Houris for boys, omniscience for sages,
And wings and glories for all ranks and ages.
Vain things—as lust or vanity inspires,
The heaven of each is but what each desires."

The picture appears to me so much like the priestcraft of the present age, save in the marble Gods, that I think I need urge no other excuse for its insertion.

70. You say, in par. 80, no man knows what is natural in the premises, except on the testimony of great numbers of witnesses.—Please inform me how much testimony makes knowledge, because I object to testimony as proof sufficient of the existence of God.—You argue as though I ought to object to testimony on cannibalism and image worship. In nature the things spoken of may be examined, the testimony tested. Not so in the supernatural. Do we not reasonably ask a better proof where false testimony and ignorance are so common? where we are first commanded to believe, as though we could obey or disobey at will, then to PAY for believing, and threatened with eternal misery as the consequence of non-compliance?

71. In reply to par. 81, I must leave you to define the difference between "the general agreement of mankind" and the "concurrent testimony" that God exists.

72. In reply to par. 82, I think my argument still good. If the present existence of God is to be proved by testimony, I fear you will have to supply the principal part of it yourself.

73. You say, in par. 83, "astronomy does not teach that the different parts of nature govern each other." Astronomy, you are aware, (if you know anything about it,) acknowledges the universality of their laws of attraction, by means of which all matter tends to concentrate at a common centre. Here I think I ought to acknowledge my ignorance of astronomy, as you have intimated the same, and particularly of your astronomy, of grammar, logic, mathematics, chemistry, &c., not being educated in science. When I first spoke of a discussion in answer to your public challenge, I thought it would be private, (not thinking what I might write would be worth printing;) that you would write out the affirmative at your leisure, which I would answer at my leisure. When some one called on me and questioned me on the subject, I told them the same. Though I would not make that a difficulty, if you preferred it in your paper. I mention this to show that a public discussion was not sought by me, though I feel rather benefitted by it than otherwise, and more firmly convinced than ever that truth does not need one half of the talent to sustain it that error does. But as you stated in par. 73, if such errors are from want of understanding, I had better give up discussion. I thought probably you desired to discontinue it, or to provoke me to. If you are tired of it, only say so, and the thing is done.

74. Astronomy may be considered as the boundary of natural philosophy. I was taught repulsion was a force which prevented the universal concentration of water by attraction. What Isaac Newton called attraction, Sir Richard Phillips called the transfer of motion. Both are but names for the mode in which matter acts. You ask, can I not see that the star that has no star beyond it can be attracted but one way? To what star do you allude? Better take our illustrations where we can best examine them. In the atmosphere the cold and heavy seeks an equilibrium with the warm and light. If attraction exclusively governed all things, where would be the tendency to equilibrium? Does not the lighter body revolve around the heavier? If two unequal weights are placed in a balance, does not the heavier govern the lighter? But this is the different parts of nature governing each other, which you say they do not. So I await the proof.

75. In reply to par. 84, I thought I had defined religion and revelation in the best and most popular manner. If not, I shall be happy to be better informed. The first verse of the Bible is an example of that which could not be discovered by human experience: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." Believers say it is true that the belief is promotive of their happiness, and thus it was revealed. But where it is written, "Now Moses kept the flock of Jethro, his father-in-law," I think you would call that history, and not revelation. Were a school teacher to say mathematics revealed here, I think you would have more reason to complain of his "English."

76. In reply to par. 85, how do you think white men first learned mathematics? Who first revealed it to them.

77. In par. 86, I am glad to find you are as much of a materialist as myself; that your spirits are tangible, natural, organic, material beings, not in any true sense supernatural, but only erroneously called so. Now if I am right in speaking of them as organic beings, must not their organization, however evanescent or durable, be subject to change? and, consequently, to decay, which denies their immortality? So that could you prove a world of spirits and a God, it would not prove the immortality of either. Is not indestructability the best proof we have of immortality? and matter in its elementary condition the best example of it? Can you define the supernatural so as to distinguish it from the natural? I think not, but shall be glad to learn.

78. From paragraphs 87 and 103 I am left to infer that you are the principal officer of God. And I suppose if I desire any business higher branches of mathematics, as I unjustly pretend it is for its knowledge of God upon the seers. After distinguishing so clearly the difference between knowledge and opinion or belief, I wonder you can so frequently unintentionally confound them. If you have seen God, you know that he did exist. When you testify the fact to me, I only know that you told me so, but must believe or not, as it appears to me probable or not probable. Does not belief express probability, and knowledge certainty?

69. What would we have believed (not known) of God but from the testimony of the favored seers (you allude to in par. 21 "from Abraham to yourself") of marvelous visions seen most frequently alone, which speaks conviction to credulity. This reminds me forcibly of "Moore's" lines in the "Veil'd Prophet," in "Lalla Rookh," where he says:—

"Ye, too, believers of incredible creeds,
Whose faith enshrines the monsters that it breeds;
Who, bolder e'en than Nimrod, think to rise
By nonsense heap'd on nonsense to the skies.
Ye shall have miracles; aye, sound ones, too;
Heard, seen, attested, everything—but true.
Your preaching zealots, too, inspired to seek
One grace of meaning for the things they speak.
Your martyrs, ready to shed out their blood
For truth, too heavenly to be understood;
And your state priests, sole venders of the lore
That works salvation as on Ava's shore,
Where none but priests are privileged to trade,
In that best marble of which Gods are made.
They shall have mysteries; aye, precious stuff
For knaves to thrive by, mysteries enough—
Dark tangled doctrines, dark as fraud can weave,
Which simple votaries shall on trust receive;
While craftier, feign belief, till they believe
A heaven too you'd have, ye lords of dust,
A splendid paradise, pure souls, ye must.
That prophet, I'll sustain his holy call,
Who finds not heavens to suit the tastes of all—
Houris for boys, omniscience for sages,
And wings and glories for all ranks and ages.
Vain things—as lust or vanity inspires,
The heaven of each is but what each desires."

The picture appears to me so much like the priestcraft of the present age, save in the marble Gods, that I think I need urge no other excuse for its insertion.

70. You say, in par. 80, no man knows what is natural in the premises, except on the testimony of great numbers of witnesses.—Please inform me how much testimony makes knowledge, because I object to testimony as proof sufficient of the existence of God.—You argue as though I ought to object to testimony on cannibalism and image worship. In nature the things spoken of may be examined, the testimony tested. Not so in the supernatural. Do we not reasonably ask a better proof where false testimony and ignorance are so common? where we are first commanded to believe, as though we could obey or disobey at will, then to PAY for believing, and threatened with eternal misery as the consequence of non-compliance?

71. In reply to par. 81, I must leave you to define the difference between "the general agreement of mankind" and the "concurrent testimony" that God exists.

72. In reply to par. 82, I think my argument still good. If the present existence of God is to be proved by testimony, I fear you will have to supply the principal part of it yourself.

73. You say, in par. 83, "astronomy does not teach that the different parts of nature govern each other." Astronomy, you are aware, (if you know anything about it,) acknowledges the universality of their laws of attraction, by means of which all matter tends to concentrate at a common centre. Here I think I ought to acknowledge my ignorance of astronomy, as you have intimated the same, and particularly of your astronomy, of grammar, logic, mathematics, chemistry, &c., not being educated in science. When I first spoke of a discussion in answer to your public challenge, I thought it would be private, (not thinking what I might write would be worth printing;) that you would write out the affirmative at your leisure, which I would answer at my leisure. When some one called on me and questioned me on the subject, I told them the same. Though I would not make that a difficulty, if you preferred it in your paper. I mention this to show that a public discussion was not sought by me, though I feel rather benefitted by it than otherwise, and more firmly convinced than ever that truth does not need one half of the talent to sustain it that error does. But as you stated in par. 73, if such errors are from want of understanding, I had better give up discussion. I thought probably you desired to discontinue it, or to provoke me to. If you are tired of it, only say so, and the thing is done.

74. Astronomy may be considered as the boundary of natural philosophy. I was taught repulsion was a force which prevented the universal concentration of water by attraction. What Isaac Newton called attraction, Sir Richard Phillips called the transfer of motion. Both are but names for the mode in which matter acts. You ask, can I not see that the star that has no star beyond it can be attracted but one way! To what star do you allude? Better take our illustrations where we can best examine them. In the atmosphere the cold and heavy seeks an equilibrium with the warm and light. If attraction exclusively governed all things, where would be the tendency to equilibrium? Does not the lighter body revolve around the heavier? If two unequal weights are placed in a balance, does not the heavier govern the lighter? But this is the different parts of nature governing each other, which you say they do not. So I await the proof.

75. In reply to par. 84, I thought I had defined religion and revelation in the best and most popular manner. If not, I shall be happy to be better informed. The first verse of the Bible is an example of that which could not be discovered by human experience: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." Believers say it is true that the belief is promotive of their happiness, and that it was revealed. But where it is written, "Now Moses kept the flock of Jethro, his father-in-law," I think you would call that history, and not revelation. Were a school teacher to say mathematics revealed here, I think you would have more reason to complain of his "English."

76. In reply to par. 85, how do you think white men first learned mathematics? Who first revealed it to them.

77. In par. 86, I am glad to find you are as much of a materialist as myself; that your spirits are tangible, natural, organic, material beings, not in any true sense supernatural, but only erroneously called so. Now if I am right in speaking of them as organic beings, must not their organization, however evanescent or durable, be subject to change? and, consequently, to decay, which denies their immortality? So that could you prove a world of spirits and a God, it would not prove the immortality of either. Is not indestructability the best proof we have of immortality? and matter in its elementary condition the best example of it? Can you define the supernatural so as to distinguish it from the natural? I think not, but shall be glad to learn.

78. From paragraphs 87 and 103 I am left to infer that you are the principal officer of God. And I suppose if I desire any business with the Almighty I ought to apply to you. But here the truth of the testimony cannot be proved, so I am left to conjecture the probability of its truth. In the Bible I think it says, "No man can see God and live." You do live, and you say you have seen God.—Again, "No man hath seen God at any time;" which denies your testimony that men have seen God. As to the probability, you are a man, not being infallible, may be deceived. You appeal to a vision which men equally learned with yourself cannot test the truth of, and when dreams and visions have so often been shown to be preceded or co-existent with disorders of the mind, I cannot think yours an exception. But admitting the vision true, you know it, I only believe it. Where is the justice in God giving you certain evidence of his existence and the majority of mankind only the doubtful, and requiring entire obedience from both? How shall we distinguish among visions the true from the false? I trust I am open to conviction, having no vested interests in conservative notions to sustain.

79. In reply to par. 88, you misquote me. I said, par. 18, "but if myriads of spirits exist in nature, why are they not more commonly seen?" I have seen plenty of evidence of electricity, but none of spirits, according to your description of them. Par. 86. Surely; for some of my friends might have seen them as well as you.

80. In reply to par. 89, again you misquote me. I said, par. 20, what example have we among the most intelligent beings of one governing the whole? You say, all example. I say, none. If you are right, the tendency of our growing in intelligence will be to a universal despotism, like the ideal heaven and God. If I am right, the diffusion of power in the government of mankind will be much in proportion to the diffusion of intelligence, which will not submit to and uphold despotism, but resist and destroy it. Republicanism, or public rule, is entirely against you. Your model is a universal monarchy.

81. Horses, elephants, bees and ants you speak of in par. 90 are but examples of companies with their leaders one of themselves, not a supernatural leader. They do not select their leaders from other species or those endowed with supernatural revelations. I wonder if their leaders "gum" them as ours do us.

82. I do not understand you when you say, par. 91, "a simple negative is a perfect answer to the interrogation, and yet no answer at all." I cannot see how an answer can be perfect, and yet no answer. I said God's object in appearing to an individual once in an age must be to produce conviction necessary to the happiness of the race, (which is a good purpose,) or for no good purpose. If happiness is the end, and belief and obedience the means, would not man's being convinced of this be promotive of accomplishment? When you have a message to deliver to your flock, do you think it better to trust it to one to tell the many, or to tell the many yourself? Can you deliver a message better than God? and does not God know that you cannot?

83. You say, par. 91, if I will name the particular time, possibly you may endeavor to tell the reason. I will name then those with which you may be presumed to be most familiar, the 11th and 12th in par. 97, and the vision spoken of in par. 103.

84. In par. 92 you say you have not offered martyrdom as evidence of truth. Again, when men give testimony of facts known to them, and suffer martyrdom rather than retract, they have given good evidence of the truth of their testimony. Is not martyrdom advanced as evidence of the truth of the testimony, consequently of the fact testified to?

85. In par. 93 I thank you for the correction. I used the word experience erroneously. I presume the Indians did not treat white men as liars before the men had first proved it, any more than children treat their parents as liars when told of things which the children have not experienced. So with the Indian ocean and the people of Madagascar, with their feet pointing to ours. The bulk of the experience of man is for it, not against it. The experience of the witnesses, not the believers of the testimony merely. But when you assert the existence of supernatural beings, your testimony cannot be proved as in the case of the Indian ocean and the people of Madacasgar there is no parallel, consequently no rule of inference can be applicable to both.

86. In par. 94 you say, that I think the universal testimony of mankind of a world of spirits may be false. If testimony is the statement of a witness, all must be witnesses in order to testify. If all are witnesses, infidels must testify against their experience. You add, "it is naturally possible, but not morally." How anything can be naturally and not morally impossible, I leave you to explain.

87. In reply to par. 95, I have read again the paragraphs referred to from 16 to 27, in which you say, "the world is a vast crowd of living witnesses of the supernatural, shamed down to silence by the atheistical notions of modern christianity." What notions you allude to as being atheistical I know not. You are the only one of the "vast crowd" I have known who says they have seen the supernatural. Now all those to which you refer who have witnessed the supernatural, can only give their opinions of the testimony of the witnessses. And yet you say, par. 95, "I have not offered opinions as proof." This perhaps you can explain; for, as you say, par. 92, conviction is not testimony.

88. In reply to par. 97, I have not Plutarch's Lives to refer to, but have examined the unauthenticated testimony of the writer of Exodus, chapt. 3, ver. 2: "And the angel of the Lord appeared unto him (Moses) in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush; and he looked, and the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed." (Angel, I am informed, signifies messenger, and Lord master.) The writer says, ver. 3: "And Moses said, I will now turn aside and see why the bush is not burnt." Considering Moses was a conjurer, it will not be difficult to conceive that he might have produced such an appearance. Conjuring and credulity are first rate companions for the working of wonders. Ver. 4: "And when the Lord saw that he turned aside to see, God called to him out of the midst of the bush, and said to him, Moses, Moses," &c. Now, first, the writer says, the angel of the Lord appeared to Moses, then God called out to Moses. Did the angel and God both appear to Moses? or did not the writer know which? How would such testimony be now received at present? God, ver. 6, is made to tell Moses (as though Moses did not know) that "he was the God of his father Abraham, Isaac and Jacob."

89. Ver. 8 God is made to say, I am come down to deliver the Israelites from the Egytians, and take them unto the place of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites and the Jebusites. Did not God know that there was plenty of land as good as the above nations occupied, which the Israelites might enjoy, without robbery and murder, two things strictly forbidden in the commandments, yet necessary here for the Israelites to occupy their God-given land? Murder and robbery condemned by commandment, encouraged by gift and commandment! Oh, theological consistency! thou art a jewel! though I would not wear thee for a throne! Ver. 21: "And when ye go ye shall not go empty." Murder and plunder, the world over, commanded by the great I AM! Believe it who can! Time and space prevent my further examination of the samples at present. If this is but a fair sample of the twelve thousand, they will be so many evidences of their devilish origin, not their divine, according to my judgment.

90. I am glad what I said on unknown causes, par. 24, pleased you. You say, par. 96, "my objection to the evidence of a God is not that there is any natural impossibility in it." You said before, with the Almighty I ought to apply to you. But here the truth of the testimony cannot be proved, so I am left to conjecture the probability of its truth. In the Bible I think it says, "No man can see God and live." You do live, and you say you have seen God.—Again, "No man hath seen God at any time;" which denies your testimony that men have seen God. As to the probability, you are a man, not being infallible, may be deceived. You appeal to a vision which men equally learned with yourself cannot test the truth of, and when dreams and visions have so often been shown to be preceded or co-existent with disorders of the mind, I cannot think yours an exception. But admitting the vision true, you know it, I only believe it. Where is the justice in God giving you certain evidence of his existence and the majority of mankind only the doubtful, and requiring entire obedience from both? How shall we distinguish among visions the true from the false? I trust I am open to conviction, having no vested interests in conservative notions to sustain.

79. In reply to par. 88, you misquote me. I said, par. 18, "but if myriads of spirits exist in nature, why are they not more commonly seen?" I have seen plenty of evidence of electricity, but none of spirits, according to your description of them. Par. 86. Surely; for some of my friends might have seen them as well as you.

80. In reply to par. 89, again you misquote me. I said, par. 20, what example have we among the most intelligent beings of one governing the whole? You say, all example. I say, none. If you are right, the tendency of our growing in intelligence will be to a universal despotism, like the ideal heaven and God. If I am right, the diffusion of power in the government of mankind will be much in proportion to the diffusion of intelligence, which will not submit to and uphold despotism, but resist and destroy it. Republicanism, or public rule, is entirely against you. Your model is a universal monarchy.

81. Horses, elephants, bees and ants you speak of in par. 90 are but examples of companies with their leaders one of themselves, not a supernatural leader. They do not select their leaders from other species or those endowed with supernatural revelations. I wonder if their leaders "gum" them as ours do us.

82. I do not understand you when you say, par. 91, "a simple negative is a perfect answer to the interrogation, and yet no answer at all." I cannot see how an answer can be perfect, and yet no answer. I said God's object in appearing to an individual once in an age must be to produce conviction necessary to the happiness of the race, (which is a good purpose,) or for no good purpose. If happiness is the end, and belief and obedience the means, would not man's being convinced of this be promotive of accomplishment? When you have a message to deliver to your flock, do you think it better to trust it to one to tell the many, or to tell the many yourself? Can you deliver a message better than God? and does not God know that you cannot?

83. You say, par. 91, if I will name the particular time, possibly you may endeavor to tell the reason. I will name then those with which you may be presumed to be most familiar, the 11th and 12th in par. 97, and the vision spoken of in par. 103.

84. In par. 92 you say you have not offered martyrdom as evidence of truth. Again, when men give testimony of facts known to them, and suffer martyrdom rather than retract, they have given good evidence of the truth of their testimony. Is not martyrdom advanced as evidence of the truth of the testimony, consequently of the fact testified to?

85. In par. 93 I thank you for the correction. I used the word experience erroneously. I presume the Indians did not treat white men as liars before the men had first proved it, any more than children treat their parents as liars when told of things which the children have not experienced. So with the Indian ocean and the people of Madagascar, with their feet pointing to ours. The bulk of the experience of man is for it, not against it. The experience of the witnesses, not the believers of the testimony merely. But when you assert the existence of supernatural beings, your testimony cannot be proved as in the case of the Indian ocean and the people of Madacasgar there is no parallel, consequently no rule of inference can be applicable to both.

86. In par. 94 you say, that I think the universal testimony of mankind of a world of spirits may be false. If testimony is the statement of a witness, all must be witnesses in order to testify. If all are witnesses, infidels must testify against their experience. You add, "it is naturally possible, but not morally." How anything can be naturally and not morally impossible, I leave you to explain.

87. In reply to par. 95, I have read again the paragraphs referred to from 16 to 27, in which you say, "the world is a vast crowd of living witnesses of the supernatural, shamed down to silence by the atheistical notions of modern christianity." What notions you include to as being atheistical I know not. You are the only one of the "vast crowd" I have known who says they have seen the supernatural. Now all those to which you refer who have witnessed the supernatural, can only give their opinions of the testimony of the witnessses. And yet you say, par. 95, "I have not offered opinions as proof." This perhaps you can explain: for, as you say, par. 92, conviction is not testimony.

88. In reply to par. 97, I have not Plutarch's Lives to refer to, but have examined the unauthenticated testimony of the writer of Exodus, chapt. 3, ver. 2: "And the angel of the Lord appeared unto him (Moses) in a flame of fire out of the midst of a bush; and he looked, and the bush burned with fire, and the bush was not consumed." (Angel, I am informed, signifies messenger, and Lord master.) The writer says, ver. 3: "And Moses said, I will now turn aside and see why the bush is not burnt." Considering Moses was a conjurer, it will not be difficult to conceive that he might have produced such an appearance. Conjuring and credulity are first rate companions for the working of wonders. Ver. 4: "And when the Lord saw that he turned aside to see, God called to him out of the midst of the bush, and said to him, Moses, Moses," &c. Now, first, the writer says, the angel of the Lord appeared to Moses, then God called out to Moses. Did the angel and God both appear to Moses? or did not the writer know which? How would such testimony be now received at present? God, ver. 6, is made to tell Moses (as though Moses did not know) that "he was the God of his father Abraham, Isaac and Jacob."

89. Ver. 8 God is made to say, I am come down to deliver the Israelites from the Egytians, and take them unto the place of the Canaanites, the Hittites, the Amorites and the Jebusites. Did not God know that there was plenty of land as good as the above nations occupied, which the Israelites might enjoy, without robbery and murder, two things strictly forbidden in the commandments, yet necessary here for the Israelites to occupy their God-given land? Murder and robbery condemned by commandment, encouraged by gift and commandment! Oh, theological consistency! thou art a jewel! though I would not wear thee for a throne! Ver. 21: "And when ye go ye shall not go empty." Murder and plunder, the world over, commanded by the great I AM! Believe it who can! Time and space prevent my further examination of the samples at present. If this is but a fair sample of the twelve thousand, they will be so many evidences of their devilish origin, not their divine, according to my judgment.

90. I am glad what I said on unknown causes, par. 24, pleased you. You say, par. 96, "my objection to the evidence of a God is not that there is any natural impossibility in it." You said before, par. 94, "but no man's experience can prove that an object does not exist, and reason only applies to facts ascertained or supposed, and cannot prove either that anything does or does not exist." What reason is there in your remark, then, that my objection to the evidence of a God is not that there is any natural impossibility in it? when you must allow that I could no more prove that there is no God in nature, than that there is no man in the moon? I simply denied the fact and the truth of the evidence by which you sought to sustain it, and endeavored to show that it was not conclusive to prove the truth of what you affirm.

91. Par. 99 I consider answered in paragraphs 60 and 61.

92. In reply to par. 100, Utilitarians are a class of reformers of whom Jeremy Bentham was one of the principal, who considered the use of anything for promoting the happiness of all the best test of its value in politics, morals or science. They observe consequences rather than commands, considering experience and reason more efficient in establishing beneficial truths than all the commands that ever issued from Pope, Priest, Monarch or President.—Will you oblige me with a few of the "facts" you speak of "in religion," which you say you "take as you find." I was not aware that I said a thing was contrary to reason and experience, because new to me.

93. In par. 101 you again argue as though the existence of God should be proved by the same kind of testimony that would suffice to prove the existence of St. Petersburg and the Pope. As I said before, in the latter cases the testimony admits of proof, by comparison with the things spoken of. Not so in the former. And you seriously tell me "I cannot introduce one fact to prove it." To prove what? a negative! after telling me, "no man's experience can prove that an object does not exist?" So much for consistency.

94. In reply to par. 102, I asked in par. 26, "who has seen the Lord of the universe in the exercise of his power? (not authority.) And you endeavor to show a parallel case in the queen of Great Britain. Is the queen of Great Britain the whole governing force of Great Britain? Are not the lords, commons, the army and navy, police, militia, &c., all parts of the governing force? Is God only one among many of the governors of the universe? What parallel there is between God and the queen, I leave you to establish further before I endeavor to refute it.

95. In reply to par. 103, when I have taken the most unpopular side of the most impopular question, is it probable that I should suspect your tenderness in making an unpopular affirmation? I assure you it never entered my head. I gave you credit for more "courage," and "self-esteem," and less "fear" and "love of approbation" than that, speaking phrenologically. You beg to remind me the discussion does not give me the license of such a question. I take issue. How, without evidence, could I believe that God did govern the universe? Could you prove I was a tailor without my being seen at work? You only supplied the testimony that God had been seen, but not governing the universe, which you affirmed. And as I wish things done in order, I asked the proof which was wanting to sustain it, which you have supplied. And now I wish to examine your testimony, when and where you saw God, what he was like, what you call governing the universe, how he did it, and all the evidence necessary to ensure a perception or conviction of the fact.

96. In reply to par. 104, when you affirm that doubting is proof positive of insanity, I shall take issue, that being my question.—You tell me, "atheists have long had credit for being great reasoners." I hope they will try to deserve it. You add, "it is only because their opponents dare not reason." What cowards you think the religionists. But, like the Catholics, we have now to enter the lists on a new field, I trust "it will be a fair one, and no favor." Further, you add, we in our turn flinch from the ordinary rules of evidence. Only when what you call the rules of evidence are more promotive of error than truth. Don't brag till you've beat, nor accuse others of your own weakness. Coward often cries coward first, to avoid suspicion.

97. As an offset to par. 105, with me such words as knowledge, hearsay, testimony, &c., are not synonymous, nor power and authority either.

98. As a general reply to your first and third, you have not even defined distinctly the supernatural. You said, par. 86, you are not aware that in any true sense spirits are supernatural. You have only offered historic testimony as proof, which is about the weakest evidence to prove ordinary things, and cannot prove the existence of God, as the testimony cannot be proved to be true. You have supplied the deficient testimony yourself, which cannot be fairly admitted, as you are an interested witness. Your Bible testimony is not authenticated, and is connected with such scenes of wholesale robbery and murder pretended to be commanded by God, who said, "thou shalt not steal," and "thou shalt not commit murder," and "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." You have not advanced one fact indicative of the existence of the supernatural, and, consequently, no induction therefrom. You have advanced only as evidence that which will sustain falsehood as well as truth, viz.: historic testimony. And with your great advantage of learning, talent and practice, I feel sure, had you any good evidence to advance, it would not be found wanting. And I am sorry to have to complain of bad language in place of good argument, and quotations altered to suit your arguments, and omissions which weaken and distort the meaning. You say I have not shown the fallacy in mass or detail. I have not endeavored to make any answer to it. (Our readers must decide.) I have introduced no opposing evidence, which you told me a negative does not admit of. I think I have refuted some of your fallacies, shown the degenerating tendency of your assumptions, mentally and morally, the inconsistency and incompleteness of your testimony. And, if the question has been better answered a thousand times before, I can only regret you have not been a thousand times convinced of its truth. But I am happy in finding one minister in my life willing and able to discuss his creed. If I have spoken disrespectful, it is of that which I think false, and cannot respect. When convinced of my error I will atone, for I do not believe we can follow falsehood without sacrifice, nor truth without benefit. Yours sincerely for the truth,

EDWIN BURGESS.

☞ Notwithstanding all the fuss we make about "Equality" in this country, we are sadly humbugged on the subject. The fact is, and we can all see it,—theoretically speaking, all men in good society, are endowed with certain inalienable rights, except poor men. All men who do not pay their honest debts are great scamps, except those who cheat on a large scale. All men are born free and equal except negroes, Indians,, and foreigners. All men are great sinners, except those who belong to the church. All men are allowed to think and speak freely, except those who are not orthodox. All men are gentlemen, except those who work for a living. All well dressed and accomplished women are ladies, except factory and servant girls.—Ex. paper.

Death of the Righteous.—I once met on the sea shore, said the Eastern poet Sadi, a pious man who had been attacked by a tiger, and was horribly mutilated. He was dying, and suffering dreadful agonies. Nevertheless his features were calm and serene, and his physical pain seemed to be vanished by the purity of his soul. "Great God," said he, "I thank thee, that I am only suffering from the fangs of the tiger, and not of remorse."—Ex. paper.

par. 94, "but no man's experience can prove that an object does not exist, and reason only applies to facts ascertained or supposed, and cannot prove either that anything does or does not exist." What reason is there in your remark, then, that my objection to the evidence of a God is not that there is any natural impossibility in it? when you must allow that I could no more prove that there is no God in nature, than that there is no man in the moon? I simply denied the fact and the truth of the evidence by which you sought to sustain it, and endeavored to show that it was not conclusive to prove the truth of what you affirm.

91. Par. 99 I consider answered in paragraphs 60 and 61.

92. In reply to par. 100. Utilitarians are a class of reformers of whom Jeremy Bentham was one of the principal, who considered the use of anything for promoting the happiness of all the best test of its value in politics, morals or science. They observe consequences rather than commands, considering experience and reason more efficient in establishing beneficial truths than all the commands that ever issued from Pope, Priest, Monarch or President.—Will you oblige me with a few of the "facts" you speak of "in religion," which you say you "take as you find." I was not aware that I said a thing was contrary to reason and experience, because new to me.

93. In par. 101 you again argue as though the existence of God should be proved by the same kind of testimony that would suffice to prove the existence of St. Petersburg and the Pope. As I said before, in the latter cases the testimony admits of proof, by comparison with the things spoken of. Not so in the former. And you seriously tell me "I cannot introduce one fact to prove it." To prove what? a negative! after telling me, "no man's experience can prove that an object does not exist?" So much for consistency.

94. In reply to par. 102. I asked in par. 26, "who has seen the Lord of the universe in the exercise of his power? (not authority.) And you endeavor to show a parallel case in the queen of Great Britain. Is the queen of Great Britain the whole governing force of Great Britain? Are not the lords, commons, the army and navy, police, militia, &c., all parts of the governing force? Is God only one among many of the governors of the universe? What parallel there is between God and the queen, I leave you to establish further before I endeavor to refute it.

95. In reply to par. 103, when I have taken the most unpopular side of the most unpopular question, is it probable that I should suspect your tenderness in making an unpopular affirmation? I assure you it never entered my head. I gave you credit for more "courage," and "self-esteem," and less "fear" and "love of approbation" than that, speaking phrenologically. You beg to remind me the discussion does not give me the license of such a question. I take issue. How, without evidence, could I believe that God did govern the universe? Could you prove I was a tailor without my being seen at work? You only supplied the testimony that God had been seen, but not governing the universe, which you affirmed. And as I wish things done in order, I asked the proof which was wanting to sustain it, which you have supplied. And now I wish to examine your testimony, when and where you saw God, what he was like, what you call governing the universe, how he did it, and all the evidence necessary to ensure a perception or conviction of the fact.

96. In reply to par. 104, when you affirm that doubting is proof positive of insanity, I shall take issue, that being my question.—You tell me, "atheists have long had credit for being great reasoners." I hope they will try to deserve it. You add, "it is only because their opponents dare not reason." What cowards you think the religionists. But, like the Catholics, we have now to enter the lists on a new field, I trust "it will be a fair one, and no favor." Further, you add, we in our turn flinch from the ordinary rules of evidence. Only when what you call the rules of evidence are more promotive of error than truth. Don't brag till you've beat, nor accuse others of your own weakness. Coward often cries coward first, to avoid suspicion.

97. As an offset to par. 105, with me such words as knowledge, hearsay, testimony, &c., are not synonymous, nor power and authority either.

98. As a general reply to your first and third, you have not even defined distinctly the supernatural. You said, par. 86, you are not aware that in any true sense spirits are supernatural. You have only offered historic testimony as proof, which is about the weakest evidence to prove ordinary things, and cannot prove the existence of God, as the testimony cannot be proved to be true. You have supplied the deficient testimony yourself, which cannot be fairly admitted, as you are an interested witness. Your Bible testimony is not authenticated, and is connected with such scenes of wholesale robbery and murder pretended to be commanded by God, who said, "thou shalt not steal," and "thou shalt not commit murder," and "thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." You have not advanced one fact indicative of the existence of the supernatural, and, consequently, no induction therefrom. You have advanced only as evidence that which will sustain falsehood as well as truth, viz.: historic testimony. And with your great advantage of learning, talent and practice, I feel sure, had you any good evidence to advance, it would not be found wanting. And I am sorry to have to complain of bad language in place of good argument, and quotations altered to suit your arguments, and omissions which weaken and distort the meaning. You say I have not shown the fallacy in mass or detail. I have not endeavored to make any answer to it. (Our readers must decide.) I have introduced no opposing evidence, which you told me a negative does not admit of. I think I have refuted some of your fallacies, shown the degenerating tendency of your assumptions, mentally and morally, the inconsistency and incompleteness of your testimony. And, if the question has been better answered a thousand times before, I can only regret you have not been a thousand times convinced of its truth. But I am happy in finding one minister in my life willing and able to discuss his creed. If I have spoken disrespectful, it is of that which I think false, and cannot respect. When convinced of my error I will atone, for I do not believe we can follow falsehood without sacrifice, nor truth without benefit. Yours sincerely for the truth,

EDWIN BURGESS.

☞ Notwithstanding all the fuss we make about "Equally" in this country, we are sadly humbugged on the subject. The fact is, and we can all see it,—theoretically speaking, all men in good society, are endowed with certain inalienable rights, except poor men. All men who do not pay their honest debts are great scamps, except those who cheat on a large scale. All men are born free and equal except negroes, Indians, and foreigners. All men are great sinners, except those who belong to the church. All men are allowed to think and speak freely, except those who are not orthodox. All men are gentlemen, except those who work for a living. All well dressed and accomplished women are ladies, except factory and servant girls.—Ex. paper.

Death of the Righteous.—I once met on the sea shore, said the Eastern poet Sadi, a pious man who had been attacked by a tiger, and was horribly mutilated. He was dying, and suffering dreadful agonies. Nevertheless his features were calm and serene, and his physical pain seemed to be vanished by the purity of his soul. "Great God," said he, "I thank thee, that I am only suffering from the fangs of the tiger, and not of remorse."—Ex. paper.

A GENERAL EPISTLE.

JEHIEL AND SAMUEL, SERVANTS OF GOD AND WITNESSES OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST, unto the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints scattered abroad, greeting:—

DEARLY BELOVED,—We have you in continual remembrance before God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ. Your past work of faith and labor of love have by no means been forgotten by us.—Since we have commenced to travel together in the State of Michigan the preaching of the word has had a salutary effect, and there has been constant accession to the church, and more have given their names to be baptized at our next meeting. The field is truly white for the harvest, but laborers are few. Who of the Seventies or Elders will, at this time, thrust in the sickle and reap? and who will so order his life as to correspond with the doctrine, and thereby remove the great amount of prejudice brought upon the minds of many an honest soul by the unwise course taken by many men of knowledge without the gift of wisdom? Therefore, who of you holding the priesthood of God, will respond to our call and step into the field and labor by precept and example, to bring about the greatest and most glorious work ever intrusted to mortal man? Who of you does not look with fondest expectation for the answer of the prayer taught by our Savior? (Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.) Who expects to stand when he appears without sin unto salvation, when the kingdoms of this world become the property of the saints of the most high God? Then, brethren, who will prove himself worthy? Who will fight the good fight of faith, that he may receive the reward of the faithful?

Whoever will prove himself worthy, let him arise lift up his voice, and spare not. Call upon the nations of the earth, old and young, rich and poor, bond and free, saying, Prepare yourselvs for the great day of the Lord. For if we, who are men in the flesh, holding the anthoity of the priesthood, call upon you to repent and you hate us, what will you do when the thunders shall utter their voices from the ends of the earth? speaking to the ears of all that live, saying, Repent and prepare for the great day of the Lord. Yea, and again, when the lightnings shall speak from the east unto the west, and shall utter forth their voices unto all that live, and make the ears of all tingle, saying, Repent ye, for the great day of the Lord is come. Wherefore, dearly beloved, we would say unto you, let him that has ears to hear, and a susceptibility to feel the importance of this our call, arise, gird up your loins, for, behold, it shall come to pass, saith the Lord, that my servants shall be sent forth to the north and to the south, to the east and the west; and even now let him that labors for God teach them that shall be converted to gather unto Voree, as says the prophet James, bringing with them their gold and their silver, their copper, their brass, their iron; with all the trees whose fruit is good for man, or pleasing to the eye; with all their flocks and herds to build up and beautify the city and Temple of our God, and make the place of his feet glorious. For I will have a house built unto me there of stone, saith the Lord, wherein I will show myself by many mighty works. Then shall it be known who has magnified his priesthood, who has been faithful over a few things, and the same shall be ruler over many.

We would therefore exhort you to give heed to this our call; give all diligence to gather yourselves together; for it is written, gather my saints together who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice. And to our brethren of the quorum of the Twelve. we exhort you to go forth as a living bough into the field and let your voices be heard in every village, city and country on this side of the waters of the great deep; for we feel an assurance that the day is not far distant when the towns and cities of Europe, as also the islands of the sea, and the same where, in other days, apostles and prophets have freely poured out their life's blood for the gospel of the Son of God, must hear the gospel again. And, dear brethren, is it really a fact that to our hands is committed this great treasure? Ah! if so, is it not treasure in earthen vessels, liable to be broken? Oh, dear brethren, we have been permitted to see the greatness of this work through a glass darkly, and it hath at times made us rejoice in hope of the day when we shall inspect this work in the light of that true and unclouded day that is so eventful to the present generation; for as the day when the angel visited Lot in the city of Sodom was to that people a momentous crisis, our ministry to the present generation is an important era. Yes, too much so to be trifled with. Let us therefore redeem if possible our misspent time, and from this time until the coming of Christ let not our arm become cankered with rust. O refuse not this call! despise not our invitation! for we know that all things are possible with God, and he has said that the kingdom and dominion under the whole heavens should be given to the saints of the most high God, and they shall rejoice on the earth, and then we shall have a full reward. Amen.

Bath Mills, Dec. 27th, 1848.

THE PHONETIC MAGAZINE.

This is a monthly of 24 pages, published in Cincinnati, O., by our friend Elias Longley—and devoted principally to the language reform. In this new system of spelling, writing, and printing the English language, there are forty letters or characters used instead of twenty six, as in our alphabet. These consist of the alphabet, and fourteen new characters added—making a character, or letter for every sound in the English language, which, as has been ascertained, consists of forty. Every word then that sounds alike is spelt alike; and not only so, but spelt in the shortest and simplest possible manner.

We have examined the subject somewhat thoroughly, and have no hesitancy in saying that it is one of the greatest improvements of the age, and have but little doubt that in ten years from now it will be universally adopted wherever the English langnage is used.

According to the old system, or the one now in use, it takes years for a child to learn to read with proficiency—and many more before he can spell correctly. No one knows how to spell a word he has heard, but never seen written; and no one knows with certainty how to pronounce a word which he sees, but has never heard pronounced. Foreigners and uneducated persons are continually making the most ludicrous mistakes in pronunciation, from being misled in the spelling.

Every one will naturally spell every word just as it is pronounced; and no one need hesitate as to the proper pronunciation of any word that may meet his eye. Foreigners nor others will never be led into any errors of pronunciation; for, having once learned the alphabet, they can pronounce any word. "Missionaries or others, may write or print any language immediately on hearing it spoken, although they may not understand a word of it; and may read it so that those familiar with the language will understand it; and all the hard words in geographies and foreign travels will be as simple as a, b, c."

This work printed chiefly in the phonotypic characters, and according to the new method of spelling; but you will be able to read it with facility in half an hour, with the help of the alphabet, which is given in each No. We cordially recommend this work to the attention of our friends. Get it by all means, if you are able, and examine it, and you will soon see a beauty and simplicity about the system, which you never dreamed of, and which can hardly fail to secure your most hearty approbation.—Western Universalist.

A GENERAL EPISTLE.

JEHIEL AND SAMUEL, SERVANTS OF GOD AND WITNESSES OF THE LORD JESUS CHRIST, unto the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints scattered abroad, greeting:—

DEARLY BELOVED,—We have you in continual remembrance before God the Father, and our Lord Jesus Christ. Your past work of faith and labor of love have by no means been forgotten by us.—Since we have commenced to travel together in the State of Michigan the preaching of the word has had a salutary effect, and there has been constant accession to the church, and more have given their names to be baptized at our next meeting. The field is truly white for the harvest, but laborers are few. Who of the Seventies or Elders will, at this time, thrust in the sickle and reap? and who will so order his life as to correspond with the doctrine, and thereby remove the great amount of prejudice brought upon the minds of many an honest soul by the unwise course taken by many men of knowledge without the gift of wisdom? Therefore, who of you holding the priesthood of God, will respond to our call and step into the field and labor by precept and example, to bring about the greatest and most glorious work ever intrusted to mortal man? Who of you does not look with fondest expectation for the answer of the prayer taught by our Savior? (Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.) Who expects to stand when he appears without sin unto salvation, when the kingdoms of this world become the property of the saints of the most high God? Then, brethren, who will prove himself worthy? Who will fight the good fight of faith, that he may receive the reward of the faithful?

Whoever will prove himself worthy, let him arise lift up his voice, and spare not. Call upon the nations of the earth, old and young, rich and poor, bond and free, saying, Prepare yourselvs for the great day of the Lord. For if we, who are men in the flesh, holding the anthoity of the priesthood, call upon you to repent and you hate us, what will you do when the thunders shall utter their voices from the ends of the earth? speaking to the ears of all that live, saying, Repent and prepare for the great day of the Lord. Yea, and again, when the lightnings shall speak from the east unto the west, and shall utter forth their voices unto all that live, and make the ears of all tingle, saying, Repent ye, for the great day of the Lord is come. Wherefore, dearly beloved, we would say unto you, let him that has ears to hear, and a susceptibility to feel the importance of this our call, arise, gird up your loins, for, behold, it shall come to pass, saith the Lord, that my servants shall be sent forth to the north and to the south, to the east and the west; and even now let him that labors for God teach them that shall be converted to gather unto Voree, as says the prophet James, bringing with them their gold and their silver, their copper, their brass, their iron; with all the trees whose fruit is good for man, or pleasing to the eye; with all their flocks and herds to build up and beautify the city and Temple of our God, and make the place of his feet glorious. For I will have a house built unto me there of stone, saith the Lord, wherein I will show myself by many mighty works. Then shall it be known who has magnified his priesthood, who has been faithful over a few things, and the same shall be ruler over many.

We would therefore exhort you to give heed to this our call; give all diligence to gather yourselves together; for it is written, gather my saints together who have made a covenant with me by sacrifice. And to our brethren of the quorum of the Twelve. we exhort you to go forth as a living bough into the field and let your voices be heard in every village, city and country on this side of the waters of the great deep; for we feel an assurance that the day is not far distant when the towns and cities of Europe, as also the islands of the sea, and the same where, in other days, apostles and prophets have freely poured out their life's blood for the gospel of the Son of God, must hear the gospel again. And, dear brethren, is it really a fact that to our hands is committed this great treasure? Ah! if so, is it not treasure in earthen vessels, liable to be broken? Oh, dear brethren, we have been permitted to see the greatness of this work through a glass darkly, and it hath at times made us rejoice in hope of the day when we shall inspect this work in the light of that true and unclouded day that is so eventful to the present generation; for as the day when the angel visited Lot in the city of Sodom was to that people a momentous crisis, our ministry to the present generation is an important era. Yes, too much so to be trifled with. Let us therefore redeem if possible our misspent time, and from this time until the coming of Christ let not our arm become cankered with rust. O refuse not this call! despise not our invitation! for we know that all things are possible with God, and he has said that the kingdom and dominion under the whole heavens should be given to the saints of the most high God, and they shall rejoice on the earth, and then we shall have a full reward. Amen.

Bath Mills, Dec. 27th, 1848.

THE PHONETIC MAGAZINE.

This is a monthly of 24 pages, published in Cincinnati, O., by our friend Elias Longley—and devoted principally to the language reform. In this new system of spelling, writing, and printing the English language, there are forty letters or characters used instead of twenty six, as in our alphabet. These consist of the alphabet, and fourteen new characters added—making a character, or letter for every sound in the English language, which, as has been ascertained, consists of forty. Every word then that sounds alike is spelt alike; and not only so, but spelt in the shortest and simplest possible manner.

We have examined the subject somewhat thoroughly, and have no hesitancy in saying that it is one of the greatest improvements of the age, and have but little doubt that in ten years from now it will be universally adopted wherever the English langnage is used.

According to the old system, or the one now in use, it takes years for a child to learn to read with proficiency—and many more before he can spell correctly. No one knows how to spell a word he has heard, but never seen written; and no one knows with certainty how to pronounce a word which he sees, but has never heard pronounced. Foreigners and uneducated persons are continually making the most ludicrous mistakes in pronunciation, from being misled in the spelling.

Every one will naturally spell every word just as it is pronounced; and no one need hesitate as to the proper pronunciation of any word that may meet his eye. Foreigners nor others will never be led into any errors of pronunciation; for, having once learned the alphabet, they can pronounce any word. "Missionaries or others, may write or print any language immediately on hearing it spoken, although they may not understand a word of it; and may read it so that those familiar with the language will understand it; and all the hard words in geographies and foreign travels will be as simple as a, b, c."

This work printed chiefly in the phonotypic characters, and according to the new method of spelling; but you will be able to read it with facility in half an hour, with the help of the alphabet, which is given in each No. We cordially recommend this work to the attention of our friends. Get it by all means, if you are able, and examine it, and you will soon see a beauty and simplicity about the system, which you never dreamed of, and which can hardly fail to secure your most hearty approbation.—Western Universalist.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 44.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, JAN. 18, 1849. [WHOLE No. 108.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

HUMAN HYDROPHOBIA.

One could almost suppose that hydrophobia, in a certain modified form, was an endemic in human society, as well as among dogs.—The lower portions of the community, in particular, seem to consider themselves as having a prescriptive right to suffer from it. The diagnosis of the malady in the human patient does not point to a catastrophe altogether so abrupt and tragical as in the canine, but it is attended by circumstances quite as sinister. Dirty faces, dirty clothes, dirty houses, dirt all over, are the symptoms which most forcibly arrest attention; and yet, bad as these are, we know that there are worse effects underneath the surface, for where physical dirt goes, there also resides moral degradation.

We know of no country in Europe where there is so little disposition on the part of the people, as in ours, to give themselves even that exhilarating kind of ablution which is derived from bathing.—At the present season, the traveler on the continent finds the rivers alive with swimmers; and we remember them swimming down the Loire to Nantes, observing the steamer frequently surrounded, more especially when nearing the great manufacturing city, with crowds of black heads and white shoulders. In Russia, where the people have not got beyond the middle ages, the lower classes do not yet know the use of a shirt, but wear it above their trowsers, in the form of a kilt. They have not, however, abandoned the bath. Toward the end of the week, they feel a prickly and uncomfortable sensation in their skin, and at length rush eagerly into the hot steam, and boiling out the impurities of the preceding six days, begin life again with new vigor. In summer they do not wait for days and times, but merely get up an hour earlier, and dash into the nearest pond or river. In our refined country, dirt causes no uneasiness. It is allowed to harden upon the skin, choke up the pores, and contaminate the whole being, moral and physical. It blunts the senses to such a degree, that the husband does not detect it in the wife, nor the mother in the child. All are alike. All have forfeited the dignity of human nature, and sunk into a lower scale of animal existence.

While mentioning the custom that prevails in Russia, we are struck with the proof afforded there of the connection between moral and physical cleanliness. The state of the bath house of the hamlet is an unfailing index to the character and position of the inhabitants. If it is neat and trim, the people are good and happy, and their feudal lord kind and considerate; if poor and ruinous, there is tyranny on the one hand, misery on the other, and depravity on both.

In respect of its contagiousness, or inclination to spread, the human malady seems not a bit behind the canine, although certainly the immediate symptoms are less virulent. It has been implied that the stain of dirt extends from the skin over his life and conversation. But it does more than that: it contaminates his family; it daubs his neighbors; it forms a nucleus, round which impurity gathers, and strengthens, and spreads. Insignificant at first in itself, it becomes a social evil of importance. It is one of the units which gives its character to the aggregate; and, rising out of a thing which at first was only scorned from good taste, shunned from individual repugnance, or laughed at out of sheer folly, we see spreading over the land, vice, misery, pestilence, and death. Yet we observe the symptoms of this formidable disease with a glassy and indifferent eye, while those of canine hydrophobia inspire us with horror and alarm, and drive us to dog murder in self-defence.

The dread of water is seen in the human subject in another form, in which it is attended by a different class of effects—different, but not very unremotely allied to the preceding. Almost everywhere the use of water as a beverage appears to be felt as a sort of original doom, designed as a penalty for the sins of mankind; and everywhere are efforts made to disguise it in some way, so that the patient may be made to believe that he is swallowing something else. Much ingenuity has been expended upon this curious process; but in certain conditions of society it seems to be of little consequence what taste is superadded, or by what means the superaddition is made. The grand thing is transmogrification. Among the poorer classes in China, a decoction of cabbage leaves is felt as a relief; among the upper, the tincture of the more elegant tea leaf is employed. In the western world, the refuse of fruit and grain, subjected to fermentation and distilling, is brought into requisition.—The Norman converts his good cider into execrable brandy; the other French maltreat their wine in a similar way; in Russia, the sickening quass becomes the maddening votki; in Scotland, honest two penny is sublimated into whiskey; and so on, throughout the whole habitable world. That this sort of hydrophobia is merely a modification of the other, is established by the fact, that they who most abhor water as a cleanser, abhor it most as a drink.—A cleanly person will frequently condescend to take a draught of the pure element with his meals; but you never saw a man with a dirty face who would not greatly prefer some poisonous and ill tasting compound. At the tables of the upper classes you find the water karaff most in demand; at those of the lower classes, the beer jug. The quality of the beer is of no consequence. We never knew it so freely drank in our own neighborhood as at a time (some twenty years ago) when the sole effect of the worthy brewer's manufacture was declared to be to spoil the water. Even among the abstainers from these deleterious liquors, there are many who must still have their water disguised; hence their extensive patronage of lemonade, ginger beer, and other weak, though comparatively innocuous mixtures. The whole affair reminds us of a literary work published in London nearly twenty years ago, by a Bond street hair dresser, which gave a sort of catalogue resume of the various materials used for lathering the beard—all except one; for the magnanimous barber scorned to mention—soap.

The connection between the worst symptoms of the two kinds of hydrophobia we have described needs little illustration. The dirtier an individual is in his person, family, house, neighborhood, the

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 44.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, JAN. 18, 1849. [WHOLE No. 108.

GOSPEL HERALD.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

HUMAN HYDROPHOBIA.

One could almost suppose that hydrophobia, in a certain modified form, was an endemic in human society, as well as among dogs. The lower portions of the community, in particular, seem to consider themselves as having a prescriptive right to suffer from it. The diagnosis of the malady in the human patient does not point to a catastrophe altogether so abrupt and tragical as in the canine, but it is attended by circumstances quite as sinister. Dirty faces, dirty clothes, dirty houses, dirt all over, are the symptoms which most forcibly arrest attention; and yet, bad as these are, we know that there are worse effects underneath the surface, for where physical dirt goes, there also resides moral degradation.

We know of no country in Europe where there is so little disposition on the part of the people, as in ours, to give themselves even that exhilarating kind of ablution which is derived from bathing.—At the present season, the traveler on the continent finds the rivers alive with swimmers; and we remember them swimming down the Loire to Nantes, observing the steamer frequently surrounded, more especially when nearing the great manufacturing city, with crowds of black heads and white shoulders. In Russia, where the people have not got beyond the middle ages, the lower classes do not yet know the use of a shirt, but wear it above their trowsers, in the form of a kilt. They have not, however, abandoned the bath. Toward the end of the week, they feel a prickly and uncomfortable sensation in their skin, and at length rush eagerly into the hot steam, and boiling out the impurities of the preceding six days, begin life again with new vigor. In summer they do not wait for days and times, but merely get up an hour earlier, and dash into the nearest pond or river. In our refined country, dirt causes no uneasiness. It is allowed to harden upon the skin, choke up the pores, and contaminate the whole being, moral and physical. It blunts the senses to such a degree, that the husband does not detect it in the wife, nor the mother in the child. All are alike. All have forfeited the dignity of human nature, and sunk into a lower scale of animal existence.

While mentioning the custom that prevails in Russia, we are struck with the proof afforded there of the connection between moral and physical cleanliness. The state of the bath house of the hamlet is an unfailing index to the character and position of the inhabitants. If it is neat and trim, the people are good and happy, and their feudal lord kind and considerate; if poor and ruinous, there is tyranny on the one hand, misery on the other, and depravity on both.

In respect of its contagiousness, or inclination to spread, the human malady seems not a bit behind the canine, although certainly the immediate symptoms are less virulent. It has been implied that the stain of dirt extends from the skin over his life and conversation. But it does more than that: it contaminates his family; it dashes his neighbors; it forms a nucleus, round which impurity gathers, and strengthens, and spreads. Insignificant at first in itself, it becomes a social evil of importance. It is one of the units which gives its character to the aggregate; and, rising out of a thing which at first was only scorned from good taste, shunned from individual repugnance, or laughed at out of sheer folly, we see spreading over the land, vice, misery, pestilence, and death. Yet we observe the symptoms of this formidable disease with a glassy and indifferent eye, while those of canine hydrophobia inspire us with horror and alarm, and drive us to dog murder in self-defence.

The dread of water is seen in the human subject in another form, in which it is attended by a different class of effects—different, but not very unremotely allied to the preceding. Almost everywhere the use of water as a beverage appears to be felt as a sort of original curse, designed as a penalty for the sins of mankind; and everywhere are efforts made to disguise it in some way, so that the patient may be made to believe that he is swallowing something else. Much ingenuity has been expended upon this curious process; but in certain conditions of society it seems to be of little consequence what taste is superadded, or by what means the superaddition is made. The grand thing is transmogrification. Among the poorer classes in China, a decoction of cabbage leaves is felt as a relief; among the upper, the tincture of the more elegant tea leaf is employed. In the western world, the refuse of fruit and grain, subjected to fermentation and distilling, is brought into requisition.—The Norman converts his good cider into execrable brandy; the other French maltreat their wine in a similar way; in Russia, the sickening quass becomes the maddening votki; in Scotland, honest two penny is sublimated into whiskey; and so on, throughout the whole habitable world. That this sort of hydrophobia is merely a modification of the other, is established by the fact, that they who most abhor water as a cleanser, abhor it most as a drink.—A cleanly person will frequently condescend to take a draught of the pure element with his meals; but you never saw a man with a dirty face who would not greatly prefer some poisonous and ill tasting compound. At the tables of the upper classes you find the water karaff most in demand; at those of the lower classes, the beer jug. The quality of the beer is of no consequence. We never knew it so freely drank in our own neighborhood as at a time (some twenty years ago) when the sole effect of the worthy brewer's manufacture was declared to be to spoil the water. Even among the abstainers from these deleterious liquors, there are many who must still have their water disguised; hence their extensive patronage of lemonade, ginger beer, and other weak, though comparatively innocuous mixtures. The whole affair reminds us of a literary work published in London nearly twenty years ago, by a Bond street hair dresser, which gave a sort of catalogue resume of the various materials used for lathering the beard—all except one; for the magnanimous barber scorned to mention—soap.

The connection between the worst symptoms of the two kinds of hydrophobia we have described needs little illustration. The dirtier an individual is in his person, family, house, neighborhood, the more pestilent are the expedients he falls upon for disguising the taste of the abhorred water. In other words, the progress of the disease is naturally exhibited in the intensity of its symptoms. A man of sublime manliness may be found drinking pure water; with a little taint of human weakness one may indulge, likewise, but only occasionally, and in moderation, in beer, ale, wine, or even stronger brewings; while your true hydrophobist—a dingy, vulgar desperado, whom the very children on the street know and detect, even when he happens to be sober—stupefies himself habitually with the worst form of alcohol. Does it not appear that there is an unjust distinction made in our treatment of human and canine patients?—We do not propose that the former should be hooted and hunted like the latter out of society, or that they should be mauled with sticks and stones, or shot, poisoned, hanged, or drowned. They might not like it. It might cause some discontent. It would perhaps be better to let it alone, and try to manage some other way.—But what other way? How would a pump answer at the end of every street, to be worked by the police? A passer by, caught in the fact of hydrophobia, whether the dirty or drunken form of the disease, might be pounced upon and put under the spout, when the remedy administered might be proportioned to the intensity of the malady. To say that this would be an infringement of the liberty of the subject is nonsense; for if society has not the right to repress a contagious disease by any means in its power, we might as well lay aside the habits of civilization at once, and betake ourselves again to woods and caves. Peter the great was the ablest doctor in the world, and it would not be amiss if we were to take a lesson from his school. The grand obstacle in the way of his project for civilizing Russia was the beards of the nobles. To expect to teach European refinement to a man with a great, matted, beastly beard, was out of the question; and he tried by every Delilah-like stratagem he could think of, to shear off the strength of barbarism. All would not do; and Peter had recourse to a coup d'etat. He sent against the malcontents an army of barbers, who rushed in upon them in their native woods, shaved their beards by main force,

"And dragged the struggling savages into day."

That some such plan as this may in time be tried, seems probable from the fact, that the sister maladay, ignorance, is already treated by compulsory remedies. When a dirty little ragged boy is seen on the streets in some of our more civilized towns, he is picked up by the authorities and sent to school. He should in like manner be sent to the pump; and this, you may depend upon it, would be a great assistance in his education. When offenders are locked up in jail, the first process they have to submit to is that of being well washed and scrubbed. This is all very proper; but surely it is an absurdity to show more solicitude for the health of dwelling houses. If the men had been washed in time, we question much whether they would have become felons at all.—Chambers' Edinburgh (Scotland) Journal.

"NOT ONE STONE UPON ANOTHER."

Maj. M. M. Noah, of New York, a Jew, and for the last thirty or forty years has edited a number of the ablest and best political papers in that city, last Thanksgiving day delivered an address in which he denied that Solomon's temple was so far destroyed that "not one stone remained upon another," and that a "Roman plough passed over its site." Maj. Noah says:—

Messrs. Editors—In the course of my remarks in the address dedeliverd on Thanksgiving day, relative to the contemplated erection of a magnificent place of worship by the Jews at Jerusalem, I stated, that a considerable portion of the ruins of the Temple chambers, splendid columns, &c., were still in existence, showing the error of that prediction which declared that not one stone of that building should stand upon another. The statement naturally produced a spirit of inquiry on a prediction of so much importance, and I am called upon by one of your correspondents, and many others also, to furnish my auhority for this declaration which unsettles a very important passage of sacred history. This is just and proper, because both religion and history should have truth as their basis, if enlightened men are required to believe in them. Before I proceed with facts, allow me to correct one error which exists in the minds of many persons. There is no intention among the Jews to re-build the Temple of Jerusalem, with all its magnificence and former services and sacrifices; that great event, which can only be accomplished after the restoration in a state of profound peace and then under such modifications of forms and ceremonies, as shall be required by the progress of the age. The place of worship to be erected may be called a Temple, but it is simply a Synagogue on a large scale, for the accommodation of the increasing number of Jewish emigrants and residents; nor are the Jews at the present day, taking any measures of a political nature, for the restoration of the nation to its ancient heritage beyond indispensible preparations of education, science, enlarged and liberal principles.

Your correspondent is curious to know how any of the remains of the Temple can possibly exist, when historians declare that so complete was its destruction that the Romau plough passed over it. You have no doubt heard of what is called the "pious frauds" practised in the early days of the Church, and well known that one of the most important references to the founder of the Christian faith in Josephus is admitted to have been an interpolation by the most enlightened Historians and prelates of that faith, and I proceed to give you the facts that history is less reliable in relation to the utter destruction of the Temple. The firing of that noble and magnificent edifice during the siege of Jerusalem, it is known was the result of accident. Titus Vespasinus, though anxious to reduce the city, was too great a patron of the arts to destroy a structure so splendid. On the contrary, he made every effort to save the building when he found it on fire. The Jewish historians are naturally severe and bitter in their resentments against Titus, to whom they attributed all their misfortunes. I have considered the capture of Jerusalem by Pompey, and subsequently by Titus, as events connected with the carreer of a warlike nation aiming at universal conquest, and indifferent where the blow was struck, so that it added to the triumph of the Roman arms.

After Jerusalem had been reduced, Titus returned to Rome with his spoils, and some 15,000 Jewish captives, and there ended the spirit of conquest and revenge; consequently ploughing up the ground for vindictive objects could not have been reasonable. It is known that when David and Samuel had projected the plan of the Temple, and all the details of building, worship and general organization had been decided upon, David purchased Mount Moriah from Aurunah, a Jebusite agriculturalist of some importance, being a fine piece of table land, used as a threshing-floor and consecrated by the tradition that this was the spot where Abraham offered up his son.—Having purchased the piece of table land, and finally the whole mountain, he furnished Solomon with a plan of the building, which at an immense cost, required eight years to complete. All writers unite in opinion that for durability and strength no building could compare with it.

Mr. James Nathan of this city made a Journey to Egypt and the Holy Land, and visited the remains of the Temple. The following is his own statement of what he saw on that occasion:—

"Two months had now passed over us at Jerusalem, and every attempt to get by fair means a glance at the interior of either of the two mosques that occupy the temple of Solomon had proved fruitless. The opening that accident had made in one of the outer walls, more pestilent are the expedients he falls upon for disguising the taste of the abhorred water. In other words, the progress of the disease is naturally exhibited in the intensity of its symptoms. A man of sublime manliness may be found drinking pure water; with a little taint of human weakness one may indulge, likewise, but only occasionally, and in moderation, in beer, ale, wine, or even stronger brewings; while your true hydrophobist—a dingy, vulgar desperado, whom the very children on the street know and detect, even when he happens to be sober—stupefies himself habitually with the worst form of alcohol. Does it not appear that there is an unjust distinction made in our treatment of human and canine patients?—We do not propose that the former should be hooted and hunted like the latter out of society, or that they should be mauled with sticks and stones, or shot, poisoned, hanged, or drowned. They might not like it. It might cause some discontent. It would perhaps be better to let it alone, and try to manage some other way.—But what other way? How would a pump answer at the end of every street, to be worked by the police? A passer by, caught in the fact of hydrophobia, whether the dirty or drunken form of the disease, might be pounced upon and put under the spout, when the remedy administered might be proportioned to the intensity of the malady. To say that this would be an infringement of the liberty of the subject is nonsense; for if society has not the right to repress a contagious disease by any means in its power, we might as well lay aside the habits of civilization at once, and betake ourselves again to woods and caves. Peter the great was the ablest doctor in the world, and it would not be amiss if we were to take a lesson from his school. The grand obstacle in the way of his project for civilizing Russia was the beards of the nobles. To expect to teach European refinement to a man with a great, matted, beastly beard, was out of the question; and he tried by every Delilah-like stratagem he could think of, to shear off the strength of barbarism. All would not do; and Peter had recourse to a coup d'etat. He sent against the malcontents an army of barbers, who rushed in upon them in their native woods, shaved their beards by main force,

"And dragged the struggling savages into day."

That some such plan as this may in time be tried, seems probable from the fact, that the sister maladay, ignorance, is already treated by compulsory remedies. When a dirty little ragged boy is seen on the streets in some of our more civilized towns, he is picked up by the authorities and sent to school. He should in like manner be sent to the pump; and this, you may depend upon it, would be a great assistance in his education. When offenders are locked up in jail, the first process they have to submit to is that of being well washed and scrubbed. This is all very proper; but surely it is an absurdity to show more solicitude for the health of dwelling houses. If the men had been washed in time, we question much whether they would have become felons at all.—Chambers' Edinburgh (Scotland) Journal.

"NOT ONE STONE UPON ANOTHER."

Maj. M. M. Noah, of New York, a Jew, and for the last thirty or forty years has edited a number of the ablest and best political papers in that city, last Thanksgiving day delivered an address in which he denied that Solomon's temple was so far destroyed that "not one stone remained upon another," and that a "Roman plough passed over its site." Maj. Noah says:—

Messrs. Editors—In the course of my remarks in the address dedeliverd on Thanksgiving day, relative to the contemplated erection of a magnificent place of worship by the Jews at Jerusalem, I stated, that a considerable portion of the ruins of the Temple chambers, splendid columns, &c., were still in existence, showing the error of that prediction which declared that not one stone of that building should stand upon another. The statement naturally produced a spirit of inquiry on a prediction of so much importance, and I am called upon by one of your correspondents, and many others also, to furnish my authority for this declaration which unsettles a very important passage of sacred history. This is just and proper, because both religion and history should have truth as their basis, if enlightened men are required to believe in them. Before I proceed with facts, allow me to correct one error which exists in the minds of many persons. There is no intention among the Jews to re-build the Temple of Jerusalem, with all its magnificence and former services and sacrifices; that great event, which can only be accomplished after the restoration in a state of profound peace and then under such modifications of forms and ceremonies, as shall be required by the progress of the age. The place of worship to be erected may be called a Temple, but it is simply a Synagogue on a large scale, for the accommodation of the increasing number of Jewish emigrants and residents; nor are the Jews at the present day, taking any measures of a political nature, for the restoration of the nation to its ancient heritage beyond indispensible preparations of education, science, enlarged and liberal principles.

Your correspondent is curious to know how any of the remains of the Temple can possibly exist, when historians declare that so complete was its destruction that the Romau plough passed over it. You have no doubt heard of what is called the "pious frauds" practised in the early days of the Church, and well known that one of the most important references to the founder of the Christian faith in Josephus is admitted to have been an interpolation by the most enlightened Historians and prelates of that faith, and I proceed to give you the facts that history is less reliable in relation to the utter destruction of the Temple. The firing of that noble and magnificent edifice during the siege of Jerusalem, it is known was the result of accident. Titus Vespasinus, though anxious to reduce the city, was too great a patron of the arts to destroy a structure so splendid. On the contrary, he made every effort to save the building when he found it on fire. The Jewish historians are naturally severe and bitter in their resentments against Titus, to whom they attributed all their misfortunes. I have considered the capture of Jerusalem by Pompey, and subsequently by Titus, as events connected with the carreer of a warlike nation aiming at universal conquest, and indifferent where the blow was struck, so that it added to the triumph of the Roman arms.

After Jerusalem had been reduced, Titus returned to Rome with his spoils, and some 15,000 Jewish captives, and there ended the spirit of conquest and revenge; consequently ploughing up the ground for vindictive objects could not have been reasonable. It is known that when David and Samuel had projected the plan of the Temple, and all the details of building, worship and general organization had been decided upon, David purchased Mount Moriah from Aurunah, a Jebusite agriculturalist of some importance, being a fine piece of table land, used as a threshing-floor and consecrated by the tradition that this was the spot where Abraham offered up his son.—Having purchased the piece of table land, and finally the whole mountain, he furnished Solomon with a plan of the building, which at an immense cost, required eight years to complete. All writers unite in opinion that for durability and strength no building could compare with it.

Mr. James Nathan of this city made a Journey to Egypt and the Holy Land, and visited the remains of the Temple. The following is his own statement of what he saw on that occasion:—

"Two months had now passed over us at Jerusalem, and every attempt to get by fair means a glance at the interior of either of the two mosques that occupy the temple of Solomon had proved fruitless. The opening that accident had made in one of the outer walls, and of which some fortunate travelers before us had availed themselves, was recently walled up and closed by the fanatic and jealous Mussulmen and convinced that nothing but some stratagem could gain us admission, we—Dr. Titus Tobler, of Switzerland, and the writer resorted to the following :—

A Jewish lad in my employ as servant had brought us on a former occasion, a poor Arab mason to lead us to the localities of the "Birket le Branch," a business he had faithfully performed, and hearing that this man had worked on the walling up of the above mentioned opening, and on various other parts of the mosque, we hit upon him either to re-open the same or in some way procure us an entry, and after long and tedious preliminaries, amongst which was a promise of 200 piasters, we succeeded in persuading him to open during the night some small place or aperture, whereby we might enter the subterranean passages and archways, that we know support the mosque. Though fully conscious of the unlawfulness and hazard of our purpose, so anxious were we to realize this most cherished of all our objects at Jerusalem, as to feel much impatient and mortified at the delay, and thus hailed with delight the 28th of January, 1846, as the day fixed upon for our expedition.

On the evening of that day, the Doctor, myself and servant, preceded by the Arab, and provided with lantern, compass and measures, set out for the mosque, and passing concealed between heaps of rubbish, and huge Cactus trees down that part of the Tyropean valley, which separates Zion from Moriah, crossed by a sort of foot path an open field, already strictly prohibited to the "infidel dog," towards the south wall of the mosque "el Aska;" and very near the centre of this wall, and where the city wall joins it, entered a doorway and stumbled over lots of dirt and mason work, through two arched and quadrangular rooms of modern structure, and over what seemed to me to be an inclining surface, to the hole or opening made by the Arab, and being in the south foundation wall of the "Aksa," of about 12 inches in height, and 12 in width.

Proceeding a few steps my eyes were struck with the tall and graceful proportions of two white marble pillars about nine or ten feet apart supporting a handsome arch, and constituting, originally, a high and most noble gateway.

The pillar on the west side of the entry, was partly walled in, by mean Arab mason work; the one on the east, however, was clear, and measures six and a half feet in circumference.

The capital of projecting leaves, tastefully carved, is by far the most beautiful I had ever before seen, and resembles nearest the Corinthian, which seems merely the extension and embelishment of the same style. On scraping a little of the dirt from the surface of the easterly pillar it presented a soft alabaster and glistening whiteness, that shone in candle light like diamonds in pearl dust.

Close to this pillar and to the east of it, the 16 to 18 feet high wall, is composed of 4 large stones, the undermost of which is 15 feet long, 4 feet high, and 5 feet in thickness, and precisely like the often described stones in the wall of the "weeping place," which are admitted by all to be one of the court walls of the ancient temple.

The arched room or chamber in which we now were, is 42 feet wide, from east to west, 37½ feet long from south to north, commencing from the gateway as the most southerly line, as near as can be told without measurement about 25 feet in height, and supported in the centre by two large pillars, one of which measures 14½ feet in circumference.

We also came to a large oblong and door like opening in the centre of the east wall, which the Arab said was the mouth of a very large "Birket," (cistern.) From memory I think we concluded about 80 feet deep.

A stairway of 9 steps hewn out of solid rock commences 37½ feet north of the gateway, and is as wide as the chamber just described, and as the continuation of it to which it leads. This continuation measures 150 additional feet from south to north, and is as much lower in ceiling as the 9 steps are high, say from 6 to 7 feet.

Six collossal pillars at regular intervals, and in a straight line with the two centre ones above mentioned, support the rocky roof. The second pillar north of the stairway is 11½ feet in circumference, the first one was not measured, but is much larger.

We had now passed over the entire 'Mosque of Aksa' to its northern extremity—187½ feet north of the first described magnificent gateway—and noticed to the north-east a small inverted arch, the meaning of which we did not fathom, and in the north-west corner an opening of which we looked up and saw a pair of stairs leading up to the centre grounds.

On our return we ordered the Arab to replace the stone and close the hole he had made, and when cautioning him not to speak of what had passed, he said if he did it would be his last speech.

I cannot but sincerely believe in the antiquity of these relics, but reserve for myself an opinion more in detail for some future time and after some more study and reflection, as to whether the whole or what part thereof belongs to the temples built by the Jews under Solomon, Cyrus, or Herod. JAMES NATHAN."

I could have no doubt from this statement of Mr. Nathan, that these were the remains, not the ruin of the Temple, and I proceeded to make farther investigations, with the most entire success — Mr. Catherwood, well known as an enterprising traveler, was, in 1833, in the service of Ibraham Pach at Jerusalem as a Civil Engineer, and wearing the dress and speaking the language of the Mussulmen, he strayed one day into the boundaries of the Great Mosque of Omar, and took a drawing of the interior. He proceeded into the Mosque El Aksa, and descended into the subterranean vaults; and without having it impressed upon his mind that these were the remains of the temple, he says :—"At the south-east corner of this rock there is an excavated chamber, to which there is a flight of stone steps. This chamber is irregular in form, and its superficial area is about six hundred feet, the average height seven feet." In another part of his description he says, in reference to these ruins: —"Here are fifteen rows of square pillars, from which spring arches, supporting the platform. The whole substruction appears to me of Roman origin, and in connection with the Golden Gate, and the one beneath the El Aksa, together with the ancient Bridge to have formed a connected plan of foundations to the great Temple of Herod." After describing the length of the last wall, 1520 feet, on the south 940, of the west wall 1617 feet, and of the north 1000 the remains of which, still existing, Mr. Catherwood says, in conclusion :—"The Mosque of Omar occupies the position of the Holy of Holies of Solomon's Temple."

Here are two authorities, unknown to each other, who have seen the remains of the Temple under El Aksa, but I have others fully as conclusive. Shubert, the German traveler who visited Jerusalem in 1837, says in his travels, we have heard of those vaults under the temple hill which are supported on thousands of columns, and also of the reservoir for water, which are in connection with them. Mr. Tipping in 1842 was more fortunate. In making his researches under the brow of the hill he came to a small grated window, which is at the end of the subterranean aisle, and on attempting to raise his friend, Mr. Walcott, up to gain an inside view from the grated window, he was assailed by a number of Mahommedans, who drove them off, but in wandering about the spot, a deaf and dumb boy, suspecting what their object was, made signs to go with him, and he led them to a small break in the wall. Both gentlemen squeezed through the narrow entrance; let us hear Mr. Tipping's account, which does not materially vary from Mr. Nathan's, with this difference, that Mr. Nathan paid it a single and short vis-and of which some fortunate travelers before us had availed themselves, was recently walled up and closed by the fanatic and jealous Mussulmen and convinced that nothing but some stratagem could gain us admission, we—Dr. Titus Tobler, of Switzerland, and the writer resorted to the following:—

A Jewish lad in my employ as servant had brought us on a former occasion, a poor Arab mason to lead us to the localities of the "Birket le Branch," a business he had faithfully performed, and hearing that this man had worked on the walling up of the above mentioned opening, and on various other parts of the mosque, we hit upon him either to re-open the same or in some way procure us an entry, and after long and tedious preliminaries, amongst which was a promise of 200 piasters, we succeeded in persuading him to open during the night some small place or aperture, whereby we might enter the subterranean passages and archways, that we know support the mosque. Though fully conscious of the unlawfulness and hazard of our purpose, so anxious were we to realize this most cherished of all our objects at Jerusalem, as to feel much impatient and mortified at the delay, and thus hailed with delight the 28th of January, 1846, as the day fixed upon for our expedition.

On the evening of that day, the Doctor, myself and servant, preceded by the Arab, and provided with lantern, compass and measures, set out for the mosque, and passing concealed between heaps of rubbish, and huge Cactus trees down that part of the Tyropean valley, which separates Zion from Moriah, crossed by a sort of foot path an open field, already strictly prohibited to the "infidel dog," towards the south wall of the mosque "el Aska;" and very near the centre of this wall, and where the city wall joins it, entered a doorway and stumbled over lots of dirt and mason work, through two arched and quadrangular rooms of modern structure, and over what seemed to me to be an inclining surface, to the hole or opening made by the Arab, and being in the south foundation wall of the "Aksa," of about 12 inches in height, and 12 in width.

Proceeding a few steps my eyes were struck with the tall and graceful proportions of two white marble pillars about nine or ten feet apart supporting a handsome arch, and constituting, originally, a high and most noble gateway.

The pillar on the west side of the entry, was partly walled in, by mean Arab mason work; the one on the east, however, was clear, and measures six and a half feet in circumference.

The capital of projecting leaves, tastefully carved, is by far the most beautiful I had ever before seen, and resembles nearest the Corinthian, which seems merely the extension and embelishment of the same style. On scraping a little of the dirt from the surface of the easterly pillar it presented a soft alabaster and glistening whiteness, that shone in candle light like diamonds in pearl dust.

Close to this pillar and to the east of it, the 16 to 18 feet high wall, is composed of 4 large stones, the undermost of which is 15 feet long, 4 feet high, and 5 feet in thickness, and precisely like the often described stones in the wall of the "weeping place," which are admitted by all to be one of the court walls of the ancient temple.

The arched room or chamber in which we now were, is 42 feet wide, from east to west, 37½ feet long from south to north, commencing from the gateway as the most southerly line, as near as can be told without measurement about 25 feet in height, and supported in the centre by two large pillars, one of which measures 14½ feet in circumference.

We also came to a large oblong and door like opening in the centre of the east wall, which the Arab said was the mouth of a very large "Birkel," (cistern.) From memory I think we concluded about 80 feet deep.

A stairway of 9 steps hewn out of solid rock commences 37½ feet north of the gateway, and is as wide as the chamber just described, and as the continuation of it to which it leads. This continuation measures 150 additional feet from south to north, and is as much lower in ceiling as the 9 steps are high, say from 6 to 7 feet.

Six collossal pillars at regular intervals, and in a straight line with the two centre ones above mentioned, support the rocky roof. The second pillar north of the stairway is 11½ feet in circumference, the first one was not measured, but is much larger.

We had now passed over the entire 'Mosque of Aksa' to its northern extremity—187½ feet north of the first described magnificent gateway—and noticed to the north-east a small inverted arch, the meaning of which we did not fathom, and in the north-west corner an opening of which we looked up and saw a pair of stairs leading up to the centre grounds.

On our return we ordered the Arab to replace the stone and close the hole he had made, and when cautioning him not to speak of what had passed, he said if he did it would be his last speech.

I cannot but sincerely believe in the antiquity of these relics, but reserve for myself an opinion more in detail for some future time and after some more study and reflection, as to whether the whole or what part thereof belongs to the temples built by the Jews under Solomon, Cyrus, or Herod. JAMES NATHAN."

I could have no doubt from this statement of Mr. Nathan, that these were the remains, not the ruin of the Temple, and I proceeded to make farther investigations, with the most entire success—Mr. Catherwood, well known as an enterprising traveler, was, in 1833, in the service of Ibraham Pach at Jerusalem as a Civil Engineer, and wearing the dress and speaking the language of the Musulmen, he strayed one day into the boundaries of the Great Mosque of Omar, and took a drawing of the interior. He proceeded into the Mosque El Aksa, and descended into the subterranean vaults; and without having it impressed upon his mind that these were the remains of the temple, he says:—"At the south-east corner of this rock there is an excavated chamber, to which there is a flight of stone steps. This chamber is irregular in form, and its superficial area is about six hundred feet, the average height seven feet." In another part of his description he says, in reference to these ruins:—"Here are fifteen rows of square pillars, from which spring arches, supporting the platform. The whole substruction appears to me of Roman origin, and in connection with the Golden Gate, and the one beneath the El Aksa, together with the ancient Bridge to have formed a connected plan of foundations to the great Temple of Herod." After describing the length of the last wall, 1520 feet, on the south 940, of the west wall 1617 feet, and of the north 1020 the remains of which, still existing, Mr. Catherwood says, in conclusion:—"The Mosque of Omar occupies the position of the Holy of Holies of Solomon's Temple."

Here are two authorities, unknown to each other, who have seen the remains of the Temple under El Aksa, but I have others fully as conclusive. Shubert, the German traveler who visited Jerusalem in 1837, says in his travels, we have heard of those vaults under the temple hill which are supported on thousands of columns, and also of the reservoir for water, which are in connection with them. Mr. Tipping in 1842 was more fortunate. In making his researches under the brow of the hill he came to a small grated window, which is at the end of the subterranean aisle, and on attempting to raise his friend, Mr. Walcott, up to gain an inside view from the grated window, he was assailed by a number of Mahommedans, who drove them off, but in wandering about the spot, a deaf and dumb boy, suspecting what their object was, made signs to go with him, and he led them to a small break in the wall. Both gentlemen squeezed through the narrow entrance; let us hear Mr. Tipping's account, which does not materially vary from Mr. Nathan's, with this difference, that Mr. Nathan paid it a single and short visit, Mr. Tipping went often to make drawings. After having entered the Crypts, Mr. T. says, that the double gateway "consists of a square or rather quadrangular entrance hall, the four flattishly vaulted groined roofs of which are supported by a central monolith of white stone, with a capital bearing traces of a perpendicular palm-leaf ornament, certainly not Corinthian, or any other of the five classical orders. Might we not safely attribute it to Herod? The broad division between the arches consists of beveled stones of Cyclopedian dimensions; the sides of the long passage are also built of huge beveled stones; but the walls of the hall are apparently plain and Roman, though of great size. This seeming anomaly perplexed me for a long time; but at length, and while examining these side walls closely, I ascertained that it had been beveled, but that in order to construct side-pilasters, corresponding with the central pillar, and bearing the two arches springing from it, the beveling had been chiseled away. This was the crowning act of all, as it furnishes incontestable evidence of a third epoch in the structure, and of a far superior antiquity. Do not these vaults and passages, as to their interior structure, belong to the age of Solomon?"

You thus perceive, Messrs. Editors, that Mr. Catherwood and Mr. Tippin, both eminent travelers, speak of these extraordinary remains of a splendid edifice, as the remains of the temple, and Mr. Nathan, one of our own citizens, and of the Hebrew faith, in passing through them, could arrive at no other conclusion. Saracenic they are not; Roman though in style, they were not built by the Romans, for they destroyed what they could in Jerusalem, and built nothing. The conviction to which I have arrived from these facts are, that these chambers, pillars, archways, groined roofs and entablatures are the remains of the first floor or basement of Solomon's Temple, upon which Herod erected the third temple, destroyed at the siege of Jerusalem, under Titus.

The first temple of Solomon was erected 1012 years B. C., and was finally destroyed by the Assyrians 588 years B. C., having stood 424 years. After the return from Babylon, it was plainly rebuilt, and stood until Herod rebuilt it with great splendor, and it was finally destroyed 70 years after the death of the founder of the Christian religion.

After the burning of the temple by Titus, and the Romans finally abandoning Jerusalem, the ruins remained five hundred years without disturbance, because covered up, after which long period those ruins concealed them some twelve or fifteen feet below the surface. And when a site was required for the great Mosque of Omar, the commanding position of Mount Moriah was naturally considered the most eligible for the new structure, and the ground was leveled over the remains of the temple as now discovered, and the Mosques of Omar and El Aksa erected over them. I entertain no doubt that if those Mosques were removed and the earth laid bare on Mount Moriah, the entire ground floor, or the first story, of the Temple would be laid open.

The New Testament was written at intervals by the Apostles, more to preserve a record of events, occurring in their time, than to constitute a religious companion for the Bible. Several of the books were lost, and amended when found, and brought into its present form nearly 200 years after the Christian Era. It must necessarily have undergone many changes by the early fathers of the church. But the most important fact, equally applicable to the Old Testament as well as the New is, that we adopt passages literally which are meant only as figuratively—a style and mode of speaking, laconic and abbreviated, even at this day prevailing in the oriental countries, consequently we discover throughout the Scriptures, printed in the English language, incongruities, corruptions and erroneous translations, ad infinitum. Here, however, are the stately remains of the Temple, and here we have another illustration of the historic truth of the Bible. Your correspondent, I hope, will be satisfied that I have not ventured upon an important statement, without being in possession of all the facts.

M. M. NOAH.

MORMONS AND THE GOLD.

Rumors have been afloat, within the few weeks past, that the Mormons were collecting near the great Salt Lake for the purpose of proceeding in a body to drive off the gold diggers, and taking possession by right of first discoverers. We doubt very much the truth of these rumors. We fear that they originate in a deep seated hate to this persecuted and ill treated, though it may be offended sect, that will not be content with anything less than their extermination. We learn from the Buffalo Commercial that it is true a large body of this sect, residing at Nauvoo and parts adjacent, emigrated to the basin of the Great Salt Lake. But we also learn that many were so miserably poor as to be unable to make the journey to that distant settlement, and stopped at various points on the way to save themselves from starvation. One portion stopped at Garden Grove, about 160 miles from Nauvoo, another at Mount Pisgah, 40 miles farther west, and a yet larger portion made a settlement on the Missouri River, near Council Bluffs. Altogether the numbers in Iowa and the wildernesses beyond that State are computed at nearly 15,000 souls, and all are suffering for the lack of necessary clothing and provisions. Their condition is pitable in the extreme. "Their condition," adds our authority, "is calculated to excite sympathy, and the treatment they have received is a disgrace to our age and country. When they went to the great Salt Lake basin, a region that a few years ago was no more known than the unexplored wild in the interior of Africa, it was thought they would be permitted to live there unmolested. But gold, it is said, has been found in that basin, which is in the line and about the centre of the great mineral region stretching from Lake Superior south-westward to the Pacific Ocean. That basin, so singular in its formation, and so isolated, appears to have been made by the disintergration of vast mountains, and there, if any where, might we look for the richest mineral treasures. It would indeed be a singular fatality if it should prove to be rich in gold, and the insatiable thirst for that metal should cause the expulsion of the Mormons from the homes they had reason to think so secure. Such now seems likely to become the fact, and this, combined with other causes, may aid in building up not only a religious sect, but a formidable political power on the western part of this continent. Religious fanaticism and the pursuit of wealth, the two most controling passions that influence men, may work changes of which now we little dream."

☞ We re-publish the foregoing, which is getting a pretty general circulation in the secular papers. The story of the Mormons (Brighamites) intending to take the mines by force is doubtless a mere fabrication to produce persecution. Nor are there more than about one-third the number in the wilderness which this article represents. In their scattered and impoverished condition they deserve more of sympathy than anything else. Certainly if any body on earth has cause to revile them we have. And if we could hate them in their present lowly condition, we should think we deserved their fate. Moreover, though there is not the slightest probability of their attempting to seize on the mines, we have no doubt they would take deep and summary vengeance on any who should molest them in their fastnesses. There is such a state of the mind that clings not to life, but in recollection of untold wrongs—seeks only how it may perish at the greatest cost. We pity those that fight against such.

it, Mr. Tipping went often to make drawings. After having entered the Crypts, Mr. T. says, that the double gateway "consists of a square or rather quadrangular entrance hall, the four flattishly vaulted groined roofs of which are supported by a central monolith of white stone, with a capital bearing traces of a perpendicular palm-leaf ornament, certainly not Corinthian, or any other of the five classical orders. Might we not safely attribute it to Herod? The broad division between the arches consists of beveled stones of Cyclopedian dimensions; the sides of the long passage are also built of huge beveled stones; but the walls of the hall are apparently plain and Roman, though of great size. This seeming anomaly perplexed me for a long time, but at length, and while examining these side walls closely, I ascertained that it had been beveled, but that in order to construct side pilasters, corresponding with the central pillar, and bearing the two arches springing from it, the beveling had been chiseled away. This was the crowning act of all, as it furnishes incontestable evidence of a third epoch in the structure, and of a far superior antiquity. Do not these vaults and passages, as to their interior structure, belong to the age of Solomon?"

You thus perceive, Messrs. Editors, that Mr. Catherwood and Mr. Tippin, both eminent travelers, speak of these extraordinary remains of a splendid edifice, as the remains of the temple, and Mr. Nathan, one of our own citizens, and of the Hebrew faith, in passing through them, could arrive at no other conclusion. Saracenic they are not; Roman though in style, they were not built by the Romans, for they destroyed what they could in Jerusalem, and built nothing. The conviction to which I have arrived from these facts are, that these chambers, pillars, archways, groined roofs and entablatures are the remains of the first floor or basement of Solomon's Temple, upon which Herod erected the third temple, destroyed at the siege of Jerusalem, under Titus.

The first temple of Solomon was erected 1012 years B. C., and was finally destroyed by the Assyrians 588 years B. C., having stood 424 years. After the return from Babylon, it was plainly rebuilt, and stood until Herod rebuilt it with great splendor, and it was finally destroyed 70 years after the death of the founder of the Christian religion.

After the burning of the temple by Titus, and the Romans finally abandoning Jerusalem, the ruins remained five hundred years without disturbance, because covered up, after which long period those ruins concealed them some twelve or fifteen feet below the surface. And when a site was required for the great Mosque of Omar, the commanding position of Mount Moriah was naturally considered the most eligible for the new structure, and the ground was leveled over the remains of the temple as now discovered, and the Mosques of Omar and El Aksa erected over them. I entertain no doubt that if those Mosques were removed and the earth laid bare on Mount Moriah, the entire ground floor, or the first story, of the Temple would be laid open.

The New Testament was written at intervals by the Apostles, more to preserve a record of events, occurring in their time, than to constitute a religious companion for the Bible. Several of the books were lost, and amended when found, and brought into its present form nearly 200 years after the Christian Era. It must necessarily have undergone many changes by the early fathers of the church. But the most important fact, equally applicable to the Old Testament as well as the New is, that we adopt passages literally which are meant only as figuratively—a style and mode of speaking, laconic and abbreviated, even at this day prevailing in the oriental countries, consequently we discover throughout the Scriptures, printed in the English language, incongruities, corruptions and erroneous translations, ad infinitum. Here, however, are the stately remains of the Temple, and here we have another illustration of the historic truth of the Bible. Your correspondent, I hope, will be satisfied that I have not ventured upon an important statement, without being in possession of all the facts.

M. M. NOAH.

MORMONS AND THE GOLD.

Rumors have been afloat, within the few weeks past, that the Mormons were collecting near the great Salt Lake for the purpose of proceeding in a body to drive off the gold diggers, and taking possession by right of first discoverers. We doubt very much the truth of these rumors. We fear that they originate in a deep seated hate to this persecuted and ill treated, though it may be offended sect, that will not be content with anything less than their extermination. We learn from the Buffalo Commercial that it is true a large body of this sect, residing at Nauvoo and parts adjacent, emigrated to the basin of the Great Salt Lake. But we also learn that many were so miserably poor as to be unable to make the journey to that distant settlement, and stopped at various points on the way to save themselves from starvation. One portion stopped at Garden Grove, about 160 miles from Nauvoo, another at Mount Pisgah, 40 miles farther west, and a yet larger portion made a settlement on the Missouri River, near Council Bluffs. Altogether the numbers in Iowa and the wildernesses beyond that State are computed at nearly 15,000 souls, and all are suffering for the lack of necessary clothing and provisions. Their condition is pitable in the extreme. "Their condition," adds our authority, "is calculated to excite sympathy, and the treatment they have received is a disgrace to our age and country. When they went to the great Salt Lake basin, a region that a few years ago was no more known than the unexplored wild in the interior of Africa, it was thought they would be permitted to live there unmolested. But gold, it is said, has been found in that basin, which is in the line and about the centre of the great mineral region stretching from Lake Superior south-westward to the Pacific Ocean. That basin, so singular in its formation, and so isolated, appears to have been made by the disintergration of vast mountains, and there, if any where, might we look for the richest mineral treasures. It would indeed be a singular fatality if it should prove to be rich in gold, and the insatiable thirst for that metal should cause the expulsion of the Mormons from the homes they had reason to think so secure. Such now seems likely to become the fact, and this, combined with other causes, may aid in building up not only a religious sect, but a formidable political power on the western part of this continent. Religious fanaticism and the pursuit of wealth, the two most controling passions that influence men, may work changes of which now we little dream."

☞ We re-publish the foregoing, which is getting a pretty general circulation in the secular papers. The story of the Mormons (Brighamites) intending to take the mines by force is doubtless a mere fabrication to produce persecution. Nor are there more than about one-third the number in the wilderness which this article represents. In their scattered and impoverished condition they deserve more of sympathy than anything else. Certainly if any body on earth has cause to revile them we have. And if we could hate them in their present lowly condition, we should think we deserved their fate. Moreover, though there is not the slightest probability of their attempting to seize on the mines, we have no doubt they would take deep and summary vengeance on any who should molest them in their fastnesses. There is such a state of the mind that clings not to life, but in recollection of untold wrongs—seeks only how it may perish at the greatest cost. We pity those that fight against such.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 45.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, JAN. 25, 1849. [WHOLE No. 109.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

The past year was fraught with big events. For political convulsions and internal dissensions it is unparalleled in the history of the world. Nor is the commencement of the present year less ominous. It opens with Europe agitated, from the borders of Russia to the mountains of Spain—from the North Sea to the Adriatic—the Pope a mere nullity as to his temporal power; with the Irish question unsettled—with Pestilence as well as War hovering over the Continent—with a sudden discovery of immense mineral treasures on the shores of the Pacific, and tens of thousands ready to rush to the El Dorado; with the slavery question in this country assuming menacing forms; with the cholera hanging upon our borders, and threatening its devastations.

By the last mail from Europe we learn that the Pope has fled from Rome, the seat of his empire. "It appears that the revolutionary government of Italy did not deprive him of his spiritual powers, but they kept him prisoner in the Quirinal Palace. The business of the civil government was carried on in his name, but without his consent. He therefore resolved to flee from Rome, and by the aid of friends he disguised himself as a livery servant to the Bavarian Minister, mounting on the box alongside the coachman.—He thus passed the guards, and escaped from the palace. Immediately on arriving at the residence of the Bavarian Minister, another metamorphosis was made. The Pope took off the livery suit, and dressed himself in the usual costume of the Minister's chaplain, or aumonier; and M. de Spaur having already given notice of his intention of going to Naples, and received passports from the government, post horses were soon procured; the Count and his supposed chaplain took their places in the carriage, and thus happily cleared the gates of Rome. It was some time before the escape was discovered, as of course due care was used by those in the secret to say that the Pontiff was engaged in his devotions, and could not be disturbed. When the flight became known, the revolutionary ministry was thunderstruck; and dragoons were despatched to bring back the fugitive; but the Count de Spaur with his reverend charge crossed the frontier in safety, and arrived at Gaeta, a large town, the first in the Neapolitan territory, not far from Terricina." Leaving Rome, which had been his strong hold for ages, to the protection of the "Great Mother of Mercy, and the holy Apostles Peter and Paul," whom he invokes for "their intercession, that the city and state of Rome may be saved from the wrath of the Omnipotent God."

That they will respond to his prayer, we very much doubt. We are inclined to believe he has about ruled the world "his time out" for the present. The time alloted him by the God of heaven to exercise temporal dominion, according to the prophet Daniel, has evidently nearly expired. Prior to the days of the reformation he ruled the eastern hemisphere, and could throne and dethrone kings at pleasure. Ever since then his power has been on the decrease. Nation after nation rebelled against him, and were cut off like putrid limbs, till his dominion was reduced down to a small territory in Italy south of the Po, containing 15,000 square miles, and 2,500,000 inhabitants. Finally, a disease of the same nature that was so fatal to the limbs has seized the head. As it has taken hold on the vitals, death temporal will undoubtedly be the result. That this will be the case the Catholics themselves seem to admit, as will be seen from the following extract from an article in the London Tablet of Dec. 9th, a leading Catholic journal. Speaking of the flight of the Pope, the writer says:—

"The truth is, that what has just happened is but one phase of what has been happening in various countries of the world ever since the beginning of the sixteenth century, and we are not to think it strange as if some new thing happened to us. Four centuries ago the Church throughout Christendom ruled everywhere; occupied the high places of worldly respectability; and saw the princes of the earth its willing or reluctant subjects. But a change then began, which has since visited every country, but not in all countries at the same time, nor after the same outward fashion.

"It began in Germany; it spread through the north; it overran England—assuming the forms of heresy and schism. Through half of Christendom it broke down the worship of God, and reduced the Catholics to the condition of a small and despised remnant. There—most widely—the temporal power passed into the hands of the enemies of the Church, and left her children to be the victims of that which had formerly been her protector. Many efforts, in England more especially, were made to restore, through the temporal power, the fallen fortunes of the Church. They all failed, and every fresh effort was but the signal for a deadlier ruin.

"Then came the French Revolution. Not now heresy and schism, but avowed irreligion, a passionate fanaticism against God, overthrew altars, destroyed temples, and dragged out priests and bishops to savage butchery. Thus again the temporal power which had upheld and defiled a great portion of the Church was broken to pieces, and the faithful thrust out of worldly authority as enemies or aliens. All through Europe the same spirit has run its course in almost every country in succession. Spain and Portugal have had a like experience, though neither so deep nor so wide spread. Nor has Catholic Germany been wholly untouched. In the new world the same phenomena are visible. French Canada has fallen under Protestant domination. A small but rapidly increasing minority, in the United States, the Catholics have constituted themselves not as wielding any great temporal power, but as in great part the poorest of the poor, as hewers of wood and drawers of water. Mexico begins to sink under heretical domination, and her fanes and altars already tempt the cupidity of the woodman of the west.

"We cannot now pursue this subject into its details; but enough has been said to explain what we mean. Everywhere the Church has been either violently cast down or gradually withdrawn from

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 15] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, JAN. 25, 1849. [WHOLE No. 109.

GOSPEL HERALD.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

For the Gospel Herald.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

The past year was fraught with big events. For political convulsions and national dissensions it is unparalleled in the history of the world. Nor is the commencement of the present year less ominous. It opens with Europe agitated, from the borders of Russia to the mountains of Spain—from the North Sea to the Adriatic—the Pope a mere nullity as to his temporal power; with the Irish question unsettled—with Pestilence as well as War hovering over the Continent—with a sudden discovery of immense mineral treasures on the shores of the Pacific, and tens of thousands ready to rush to the El Dorado; with the slavery question in this country assuming menacing forms; with the cholera hanging upon our borders, and threatening its devastations.

By the last mail from Europe we learn that the Pope has fled from Rome, the seat of his empire. "It appears that the revolutionary government of Italy did not deprive him of his spiritual powers, but they kept him prisoner in the Quirinal Palace. The business of the civil government was carried on in his name, but without his consent. He therefore resolved to flee from Rome, and by the aid of friends he disguised himself as a livery servant to the Bavarian Minister, mounting on the box alongside the coachman.—He thus passed the guards, and escaped from the palace. Immediately on arriving at the residence of the Bavarian Minister, another metamorphosis was made. The Pope took off the livery suit, and dressed himself in the usual costume of the Minister's chaplain, or aumonier; and M. de Spaur having already given notice of his intention of going to Naples, and received passports from the government, post horses were soon procured; the Count and his supposed chaplain took their places in the carriage, and thus happily cleared the gates of Rome. It was some time before the escape was discovered, as of course due care was used by those in the secret to say that the Pontiff was engaged in his devotions, and could not be disturbed. When the flight became known, the revolutionary ministry was thunderstruck; and dragoons were despatched to bring back the fugitive; but the Count de Spaur with his reverend charge crossed the frontier in safety, and arrived at Gaeta, a large town, the first in the Neapolitan territory, not far from Terrcina." Leaving Rome, which had been his strong hold for ages, to the protection of the "Great Mother of Mercy, and the holy Apostles Peter and Paul," whom he invokes for "their intercession, that the city and state of Rome may be saved from the wrath of the Omnipotent God."

That they will respond to his prayer, we very much doubt. We are inclined to believe he has about ruled the world "his time out" for the present. The time alloted him by the God of heaven to exercise temporal dominion, according to the prophet Daniel, has evidently nearly expired. Prior to the days of the reformation he ruled the eastern hemisphere, and could throne and dethrone kings at pleasure. Ever since then his power has been on the decrease. Nation after nation rebelled against him, and were cut off like putrid limbs, till his dominion was reduced down to a small territory in Italy south of the Po, containing 15,000 square miles, and 2,500,000 inhabitants. Finally, a disease of the same nature that was so fatal to the limbs has seized the head. As it has taken hold on the vitals, death temporal will undoubtedly be the result. That this will be the case the Catholics themselves seem to admit, as will be seen from the following extract from an article in the London Tablet of Dec. 9th, a leading Catholic journal. Speaking of the flight of the Pope, the writer says:—

"The truth is, that what has just happened is but one phase of what has been happening in various countries of the world ever since the beginning of the sixteenth century, and we are not to think it strange as if some new thing happened to us. Four centuries ago the Church throughout Christendom ruled everywhere; occupied the high places of worldly respectability; and saw the princes of the earth its willing or reluctant subjects. But a change then began, which has since visited every country, but not in all countries at the same time, nor after the same outward fashion.

"It began in Germany; it spread through the north; it overran England—assuming the forms of heresy and schism. Through half of Christendom it broke down the worship of God, and reduced the Catholics to the condition of a small and despised remnant. There—most widely—the temporal power passed into the hands of the enemies of the Church, and left her children to be the victims of that which had formerly been her protector. Many efforts, in England more especially, were made to restore, through the temporal power, the fallen fortunes of the Church. They all failed, and every fresh effort was but the signal for a deadlier ruin.

"Then came the French Revolution. Not now heresy and schism, but avowed irreligion, a passionate fanaticism against God, overthrew altars, destroyed temples, and dragged out priests and bishops to savage butchery. Thus again the temporal power which had upheld and defiled a great portion of the Church was broken to pieces, and the faithful thrust out of worldly authority as enemies or aliens. All through Europe the same spirit has run its course in almost every country in succession. Spain and Portugal have had a like experience, though neither so deep nor so wide spread. Nor has Catholic Germany been wholly untouched. In the new world the same phenomena are visible. French Canada has fallen under Protestant domination. A small but rapidly increasing minority, in the United States, the Catholics have constituted themselves not as wielding any great temporal power, but as in great part the poorest of the poor, as hewers of wood and drawers of water. Mexico begins to sink under heretical domination, and her fanes and altars already tempt the cupidity of the woodman of the west.

"We cannot now pursue this subject into its details; but enough has been said to explain what we mean. Everywhere the Church has been either violently cast down or gradually withdrawn from the high places of temporal authority, and has been made to occupy a new position; a position of social inferiority; a position not of temporal honor, but very often only of labor and peril, with obscurity or outward disgrace; a position in which, instead of looking to the arm of flesh and the favor of monarchs, it has to resist monarchs and aristocracies, and the riches and wisdom of this world; has to take these for its open enemies, and to find what resources it can in making itself to the grossest outward seeming, the servant of the servants of the earth.

"In succession this one revolution has visited different portions of the globe—ever the tempest of affliction, beating so that in some part of Christendom strength was left to bear along that life which is the heritage of the human race. And now, France having in some degree raised herself from the slough of infidelity; Rhenish Germany having gone through its ordeal, and come out of the furnace purer and stronger with a new strength; Ireland having emancipated herself, and having scattered the seeds of the faith, and planted churches in almost every latitude and longitude of the globe; missions of extraordinary fertility being everywhere established from China and the islands of the Pacific to the Rocky Mountains in the extremity of northern and western America; the limbs everywhere displaying new life, and an exerting activity which fills us with the brightest hopes—behold, the time comes in which the head suffers its part in the affliction, and the temporal power even in Italy is passing into the hands of the enemies of the church."

The commotions and convulsions of the nations are causing men to fear and tremble. They are seized with astonishment. The wisdom of their wise men is baffled. The understanding of their prudent men is hid. All are looking for some great event to take place, but they know not what the Lord is going to accomplish. Well might the inspired writer say, "where there is no vision the people perish." In the midst of this chaos the saint is calm and serene. He knows that the Lord, the Holy One of Israel, is working deliverance for his people. He knows also from the signs of the times that their redemption is at hand. For it is written by the prophet Daniel that when "they (the nations) shall take away his (the Pope's) dominion to consume and to destroy unto the end, the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, and he will show them his covenant."

G. W.

SOUTHERN LITERARY MESSENGER.

Prospectus for 1849.—Fifteenth volume.—The Editor of the Messenger, in issuing the prospectus of a new volume, takes occasion to announce to its patrons and the public, that he has made such arrangements for the coming year, as will enable him to raise the work to even a higher standard of excellence than it has ever yet attained. In addition to the present large and excellent list of Original Contributers, he has secured the services of many other authors of known ability, who will supply the pages of the Magazine with Reviews, Historical and Biographical sketches, Novels, Tales, Travels, Essays, Poems, Critiques, and papers on the Army, Navy and other national snbjects.

The able papers on scientific subjects, which have hitherto attracted such marked attention throughout the country will be followed up by others equally instructive and entertaining, while the readers of the work will be kept well informed of European intelligence, literary, political artistic, by a regular Paris correspondence from the pen of a gentleman who has access to the most accurate sources of information, and whose fine taste and general scholarship render him, in an especial manner, fitted for the task.

Of the Editorial and Critical department, the Editor will only say that it will embrace copious notes on current literature, and reviews of all new American or Foreign works of general interest or value. His opinions will at least be always fearlessly and honestly avowed.

The Messenger, on the 1st January next, will enter upon its FIFTEENTH VOLUME and the fifteenth year of its existence. This respectable age is the surest guaranty of its permanence. To the SOUTH, it appeals for renewed liberality and support, that it may not only continue, as heretofore, the compeer of the best Northern Periodicals, but aspire to yet higher triumphs, and a still wider field of usefulness.

As the only Southern Magazine, strictly literary in its character, and a just sectional pride should encourage and foster it. This appeal is made in connection with the assurance, on the part of the Editor, that its intrinsic merits shall always command an extended circulation.

With a view to improve the appearance of the work, the Editor announces that the fifteenth volume will appear in ENTIRELY NEW TYPE, from the best northern foundry; so that for typographical excellence, the Messenger shall be unsurpassed.

CONDITIONS OF THE MESSENGER.

1. The Southern Literary Messenger is published in monthly numbers. Each number contains not less than 64 large super-royal pages, printed on good type, and in the best manner, and on paper of the most beautiful quality.

2. The Messenger is mailed regularly on or about the first day of every month in the year. Twelve numbers make a volume—and the price of subscription is 5 dollars per volume, payable in advance; nor will the work be sent to any one, unless the order is accompanied by the cash. The year commences with the January number. No subscription received for less than one year, unless the individual subscribing chooses to pay the full price of a years subscription, for a less period.

3. The risk of transmitting subscriptions by mail will be assumed by the proprietor. But every subscriber thus transmitting the payment, is requested (besides taking proper evidence of the fact and date of mailing) to retain a memorandum of the number and particular marks of the note sent; or subscriptions may be remitted through post masters, according to the present laws.

4. If a subscription is not directed to be discontinued before the first number of a volume has been published, it will be taken as a continuance for another year.

5. Any one enclosing a $20 current bill, at one time, with the names of five new subscribers, shall receive five copies of the Messenger for one year.

6. The mutual obligations of the publisher and subscriber, for the year, are fully incurred as soon as the 1st No. of a volume is issued; after that time, no discontinuance of a subscription will be permitted. Nor will any subscription be discontinued while anything remains due thereon, unless at the option of the Editor.

JNO. R. THOMPSON, Editor and Proprietor.

Richmond, Va., Oct., 1848. 45m.

THE POPE WEEPS!

The following article, which appeared on the 11th of August, in the eighty-third number of the democratic paper, Il Popolano, has created a great sensation abroad, and will show how in Italy—Catholic Italy—the Head of the Romish Church is treated. It is, in truth, a curious document:—

"THE POPE WEEPS!—'It is said that, on reading the news, Pius IX. burst into tears.'—Patria, No. 39.

the high places of temporal authority, and has been made to occupy a new position; a position of social inferiority; a position not of temporal honor, but very often only of labor and peril, with obscurity or outward disgrace; a position in which, instead of looking to the arm of flesh and the favor of monarchs, it has to resist monarchs and aristocracies, and the riches and wisdom of this world; has to take these for its open enemies, and to find what resources it can in making itself to the grossest outward seeming, the servant of the servants of the earth.

"In succession this one revolution has visited different portions of the globe—ever the tempest of affliction, beating so that in some part of Christendom strength was left to bear along that life which is the heritage of the human race. And now, France having in some degree raised herself from the slough of infidelity; Rhenish Germany having gone through its ordeal, and come out of the furnace purer and stronger with a new strength; Ireland having emancipated herself, and having scattered the seeds of the faith, and planted churches in almost every latitude and longitude of the globe; missions of extraordinary fertility being everywhere established from China and the islands of the Pacific to the Rocky Mountains in the extremity of northern and western America; the limbs everywhere displaying new life, and an exerting activity which fills us with the brightest hopes—behold, the time comes in which the head suffers its part in the affliction, and the temporal power even in Italy is passing into the hands of the enemies of the church."

The commotions and convulsions of the nations are causing men to fear and tremble. They are seized with astonishment. The wisdom of their wise men is baffled. The understanding of their prudent men is hid. All are looking for some great event to take place, but they know not what the Lord is going to accomplish. Well might the inspired writer say, "where there is no vision the people perish." In the midst of this chaos the saint is calm and serene. He knows that the Lord, the Holy One of Israel, is working deliverance for his people. He knows also from the signs of the times that their redemption is at hand. For it is written by the prophet Daniel that when "they (the nations) shall take away his (the Pope's) dominion to consume and to destroy unto the end, the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him, and he will show them his covenant."

G. W.

SOUTHERN LITERARY MESSENGER.

Prospectus for 1849.—Fifteenth volume.—The Editor of the Messenger, in issuing the prospectus of a new volume, takes occasion to announce to its patrons and the public, that he has made such arrangements for the coming year, as will enable him to raise the work to even a higher standard of excellence than it has ever yet attained. In addition to the present large and excellent list of Original Contributers, he has secured the services of many other authors of known ability, who will supply the pages of the Magazine with Reviews, Historical and Biographical sketches, Novels, Tales, Travels, Essays, Poems, Critiques, and papers on the Army, Navy and other national subjects.

The able papers on scientific subjects, which have hitherto attracted such marked attention throughout the country will be followed up by others equally instructive and entertaining, while the readers of the work will be kept well informed of European intelligence, literary, political artistic, by a regular Paris correspondence from the pen of a gentleman who has access to the most accurate sources of information, and whose fine taste and general scholarship render him, in an especial manner, fitted for the task.

Of the Editorial and Critical department, the Editor will only say that it will embrace copious notes on current literature, and reviews of all new American or Foreign works of general interest or value. His opinions will at least be always fearlessly and honestly avowed.

The Messenger, on the 1st January next, will enter upon its FIFTEENTH VOLUME and the fifteenth year of its existence. This respectable age is the surest guaranty of its permanence. To the SOUTH, it appeals for renewed liberality and support, that it may not only continue, as heretofore, the compeer of the best Northern Periodicals, but aspire to yet higher triumphs, and a still wider field of usefulness.

As the only Southern Magazine, strictly literary in its character, and a just sectional pride should encourage and foster it. This appeal is made in connection with the assurance, on the part of the Editor, that its intrinsic merits shall always command an extended circulation.

With a view to improve the appearance of the work, the Editor announces that the fifteenth volume will appear in ENTIRELY NEW TYPE, from the best northern foundry; so that for typographical excellence, the Messenger shall be unsurpassed.

CONDITIONS OF THE MESSENGER.

1. The Southern Literary Messenger is published in monthly numbers. Each number contains not less than 64 large super-royal pages, printed on good type, and in the best manner, and on paper of the most beautiful quality.

2. The Messenger is mailed regularly on or about the first day of every month in the year. Twelve numbers make a volume—and the price of subscription is 5 dollars per volume, payable in advance; nor will the work be sent to any one, unless the order is accompanied by the cash. The year commences with the January number. No subscription received for less than one year, unless the individual subscribing chooses to pay the full price of a years subscription, for a less period.

3. The risk of transmitting subscriptions by mail will be assumed by the proprietor. But every subscriber thus transmitting the payment, is requested (besides taking proper evidence of the fact and date of mailing) to retain a memorandum of the number and particular marks of the note sent; or subscriptions may be remitted through post masters, according to the present laws.

4. If a subscription is not directed to be discontinued before the first number of a volume has been published, it will be taken as a continuance for another year.

5. Any one enclosing a $20 current bill, at one time, with the names of five new subscribers, shall receive five copies of the Messenger for one year.

6. The mutual obligations of the publisher and subscriber, for the year, are fully incurred as soon as the 1st No. of a volume is issued; after that time, no discontinuance of a subscription will be permitted. Nor will any subscription be discontinued while anything remains due thereon, unless at the option of the Editor.

JNO. R. THOMPSON, Editor and Proprietor.

Richmond, Va., Oct., 1848. 45m.

THE POPE WEEPS!

The following article, which appeared on the 11th of August, in the eighty-third number of the democratic paper, Il Popolano, has created a great sensation abroad, and will show how in Italy—Catholic Italy—the Head of the Romish Church is treated. It is, in truth, a curious document:—

"THE POPE WEEPS!—'It is said that, on reading the news, Pius IX. burst into tears.'—Patria, No. 39.

"The Pope weeps! weep ill-advised Pontiff—weep over thy lost crown of glory, so cheaply obtained, and redeemed with torrents of blood, by nations idolizing an empty name—an image of clay—the shadow of a man!

"Weep, O Pontiff! over the people thou has betrayed—over the destinies of Italy thou hast so ill understood—and over thy timid and cowardly little soul, taking shelter under the sublime mantle of a religion which thou couldst have 'reduced' to its pure fountain, but to which, on the contrary, following the old custom of thy predecessors, thou didst but contribute thy share of shame and defilement!

"Weep, O Pontiff! Thou sceptered and living Anti-Christ—weep for thy well-beloved Germans, and hurl thy thunderbolts on the devoted heads of the contumacious masses, slaughtering them at the gates of Bologna the unconquered, and Milan the magnanimous: hurl them down, for they are henceforth without either point or consistency.

"The Pope weeps! Count Mastai—weeps because Providence, in the shape of an Austrian host, has not by chance, or not, yet given to the destinies of Italy that direction which thou so ardently dost desire; since it is now quite evident, that that Providenec to whom thou hast consigned the fate of thy people, assuming in thee and in those about thee the character of improvidence and short-sightedness, was nothing else but thy ancient ally, the perfidious support of the Simoniacal Papacy—the Empire!

"Weep!—because that nefarious compact has not been fully consummated. Weep!—because Italy has still left to her free sons, free arms, and free senses.

"In order that Rome might tranquilly submit to the double yoke of thy demoralizing policy and northern despotism, thou hast in vain appealed to all thy saints; and it was right it should be so. Hast thou not in thy cowardly phrenzy, even resorted to blasphemy? Hast thou not dethroned the Almighty, and placed in His stead the Virgin and the apostles as responsible ministers? Hast thou not rather to them than to Him entrusted the defence of Rome, hoping, perhaps, in thy dread of a Provisional Government on earth, that that Provisional Government in heaven might be more impotent, and less clear sighted, than that of the God of vengeance—the God of terror—the God of retribution—who is on the side of the people, just as thou art on the side of kings!*

"Weep, Weep! Father, no longer holy, because thy iniquitous commands to cease from strife have formed in echo and proved a vain sound; together with thy injunctions to respect blindly the treaties concluded by thee with the enemies of Italy, in the sinister and silent gloom of the Vatican!

"Weep! O, bosom friend of Loyola, since, should the followers of liberty fall as slaves by German hands, the followers of Ignatius will, nevertheless, win neither freedom nor immunity.

"Weep, O Pontiff!—because it is in vain that thou removest from thee whatever is honest and generous, and dismissest patriotic ministers; whilst thy most dreadful enemy, Conscience, will never quit thy side.

"Weep, O Pope! Weep scalding tears o'er the grave thou hast digged for thyself! Weep, because Italy is a glorious reality, whereas the Popedom is nothing but a contaminated name. Weep, because the first will rise more beautiful from the funereal pile thou hast erected for her; while the latter, through its old and present rottenness, will crumble amidst the exultation of emancipated nations."

*"God . . . commits the direct protection of this city to the powerful guardians of Rome—the holy Virgin Mary, and to the principal apostles; and, though more than one sacrilege has lately afflicted the capital of the Catholic world, yet our confidence is not shaken on that account."—Papal Edict, of August 2d.

The article, of which the above is a literal translation, produced an extraordinary sensation; fifteen thousand additional copies were sold of it, so great was the demand. The Archbishop of Florence launched a furious denunciation against it in the "Florence Gazette," calling it a mischieveous, scandalous, heretical performance—but all to no purpose. The "Popolano," nothing daunted, ventured to reply to the Archbishop with great boldness, and ironically concluded his rejoinder by saying, "Well: as you find fault with our little essay, entitled, 'The Pope Weeps,' we are most ready to please you, and say, instead, 'He laughs in his sleeve;'" and so little did the prelatic wrath move the editor of that paper, that, on the 27th of August, the obnoxious article was re-produced, to satisfy the increased demand for it.

From the Primitive Expounder.

KINGDOM OF GOD.

Numerous have been the views, which mankind have entertained, with reference to the kingdom of God. Its location has been fixed somewhere in the centre of space, by the imaginations of christians, in which central position, Jehovah is surrounded by the bright myriads of his worshippers.

This kingdom is always believed to be above; and when we leave this world, it is believed, we ascend to God. But, supposing two individuals expire, the one at midnight, and the other at noon day; they both ascend upward to heaven. Now who does not know, that these two would pursue a course directly opposite to each other? and the farther they pursue their Aerial flight, the greater the distance would be from one to the other. But the APOSTLE instructs us, that the kingdom of God is within man. He says "the kingdom of God is within you." Then it is unnecessary to depart to some other region, in order to partake of the joys of the kingdom. The "kingdom is righteousness, joy and peace in the Holy Ghost."—Then, to possess the joys of the kingdom, is to practice righteousness, and consequently live in peace and joy. Whoever practices righteousness, possesses the joys of the kingdom; while the disobedient remain in "outer darkness." If the kingdom of God is in man, the judgment must also be in man; for doubtless the judgment seat is in the kingdom. Then if this is good reasoning, as we think it is, we do not have to pass into another state of existence to find the "judgment seat;" for it is within us, and we are arraigned before Jehovah's tribunal for every wicked act. Thus it depends upon our course of life, whether we shall possess the joys of the kingdom in life, or not. "For every one must receive in body, according to that which he has done." Then when the body returns back to its kindred dust, we shall have received both our rewards and punishments; or in other words, the natural consequence of our doings, and shall be square with justice, and ready to share in that "free gift," which "come upon all men unto the justification of life, and the gift of God is eternal life." W.

☞ Among Universalists the foregoing is a very popular exposition of the scripture, "the kingdom of God is within you."—Nevertheless, it is very erroneous. The writer, in trying to escape one absurdity, has fallen into several others. He affirms that the Apostle instructs us that the kingdom of God is within man.—He (the Apostle) says, "the kingdom of God is within you."—Within whom? "The Apostle" Jesus Christ was addressing himself to the Pharisees, in answer to their question "when the kingdom of God should come." (See Luke xvii. 20, 21.) If the kingdom of God was within them, would not they have known it?—Rather singular idea that the kingdom of God, "judgment seat" and all, should be within a man and he not know it. How curious it is that men exhibit so little common sense in matters of religion. When they see the word "kingdom" in any book except the Bi-

"The Pope weeps! weep ill-advised Pontiff—weep over thy lost crown of glory, so cheaply obtained, and redeemed with torrents of blood, by nations idolizing an empty name—an image of clay—the shadow of a man!

"Weep, O Pontiff! over the people thou has betrayed—over the destinies of Italy thou hast so ill understood—and over thy timid and cowardly little soul, taking shelter under the sublime mantle of a religion which thou couldst have 'reduced' to its pure fountain, but to which, on the contrary, following the old custom of thy predecessors, thou didst but contribute thy share of shame and defilement!

"Weep, O Pontiff! Thou sceptered and living Anti-Christ—weep for thy well-beloved Germans, and hurl thy thunderbolts on the devoted heads of the contumacious masses, slaughtering them at the gates of Bologna the unconquered, and Milan the magnanimous: hurl them down, for they are henceforth without either point or consistency.

"The Pope weeps! Count Mastai—weeps because Providence, in the shape of an Austrian host, has not by chance, or not, yet given to the destinies of Italy that direction which thou so ardently dost desire; since it is now quite evident, that that Providence to whom thou hast consigned the fate of thy people, assuming in thee and in those about thee the character of improvidence and short-sightedness, was nothing else but thy ancient ally, the perfidious support of the Simoniacal Papacy—the Empire!

"Weep!—because that nefarious compact has not been fully consummated. Weep!—because Italy has still left to her free sons, free arms, and free senses.

"In order that Rome might tranquilly submit to the double yoke of thy demoralizing policy and northern despotism, thou hast in vain appealed to all thy saints; and it was right it should be so. Hast thou not in thy cowardly phrenzy, even resorted to blasphemy? Hast thou not dethroned the Almighty, and placed in His stead the Virgin and the apostles as responsible ministers? Hast thou not rather to them than to Him entrusted the defence of Rome, hoping, perhaps, in thy dread of a Provisional Government on earth, that that Provisional Government in heaven might be more impotent, and less clear sighted, than that of the God of vengeance—the God of terror—the God of retribution—who is on the side of the people, just as thou art on the side of kings?*

"Weep, Weep! Father, no longer holy, because thy iniquitous commands to cease from strife have formed in echo and proved a vain sound; together with thy injunctions to respect blindly the treaties concluded by thee with the enemies of Italy, in the sinister and silent gloom of the Vatican!

"Weep! O, bosom friend of Loyola, since, should the followers of liberty fall as slaves by German hands, the followers of Ignatius will, nevertheless, win neither freedom nor immunity.

"Weep, O Pontiff!—because it is in vain that thou removest from thee whatever is honest and generous, and dismissest patriotic ministers; whilst thy most dreadful enemy, Conscience, will never quit thy side.

"Weep, O Pope! Weep scalding tears o'er the grave thou hast digged for thyself! Weep, because Italy is a glorious reality, whereas the Popedom is nothing but a contaminated name. Weep, because the first will rise more beautiful from the funereal pile thou hast erected for her; while the latter, through its old and present rottenness, will crumble amidst the exultation of emancipated nations."

---

*"God . . . commits the direct protection of this city to the powerful guardians of Rome—the holy Virgin Mary, and to the principal apostles; and, though more than one sacrilege has lately afflicted the capital of the Catholic world, yet our confidence is not shaken on that account."—Papal Edict, of August 3d.

The article, of which the above is a literal translation, produced an extraordinary sensation; fifteen thousand additional copies were sold of it, so great was the demand. The Archbishop of Florence launched a furious denunciation against it in the "Florence Gazette," calling it a mischieveous, scandalous, heretical performance—but all to no purpose. The "Popolano," nothing daunted, ventured to reply to the Archbishop with great boldness, and ironically concluded his rejoinder by saying, "Well: as you find fault with our little essay, entitled, 'The Pope Weeps,' we are most ready to please you, and say, instead, 'He laughs in his sleeve;'" and so little did the prelatic wrath move the editor of that paper, that, on the 27th of August, the obnoxious article was re-produced, to satisfy the increased demand for it.

From the Primitive Expounder.

KINGDOM OF GOD.

Numerous have been the views, which mankind have entertained, with reference to the kingdom of God. Its location has been fixed somewhere in the centre of space, by the imaginations of christians, in which central position, Jehovah is surrounded by the bright myriads of his worshippers.

This kingdom is always believed to be above; and when we leave this world, it is believed, we ascend to God. But, supposing two individuals expire, the one at midnight, and the other at noon day; they both ascend upward to heaven. Now who does not know, that these two would pursue a course directly opposite to each other? and the farther they pursue their Aerial flight, the greater the distance would be from one to the other. But the APOSTLE instructs us, that the kingdom of God is within man. He says "the kingdom of God is within you." Then it is unnecessary to depart to some other region, in order to partake of the joys of the kingdom. The "kingdom is righteousness, joy and peace in the Holy Ghost."—Then, to possess the joys of the kingdom, is to practice righteousness, and consequently live in peace and joy. Whoever practices righteousness, possesses the joys of the kingdom; while the disobedient remain in "outer darkness." If the kingdom of God is in man, the judgment must also be in man; for doubtless the judgment seat is in the kingdom. Then if this is good reasoning, as we think it is, we do not have to pass into another state of existence to find the "judgment seat;" for it is within us, and we are arraigned before Jehovah's tribunal for every wicked act. Thus it depends upon our course of life, whether we shall possess the joys of the kingdom in life, or not. "For every one must receive in body, according to that which he has done." Then when the body returns back to its kindred dust, we shall have received both our rewards and punishments; or in other words, the natural consequence of our doings, and shall be square with justice, and ready to share in that "free gift," which "come upon all men unto the justification of life, and the gift of God is eternal life." W.

☞ Among Universalists the foregoing is a very popular exposition of the scripture, "the kingdom of God is within you."—Nevertheless, it is very erroneous. The writer, in trying to escape one absurdity, has fallen into several others. He affirms that the Apostle instructs us that the kingdom of God is within man.—He (the Apostle) says, "the kingdom of God is within you."—Within whom? "The Apostle" Jesus Christ was addressing himself to the Pharisees, in answer to their question "when the kingdom of God should come." (See Luke xvii. 20, 21.) If the kingdom of God was within them, would not they have known it?—Rather singular idea that the kingdom of God, "judgment seat" and all, should be within a man and he not know it. How curious it is that men exhibit so little common sense in matters of religion. When they see the word "kingdom" in any book except the Bible they know what it signifies. They understand that it takes a king, subjects, territory, laws and officers to enforce the laws to constitute a kingdom. Brother, try again. G. W.

"I BELIEVE IN MORMONISM."

The above is a common saying among some who call themselves Mormons, but who do not now belong to the church. When interrogated as to how much they believe of it, most all will say they believe that the Book of Mormon is true, and that Joseph was a true prophet. But they disagree how long he continued so. Some will say he transgressed in changing the name of the church. Others that he transgressed in commanding the saints to go up and redeem Zion. On this each individual gives a different answer. They sit in judgment on the prophet of God, instead of hearkening to his words and the words of the Lord as they were commanded, which commandments were given when they considered him a true prophet.

"Wherefore, meaning the church, thou shalt give heed unto all his (Joseph's) words, and commandments, which he shall give unto you, as he receiveth them, walking in all holiness before me; for his word ye shall receive as if from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith; for by doing these things, the gates of hell shall not prevail against you: yea, and the Lord God will disperse the powers of darkness from before you; and cause the heavens to shake for your good, and his name's glory." D. & C. sec. xlvi. par. 2.

Friends, have you done this? Your own words condemn you. Read the following concerning the appointment of another:—

"O hearken, ye elders of my church, and give ear to the words which I shall speak unto you: for, behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him whom I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me. But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power except to appoint another in his stead: and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments: and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived; that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed." D. & C. sec. xiv. p. 1, 2.

Where is Joseph's successor? Who among all those that stood up after his martyrdom and claimed that office, done it according to this pattern? Who among them all stands to give the word of the Lord to the saints? Who among them all has done the works of a prophet, seer, revelator and translator? We answer, James J. Strang only. Do you believe it? If you believe in Mormonism you must believe in a living prophet. It is an easy matter to believe in dead prophets. The whole sectarian world does that.—But it is Mormonism to believe in a living priesthood—in a living prophet—in living Apostles, who are the keepers, administrators and expounders of the law of God. B. W.

MORALS OF THE GOLD REGION.

The following is the concluding paragraph of an official letter from a United States military officer in the California gold region. We have not the least doubt of its correctness, because it states just what all past history proves to have happened generally under similar circumstances:—

"From the best information I have been able to collect, I believe that something over $500,000, at $16 per ounce, troy, will have left California in the three months ending September 30th; and of this amount at least four-fifths will find its way to foreign markets, and consequently to foreign mints.

"These regions are of vast extent and are remote from the regular settlements, and from the operation of the laws. In the solitary recesses of the Sierra Nevada are little clusters of men, with nothing but the trees for their covering, and no protection but their own vigilance and strength. Many of these people are known to possess very large amounts of gold (sometimes as much as $20,000) wrapped in their blankets, where there is no eye to see and no agent to pursue the guilty. Is it strange, when the temptation is so great, that the robber and the assassin should be abroad among the mountains? Many robberies and some murders are known already to have occurred; but little attention is excited by these events, where all are in the eager pursuit of wealth. No one can conjecture the extent of these outrages, for living witnesses are not at hand, and "dead men tell no tales." The strong and firm hand of Government must be promptly extended to save the country from the most revolting acts of violence.

"It becomes a matter of vital importance, therefore, that the most efficient measures should be taken for the establishment and preservation of good government in California. The Governor of the Territory should be a man of the highest possible character for talent, firmness and integrity, and no salary hitherto allowed for similar services in other United States Territories, will be an adequate compensation here. Any good laborer can realize fifty per cent. more from his services than the highest Government officer now receives, taking the time together, for a year. It will be impossible to organize a good government under suitable men, unless the salaries of every class of government agents are proportioned to the unavoidable expenses to be incurred in the country.

"I know no section of the United States Territories which more imperatively requires strong garrisons for the preservation of order. Without them I believe the whole country will sink into anarchy, and the worst possible confusion. But to preserve efficient garrisons in California, the pay of the troops must be raised much above the present miserable pittance allowed by law, and very severe enactments must be passed for the punishment of deserters, and all aiders and abettors in desertion. I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. L. FOLSOM.

Captain and Assistant Quartermaster.

Maj. Gen. Thos. S. Jesup, Quartermaster Gen. U. S. Army."

TO THE SAINTS.

Brethren, if you want to see Zion redeemed and the kingdom established, be obedient to the word of the Lord and send in your tithes and offerings, that we may build a house unto his name and a strong Tower on the Hill of Promise, as he has commanded us; that he may reveal unto us those things which he revealed unto his saints anciently, things without which we cannot hold dominion nor the oppressed be redeemed from deceit and violence. Gather up to the places appointed, that you may be instructed in things pertaining to the kingdom. "Obey them who have the rule over you," and you shall prevail. For it is our Father's good pleasure to give us the kingdom. GILBERT WATSON, Bishop.

☞ We publish in another column the prospectus of the Southern Literary Messenger, a very able paper, published in Richmond, Va. It is some time since we have seen a number, but hope to have it on our table in a few days. It maintains its former high repute, and we particularly commend it to the Yankee literati as a true reflection of the taste and talent of those of the same blood and language in a different country.

ble they know what it signifies. They understand that it takes a king, subjects, territory, laws, officers to enforce the laws to constitute a kingdom. Brother, try again. G. W.

"I BELIEVE IN MORMONISM."

The above is a common saying among some who call themselves Mormons. [illegible] belong to the church. When interrogated [illegible] they believe of it, most all will say they believe that [illegible] Mormonism is true, and that Joseph was a true prophet. They may [illegible] long be continued so. Some will say he translated [illegible] bearing the name of the church. Others that he [illegible] stirring the saints to go up and redeem Zion. One [illegible] gives a different answer. They sit in judgment [illegible], instead of hearkening to his words and [illegible] Lord as they were commanded, which commandments when they considered him a true prophet.

"Wherefore, thou shalt give heed unto all his (Joseph's) words and commandments, which he shall give unto you, as he shall receive, walking in all holiness before me; for his word [illegible] from mine own mouth, in all patience and faith. And [illegible] these things, the gates of hell shall not prevail against you; and the Lord God will disperse the powers of darkness before you, and cause the heavens to shake for your good, and his name's glory." D. & C. sec. xlvi. par. 2.

Friends, [illegible] these? Your own words condemn you. Read the following concerning the appointment of another:—

"O hearken, ye elders of my church, and give ear to the words which I shall speak unto you; for, behold, verily, verily I say unto you, that ye have received a commandment for a law unto my church, through him whom I have appointed unto you, to receive commandments and revelations from my hand. And this ye shall know assuredly, that there is none other appointed unto you to receive commandments and revelations until he be taken, if he abide in me. But verily, verily I say unto you, that none else shall be appointed unto this gift except it be through him, for if it be taken from him he shall not have power except to appoint another in his stead; and this shall be a law unto you, that ye receive not the teachings of any that shall come before you as revelations or commandments; and this I give unto you, that you may not be deceived; that you may know they are not of me. For verily I say unto you, that he that is ordained of me shall come in at the gate and be ordained as I have told you before, to teach those revelations which you have received, and shall receive through him whom I have appointed." D. & C. sec. xix. p. 1, 2.

Where is Joseph's successor? Who among all those that stood up after his martyrdom and claimed that office, done it according to this pattern? Who among them all stands to give the word of the Lord to the saints? Who among them all has done the works of a prophet, seer, revelator and translator? We answer, James J. Strang only. Do you believe it? If you believe in Mormonism you must believe in a living prophet. It is an easy matter to believe in dead prophets. The whole sectarian world does that.—But it is Mormonism to believe in a living priesthood—in a living prophet—in living Apostles, who are the keepers, administrators and expounders of the law of God. B. W.

MORALS OF THE GOLD REGION.

The following is the concluding paragraph of an official letter from a United States military officer in the California gold region. We have not the least doubt of its correctness, because it states just what all past history proves to have happened generally under similar circumstances:—

"From the best information I have been able to collect, I believe that something over $500,000, at $16 per ounce, troy, will have left California in the three months ending September 30th; and of this amount at least four-fifths will find its way to foreign markets, and consequently to foreign mints.

"These regions are of vast extent and are remote from the regular settlements, and from the operation of the laws. In the solitary recesses of the Sierra Nevada are little clusters of men, with nothing but the trees for their covering, and no protection but their own vigilance and strength. Many of these people are known to possess very large amounts of gold (sometimes as much as $20,000) wrapped in their blankets, where there is no eye to see and no agent to pursue the guilty. Is it strange, when the temptation is so great, that the robber and the assassin should be abroad among the mountains? Many robberies and some murders are known already to have occurred; but little attention is excited by these events, where all are in the eager pursuit of wealth. No one can conjecture the extent of these outrages, for living witnesses are not at hand, and "dead men tell no tales." The strong and firm hand of Government must be promptly extended to save the country from the most revolting acts of violence.

"It becomes a matter of vital importance, therefore, that the most efficient measures should be taken for the establishment and preservation of good government in California. The Governor of the Territory should be a man of the highest possible character for talent, firmness and integrity, and no salary hitherto allowed for similar services in other United States Territories, will be an adequate compensation here. Any good laborer can realize fifty per cent. more from his services than the highest Government officer now receives, taking the time together, for a year. It will be impossible to organize a good government under suitable men, unless the salaries of every class of government agents are proportioned to the unavoidable expenses to be incurred in the country.

"I know no section of the United States Territories which more imperatively requires strong garrisons for the preservation of order. Without them I believe the whole country will sink into anarchy, and the worst possible confusion. But to preserve efficient garrisons in California, the pay of the troops must be raised much above the present miserable pittance allowed by law, and very severe enactments must be passed for the punishment of deserters, and all aiders and abettors in desertion. I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. L. FOLSOM.

Captain and Assistant Quartermaster.

Maj. Gen. Thos. S. Jesup, Quartermaster Gen. U. S. Army."

TO THE SAINTS.

Brethren, if you want to see Zion redeemed and the kingdom established, be obedient to the word of the Lord and send in your tithes and offerings, that we may build a house unto his name and a strong Tower on the Hill of Promise, as he has commanded us; that he may reveal unto us those things which are revealed unto his saints anciently, things without which [illegible] hold dominion nor the oppressed be redeemed from de[illegible]violence. Gather up to the places appointed, that you may be instructed in things pertaining to the kingdom. "Obey them who have the rule over you," and you shall prevail. For it is our Father's good pleasure to give us the kingdom. GILBERT WATSON, Bishop.

☞ We publish in another column the prospectus of the Southern Literary Messenger, a very able paper, published in Richmond, Va. It is some time since we have seen a number, but hope to have it on our table in a few days. It maintains its former high repute, and we particularly commend it to the Yankee literati as a true reflection of the taste and talent of those of the same blood and language in a different country.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 46.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, FEB. 1, 1849. [WHOLE No. 110.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE YELLOW, OR GOLDEN FEVER.

We suppose that all our readers are acquainted with the reports respecting the late discoveries of vast deposites of gold in western California. Capt. J. L. Folsom, of the United States army, in a letter to Gen. Jessup, writing from San Francisco, Sept. 18th last, says:—

"On the lower portions of the streams it is found in thin flat particles, resembling small golden fish scales. Higher in the mountains it is found varying in size, from the finest particles to pieces of five or six ounces in weight, and of all conceivable forms. Many of the largest pieces contain small portions of quartz and other granite rock imbedded in them. The coarse gold is dug out of the crevices among the rocks, in the dry beds of mountain torrents, with pickaxes, small iron bars, spades, butchers knives, sticks, &c. In many places the streams flow over strata of coarse slate, or shale, standing vertically, and between the different layers the gold is deposited by the water.

"As no one has yet found the gold in its native matrix, a question often suggests itself as to its origin. I believe the coarse gold is found near the spots where it originally lay in its native bed, and much of the fine gold has been swept down from the mountains by torrents of water. Almost all the rocks in Upper California are imperfectly organized, being soft and friable, and incapable of resisting the action of the weather. In the process of time, the mountains have gradually crumbled away into fine dust, and the gold has been liberated. The coarse gold, from its massiveness and great specific gravity, was not removed from the mountain sides, whereas the fine gold was swept off to the plains below.

"The extent of these golden deposites it is impossible to conjecture. Gold has been found one hundred and forty miles above Sutter's fort. It is dug in great quantities almost all points along Feather, Juba, and Bear rivers, and upon the American Fork and all its tributaries, upon the Consumes and Stanislaus rivers, and upon both sides of the San Joaquim river. It has been found at Bodega, on the sea coast, and at various points in the chain of mountains which separates the waters flowing into the San Joaquim from those which enter the Pacific, as far as Cindad de los Angelos.—It has also been found in considerable quantities in the earth of the plains near the mission of Santa Clara. It is thus known to exist throughout a region of country of more than six hundred miles in extent, and probably extends into Oregon."

The first discovery of these golden deposites was made as late as last February. It is, however, believed that the Indians knew of the existence of gold in that region. As soon as the reports of the discovery were believed at San Francisco and vicinity, a change almost magical in its nature pervaded the whole population. Lawyers, doctors, clergymen, farmers, mechanics, merchants, sailors, and soldiers, left their legitimate occupations, to embark on a business where fortunes were to be made in a few weeks. Villages and districts, where all had been bustle, industry, and improvement, were soon left without male population. Mechanics, merchants, and magistrates, were all alike off to the mines, and all kinds of useful occupation, except gold digging, was at an end. By the first of last July, Capt. F. says, there were more than 3,000 persons at the mines, and that number was being daily augmented. Says Capt. Folsom:—

"There were daily accessions from all parts of California, from Oregon and Sonora, and from the Sandwich Islands. There has been such a drain from the Islands that there is scarcely a mechanic left at Honolulu. The same is likely to be the case in Oregon, as every vessel comes in from there crowded, and we hear of a large overland emigration. Among the people engaged in the mines, however, there are many runaway sailors, deserters from the army, trappers and mountaineers, who are naturally idle, dissipated, and dissolute; in short, taken in the aggregate, the miners are the worst kind of laboring population."

Another writer says: "Almost all California to a man—men, women, and children, editors, merchants, lawyers, farmers, smiths, school masters, alcades, shoe makers, speculators, millers, ministers, volunteers, loafers, blacklegs, &c., all with pick, shovel, and bowl, digging and washing in the earth; as busy as Bunyan's man, with the muck rake, scraping together the sticks and straws! Wo to the morals of the country, and wo to the mouths that some months hence will want food."

This, remember, was the state of things half a year ago, before the reports had reached and been responded to from this country.—More expeditions are being fitted out in all our principal sea ports; and adventurers of all classes are flocking to this El Dorado by thousands. And, if time should continue, the prospect is, that by another June there will be on the mining grounds a population of some hundred thousand. The climate is thus described by Capt. Folsom:—

"I was in the mines about the 1st July; at that time the weather there was insufferably hot. I think it by far the most oppressive climate I ever was in. It is much more uncomfortable than the climate of Brazil at the warmest season of the year, and everything was literally parched up after a drought which had then continued for nearly three months, and which had five months more to run to the rainy season.

"The sea breezes, which extend up the valley of the Sacramento, never pass the Sierra Nevada, and seldom penetrate even the lateral valleys and ravines of those mountains, and there was not a breath of air moving among the mines. The sun was blazing down with more than tropical fervor, while his rays were reflected in ten thousand directions from the sides of the hills, until the atmosphere glowed and glimmered like the air in a furnace. I then foresaw (what has since happened) that there would be much sickness among the miners. These people had deserted their regular occupation; and a complete change of life, and an unnatural climate, could not fail to act unfavorably upon health. Their diet was

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 46.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. FEB. 1, 1849. [WHOLE No. 110.

GOSPEL HERALD.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

THE YELLOW, OR GOLDEN FEVER.

We suppose that all our readers are acquainted with the reports respecting the late discoveries of vast deposites of gold in western California. Capt. J. L. Folsom, of the United States army, in a letter to Gen. Jessup, writing from San Francisco, Sept. 18th last, says:—

"On the lower portions of the streams it is found in thin flat particles, resembling small golden fish scales. Higher in the mountains it is found varying in size, from the finest particles to pieces of five or six ounces in weight, and of all conceivable forms. Many of the largest pieces contain small portions of quartz and other granite rock imbedded in them. The coarse gold is dug out of the crevices among the rocks, in the dry beds of mountain torrents, with pickaxes, small iron bars, spades, butchers knives, sticks, &c. In many places the streams flow over strata of coarse slate, or shale, standing vertically, and between the different layers the gold is deposited by the water.

"As no one has yet found the gold in its native matrix, a question often suggests itself as to its origin. I believe the coarse gold is found near the spots where it originally lay in its native bed, and much of the fine gold has been swept down from the mountains by torrents of water. Almost all the rocks in Upper California are imperfectly organized, being soft and friable, and incapable of resisting the action of the weather. In the process of time, the mountains have gradually crumbled away into fine dust, and the gold has been liberated. The coarse gold, from its massiveness and great specific gravity, was not removed from the mountain sides, whereas the fine gold was swept off to the plains below.

"The extent of these golden deposites it is impossible to conjecture. Gold has been found one hundred and forty miles above Sutter's fort. It is dug in great quantities almost all points along Feather, Juba, and Bear rivers, and upon the American Fork and all its tributaries, upon the Consumes and Stanislaus rivers, and upon both sides of the San Joaquim river. It has been found at Bodega, on the sea coast, and at various points in the chain of mountains which separates the waters flowing into the San Joaquim from those which enter the Pacific, as far as Cindad de los Angelos.—It has also been found in considerable quantities in the earth of the plains near the mission of Santa Clara. It is thus known to exist throughout a region of country of more than six hundred miles in extent, and probably extends into Oregon."

The first discovery of these golden deposites was made as late as last February. It is, however, believed that the Indians knew of the existence of gold in that region. As soon as the reports of the discovery were believed at San Francisco and vicinity, a change almost magical in its nature pervaded the whole population. Lawyers, doctors, clergymen, farmers, mechanics, merchants, sailors, and soldiers, left their legitimate occupations, to embark on a business where fortunes were to be made in a few weeks. Villages and districts, where all had been bustle, industry, and improvement, were soon left without male population. Mechanics, merchants, and magistrates, were all alike off to the mines, and all kinds of useful occupation, except gold digging, was at an end. By the first of last July, Capt. F. says, there were more than 3,000 persons at the mines, and that number was being daily augmented. Says Capt. Folsom:—

"There were daily accessions from all parts of California, from Oregon and Sonora, and from the Sandwich Islands. There has been such a drain from the Islands that there is scarcely a mechanic left at Honolulu. The same is likely to be the case in Oregon, as every vessel comes in from there crowded, and we hear of a large overland emigration. Among the people engaged in the mines, however, there are many runaway sailors, deserters from the army, trappers and mountaineers, who are naturally idle, dissipated, and dissolute; in short, taken in the aggregate, the miners are the worst kind of laboring population."

Another writer says: "Almost all California to a man—men, women, and children, editors, merchants, lawyers, farmers, smiths, school masters, aleades, shoe makers, speculators, millers, ministers, volunteers, loafers, blacklegs, &c., all with pick, shovel, and bowl, digging and washing in the earth; as busy as Bunyan's man, with the muck rake, scraping together the sticks and straws! Wo to the morals of the country, and wo to the mouths that some months hence will want food."

This, remember, was the state of things half a year ago, before the reports had reached and been responded to from this country.—More expeditions are being fitted out in all our principal sea ports; and adventurers of all classes are flocking to this El Dorado by thousands. And, if time should continue, the prospect is, that by another June there will be on the mining grounds a population of some hundred thousand. The climate is thus described by Capt. Folsom:—

"I was in the mines about the 1st July; at that time the weather there was insufferably hot. I think it by far the most oppressive climate I ever was in. It is much more uncomfortable than the climate of Brazil at the warmest season of the year, and everything was literally parched up after a drought which had then continued for nearly three months, and which had five months more to run to the rainy season.

"The sea breezes, which extend up the valley of the Sacramento, never pass the Sierra Nevada, and seldom penetrate even the lateral valleys and ravines of those mountains, and there was not a breath of air moving among the mines. The sun was blazing down with more than tropical fervor, while his rays were reflected in ten thousand directions from the sides of the hills, until the atmosphere glowed and glimmered like the air in a furnace. I then foresaw (what has since happened) that there would be much sickness among the miners. These people had deserted their regular occupation; and a complete change of life, and an unnatural climate, could not fail to act unfavorably upon health. Their diet was bad, their labors were severe, and they were exposed completely without shelter, in the day time, to a burning sun, and at night to the chilly atmosphere of the mountains. Many of them worked with their feet in the water, and inflamed their blood in a feverish climate by a free use of ardent spirits. The natural consequence followed. Many are now sick with bilious and intermittent fevers, dysenteries, camp fevers, &c."

He thus describes the morals of the people thus collected:—

"It is impossible to foretell what will be the ultimate result of this sudden development of wealth. It is sufficiently obvious, however, that the country will be prematurely filled by a restless, excitable, adventurous, and reckless population, and that extended agricultural or mechanical improvements are at an end for some years to come. Gambling, and all sorts of thoughtless profusion begin to prevail. The present excitement will attract vast numbers of the idle, vicious and dissolute. Refugees from justice from the United States, as well as other countries, will flock to California among the better disposed population, and will find shelter among the almost inaccessible fastnesses of the mountains, where such mines of wealth are now opened."

Since then the state of the country has become much worse.—Private letters received here from the gold mines of California are rather discouraging to those about starting for that region. They confirm the former reports as to the abundance of gold, but at the same time state that those who are in possession of the precious ore in any quantities, are marked, and often soon after disappear.—Even some that have attached themselves to trains leaving the mines have been robbed, and trains on their way have been plundered.

The state of things is not likely to be improved by the rush of thousands of reckless characters who are fast flocking to that country. It will be so much easier to murder and rob the one who has picked his thousands from the sands, than to gradually accumulate at the rate of five dollars an hour, that many will be tempted to enrich themselves in the shortest way. Add to this the want of food which there must be for such a mass of people, and the distress which must follow from famine, the intensity of the climate, and the degraded morals of thousands there, can be better conceived than described. We fully believe that multitudes on multitudes will go there only to die. For the sake of a little paltry gain, they will peril their lives and eternal all. We hope that none of our readers will be humbugged by these visions of sudden gain. Dr. Humphrey, in the N. Y. Evangelist, has the following judicious remarks respecting the gold fever:—

"In sober earnest, this gold fever is becoming a very sweeping, a very alarming epidemic. Thousands of our young men are rushing to the sea board, eager at any expense to find the shortest passage to the land of promise, while thousands more are panting to reach it, through the wildernesses and deserts of interior routes.—Vessels loaded with adventurers, goods and provisions, are fitting out with all possible dispatch—some for the Isthmus; some by way of the stormy Cape; and each man straining every nerve to realize his golden dreams in advance of his neighbors.

"The object of this extraordinary rush for California is, to dig up gold, or purchase it with merchandize and provisions, at enormous profits. Thousands and thousands will go who are well off, and doing good business, and enjoying all the blessings and privileges of social and religious life at home. All these they are leaving behind them. And what will be the history of this unparalleled scramble for gold? There is no presumption in predicting that it will be a melancholy and admonitory one. A large proportion of the adventurers will die there. During a part of the year the mineral region is very unhealthy; and though a majority of the gold diggers may retire during the rainy season, many will linger and dig their own graves. Intoxicating drinks will be poured in like a flood, as soon as wind and steam can convey them there, and will inevitably make the most frightful ravages, both among the whites and their Indian auxiliaries. In the absence of all religious restraints and privileges, not only will the bad wax worse and worse, but those who have been religiously educated will be exposed to temptations which, it is to be feared, but few will have the firmness to resist. Drunkenness and reveling will reel and slaver and vociferate, without shame and without restraint. By hundreds, if not thousands, all the golden findings of the day will be gambled away in the night. Feuds will break out, and blood will flow. In short, that great Bible truth, that the love of money is the root of all evil, will be most fearfully illustrated. Some, no doubt, will scrape together 'more than heart could wish' of the yellow dust. A few may return and bring it home; but will it prove a blessing to them or a curse? Who does not know that large fortunes, suddenly acquired, far oftener than otherwise, drown men in destruction and perdition. Whatever a few may gain, it requires no spirit of prophecy to foretell, that, taking an equal number from the same classes of those who go to seek their fortunes in the new El Dorado, those who stay at home, and content themselves with the gradual earnings of sober industry, will in the end be infinitely better off. The safest regions to dig for gold are those where, turning up the soil, fills the hand of the reaper with the 'finest of the wheat' and other precious grains."

By the foregoing we would not wish to be understood as opposing our readers seeking a golden country. There is a land the "placers" of which are more richly stocked with gold than are the sands of California. The capitol of that country is paved with gold. Its gates are of pearls, and its walls of precious stones. The climate of that country is free from all miasma. No chilling winds, burning heat, or poisonous breath, will pollute the atmosphere; so that the inhabitants shall never say, I am sick. Those who go thither will be all righteous. Thieves, murderers, gamblers, &c., will gain no admittance there; so that those who lay up treasure in that world, need never fear that it will be wrongfully wrested from them. Death will get no entrance there, to snatch us from the prize just as we are prepared to enjoy it. In that country God will "wipe all tears from their eyes, and then shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." And "there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie." There will be no famine there; for in the midst of the city, on either side of the river, will be the tree of life, bearing twelve manner of fruits, and yielding its fruits every month. That is a golden country to which all may safely look—to which all are justified in eagerly desiring to go, and to which none will repent of having gone when they shall have once reached its happy shores.—Advent Herald.

Westford, Otsego Co., N. Y., Jan. 11th, 1849.

Beloved Brother Strang:—No doubt you would like to hear from me, for though I am the least among the Apostles, yet I am trying to do my best to roll forth the kingdom of God. I was at Millford Centre four weeks ago earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. In the midst of opposition, one Edward Chidister yielded to the liquid grave for the remission of his sins, and I think he will soon make a hunter or fisher of men. I organized a branch there of six members, one Elder, one Teacher and Clerk.—They enjoy themselves well, and I have good hopes of more. I then went to brother Samuel Bacon's, one of the most wise, prudent, faithful and strong minded men we have in the church. He and brother Stevens are all that live in Middlefield. They are coming bad, their labors were severe, and they were exposed completely without shelter, in the day time, to a burning sun, and at night to the chilly atmosphere of the mountains. Many of them worked with their feet in the water, and inflamed their blood in a feverish climate by a free use of ardent spirits. The natural consequence followed. Many are now sick with bilious and intermittent fevers, dysenteries, camp fevers, &c."

He thus describes the morals of the people thus collected:—

"It is impossible to foretell what will be the ultimate result of this sudden development of wealth. It is sufficiently obvious, however, that the country will be prematurely filled by a restless, excitable, adventurous, and reckless population, and that extended agricultural or mechanical improvements are at an end for some years to come. Gambling, and all sorts of thoughtless profusion begin to prevail. The present excitement will attract vast numbers of the idle, vicious and dissolute. Refugees from justice from the United States, as well as other countries, will flock to California among the better disposed population, and will find shelter among the almost inaccessible fastnesses of the mountains, where such mines of wealth are now opened."

Since then the state of the country has become much worse.—Private letters received here from the gold mines of California are rather discouraging to those about starting for that region. They confirm the former reports as to the abundance of gold, but at the same time state that those who are in possession of the precious ore in any quantities, are marked, and often soon after disappear.—Even some that have attached themselves to trains leaving the mines have been robbed, and trains on their way have been plundered.

The state of things is not likely to be improved by the rush of thousands of reckless characters who are fast flocking to that country. It will be so much easier to murder and rob the one who has picked his thousands from the sands, than to gradually accumulate at the rate of five dollars an hour, that many will be tempted to enrich themselves in the shortest way. Add to this the want of food which there must be for such a mass of people, and the distress which must follow from famine, the intensity of the climate, and the degraded morals of thousands there, can be better conceived than described. We fully believe that multitudes on multitudes will go there only to die. For the sake of a little paltry gain, they will peril their lives and eternal all. We hope that none of our readers will be humbugged by these visions of sudden gain. Dr. Humphrey, in the N. Y. Ecangelist, has the following judicious remarks respecting the gold fever:—

"In sober earnest, this gold fever is becoming a very sweeping, a very alarming epidemic. Thousands of our young men are rushing to the sea board, eager at any expense to find the shortest passage to the land of promise, while thousands more are panting to reach it, through the wildernesses and deserts of interior routes.—Vessels loaded with adventurers, goods and provisions, are fitting out with all possible dispatch—some for the Isthmus; some by way of the stormy Cape; and each man straining every nerve to realize his golden dreams in advance of his neighbors.

"The object of this extraordinary rush for California is, to dig up gold, or purchase it with merchandize and provisions, at enormous profits. Thousands and thousands will go who are well off, and doing good business, and enjoying all the blessings and privileges of social and religious life at home. All these they are leaving behind them. And what will be the history of this unparalleled scramble for gold? There is no presumption in predicting that it will be a melancholy and admonitory one. A large proportion of the adventurers will die there. During a part of the year the mineral region is very unhealthy; and though a majority of the gold diggers may retire during the rainy season, many will linger and dig their own graves. Intoxicating drinks will be poured in like a flood, as soon as wind and steam can convey them there, and will inevitably make the most frightful ravages, both among the whites and their Indian auxiliaries. In the absence of all religious restraints and privileges, not only will the bad wax worse and worse, but those who have been religiously educated will be exposed to temptations which, it is to be feared, but few will have the firmness to resist. Drunkenness and reveling will reel and slaver and vociferate, without shame and without restraint. By hundreds, if not thousands, all the golden findings of the day will be gambled away in the night. Feuds will break out, and blood will flow. In short, that great Bible truth, that the love of money is the root of all evil, will be most fearfully illustrated. Some, no doubt, will scrape together 'more than heart could wish' of the yellow dust. A few may return and bring it home; but will it prove a blessing to them or a curse? Who does not know that large fortunes, suddenly acquired, far oftener than otherwise, drown men in destruction and perdition. Whatever a few may gain, it requires no spirit of prophecy to foretell, that, taking an equal number from the same classes of those who go to seek their fortunes in the new El Dorado, those who stay at home, and content themselves with the gradual earnings of sober industry, will in the end be infinitely better off. The safest regions to dig for gold are those where, turning up the soil, fills the hand of the reaper with the 'finest of the wheat' and other precious grains."

By the foregoing we would not wish to be understood as opposing our readers seeking a golden country. There is a land the "placers" of which are more richly stocked with gold than are the sands of California. The capitol of that country is paved with gold. Its gates are of pearls, and its walls of precious stones. The climate of that country is free from all miasma. No chilling winds, burning heat, or poisonous breath, will pollute the atmosphere; so that the inhabitants shall never say, I am sick. Those who go thither will be all righteous. Thieves, murderers, gamblers, &c., will gain no admittance there; so that those who lay up treasure in that world, need never fear that it will be wrongfully wrested from them. Death will get no entrance there, to snatch us from the prize just as we are prepared to enjoy it. In that country God will "wipe all tears from their eyes, and then shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." And "there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie." There will be no famine there; for in the midst of the city, on either side of the river, will be the tree of life, bearing twelve manner of fruits, and yielding its fruits every month. That is a golden country to which all may safely look—to which all are justified in eagerly desiring to go, and to which none will repent of having gone when they shall have once reached its happy shores.—Advent Herald.

Westford, Otsego Co., N. Y., Jan. 11th, 1849.

Beloved Brother Strang:—No doubt you would like to hear from me, for though I am the least among the Apostles, yet I am trying to do my best to roll forth the kingdom of God. I was at Millford Centre four weeks ago earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. In the midst of opposition, one Edward Chidister yielded to the liquid grave for the remission of his sins, and I think he will soon make a hunter or fisher of men. I organized a branch there of six members, one Elder, one Teacher and Clerk.—They enjoy themselves well, and I have good hopes of more. I then went to brother Samuel Bacon's, one of the most wise, prudent, faithful and strong minded men we have in the church. He and brother Stevens are all that live in Middlefield. They are coming up to the gathering in the spring. I then went to Westford, where I found all still in good spirits as before. On Christmas day I baptized six more, who are now rejoicing in the truth, and among the rest was Samuel Babcock and Edna, his wife. He rented his father's farm, and lived about six or eight rods from his father's house. I went over the next morning after I baptized brother Babcock to see him, when soon the old man came in, in a great rage and ordered me out of doors. I would not go. Then he ordered his son to leave the place in twenty-four hours. So brother Babcock had to leave bag and baggage, because he joined the church, being betrayed both by parent and kinsfolks, as the scripture says, Luke xxi. 16. Bro. Hewitt let them in the upper story of his house, and they feel very well at present.

Bro. Strang, I just read your letter to the brother who gave you the dollar, &c. I can sympathize with you in those discouraging thoughts, which I read with a beating heart and streaming eyes.—All I could say was, O, my God, help brother Strang! hold him by thy almighty power, and not let him faint under the hand of thine enemies. O, dear brother, be of good cheer, for the brethren here will be there in the spring, and will fetch at least six thousand dollars, and I think seven thousand, which, no doubt, will be put to pay that debt of the Association, and to build up Voree, and to secure Beaver Island as you spoke of. The Hewitts and Chidister have sold out their farms, and are now selling off their stock. These brethren here are of the right stamp, and no mistake, and there will be from fifty to one hundred who will come up with me next spring. Nearly all felt doubtful whether they could sell for a long time, but we all agreed to ask God to send buyers, and several came very soon. I know God has heard prayer in this thing, and the gifts among us, such as casting out devils, healing the sick, speaking new tongues, interpretation and prophecy, with persecution a plenty. I long to have the time come that we may leave this place, and let the judgments come down upon the ungodly in this region; for some act as if the devil was not half wicked enough to suit them—I can scrape the dust off my feet with a clear conscience, that I am clear from their blood. I long to go among those that are moral and civilized, viz., the Indians. And I say, in my heart, O God deliver me from these learned heathenish Gentiles. It seems as if their cup was full to the brim. I can of late realize what I was sent here for. The angels were sent to hurry Lot out of Sodom.

I got a letter from Bro. Hale yesterday, and the times are bad for preaching in Lowell. He has gained one convert only. Bro. Hale says he will be here some time in March. Bro. Hale will come home with me in the spring. Bro. James, if you have any advice to give for part of us to call at Beaver, just drop a line to Westford on the subject. I was very sick last week, but when Elder Alanson Hewitt and Elder Bacon anointed me with oil and laid their hands on me, I soon recovered. Mary Ann Snider, who has been crazy three months, through the prayer of faith was made whole and rational. Many said if she was healed they would believe, but now are whist as mice. This generation all want a sign, and when the sign is wrought which they ask for they will not believe.—Then they want another to make the first true, and then they want the third to confirm the other two, and then the fourth to make the whole indisputable, and then the fifth so that every body would see that it was a miracle, and so on till a hundred may be done. Then it becomes too familiar, and then they would call it the sleight of hand or something else. How much longer God will suffer them I know not, but I think they are ripe for destruction. But let us always stand up to the rack hay or no hay, for the blessing shall be ours, and we shall triumph over our enemies in the strength of Israel's God. O, dear brother James, in the name of God I never will forsake you nor the cause, though all men do. Dear brother, pray for me, and do not forget me before the Lord. There has been nine baptized since I first came here, and have good hopes of more before we start to the gathering. I am your true friend and brother,

EBENEZER PAGE.

☞ "But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Matt. vi. 33. The preceding is an extract from Christ's sermon on the mount, and is certainly worthy the candid consideration of the saints.—Christ taught his disciples to seek first the kingdom of God, and all their temporal necessities would be added unto them. Has the promise of God ever failed? Is the kingdom of God of less importance now than it was eighteen hundred years ago? Who is willing to trust himself in the kingdom of God? Who makes it his chief object? Ah, they are like angels visits, "few and far between." Most men think more of their relatives and possessions than they do of the kingdom of God. It is just as Christ prophecied it should be. He said:—

"As the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Matt. xxiv. 37, 38, 39.

Saints, show your faith by your works, lest this day come upon you unawares. "For the Savior said, it is not every one that saith Lord, Lord that shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." What his will is, is evident from the following extract:—

"Behold it is my will that all they who call on my name, and worship me according to mine everlasting gospel, should gather together and stand in holy places, and prepare for the revelation which is to come when the veil of the covering of my temple, in my tabernacle, which hideth the earth, shall be taken off, and all flesh shall see me together. And every corruptible thing, both of man, or of the beasts of the field, of the fowls of heaven, or of the fish of the sea, that dwell upon all the face of the earth, shall be consumed; and also, that of element shall melt with fervent heat; and all things shall become new, that my knowledge and glory may dwell upon all the earth. And in that day the enmity of man, and the enmity of beasts, yea, the enmity of all flesh shall cease from before my face. And in that day whatsoever any man shall ask it shall be given unto him. And in that day Satan shall not have power to tempt any man. And there shall be no sorrow, because there is no death. In that day an infant shall not die until he is old, and his life shall be as the age of a tree, and when he dies he shall not sleep, (that is to say in the earth,) but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious. Yea, verily I say unto you, in that day when the Lord shall come he shall reveal all things; things which have passed, and hidden things which no man knew; things of the earth by which it was made, and the purpose and the end thereof; things most precious; things that are above, and things that are beneath; things that are in the earth, and upon the earth, and in heaven.—And all they who suffer persecution for my name, and endure in faith, though they are called to lay down their lives for my sake, yet shall they partake of all this glory. Wherefore, fear not even unto death; for in this world your joy is not full, but in me your joy is full. Therefore, care not for the body, neither the life of the body; but care for the soul, and for the life of the soul; and seek the face of the Lord always, that in patience ye may possess your souls, and ye shall have eternal life. When men are called unto

up to the gathering in the spring. I then went to Westford, where I found all still in good spirits as before. On Christmas day I baptized six more, who are now rejoicing in the truth, and among the rest was Samuel Babcock and Edna, his wife. He rented his father's farm, and lived about six or eight rods from his father's house. I went over the next morning after I baptized brother Babcock to see him, when soon the old man came in, in a great rage and ordered me out of doors. I would not go. Then he ordered his son to leave the place in twenty-four hours. So brother Babcock had to leave bag and baggage, because he joined the church, being betrayed both by parent and kinsfolks, as the scripture says, Luke xxi. 16. Bro Hewitt let them in the upper story of his house, and they feel very well at present.

Bro. Strang, I just read your letter to the brother who gave you the dollar, &c. I can sympathize with you in those discouraging thoughts, which I read with a beating heart and streaming eyes.—All I could say was, O, my God, help brother Strang! hold him by thy almighty power, and not let him faint under the hand of thine enemies. O, dear brother, be of good cheer, for the brethren here will be there in the spring, and will fetch at least six thousand dollars, and I think seven thousand, which, no doubt, will be put to pay that debt of the Association, and to build up Voree, and to secure Beaver Island as you spoke of. The Hewitts and Chidister have sold out their farms, and are now selling off their stock. These brethren here are of the right stamp, and no mistake, and there will be from fifty to one hundred who will come up with me next spring. Nearly all felt doubtful whether they could sell for a long time, but we all agreed to ask God to send buyers, and several came very soon. I know God has heard prayer in this thing, and the gifts among us, such as casting out devils, healing the sick, speaking new tongues, interpretation and prophecy, with persecution a plenty. I long to have the time come that we may leave this place, and let the judgments come down upon the ungodly in this region; for some act as if the devil was not half wicked enough to suit them.—I can scrape the dust off my feet with a clear conscience, that I am clear from their blood. I long to go among those that are moral and civilized, viz., the Indians. And I say, in my heart, O God deliver me from these learned heathenish Gentiles. It seems as if their cup was full to the brim. I can of late realize what I was sent here for. The angels were sent to hurry Lot out of Sodom.

I got a letter from Bro. Hale yesterday, and the times are bad for preaching in Lowell. He has gained one convert only. Bro. Hale says he will be here some time in March. Bro. Hale will come home with me in the spring. Bro. James, if you have any advice to give for part of us to call at Beaver, just drop a line to Westford on the subject. I was very sick last week, but when Elder Alanson Hewitt and Elder Baron anointed me with oil and laid their hands on me, I soon recovered. Mary Ann Snider, who has been crazy three months, through the prayer of faith was made whole and rational. Many said if she was healed they would believe, but now are whist as mice. This generation all want a sign and when the sign is wrought which they ask for they will not believe.—Then they want another to make the first true, and then they want the third to confirm the other two, and then the fourth to make the whole indisputable, and then the fifth so that every body would see that it was a miracle, and so on till a hundred may be done. Then it becomes too familiar, and then they would call it the sleight of hand or something else. How much longer God will suffer them I know not, but I think they are ripe for destruction. But let us always stand up to the rack hay or no hay, for the blessing shall be ours, and we shall triumph over our enemies in the strength of Israel's God. O, dear brother James, in the name of God I never will forsake you nor the cause, though all men do. Dear brother, pray for me, and do not forget me before the Lord. There has been nine baptized since I first came here, and have good hopes of more before we start to the gathering. I am your true friend and brother,

EBENEZER PAGE.

☞ "But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Matt. vi. 33. The preceding is an extract from Christ's sermon on the mount, and is certainly worthy the candid consideration of the saints.—Christ taught his disciples to seek first the kingdom of God, and all their temporal necessities would be added unto them. Has the promise of God ever failed? Is the kingdom of God of less importance now than it was eighteen hundred years ago? Who is willing to trust himself in the kingdom of God? Who makes it his chief object? Ah, they are like angels visits, "few and far between." Most men think more of their relatives and possessions than they do of the kingdom of God. It is just as Christ prophecied it should be. He said:—

"As the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood, they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Matt xxiv. 37. 38. 39.

Saints, show your faith by your works, lest this day come upon you unawares. "For the Savior said, it is not every one that saith Lord, Lord that shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." What He will is, is evident from the following extract:—

"Behold it is my will that all they who call on my name, and worship me according to mine everlasting gospel, should gather together and stand in holy places, and prepare for the revelation which is to come when the veil of the covering of my temple, in my tabernacle, which hideth the earth, shall be taken off, and all flesh shall see me together. And every corruptible thing, both of man, or of the beasts of the field, of the fowls of heaven, or of the fish of the sea, that dwell upon all the face of the earth, shall be consumed; and also, that of element shall melt with fervent heat; and all things shall become new, that my knowledge and glory may dwell upon all the earth. And in that day the enmity of man, and the enmity of beasts, yea, the enmity of all flesh shall cease from before my face. And in that day whatsoever any man shall ask it shall be given unto him. And in that day Satan shall not have power to tempt any man. And there shall be no sorrow, because there is no death. In that day an infant shall not die until he is old, and his life shall be as the age of a tree, and when he dies he shall not sleep, (that is to say in the earth,) but shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye, and shall be caught up, and his rest shall be glorious. Yea, verily I say unto you, in that day when the Lord shall come he shall reveal all things; things which have passed, and hidden things which no man knew; things of the earth by which it was made, and the purpose and the end thereof; things most precious; things that are above, and things that are beneath; things that are in the earth, and upon the earth, and in heaven.—And all they who suffer persecution for my name, and endure in faith, though they are called to lay down their lives for my sake, yet shall they partake of all this glory. Wherefore, fear not even unto death; for in this world your joy is not full, but in me your joy is full. Therefore, care not for the body, neither the life of the body; but care for the soul, and for the life of the soul; and seek the face of the Lord always, that in patience ye may possess your souls, and ye shall have eternal life. When men are called unto mine everlasting gospel, and covenant with an everlasting covenant they are accounted as the salt of the earth, and the savor of men.—They are called to be the savor of men. Therefore, if that salt of the earth lose its savor, behold it is thenceforth good for nothing, only to be cast out and trodden under the feet of men." D. & C. sec. xcvii. p. 5.

Who will obey the voice of the Lord? G. W.

Baltimore, January 16th, 1819.

President Strang.—Dear Brother:—It is with unspeakable pleasure I inform you that the work of God has commenced to roll forth in this, the city of "Monuments." Truth finally begins to triumph, after a long struggle in this great city. I have baptized ten, seven men, and three women. A number more are going forward this week to obey the fullness of the "everlasting gospel." Next Sunday I expect to have the pleasure of organizing the first branch of Later Day Saints in Baltimore, and I think the first in the State of Maryland. Prejudice is giving way on every side before the power of truth. One of the gentlemen that I have baptized is a member of the City Council of Baltimore. I had four sectarian preachers to hear me a week ago last Sunday evening, they listened with profound attention. There is a great deal of talk throughout the city on the subject of the fullness of the gospel. I have been sent for to go to some of the surrounding towns and preach, but have not yet been able to go. The brethren here all send their love to you and yours. I remain yours, as ever, in the bonds of the everlasting gospel,

G. J. ADAMS.

VOICE OF WARNING TO THE RICH.

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasures together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers which have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter."

Ye have condemned and killed the prophets of God, when they did not resist you. Their blood is crying to the heavens against you, and the day is near at hand when the Lord will come out in judgment and fiery indignation against you. And this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation: "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved." Then will you hide yourselves in the dens and in the caves of the mountains, and you shall cry to them, "Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb, for the great day of his wrath is come."

A CORRECTION.

The saints are hereby informed that an error occurs in the numbering of the sections in the Kirtland edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. There are two sections numbered "lxvi.," consequently the following sections fall one behind the number in the Nauvoo edition, in which the error is corrected. J. E. PAGE.

THE SLANDERER.

His tongue is a devouring fire, which tarnishes every thing that it touches; which exercises its fury on the good grain equally with the chaff—on the profane as on the sacred; which whenever it pushes, leaves only desolation and ruin; digs even into the bowels of the earth; turns into ashes, what only a moment before had appeared to us so precious and brilliant; acts with more violence and danger than ever, in the time when it was apparently smothered up and almost extinct; which blackens what it cannot consume, and sometimes sparkles and delights before it destroys. It is an assemblage of iniquity—a secret pride, which discovers to us the mote in our brother's eye, but hides the beam which is in our own—a mean envy, which, hurt at the talents and prosperity of others, makes them the subject of its censures, and studies to dim the splendor of whatever outshines itself; an unworthy duplicity, which praises to the face and tears in pieces behind the back; a deliberate barbarity, which goes to pierce an absent brother. It is an evil full of deadly poison; whatever flows from it is infected, and poisons whatever it approaches, even its praises are empoisoned—its applauses malicious—its silence criminal; its gestures, motions and looks have all their venom, and spread it, each in its way. Still more dreadful is this evil when it is found among those who are the professed disciples of Jesus Christ.—Massillon.

ADVICE ON SELF-CULTURE.

Thought, not growth, makes us men. Many men are full grown, and can bear any fatigue of body, yet cannot examine, judge, reason, or contrive, because they do not think. Determine to understand whatever you see, read, or think; then your knowledge will be correct. To read a book through is not hard nor is it profitable; but to understand a few pages is far better than to read twenty books or newspapers, if it is but mere reading. It is but a poor book which does not compel thought. Stores of knowledge may be accumulated without furnishing wisdom to the possessor, because memory only is used without the assistance of the reflective powers.—To unite thinking with reading (although a slow operation) is one of the first and best maxims, and, if people only knew it, one of the easiest to perform; for the mind always has something to work upon. But let no one suppose that man, a thinking man, who reasons only when he reads—who depends entirely on the ideas of other men. Be not content to think as others do. Minds must be active. To think is not always to create ideas—but it is often to collect those which wander. It is only by the proper use of this Divine gift that man can know himself, and all knowledge without this is splendid ignorance.

"Know, then, thyself,—presume not God to scan;
The proper study for mankind is man."

Extract from Pope's Essay on man.

Ignorance, or self-conceit, often makes us overrate our own abilities; and our only chance in forming a true estimate of our real disposition, in order to mend our faults, is a close mental examination. No proper opinion can be formed without due thought, and thought gives modesty of expression. To retain an opinion because given, is as bad as to give one without consideration. Thinking will do much for an active mind, in the absence of books or living instructors. Our reasoning faculty grows stronger, and, by expansion, discerns its own powers and exerts them with more ease.

☞ By our exchanges we learn that the Cholera continues its ravages at New Orleans, and is spreading along the river. It has been in Houston and Port Lavacca, Texas; and in Vicksburg, Miss. Several new cases have also occurred at Cincinnati.

☞ The discussion with Mr. Burgess has been delayed on account of the unavoidable absence of President Strang. We expect to resume it again in our next.

mine everlasting gospel, and covenant with an everlasting covenant they are accounted as the salt of the earth, and the savor of men.—They are called to be the savor of men. Therefore, if that salt of the earth lose its savor, behold it is thenceforth good for nothing, only to be cast out and trodden under the feet of men." D. & C. sec. xcvii. p. 5.

Who will obey the voice of the Lord? G. W.

Baltimore, January 16th, 1839.

PRESIDENT STRANG.—DEAR BROTHER:—It is with unspeakable pleasure I inform you that the work of God has commenced to roll forth in this, the city of "Monumenta." Truth finally begins to triumph, after a long struggle in this great city. I have baptized ten, seven men, and three women. A number more are going forward this week to obey the fullness of the "everlasting gospel." Next Sunday I expect to have the pleasure of organizing the first branch of Later Day Saints in Baltimore, and I think the first in the State of Maryland. Prejudice is giving way on every side before the power of truth. One of the gentlemen that I have baptized is a member of the City Council of Baltimore. I had four sectarian preachers to hear me a week ago last Sunday evening, they listened with profound attention. There is a great deal of talk throughout the city on the subject of the fullness of the gospel. I have been sent for to go to some of the surrounding towns and preach, but have not yet been able to go. The brethren here all send their love to you and yours. I remain yours, as ever, in the bonds of the everlasting gospel.

G. J. ADAMS.

VOICE OF WARNING TO THE RICH.

"Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you. Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth eaten. Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire. Ye have heaped treasures together for the last days. Behold, the hire of the laborers which have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth; and the cries of them which have reaped are entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth. Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth, and been wanton; ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter."

Ye have condemned and killed the prophets of God, when they did not resist you. Their blood is crying to the heavens against you, and the day is near at hand when the Lord will come out in judgment and fiery indignation against you. And this shall be your lamentation in the day of visitation: "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved." Then will you hide yourselves in the dens and in the caves of the mountains, and you shall cry to them, "Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb, for the great day of his wrath is come."

A CORRECTION.

The saints are hereby informed that an error occurs in the numbering of the sections in the Kirtland edition of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. There are two sections numbered "lxvi.," consequently the following sections fall one behind the number in the Nauvoo edition, in which the error is corrected. J. E. PAGE.

THE SLANDERER.

His tongue is a devouring fire, which tarnishes every thing that it touches; which exercises its fury on the good grain equally with the chaff—on the profane as on the sacred; which whenever it passes, leaves only desolation and ruin; digs even into the bowels of the earth; turns into ashes, what only a moment before had appeared to us so precious and brilliant; acts with more violence and danger than ever, in the time when it was apparently smothered up and almost extinct; which blackens what it cannot consume, and sometimes sparkles and delights before it destroys. It is an assemblage of iniquity—a secret pride, which discovers to us the mote in our brother's eye, but hides the beam which is in our own—a mean envy, which, hurt at the talents and prosperity of others, makes them the subject of its censures, and studies to dim the splendor of whatever outshines itself; an unworthy duplicity, which praises to the face and tears in pieces behind the back; a deliberate barbarity, which goes to pierce an absent brother. It is an evil full of deadly poison; whatever flows from it is infected, and poisons whatever it approaches, even its praises are empoisoned—its applauses malicious—its silence criminal; its gestures, motions and looks have all their venom, and spread it, each in its way. Still more dreadful is this evil when it is found among those who are the professed disciples of Jesus Christ.—Massillon.

ADVICE ON SELF-CULTURE.

Thought, not growth, makes us men. Many men are full grown, and can bear any fatigue of body, yet cannot examine, judge, reason, or contrive, because they do not think. Determine to understand whatever you see, read, or think; then your knowledge will be correct. To read a book through is not hard nor is it profitable; but to understand a few pages is far better than to read twenty books or newspapers, if it is but mere reading. It is but a poor book which does not compel thought. Stores of knowledge may be accumulated without furnishing wisdom to the possessor, because memory only is used without the assistance of the reflective powers.—To unite thinking with reading (although a slow operation) is one of the first and best maxims, and, if people only knew it, one of the easiest to perform; for the mind always has something to work upon. But let no one suppose that man, a thinking man, who reasons only when he reads—who depends entirely on the ideas of other men. Be not content to think as others do. Minds must be active. To think is not always to create ideas—but it is often to collect those which wander. It is only by the proper use of this Divine gift that man can know himself, and all knowledge without this is splendid ignorance.

"Know, then, thyself,—presume not God to scan;
The proper study for mankind is man."

Extract from Pope's Essay on man.

Ignorance, or self-conceit, often makes us overrate our own abilities; and our only chance in forming a true estimate of our real disposition, in order to mend our faults, is a close mental examination. No proper opinion can be formed without due thought, and thought gives modesty of expression. To retain an opinion because given, is as bad as to give one without consideration. Thinking will do much for an active mind, in the absence of books or living instructers. Our reasoning faculty grows stronger, and, by expansion, discerns its own powers and exerts them with more ease.

☞ By our exchanges we learn that the Cholera continues its ravages at New Orleans, and is spreading along the river. It has been in Houston and Port Lavacca, Texas; and in Vicksburg, Miss. Several new cases have also occurred at Cincinnati.

☞ The discussion with Mr. Burgess has been delayed on account of the unavoidable absence of President Strang. We expect to resume it again in our next.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 47.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. FEB. 8, 1849. [WHOLE No. 111.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. BURGESS TO MR. STRANG.—No. 4.

Racine, January 20th, 1849.

MR. JAMES J. STRANG,—SIR:—In my No. 2, par. 34, are two errors. "Tonnere," not tonnire, the e being sounded as a in bat, and "host" instead of "rest" of supernatural beings.

100. In your No. 2, par. 107, you say that I have relied principally on these two assertions: 1st. That man learned language by hearing natural sounds, such as thunder and the voice of animals. 2d. That language is progressive, and therefore could not have been received from a superior at some past period. This, I presume, applies principally to paragraphs 34 and 35 in my No 2, where I said, "I think I have shown that some sounds of our language were most probably learned from nature, while you but affirm, par. 29, that man learned articulate language of God.

101. How God could have taught our first parents language before the ideas which that language was to express, I must leave you to explain. To me this appears an insuperable objection.

102. You will observe I did not say that man learned all his words from the sounds of animals, or nature. Though, with all due deference to you, I think the sounds c and s are as perfectly sounded by a goose as by ourselves; neither apart from the vowel "e" being anything but a hiss; but I shall be happy to learn the difference, if it can be shown.

103. The difference between natural and articulate sounds, too, I should be glad to find a rule for. In the words sigh and groan, what are they but sounds natural to man, stopped or articulated, and compounded with other sounds within the compass of our voices, and the nearer their resemblance to the sounds of nature the more forcible their expression? As I said before, "the manner in which languages were formed is best shown by the manner in which they are extended and reformed.

104. The Bible does not say that man learned articulate language of God, You do. Here God is the "unknown cause" of language. To get rid of the difficulty of proving that God is, you affirm another difficulty—"that God taught articulate language to man." I must say I fail to see the proof of the one or the other, or that affirming two things will prove one to be true.

105. You think there is no similarity between human and non-human sounds. I think differently, but am willing to let others decide on the truth of our testimony.

106. You ask, par. 113, what is the point of similarity between and, if and but and the ideas represented by them? or, if I do not mean that sounds in nature did not teach men this part of language, what part of nature did? Had I affirmed that all articulate sounds corresponded to the sounds of nature or of animals, the question would be in place. I shall not say "God knows," or God taught these sounds to man. In either case making God the emblem of my ignorance, the negation of my knowledge. I pointed to nature and man as the probable source of language, rather than to a supernatural being of which I knew not anything. In par. 60 you said, "it is proper to show that he (God) is, before showing what he has done." Have you shown that God is?

107. In your quotations from Murrey I think you have shown a correspondence between sounds and sensations in duration at least, and some words in sound also, which makes it appear to me more probable that they originated in nature, than that they were taught us by God. Admitting the question at issue, (the existence of God,) what do you think he taught our first parents about steam engines, electric telegraphs, clocks, gas chronometers, chemistry? &c.

108. In answer to my question, who learns God to articulate, you ask, of whom did the robin learn to sing? Is not the existence of God the question at issue? You say, further, there is nothing done in nature which is not natural to something. How do we prove it, but by the thing doing it? (that is, talking.) The man who should say that it was not natural for ladies to talk, must be a bare faced infidel to truth.

109. You add, man cannot speak untaught, therefore it is not natural to him. Is it not natural for the wise to teach, and the ignorant to learn? for the thirsty to drink out of a jug, and the hungry to eat with a knife and fork? Are teaching and learning unnatural?

110. In reply to par. 122, what I contend for is, that ideas do increase; that words to represent those ideas do increase also. This I think is something more than mutation.

111. You say, par. 123, the probability is there was what I seem to think divine wisdom would dictate—"one perfect language, from which all modern languages are retrogressive derivations." Is the fact of retrogression in man or language indicative of divine wisdom and power, or otherwise?

112. You say, par. 124, "no man has ever spoken one single articulate word till it was taught him." How do you prove it? You say, further, having learned this language from those that possess it, he can teach it to his posterity. He could no more take it up in the first instance than could any other animal. Then why can we not teach any other animal to talk as well as an infant?

113. In reply to par. 125, I do think it perfectly conceivable that a man destitute of shelter, food and clothing or language should know the want of them.

114. You say, par. 126, if my argument is sound, the horse feels the want of words vastly more than you do. That would depend on the horse knowing, thinking and feeling vastly more than you do. If you can admit the former, the latter would not be difficult. You say, further, "emigrants coming to this country generally learn to speak English, because, having a language, they know the use of it." Then children ought not to learn at all, because, not having a language, they cannot know the use of it.

115. In reply to par. 127, respecting my par. 42, I can only say, we differ in opinion. I have replied briefly to prevent any useless

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 47.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, FEB. 8, 1849. [WHOLE No. 111.

GOSPEL HERALD.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. BURGESS TO MR. STRANG.—No. 4.

Racine, January 20th, 1849.

MR. JAMES J. STRANG,—SIR:—In my No. 2, par. 31, [illegible] errors. "Tonnere," not tonnire, the e being sounded as a in fate, and "host" instead of "rest" of supernatural beings.

100. In your No. 2, par. 107, you say that I have relied principally on these two assertions: 1st. That man learned language by hearing natural sounds, such as thunder and the voice of animals. 2d. That language is progressive, and therefore could not have been received from a superior at some past period. This, I presume, applies principally to paragraphs 34 and 35 in my No. 2, where I said, "I think I have shown that some sounds of our language were most probably learned from nature, while you but affirm, par. 29, that man learned articulate language of God.

101. How God could have taught our first parents language before the ideas which that language was to express, I must leave you to explain. To me this appears an insuperable objection.

102. You will observe I did not say that man learned all his words from the sounds of animals, or nature. Though, with all due deference to you, I think the sounds c and s are as perfectly sounded by a goose as by ourselves; neither apart from the vowel "e" being anything but a hiss; but I shall be happy to learn the difference, if it can be shown.

103. The difference between natural and articulate sounds, too, I should be glad to find a rule for. In the words sigh and groan, what are they but sounds natural to man, stopped or articulated, and compounded with other sounds within the compass of our voices, and the nearer their resemblance to the sounds of nature the more forcible their expression? As I said before, "the manner in which languages were formed is best shown by the manner in which they are extended and reformed.

104. The Bible does not say that man learned articulate language of God. You do. Here God is the "unknown cause" of language. To get rid of the difficulty of proving that God is, you affirm another difficulty—"that God taught articulate language to man." I must say I fail to see the proof of the one or the other, or that affirming two things will prove one to be true.

105. You think there is no similarity between human and non-human sounds. I think differently, but am willing to let others decide on the truth of our testimony.

106. You ask, par. 113, what is the point of similarity between and, if and but and the ideas represented by them? or, if I do not mean that sounds in nature did not teach men this part of language, what part of nature did? Had I affirmed that all articulate sounds corresponded to the sounds of nature or of animals, the question [illegible] in place. I shall not say "God knows," or God taught [illegible] to man. In either case making God the emblem of [illegible], i. e. the negation of my knowledge. I pointed to nature [illegible] as the probable source of language, rather than to a supernatural being of which I knew not anything. In par. 60 you said, "it is proper to show that he (God) is, before showing what he has done." Have you shown that God is?

107. In your quotations from Murrey I think you have shown a correspondence between sounds and sensations in duration at least, and some words in sound also, which makes it appear to me more probable that they originated in nature, than that they were taught by God. Admitting the question at issue, (the existence of God,) what do you think he taught our first parents about steam engines, electric telegraphs, clocks, gas chronometers, chemistry? &c.

108. In answer to my question, who learns God to articulate, you ask, when did the robin learn to sing? Is not the existence of God the question at issue? You say, further, there is nothing done in a state which is not natural to something. How do we prove it, but by the thing doing it? (that is, talking.) The man who should say that it was not natural for ladies to talk, must be a bare faced [illegible] to truth.

109. You add, man cannot speak untaught, therefore it is not natural to him. Is it not natural for the wise to teach, and the ignorant [illegible] to learn? Is it not natural to drink out of a jug, and the hungry to eat with a knife and fork? Are teaching and learning unnatural?

110. In reply to par. 122, what I contend for is, that ideas do increase; that words to represent those ideas do increase also. This I think is something more than mutation.

111. You say, par. 123, the probability is there was what I seem to think divine wisdom would dictate—"one perfect language, from which all modern languages are retrogressive derivations." Is the fact of retrogression in man or language indicative of divine wisdom and power, or otherwise?

112. You say, par. 124, "no man has ever spoken one single articulate word till it was taught him." How do you prove it? You say, further, having learned this language from those that possess it, he can teach it to his posterity. He could no more take it up in the first instance than could any other animal. Then why can we not teach any other animal to talk as well as an infant?

113. In reply to par. 125, I do think it perfectly conceivable that a man destitute of shelter, food and clothing or language should know the want of them.

114. You say, par. 126, if my argument is sound, the horse feels the want of words vastly more than you do. That would depend on the horse knowing, thinking and feeling vastly more than you do. If you can admit the former, the latter would not be difficult. You say, further, "emigrants coming to this country generally learn to speak English, because, having a language, they know the use of it." Then children ought not to learn at all, because, not having a language, they cannot know the use of it.

115. In reply to par. 127, respecting my par. 42, I can only say, we differ in opinion. I have replied briefly to prevent any useless extension of our differences, but I hope not to the neglect of anything necessary to prove the truth of the question at issue.

116. I find in A. J. Davis' Divine Revelations, page 331: "It was only by the delicate modifications of sound, which is at first only an excitement, that such a process as vocal communication was ever discovered. The inhabitants of the earth thus came into possession of a new power, only in consequence of the unfolding of their mental faculties. The rudiments of vocal language are thus discovered, their sounds consisting merely of monosyllables, were imperfect—not so considered by themselves, but by subsequent nations which have arrayed the grammatical laws of language. Language, therefore, is a result of progressive development," &c.

117. I quote this merely to show that modern revelation, as well as ancient, is against you. I know not what the Mormon Bible says on the subject, and I think experience confirms the "progressive," not the "retrogressive" doctrine. If God gave one perfect language to mankind, and they could only teach what they had learned of God, and could not originate a language themselves, how came such numbers of languages into existence? Yours for the promotion of truth,

EDWIN BURGESS.

Grafton, Wis., January 27th. 1819.

PRES. STRANG:—I am usually well, and my mission thus far has been interesting. Truth takes its usual effect on the minds of those who love it. My meetings are well attended, and good attention is given. The people listen with intense interest, and are arguing among themselves the merits of what they hear from my deliberations—some for, and some against. Those who are against are those whose crafts, which by their long standing have gained their silver shrines, feel that they are somewhat endangered by the force of ocular demonstrated truth, even as those did in Ephesus in the days of Paul; who, to stop the ears of the people and drown the force and power of the gospel, cried out, "great is the gods of the Diana of the Ephesians." So these latter day heathens cry out, "great is the work of our holy religion in the Protestant world, and the world must be evangelized before the second advent of the Son of God." Whereas, to the contrary, the whole word of God abounds with the declaration that the inhabitants of the world, as a general thing, are to be plunged into a state of gross and awful apostacy, denying the truth of the gospel of the Son of God at the time of the appearing of Christ "the second time without sin unto salvation to those who look for his appearing." Jesus says relative to his second advent, that "as it was in the days of Noah," of the antediluvians or in the days of Lot in Sodom and Gomorrah, "so shall it be in the days of the coming of the son of man." Read Matt. xxiv. Luke xxi. And yet these latter day gamblers will try with all their might, minds and strength to make the people believe that Christ told a living falsehood, a cursed LIE, and that it is a damnable heresy to believe that Christ told the truth.

I am not a little pleased to witness the expression of chagrin and disappointment there is resting on the countenances of those poor ignorant creatures who have been in the habit all their life long of evading the literal sense of prophets of the Old and New Testaments, relative to things future concerning the Jews and Jerusalem, for what they (the sects) call a spiritual sense interpretation, since the public newspapers are now teeming with the news that the Jews have negotiated with the eastern powers that be, and have obtained the grant to gather their men and means to build a temple. This looks so much like fulfilling the doctrine of the scriptures, the Book of Mormon, and the revelations of God to Joseph Smith, it makes the old spiritualizing gold shriners look rather black in the face, as if they were hit under the wing somewhere. I would say on the hart, if they manifested any outward signs that they had one of any godly understanding. Here the reader will do well to read Deut. xxviii. xxx. Jer. xxv. xxxi. xxxii. xxxiii. Ezek. xxxvi. xxxvii. Zech. viii. xii. xiii. xiv. The Book of Mormon abounds in teaching the same doctrine of the above scriptures in a literal sense, of which the following extracts may serve as a sample. "The great and abominable church" is the whole Roman Catholic and Protestant world:—

"And it came to pass that I beheld that the wrath of God was poured out upon the great and abominable church, insomuch that there were wars and rumors of wars among all the nations and kindreds of the earth, and as there began to be wars and rumors of wars among all the nations which belonged to the mother of abominations, the angel spake unto me, saying, behold, the wrath of God is upon the mother of harlots; and behold, thou seest all these things; and when the day cometh that the wrath of God is poured out upon the mother of harlots, which is the great and abominable church of all the earth, whose foundation is the devil, then at that day, the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants which he hath made to his people, who are of the house of Israel." Book of Mormon, (stereotyped edition,) page 35.

"And now, I would prophesy somewhat more concerning the Jews and the Gentiles. For after the Book of which I have spoken shall come forth, and be written unto the Gentiles, and sealed up again unto the Lord, there shall be many which shall believe the words which are written; and they shall carry them forth unto the remnant of our seed. And then shall the remnant of our seed know concerning us, how that we came out from Jerusalem, and that they are descendants of the Jews. And the gospel of Jesus Christ shall be declared among them; wherefore, they shall be restored unto the knowledge of their fathers, and also to the knowledge of Jesus Christ which was had among their fathers. And then shall they rejoice; for they shall know that it is a blessing unto them from the hand of God; and their scales of darkness shall begin to fall from their eyes: and many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a pure and a delightsome people. And it shall come to pass that the Jews which are scattered, also shall begin to believe in Christ: and they shall begin to gather in upon the face of the land; and as many as shall believe in Christ, shall also become a delightsome people. And it shall come to pass that the Lord God shall commence his work, among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, to bring about the restoration of his people upon the earth. And with righteousness shall the Lord God judge the poor, and reprove with equity, for the meek of the earth. And he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth; and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked: for the time speedily cometh, that the Lord God shall cause a great division among the people; and the wicked will he destroy; and he will spare his people, yea even if it so be that he must destroy the wicked by fire." Book of Mormon, (stereotype edition,) pages 116. 117.

Some of the motley tribe of spiritualizers begin to squint at the woful dilemma into which they are about to be plunged, and are quaking with fear that their ignorance will yet come abroad to all intelligent minds. It is obvious from the signs of the times that the whole sectarian world is in a state of gross apostacy when contrasted with the word of God concerning the gathering of the Jews and the building of Jerusalem for the last time. It would be hard for me to find words to express my utter astonishment in the hearing of nine lectures in Port Washington, eight from the Rev. Mr. Wood, a Methodist big gun, and one from the Rev. Mr. Lyon, a Presbyterian, all on different texts, embracing matters of the first importance. But what did I hear? Why, the whole sum total is summed up in these words: 'There is a God, and his Son is a Savior, and that man is, and he is a sinner, and if he is not saved extension of our differences, but I hope not to the neglect of anything necessary to prove the truth of the question at issue.

116. I find in A. J. Davis' Divine Revelations, page 331: "It was only by the delicate modifications of sound, which is at first only an excitement, that such a process as vocal communication was ever discovered. The inhabitants of the earth thus came into possession of a new power, only in consequence of the unfolding of their mental faculties. The rudiments of vocal language are thus discovered, their sounds consisting merely of monosyllables, were imperfect—not so considered by themselves, but by subsequent nations which have arrayed the grammatical laws of language. Language, therefore, is a result of progressive development," &c.

117. I quote this merely to show that modern revelation, as well as ancient, is against you. I know not what the Mormon Bible says on the subject, and I think experience confirms the "progressive," not the "retrogressive" doctrine. If God gave one perfect language to mankind, and they could only teach what they had learned of God, and could not originate a language themselves, how came such numbers of languages into existence? Yours for the promotion of truth,

EDWIN BURGESS.

Grafton, Wis., January 27th, 1849.

PRES. STRANG:—I am usually well, and my mission thus far has been interesting. Truth takes its usual effect on the minds of those who love it. My meetings are well attended, and good attention is given. The people listen with intense interest, and are arguing among themselves the merits of what they hear from my deliberations—some for, and some against. Those who are against are those whose crafts, which by their long standing have gained their silver shrines, feel that they are somewhat endangered by the force of occular demonstrated truth, even as those did in Ephesus in the days of Paul; who, to stop the ears of the people and drown the [illegible] Diana of the Ephesians." So these latter day heathens cry out, "great is the work of our holy religion in the Protestant world, and the world must be evangelized before the second advent of the Son of God." Whereas, to the contrary, the whole word of God abounds with the declaration that the inhabitants of the world, as a general thing, are to be plunged into a state of gross and awful apostacy, denying the truth of the gospel of the Son of God at the time of the appearing of Christ "the second time without sin unto salvation to those who look for his appearing." Jesus says relative to his second advent, that "as it was in the days of Noah," of the antediluvians or in the days of Lot in Sodom and Gomorrah, "so shall it be in the days of the coming of the son of man." Read Matt. xxiv. Luke xxi. And yet these latter day gamblers will try with all their might, minds and strength to make the people believe that Christ told a living falsehood, a cursed LIE, and that it is a damnable heresy to believe that Christ told the truth.

I am not a little pleased to witness the expression of chagrin and disappointment there is resting on the countenances of those poor ignorant creatures who have been in the habit all their life long of evading the literal sense of prophets of the Old and New Testaments, relative to things future concerning the Jews and Jerusalem, for what they (the sects) call a spiritual sense interpretation, since the public newspapers are now teeming with the news that the Jews have negotiated with the eastern powers that be, and have obtained the grant to gather their men and means to build a temple. This looks so much like fulfilling the doctrine of the scriptures, the Book of Mormon, and the revelations of God to Joseph Smith, it makes the old spiritualizing gold shriners look rather black in the face, as if they were hit under the wing somewhere. I would say in the heart, if they manifested any outward s ignsthey had one of any godly understanding. Here the reader will do well to read Deut. xxviii. xxx. Jer. xxx. xxxi. xxxii. xxxiii. Ezek. xxxvi. xxxvii. Zech. viii. xii. xiii. xiv. The Book of Mormon abounds in teaching the same doctrine of the above scriptures in a literal sense, of which the following extracts may serve as a sample. "The great and abominable church" is the whole Roman Catholic and Protestant world:—

"And it came to pass that I beheld that the wrath of God was poured out upon the great and abominable church, insomuch that there were wars and rumors of wars among all the nations and kindreds of the earth, and as there began to be wars and rumors of wars among all the nations which belonged to the mother of abominations, the angel spake unto me, saying, behold, the wrath of God is upon the mother of harlots; and behold, thou seest all these things; and when the day cometh that the wrath of God is poured out upon the mother of harlots, which is the great and abominable church of all the earth, whose foundation is the devil, then at that day, the work of the Father shall commence, in preparing the way for the fulfilling of his covenants which he hath made to his people, who are of the house of Israel." Book of Mormon, (stereotyped edition,) page 35.

"And now, I would prophesy somewhat more concerning the Jews and the Gentiles. For after the Book of which I have spoken shall come forth, and be written unto the Gentiles, and sealed up again unto the Lord, there shall be many which shall believe the words which are written; and they shall carry them forth unto the remnant of our seed. And then shall the remnant of our seed know concerning us, how that we came out from Jerusalem, and that they are descendants of the Jews. And the gospel of Jesus Christ shall be declared among them; wherefore, they shall be restored unto the knowledge of their fathers, and also to the knowledge of Jesus Christ which was had among their fathers. And then shall they rejoice; for they shall know that it is a blessing unto them from the hand of God; and their scales of darkness shall begin to fall from their eyes: and many generations shall not pass away among them, save they shall be a pure and a delightsome people. And it shall come to pass that the Jews which are scattered, also shall begin to believe in Christ: and they shall begin to gather in upon the face of the land; and as many as shall believe in Christ, shall also become a delightsome people. And it shall come to pass that the Lord God shall commence his work, among all nations, kindreds, tongues, and people, to bring about the restoration of his people upon the earth. And with righteousness shall the Lord God judge the poor, and reprove with equity, for the meek of the earth. And he shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth; and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked: for the time speedily cometh, that the Lord God shall cause a great division among the people; and the wicked will he destroy; and he will spare his people, yea even if it so be that he must destroy the wicked by fire." Book of Mormon, (stereotype edition,) pages 116, 117.

Some of the motley tribe of spiritualizers begin to squint at the woful dilemma into which they are about to be plunged, and are quaking with fear that their ignorance will yet come abroad to all intelligent minds. It is obvious from the signs of the times that the whole sectarian world is in a state of gross apostacy when contrasted with the word of God concerning the gathering of the Jews and the building of Jerusalem for the last time. It would be hard for me to find words to express my utter astonishment in the hearing of nine lectures in Port Washington, eight from the Rev. Mr. Wood, a Methodist big gun, and one from the Rev. Mr. Lyon, a Presbyterian, all on different texts, embracing matters of the first importance. But what did I hear? Why, the whole sum total is summed up in these words: "There is a God, and his Son is a Savior, and that man is, and he is a sinner, and if he is not saved he is liable to be damned." This old worn thread bare see saw story is told over and over and over again, just as though this old story, though true as far as it goes, is all that demands the attention of the scripture reading community It rather strikes me that the sectarian ministry are rather fearful in making an attempt to launch out into the broad ocean of God's word when a Mormon is present, for fear of having their little bark canoes upset in deeper water than they can fathom with their cork sounders. Consequently all they say is, "sinner, repent and come forward to the anxious seat, or mourners bench, and pray for a remission of your sins and be converted." Whereas, an anxious seat or mourners bench is not once hinted at in all the word of God. But still these religious gamblers will tell them and insist on the people to do so. Shame on such trash! Just as though the ordinances appointed of Jesus Christ, as the means of grace, were not all sufficient for the people in this age of the world as in the days of the Apostles. How long will the people of the nineteenth century be willing to be led by a hair, and that scorched, down the vortex of damnation by such heaven daring gospel perverters, who are virtually saying that Jesus Christ and his Apostles were all fools, and knew not the way of life and salvation as well as we Reverends do?

My prayer is, God send the days that will strike the last finishing stroke to the destruction of "Mystery Babylon," send wars, famine, pestilence, and finally all that are declared in thy word relative to the seven vials of wrath for the total overthrow of all Anti-Christ. The honest in heart have been deceived long enough.—The hireling priests have glutted themselves as in the days of slaughter long enough. March forth, thou God of hosts, and let it once more be known to the nations that thou livest, and will not suffer one sentence, word or letter of the revealed word fail till it all is fulfilled. Your servant, JOHN E. PAGE.

South Grove, Wis., Jan. 24th, 1849.

President Strang:—This will inform you that I am doing that which I was sent to do. I left Voree on the 17th, and arrived at brother Duty's the same night. I gave out an appointment that I would preach on Friday night, which I did to a respectable congregation. On Sunday I preached again. On Monday I left for the Prairie settlement, and this evening I expect to preach in the new school house in this place. I saw brother Stiles from Beloit, and I laid the plan of equality before him. He said he was anxious to sell his farm and join the Order. He said he was sick and tired of living with the Gentiles. May God give the same spirit to all the saints.

I dreamed that I was at the head of a water fall, and I saw a flock of sheep, and some man drove them in and I brought them all out white and clean. May God help his servants and elders abroad to thrust in their sickles and reap, for the harvest is ripe but the laborers are few. I feel that the day of separation is come for the saints to choose whom they will serve. And if my brethren wish to do good for Zion, let them now send up their treasures, for where their treasures are there their hearts will be also. Many may think there is time enough yet, and begin to say the Lord delays his coming, but when the judgments of God are poured out upon them they will wish they had hearkened to the prophet and gathered to the city of Voree and been saved, that they might have peace and rest. I know that the saints abroad have no comfort, for I have traveled the States of Wisconsin, Illinois and Missouri over and all the saints tell me they take no comfort. I have asked them, do you go to sectarian meetings. No, there is no home for me; and some have told me that they had no peace day nor night. My prayer is, that God will open their hearts to do something to redeem Zion for the last time. I have not seen any of the saints who were so poor, but that if they would do as the Order of Enoch do, lay by their tea, coffee and tobacco, they could have something to spare to build the house of the Lord. When I travel and see the saints living, as the old saying is, on the top of the heap, while my brethren in Voree are toiling to build up Zion without any of the comforts of this life, I say in my heart, is this equality? The answer is, no. Except ye are one ye are none of mine, saith the Lord. I have never seen the necessity since I belonged to the church of the saints coming up to the mark as at this time. I remain as ever a sincere laborer in the gospel of Christ, PHINEAS WRIGHT.

Baltimore, January 16th, 1849.

Dear Brother Strang:—Knowing you to be a great advocate for temperance, and as a few words of information on that subject may be interesting to your readers, I subjoin the following:—The cause of temperance carries a mighty influence in this city. There are more than 6,000 members of the total abstinence pledge here, over three thousand Sons of Temperance, and many hundred Rechabites. I have been a teetotaler for about five months. I am also a Son of Temperance, and a Rechabite, and I have come to this firm conclusion, that the spirit of God and the spirit of strong drink never can dwell together. And when I look back on my past life I feel to say, would to God that I had engaged in this great and good cause years ago; for then I would have been saved from much trouble and sorrow. I look back with pain and confess that what the world calls moderate drinking has led to all my unfaithfulness in the gospel. And let no Elder in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for one moment think that he can drink beer, porter, cider or any strong drink and enjoy the life and power of godliness, and be a faithful and successful minister of the gospel, for as the Lord God lives he cannot. I trust my future faithfulness and usefulness in the cause of God will demonstrate to the saints and the world the truth of my assertion. With sentiments of high esteem, I remain yours as ever, G. J. ADAMS.

MOURNERS BENCHES AND ANXIOUS SEATS.

Will some one be so kind as to inform the public through the press when and where and by whom the practice of calling repenting sinners to the "mourners benches" or "anxious seats" to pray publicly for a remission of sins, and receive the holy spirit, originated. Surely Jesus Christ nor his Apostles never taught or practiced any such measure. But they did teach and practice "baptism for the remission of sins." Again, where and when did Christ or the Apostles ever teach or command that unbaptized persons should pray? Again, were not the Apostles high priests after the order of Melchisedec, whereby they were authorized to administer baptism to the penitent who believed the gospel of Christ? J. E. PAGE.

ALL KINDS OF SOCIETIES.

In these days of excitement, novelty, nonsense and religious delusions, we have all kinds of societies, Temperance, Benevolent, Missionary, &c.,&c., societies, and anti societies too tedious to mention, and they all help to make up the fullness of the great anti-christian Church. Who is so dull in apprehension, as not to see that the true church of Christ, founded on the fullness of the everlasting gospel, is amply sufficient for the moralizing and evangelizing the whole world, if its dictation is obeyed? Ah, the great secret is, if God should be obeyed in all things, there would be no chance for men to be called Rabbi, Rev., Rt. Hon., Respected Lord, &c., &c. And the worst of all is, there would be no public crib for such men to nibble at or to fat themselves in at the expense of the poor, he is liable to be damned." This old worn thread bare see saw story is told over and over and over again, just as though this old story, though true as far as it goes, is all that demands the attention of the scripture reading community. It rather strikes me that the sectarian ministry are rather fearful in making an attempt to launch out into the broad ocean of God's word when a Mormon is present, for fear of having their little bark canoes upset in deeper water than they can fathom with their cork sounders. Consequently all they say is, "sinner, repent and come forward to the anxious seat, or mourners bench, and pray for a remission of your sins and be converted." Whereas, an anxious seat or mourners bench is not once hinted at in all the word of God. But still these religious gamblers will tell them and insist on the people to do so. Shame on such trash! Just as though the ordinances appointed of Jesus Christ, as the means of grace, were not all sufficient for the people in this age of the world as in the days of the Apostles. How long will the people of the nineteenth century be willing to be led by a hair, and that scorched, down the vortex of damnation by such heaven daring gospel perverters, who are virtually saying that Jesus Christ and his Apostles were all fools, and knew not the way of life and salvation as well as we Reverends do?

JOHN E. PAGE.

My prayer is, God send the days that will strike the last finishing stroke to the destruction of "Mystery Babylon," send wars, famine, pestilence, and finally all that are declared in thy word relative to the seven vials of wrath for the total overthrow of all Anti-Christ. The honest in heart have been deceived long enough.—The hireling priests have glutted themselves as in the days of slaughter long enough. March forth, thou God of hosts, and let it once more be known to the nations that thou livest, and will not suffer one sentence, word or letter of the revealed word fail till it all is fulfilled. Your servant, JOHN E. PAGE.

South Grove, Wis., Jan. 24th, 1849.

PRESIDENT STRANG:—This will inform you that I am doing that which I was sent to do. I left Voree on the 17th, and arrived at brother Duty's the same night. I gave out an appointment that I would preach on Friday night, which I did to a respectable congregation. On Sunday I preached again. On Monday I left for the Pramer settlement, and this evening I expect to preach in the new school house in this place. I saw brother Stiles from Beloit, and I laid the plan of equality before him. He said he was anxious to sell his farm and join the Order. He said he was sick and tired of living with the Gentiles. May God give the same spirit to all the saints.

I dreamed that I was at the head of a water fall, and I saw a flock of sheep, and some man drove them in and I brought them all out white and clean. May God help his servants and elders abroad to thrust in their sickles and reap, for the harvest is ripe but the laborers are few. I feel that the day of separation is come for the saints to choose whom they will serve. And if my brethren wish to do good for Zion, let them now send up their treasures, for where their treasures are there their hearts will be also. Many may think there is time enough yet, and begin to say the Lord delays his coming, but when the judgments of God are poured out upon them they will wish they had hearkened to the prophet and gathered to the city of Voree and been saved, that they might have peace and rest. I know that the saints abroad have no comfort, for I have traveled the States of Wisconsin, Illinois and Missouri over and all the saints tell me they take no comfort. I have asked them, do you go to sectarian meetings. No, there is no home for me; and some have told me that they had no peace day nor night. My prayer is, that God will open their hearts to do something to redeem Zion for the last time. I have not seen any of the saints who were so poor, but that if they would do as the Order of Enoch do, lay by their tea, coffee and tobacco, they could have something to spare to build the house of the Lord. When I travel and see the saints living, as the old saying is, on the top of the heap, while my brethren in Voree are toiling to build up Zion without any of the comforts of this life, I say in my heart, is this equality? The answer is, no. Except ye are one ye are none of mine, saith the Lord. I have never seen the necessity since I belonged to the church of the saints coming up to the mark as at this time. I remain as ever a sincere laborer in the gospel of Christ, PHINEAS WRIGHT.

Baltimore, January 16th, 1849.

DEAR BROTHER STRANG:—Knowing you to be a great advocate for temperance, and as a few words of information on that subject may be interesting to your readers, I subjoin the following:—The cause of temperance carries a mighty influence in this city. There are more than 6,000 members of the total abstinence pledge here, over three thousand Sons of Temperance, and many hundred Rechabites. I have been a teetotaler for about five months. I am also a Son of Temperance, and a Rechabite, and I have come to this firm conclusion, that the spirit of God and the spirit of strong drink never can dwell together. And when I look back on my past life I feel to say, would to God that I had engaged in this great and good cause years ago; for then I would have been saved from much trouble and sorrow. I look back with pain and confess that what the world calls moderate drinking has led to all my unfaithfulness in the gospel. And let no Elder in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints for one moment think that he can drink beer, porter, cider or any strong drink and enjoy the life and power of godliness, and be a faithful and successful minister of the gospel, for as the Lord God lives he cannot. I trust my future faithfulness and usefulness in the cause of God will demonstrate to the saints and the world the truth of my assertion. With sentiments of high esteem, I remain yours as ever, G. J. ADAMS.

MOURNERS BENCHES AND ANXIOUS SEATS.

Will some one be so kind as to inform the public through the press when and where and by whom the practice of calling repenting sinners to the "mourners benches" or "anxious seats" to pray publicly for a remission of sins, and receive the holy spirit, originated. Surely Jesus Christ nor his Apostles never taught or practiced any such measure. But they did teach and practice "baptism for the remission of sins." Again, where and when did Christ or the Apostles ever teach or command that unbaptized persons should pray? Again, were not the Apostles high priests after the order of Melchisedec, whereby they were authorized to administer baptism to the penitent who believed the gospel of Christ? J. E. PAGE.

ALL KINDS OF SOCIETIES.

In these days of excitement, novelty, nonsense and religious delusions, we have all kinds of societies, Temperance, Benevolent, Missionary, &c.,&c., societies, and anti societies too tedious to mention, and they all help to make up the fullness of the great anti-christian Church. Who is so dull in apprehension, as not to see that the true church of Christ, founded on the fullness of the everlasting gospel, is amply sufficient for the moralizing and evangelizing the whole world, if its dictation is obeyed? Ah, the great secret is, if God should be obeyed in all things, there would be no chance for men to be called Rabbis, Rev., Rt. Hon., Respected Lord, &c., &c. And the worst of all is, there would be no public crib for such men to nibble at or to fat themselves in at the expense of the poor.

JOHN E. PAGE.

THE FATHERLESS.

Speak softly to the fatherless!
And check the harsh reply
That sends the crimson to the cheek,
The tear-drop to the eye.
They have the weight of loneliness
In this rude world, to bear;
Then gently raise the fallen bud
The drooping floweret spare.

Speak kindly to the fatherless;
The lowliest of their band
God keepeth, as the waters,
In the hollow of his hand.
'Tis sad to see life's evening sun
Go down in sorrow's shroud,
But sadder still when morning's dawn
Is darkened by the cloud.

Look mildly on the fatherless!
Ye may have power to wile
Their hearts from saddened memory,
By the magic of a smile!
Deal gently with these little ones—
Be pitiful—and He,
The friend and father of us all,
Shall gently deal with thee!

SCOLDING.—A stream of scolding, as long as from sun to sun, never yet had any other effect on children than to render them wholly regardless of what is said to them. If you wish to make your children troublesome, scold them occasionally. If you wish to make them bad, scold them harder, louder, and more frequently. If you wish to ruin them, scold them continually, and you will be sure to gain your object.

A HINT TO THE PASSIONATE.—Dr. Caldwell, an American writer on physical education, contends that a well balanced brain contributes to long life, while a passionate and turbulent one tends to abridge it. If persons knew how many dangers in life they may escape by possessing mildness of temper instead of the opposite disposition, how eager would be the aim of all men to cultivate it.

☞ The trouble in Rome still continues. The Pope has been declared deprived of all temporal power. The minister, Sterbini, has addressed the citizens. He says the Pope, under the title of Bishop, would have the right to enter Rome, but that all the Cardinals and Prelates would be strictly prohibited from entering the city. The people, in their enthusiasm, ran about the streets crying—"Death to the Pope—death to the Cardinals."

PURITY.

Once more let me persuade you that no example in high places, can justify imitation in low places. Your purity is too precious to be bartered, because an official knave tempts by his example. I would that every place of state were a sphere of light, from which should be flung down on your path a cheering glow to guide you on to virtue. But if these wandering stars, reserved I do believe for final blackness of darkness, wheel their malign spheres in the orbits of corruption,—go not after them. God is greater than wicked great men; Heaven is higher than the highest places of nations; and if God and Heaven, are not brighter to your eyes than great men in high places, then you must take part in their doom, when, ere long, God shall dash them to pieces!—Beecher.

☞ Memory is the highest gift; we do not feel it to be so, because we only partially lose it, and generally retain it in great things; but let a man every moment forget others, and then see what he would be. We are the creatures of the past, therefore, of memory. To deprive us of memory, would be to thrust us naked, destitute, into the mere present, only the moment after to strip us of memory again.

CURIOSITIES FROM THE HOLY LAND.—The Norfolk Beacon mentions as among the curiosities brought to this country by Lieut. Lynch, commander of the "Dead Sea Expedition," (who arrived from the Mediterranean last week in the U. S. ship Supply,) the following:

A number of specimens of the water of the Dead Sea, the River Jordan, and the Pool of Siloah; and fragments of the pillar of salt into which Lot's wife was transformed (!) as a punishment for her disobedience to the command of the Almighty.

In regard to this last, we are informed that the pillar from which it was taken rises nearly 40 feet high stands exactly in the spot designated by the Bible, and that Lieut. Lynch, the commander of the dead sea Expedition, expresses the confident opinion that it is the representative of what was Lot's wife. We believe it has not been seen before for many centuries. Josephus records its existence.

There are many other curiosities on board the Supply—as an Egyptian mummy, a pair of the cattle of Arabia, rosaries made of wood from the Holy Mount, shells from the shores of the Dead Sea, gazelles, &c.

☞ We have favorable reports from brother B. G. Wright, at Potosi, Bros. H. P Brown and P. Wright, on Rock River, brother Ketcham, at Chicago, and Bros. Graham, Savage and Brownson, in Mich., of the progress of our cause, especially from the latter.

☞ The unavoiable absence of Pres. Strang for some time past must be our apology for the brief neglect on his part of the discussion with Mr. Burgess. It will be resumed in the next.

WISCONSIN FARMER.—The first No. of this periodical has reached us. The mechanical execution is excellent, and the editorial department well conducted. Considering its price, we know of no publication equal to it.

HOME.

The pain that is felt when we are transplanted from our native soil; when the branch is cut from the native tree, is one of the most poignant that we have to endure through life. There are after griefs, which wound more deeply, which leave behind them scars never to be effaced; which bruise the spirit and sometimes break the heart; but we never feel so keenly the want of love, the necessity of being loved, and the sense of utter desertion, as when we first left the haven of home, and are, as it were, pushed off upon the stream of life.—Ex. paper

LADY'S BOOK.—The Feb. No. of this superior work is before us. We can only say it is the richest and at the same time cheapest bit of light reading and artistic beauty we ever saw. We don't mean this No. in particular, but the entire series.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a regular Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Voree, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of April next; and also on Beaver Island on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of July next. It is expected that every member of the First Presidency and of the Twelve will attend one or both of these Conferences. By the President.

GILBERT WATSON, RECORDER.

THE FATHERLESS.

Speak [illegible] to the fatherless!
And [illegible] reply
That [illegible] to the cheek,
[illegible] eye.
They [illegible] loneliness
[illegible];
[illegible] bud
[illegible].

Speak [illegible];
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible] sun
[illegible],
But [illegible] morning's dawn
[illegible].

[illegible]!
[illegible]
[illegible] memory,
[illegible]!
[illegible] ones—
[illegible].
[illegible] us all,
[illegible]!

SCOLDING.—A [illegible] as long as from sun to sun, never yet [illegible] in to render them wholly regardless of what is said to them. If you wish to make your children troublesome, scold them constantly. If you wish to make them bad, scold them harder, louder, and more frequently. If you wish to ruin them, scold them continually, and you will be sure to gain your object.

A HINT TO THE PASSIONATE.—Dr. Caldwell, an American writer on physical education, contends that a well balanced brain contributes to long life, while a passionate and turbulent one tends to abridge it. If persons knew how many dangers in life they may escape by possessing mildness of temper instead of the opposite disposition, how eager would be the aim of all men to cultivate it.

☞ The trouble in Rome still continues. The Pope has been declared deprived of all temporal power. The minister, Sterbini, has addressed the citizens. He says the Pope, under the title of Bishop, would have the right to enter Rome, but that all the Cardinals and Prelates would be strictly prohibited from entering the city. The people, in their enthusiasm, ran about the streets crying—"Death to the Pope—death to the Cardinals."

PURITY.

Once more let me persuade you that no example in high places, can justify imitation in low places. Your purity is too precious to be bartered, because an official knave tempts by his example. I would that every place of state were a sphere of light, from which should be flung down on your path a cheering glow to guide you on to virtue. But if these wandering stars, reserved I do believe for final blackness of darkness, wheel their malign spheres in the orbits of corruption,—go not after them. God is greater than wicked great men; Heaven is higher than the highest places of nations; and if God and Heaven, are not brighter to your eyes than great men in high places, then you must take part in their doom, when, ere long, God shall dash them to pieces!—Beecher.

☞ Memory is the highest gift; we do not feel it to be so, because we only partially lose it, and generally retain it in great things; but let a man every moment forget others, and then see what he would be. We are the creatures of the past, therefore, of memory. To deprive us of memory, would be to thrust us naked, destitute, into the mere present, only the moment after to strip us of memory again.

CURIOSITIES FROM THE HOLY LAND.—The Norfolk Beacon mentions as among the curiosities brought to this country by Lieut. Lynch, commander of the "Dead Sea Expedition," (who arrived from the Mediterranean last week in the U. S. ship Supply,) the following:

A number of specimens of the water of the Dead Sea, the River Jordan, and the Pool of Siloah; and fragments of the pillar of salt into which Lot's wife was transformed (!) as a punishment for her disobedience to the command of the Almighty.

In regard to this last, we are informed that the pillar from which it was taken rises nearly 40 feet high stands exactly in the spot designated by the Bible, and that Lieut. Lynch, the commander of the dead sea Expedition, expresses the confident opinion that it is the representative of what was Lot's wife. We believe it has not been seen before for many centuries. Josephus records its existence.

There are many other curiosities on board the Supply—as an Egyptian mummy, a pair of the cattle of Arabia, rosaries made of wood from the Holy Mount, shells from the shores of the Dead Sea, gazelles, &c.

☞ We have favorable reports from brother B. G. Wright, at Potosi, Bros. H. P Brown and P. Wright, on Rock River, brother Ketcham, at Chicago, and Bros. Graham, Savage and Brownson, in Mich., of the progress of our cause, especially from the latter.

☞ The unavoidable absence of Pres. Strang for some time past must be our apology for the brief neglect on his part of the discussion with Mr. Burgess. It will be resumed in the next.

WISCONSIN FARMER.—The first No. of this periodical has reached us. The mechanical execution is excellent, and the editorial department well conducted. Considering its price, we know of no publication equal to it.

HOME.

The pain that is felt when we are transplanted from our native soil; when the branch is cut from the native tree, is one of the most poignant that we have to endure through life. There are after griefs, which wound more deeply, which leave behind them scars never to be effaced; which bruise the spirit and sometimes break the heart; but we never feel so keenly the want of love, the necessity of being loved, and the sense of utter desertion, as when we first left the haven of home, and are, as it were, pushed off upon the stream of life.—Ex. paper

LADY'S BOOK.—The Feb. No. of this superior work is before us. We can only say it is the richest and at the same time cheapest bit of light reading and artistic beauty we ever saw. We don't mean this No. in particular, but the entire series.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a regular Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Voree, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of April next; and also on Beaver Island on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of July next. It is expected that every member of the First Presidency and of the Twelve will attend one or both of these Conferences. By the President.

GILBERT WATSON, RECORDER.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 48.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, FEB. 15, 1849. [WHOLE No. 112.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 6.

Voree, February 19th, 1849.

MR. BURGESS:—After a long delay, occasioned first by waiting to hear from you, and finally by a perfect crowd of other avocations, I sit down again to our discussion. So long has elapsed since writing or looking into what you have written, that I was obliged to read the work so far entire to learn where to begin.

161. I must confess my surprise at the manner in which you have carried on this discussion. In the beginning I laid down as rules necessary for brevity and convenience in the matter the following well grounded and safe principles, to which I again refer you, believing that the reading of them is a full justification of every principle contained in them:—

162. [3.] "In such a discussion I understand that no man or book is authority in any higher sense than they are in discussing a question of mathematics, chemistry or geology; that there is no Bible or book of laws the dicta of which is supreme or final.

163. [4.] There are, however, certain truths which nothing short of insanity questions; such for instance as that two and two are four, that black is not white, and that a circle is not a square. Of the same class, though not equally apparent to the unlearned, are the following: that the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right angles; that an equilateral triangle is also equiangular, and that any sum multiplied by itself produces its square, and multiplied again produces its cube. These truths I expect to rely on as premises universally acknowledged, and needing no proof.

164. [5.] There are also many principles in science so well established that in all scientific as well as popular works they are assumed as unquestioned facts, such as the rotundity of the earth, the size and relative situation of the planets, all the elementary principles of the natural sciences as usually taught in the schools throughout the civilized world. I see no reason why these should not be appealed to in the first instance as unquestioned truths. If the opposing party denies their correctness he should be expected to give his reasons, to show the fallacy of that principle of science which has received the common assent of mankind.

165. [6.] For an example, if you should assert the rotundity of the earth, that being a fact about which the learned have ceased to doubt, I should not be at liberty to simply deny that fact and call for proofs, but should be bound to give evidence that the common doctrine was erroneous, which you would afterwards reply to and defend your position. I think this rule necessary, otherwise questions would be endless."

166. In your 57th par. you have just made the discovery that these rules do not make theologic works authority. A most grave discovery. And so late as par. 93 you are yet contending that testimony must be proved by something higher than testimony, or it cannot be received.

167. It is very singular that in the amount you have written you have said so little on the point in question, and have made so many new questions. In the various positions which I have taken, you have scarcely reviewed a single one on the point really at issue, but have usually raised some collateral question, for the purpose of showing that on a point or suggestion not material I was in error.

168. In par. 17 you have raised the question whether it would be a mark of wisdom to give us reason for guide, and then give us revelation, which you assume will supercede the necessity of reason. And because I had asserted of some things that no man of common sense, in his senses, ever disputed, that it was insanity to deny, then you raise the question, if doubting is proof of insanity. (Par. 27.) The folly of the issue is most apparent, when you go to my par. 4, where I state that nothing but insanity denies that two and two are four; that black is not white, and that a circle is not a square.—Does anything short of insanity deny these truths?

169. In par. 35 you raise the question of the wisdom of God, which is not in issue. I might answer, but what has it to do with the question at issue? In par. 36 you raise the issue of the progression of language. But you have not shown it possible for man to originate a language, either perfect or imperfect. What then have we to do with the question of its progression? If man could not originate it in either form, how does the decision of your new issue either way show the fallacy of my position?

170. In par. 38 you complain that I have not given God attributes enough. Is not our question whether he is? or is it what his attributes are? How is the authorship of the books of Genesis and Exodus involved in this controversy? Whoever the author is, we can have no personal knowledge of him now. Our faith in those books rests on other facts than the persons of their authors.

171. At par. 51, still disposed to wage war upon my suggestion that the well established principles of the natural and mathematical sciences usually contained in scholastic and popular works, and "usually taught in schools throughout the civilized world," should be appealed to as prima facia authority, (par. 5, 6,) you have given as a reason why such authority should not be received, that "authority crucified Christ, burnt Catholics and Protestants, Quakers and witches, made Galileo say the earth does not go round, and keeps three millions of negroes in bondage." If you can see any connection between the premises and the conclusion, you have a ken that few men have attained to.

172. In the same paragraph you object to admitting my testimony. Who asks you to? Have I offered it? In the manuscript sent by you require a witness who has seen the "Lord of the universe in the exercise of his power," and adds, "here I WANT your answer." Could I understand otherwise than that, as a seer, (or pretended seer,) you demanded my testimony? I did not refuse it, but gave it under protest. You say the word "want" should have been "wait," which refers the idea to another subject. But does this excuse you in accusing me of imposing my own testimony on you, which I never offered, and protested against the use of? When your amanuen-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 18.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. FEB. 15. 1849. [WHOLE No. 112.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 6.

Voree, February 19th, 1849.

MR. BURGESS:—After a long delay, occasioned first by waiting to hear from you, and finally by a perfect crowd of other avocations, I sit down again to our discussion. So long has elapsed since writing or looking into what you have written, that I was obliged to read the work so far entire to learn where to begin.

161. I must confess my surprise at the manner in which you have carried on this discussion. In the beginning I laid down as rules necessary for brevity and convenience in the matter the following well grounded and safe principles, to which I again refer you, believing that the reading of them is a full justification of every principle contained in them:—

162. [3.] "In such a discussion I understand that no man or book is authority in any higher sense than they are in discussing a question of mathematics, chemistry or geology; that there is no Bible or book of laws the dicta of which is supreme or final.

163. [4.] There are, however, certain truths which nothing short of insanity questions; such for instance as that two and two are four, that black is not white, and that a circle is not a square. Of the same class, though not equally apparent to the unlearned, are the following: that the three angles of a triangle are equal to two right angles; that an equilateral triangle is also equiangular, and that any sum multiplied by itself produces its square, and multiplied again produces its cube. These truths I expect to rely on as premises universally acknowledged, and needing no proof.

164. [5.] There are also many principles in science so well established that in all scientific as well as popular works they are assumed as unquestioned facts, such as the rotundity of the earth, the size and relative situation of the planets, all the elementary principles of the natural sciences as usually taught in the schools throughout the civilized world. I see no reason why these should not be appealed to in the first instance as unquestioned truths. If the opposing party denies their correctness he should be expected to give his reasons, to show the fallacy of that principle of science which has received the common assent of mankind.

165. [6.] For an example, if you should assert the rotundity of the earth, that being a fact about which the learned have ceased to doubt, I should not be at liberty to simply deny that fact and call for proofs, but should be bound to give evidence that the common doctrine was erroneous, which you would afterwards reply to and defend your position. I think this rule necessary, otherwise questions would be endless."

166. In your 57th par. you have just made the discovery that these rules do not make theologic works authority. A most grave discovery. And so late as par. 93 you are yet contending that testimony must be proved by something higher than testimony, or it cannot be received.

167. It is very singular that in the amount you have written you have said so little on the point in question, and have made so many new questions. In the various positions which I have taken, you have scarcely reviewed a single one on the point really at issue, but have usually raised some collateral question, for the purpose of showing that on a point or suggestion not material I was in error.

168. In par. 17 you have raised the question whether it would be a mark of wisdom to give us reason for guide, and then give us revelation, which you assume will supercede the necessity of reason. And because I had asserted of some things that no man of common sense, in his senses, ever disputed, that it was insanity to deny, then you raise the question, if doubting is proof of insanity. (Par. 27.) The folly of the issue is most apparent, when you go to my par. 4, where I state that nothing but insanity denies that two and two are four; that black is not white, and that a circle is not a square.—Does anything short of insanity deny these truths?

169. In par. 35 you raise the question of the wisdom of God, which is not in issue. I might answer, but what has it to do with the question at issue? In par. 36 you raise the issue of the progression of language. But you have not shown it possible for man to originate a language, either perfect or imperfect. What then have we to do with the question of its progression? If man could not originate it in either form, how does the decision of your new issue either way show the fallacy of my position?

170. In par. 38 you complain that I have not given God attributes enough. Is not our question whether he is? or is it what his attributes are? How is the authorship of the books of Genesis and Exodus involved in this controversy? Whoever the author is, we can have no personal knowledge of him now. Our faith in those books rests on other facts than the persons of their authors.

171. At par. 51, still disposed to wage war upon my suggestion that the well established principles of the natural and mathematical sciences usually contained in scholastic and popular works, and "usually taught in schools throughout the civilized world," should be appealed to as prima facia authority, (par. 5, 6,) you have given as a reason why such authority should not be received, that "authority crucified Christ, burnt Catholics and Protestants, Quakers and witches, made Galileo say the earth does not go round, and keeps three millions of negroes in bondage." If you can see any connection between the premises and the conclusion, you have a ken that few men have attained to.

172. In the same paragraph you object to admitting my testimony. Who asks you to? Have I offered it? In the manuscript sent by you require a witness who has seen the "Lord of the universe in the exercise of his power," and adds, "here I WANT your answer." Could I understand otherwise than that, as a seer, (or pretended seer,) you demanded my testimony? I did not refuse it, but gave it under protest. You say the word "want" should have been "wait," which refers the idea to another subject. But does this excuse you in accusing me of imposing my own testimony on you, which I never offered, and protested against the use of? When your amanuen-

sis has by mistake called out what you did not seek for, and I protest against giving, why not let it drop there?

173. Of a piece with these new and non-collateral issues is your very grave conclusion in par. 58: "What kind of evidence is good to prove the rotundity of the earth? The testimony of men of certain facts, and the calculations of mathematicians founded thereon. What kind of evidence then is good to prove the existence of a God? The testimony of men of facts, and the equally scientific deductions therefrom of his existence."

174. Seriously, do you mean that no evidence is admissible to prove the existence of God only that which aptly proves the rotundity of the earth? Are not the existence of tides ascertained simply by seeing, and proved merely by human testimony? And is not their existence a scientific truth, a simple fact established beyond doubt?

175. By the way, I perceive that you inquire, "how many probabilities it takes to make a certainty?" I shall not undertake to give you the precise number. But if any individual should assert that in the broad ocean a hundred miles from shore there was a broad, vast, deep unfathomable stream, running unchangingly, like a mighty river, at the rate of three, four or five miles an hour, his testimony would produce but a very slight probability. But in the case of the Gulf Stream, these probabilities have become a certainty. And a certainty to which even you would doubtless admit, if we were speaking on any other subject than the being of a God. On that I have no assurance as yet that you would not require proof of the duality of your eyes. And if I brought in your neighbors who had seen you to prove that you had two, you probably would remind me that human testimony was not to be relied on. That as men had lied, particularly in the case of lawyer Bond, we were not safe in trusting to their testimony.

176. In the course of this discussion you have said that we ought not to rely on the testimony of men on this subject, because it is contrary to reason and experience. On this I take issue by showing that the testimony of men, of many of the ordinary facts of the natural sciences, is contrary to the experience of those to whom this testimony is addressed; and instance the case of the Dutch embassador who told the king of Siam of water freezing over, so that men and teams could travel on it. You will readily perceive that as the king of Siam lived within the tropics, this testimony was as contrary to his experience as the seeing of spirits is to you. And as his reason was equally founded on his experience, it was contrary to his reason.

177. Do you meet this issue by showing why a man should reject testimony contrary to his experience and his reason founded thereon in one case, and receive it in the other? Not in the least. You have not attempted it. But taking up a mere remark of mine on the propriety of the king's conduct in driving the embassador from his court as a great liar, a mere expletive, you go on to argue most gravely that it is not right to drive every one away and treat them as liars, whose experience happens to be different from ours. (Par. 60.)

178. And as if that folly was not sufficient to satisfy your cravings, you go on to reason that as the king had possibly discovered that oil was a trifle harder the coldest day than it was the hottest, therefore he ought to reason that water, which was precisely as fluid (in Siam) either at the coldest point it had ever been seen or at boiling heat, was in Holland not merely a little hardened, but actually as solid as a rock! I shall not question that this is in point, and give you credit for the full force of its reasoning.

179. To return to the same point. In par. 62 you involve the question, both of God's duty to make mankind happy and of the particular means by which he ought to accomplish it. What you say may be very wise, or it may be very foolish. But what has it to do with the proof of his existence? His existence is a seperate, substantive, independent fact, having no connection whatever with his supposed obligations. If there is a God, he equally exists, whether he does the duties you prescribe for him or not.

180. In par. 77 you have raised the issue of the immortality of God and spirits; assuming that all organic bodies are destructible. I should be most happy to accommodate you with a separate investigation of that question. Having in my possession organized inanimate bodies which have stood the shock of time and wreck of worlds, doubtless more than 30,000 years; and having learned that life is a great preserve of organic existence, I do not despair of immortality and evelasting life. And I am, as ever, willing to give a reason for the hope that is in me. But I see no reason for mixing up that question with the one at issue.

181. In par. 80 you make a false issue, by the importance which you attach to the word "whole." You had urged that there was not a supreme governor of the universe, by asking, (par. 20,) "what example have we among the most intelligent beings of one governing the whole?" In answer to this question, what example should I give? That of another universal sovereign, usurping the dominions of God? or that of inferior intelligent beings, whose dominions should bear about the same relation to his as does their intelligence? Clearly the latter.

182. Accordingly I replied: "Among intelligent people government is constantly extending. The civilized nations are examples of one (with his ministers and coadjutors) governing myriads.—Unintelligent and savage nations are cut up to mere tribes, over whom one exercises but a precarious authority. Most animals are too ignorant to have any regular government. Nevertheless some of the wisest have a regular government over a community of themselves, as horses and elephants in the wild state, and among insects, bees and ants."

183. These facts you do not attempt to controvert. But with it staring you in the face, that the most intelligent animals have their governors of communities; that men a little advanced in knowledge are precariously governed in small tribes, but in the highest state of civilization are ruled in empires of many millions, you attempt to escape the analogy, that therefore God being high above all in intelligence, should govern all, by simply sliding off upon the demagogue's claptrap about republicanism and despotism.

184. If it is any satisfaction to you to have it, I am perfectly willing to acknowledge that my beau ideal of a good government is an universal monarchy; that on the earth I find but two republics that are not torn with continual and harassing anarchy, to one hundred monarchies with as much internal peace and as certain protection of private rights as they. In all those things which mark national prosperity, I can see no greater progress in the United States, the model republic, than in Russia, the model empire. I am not aware that there are less slaves in the United States, than in Russia, in proportion to the whole population, with vastly more in the United States than in Russia, going about the streets and seeking masters, that they may get bread to eat.

185. And while I see anarchy and misery growing out of republican institutions over half the continent, in this one instance I see a republic rapidly advancing, partly because it is less republican in fact than in appearances, but principally because of the abundance of cheap lands. But even if this could in any manner be connected with the issue, your premises are against you. For a republic, if it actually has a government, is as truly an example of one governing many as is a monarchy. The sole difference is in the mode in which one is selected. Much has been said of late of man's rights in relation to government. But his true right—"to be well

sis has by mistake called out what you did not seek for, and I protest against giving, why not let it drop there?

173. Of a piece with these new and non-collateral issues is your very grave conclusion in par. 58: "What kind of evidence is good to prove the rotundity of the earth? The testimony of men of certain facts, and the calculations of mathematicians founded thereon. What kind of evidence then is good to prove the existence of a God? The testimony of men of facts, and the equally scientific deductions therefrom of his existence."

174. Seriously, do you mean that no evidence is admissible to prove the existence of God only that which aptly proves the roundity of the earth? Are not the existence of tides ascertained simply by seeing, and proved merely by human testimony? And is not their existence a scientific truth, a simple fact established beyond doubt?

175. By the way, I perceive that you inquire, "how many probabilities it takes to make a certainty?" I shall not undertake to give you the precise number. But if any individual should assert that in the broad ocean a hundred miles from shore there was a broad, vast, deep unfathomable stream, running unchangingly like a mighty river, at the rate of three, four or five miles an hour, his testimony would produce but a very slight probability. But in the case of the Gulf Stream, these probabilities have become a certainty. And a certainty to which even you would doubtless admit, if we were speaking on any other subject than the being of a God. On that I have no assurance as yet that you would not require proof of the duality of your eyes. And if I brought in your neighbors who had seen you to prove that you had two, you probably would remind me that human testimony was not to be relied on. That as men had lied, particularly in the case of lawyer Bond, we were not safe in trusting to their testimony.

176. In the course of this discussion you have said that we ought not to rely on the testimony of men on this subject, because it is contrary to reason and experience. On this I take issue by showing that the testimony of men, of many of the ordinary facts of the natural sciences, is contrary to the experience of those to whom this testimony is addressed; and instance the case of the Dutch embassador who told the king of Siam of water freezing over, so that men and teams could travel on it. You will readily perceive that as the king of Siam lived within the tropics, this testimony was as contrary to his experience as the seeing of spirits is to you. And as his reason was equally founded on his experience, it was contrary to his reason.

177. Do you meet this issue by showing why a man should reject testimony contrary to his experience and his reason founded thereon in one case, and receive it in the other? Not in the least. You have not attempted it. But taking up a mere remark of mine on the propriety of the king's conduct in driving the embassador from his court as a great liar, a mere expletive, you go on to argue most gravely that it is not right to drive every one away and treat them as liars, whose experience happens to be different from ours. (Par. 60.)

178. And as if that folly was not sufficient to satisfy your cravings, you go on to reason that as the king had possibly discovered that oil was a trifle harder the coldest day than it was the hottest, therefore he ought to reason that water, which was precisely as fluid (in Siam) either at the coldest point it had ever been seen or at boiling heat, was in Holland not merely a little hardened, but actually as solid as a rock! I shall not question that this is in point, and give you credit for the full force of its reasoning.

179. To return to the same point. In par. 63 you involve the question, both of God's duty to make mankind happy and of the particular means by which he ought to accomplish it. What you say may be very wise, or it may be very foolish. But what has it to do with the proof of his existence? His existence is a seperate, substantive, independent fact, having no connection whatever with his supposed obligations. If there is a God, he equally exists, whether he does the duties you prescribe for him or not.

180. In par. 77 you have raised the issue of the immortality of God and spirits; assuming that all organic bodies are destructible. I should be most happy to accommodate you with a separate investigation of that question. Having in my possession organized inanimate bodies which have stood the shock of time and wreck of worlds, doubtless more than 30,000 years; and having learned that life is a great preserve of organic existence, I do not despair of immortality and everlasting life. And I am, as ever, willing to give a reason for the hope that is in me. But I see no reason for mixing up that question with the one at issue.

181. In par. 80 you make a false issue, by the importance which you attach to the word "whole." You had urged that there was not a supreme governor of the universe, by asking, (par. 20.) "what example have we among the most intelligent beings of one governing the whole?" In answer to this question, what example should I give? That of another universal sovereign, usurping the dominions of God? or that of inferior intelligent beings, whose dominions should bear about the same relation to his as does their intelligence? Clearly the latter.

182. Accordingly I replied: "Among intelligent people government is constantly extending. The civilized nations are examples of one (with his ministers and coadjutors) governing myriads.—Unintelligent and savage nations are cut up to mere tribes, over whom one exercises but a precarious authority. Most animals are too ignorant to have any regular government. Nevertheless some of the wisest have a regular government over a community of themselves, as horses and elephants in the wild state, and among insects, bees and ants."

183. These facts you do not attempt to controvert. But with it staring you in the face, that the most intelligent animals have their governors of communities; that men a little advanced in knowledge are precariously governed in small tribes, but in the highest state of civilization are ruled in empires of many millions, you attempt to escape the analogy, that therefore God being high above all in intelligence, should govern all, by simply sliding off upon the demagogue's claptrap about republicanism and despotism.

184. If it is any satisfaction to you to have it, I am perfectly willing to acknowledge that my beau ideal of a good government is an universal monarchy; that on the earth I find but two republics that are not torn with continual and harassing anarchy, to one hundred monarchies with as much internal peace and as certain protection of private rights as they. In all those things which mark national prosperity, I can see no greater progress in the United States, the model republic, than in Russia, the model empire. I am not aware that there are less slaves in the United States, than in Russia, in proportion to the whole population, with vastly more in the United States than in Russia, going about the streets and seeking masters, that they may get bread to eat.

185. And while I see anarchy and misery growing out of republican institutions over half the continent, in this one instance I see a republic rapidly advancing, partly because it is less republican in fact than in appearances, but principally because of the abundance of cheap lands. But even if this could in any manner be connected with the issue, your premises are against you. For a republic, if it actually has a government, is as truly an example of one governing many as is a monarchy. The sole difference is in the mode in which one is selected. Much has been said of late of man's rights in relation to government. But his true right—"to be well governed"—they have all forgotten. Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

THE FLIGHT OF THE POPE.

In speaking of this event, the Christian Chronicle enumerates the following instances of previous flights:—

"The famous Hildebrand, Gregory VII., by the hostility of the Romans, was compelled (A. D. 1048) to forsake Rome, and died the following year at Salerno. Paschal II. was driven into exile at Benevento, by Henry V., and died there A. D. 1117, the year after his expulsion. His successor, Gelasius II., was also forced to fly, and died at Clugny; though in this case, Gregory VIII., a contemporary Pope, remained at Rome to administer its affairs. In A. D. 1130, Innocent II. fled to France, leaving also a rival, Anacletus II., in possession of the chair at Rome. True, he returned again, but the spreading sentiments of Arnold of Brescia, opposing the assumption of temporal power by the clergy, raised a revolt in A. D. 1143, which embittered the last hours of Innocent II., and were the cause of a popular insurrection, in which his successor, Lucius II., was slain. In A. D. 1146, Eugenius III. found it impossible to maintain the strife in which his predecessor had fallen, and fled to France, where he spent three years, until led back by the king of Sicily. During seven years, from A. D. 1181 to A. D. 1188, the tumults at Rome compelled three Popes—Lucius III., Urban III., and Gregory VIII.,—to absent themselves, and wander to and fro in the world. In A. D. 1245, Innocent IV. deemed it wise to flee from Rome, and to take up his abode at Lyons, where he tarried for seven years. The conduct of Boniface VIII. made it necessary for him to seek a shelter at Anagni, where he was followed by two of his bitter political enemies. He was delivered by the people of Anagni from their assaults and insults, but died a few weeks after, in A. D. 1303, from a fever brought on by their attack. These are some incidents in the lives of the Popes. They certainly had the effect of causing people to look with suspicion on the assumption of political power by the Papacy. Yet, after a lapse of five centuries, we find the same struggles of the people with the Pope, their political head, renewed."

In addition to the above, we may add the flight of Pope Pius VI., who left Rome Feb. 15th, 1798, at 4 A. M.,—the day of Berthier's (the French General) entry. He retired first to Sienna, and afterwards "to a small country place, called by the name of Hell, which gave rise to the sarcasms of the undevout." He was subsequently removed to several other places, till he died a few months afterwards, a prisoner, at Valence, Aug. 29th, 1799. In 1809, July 6th, Pope Pius VII. was arrested in his chamber by the French troops, and, on refusing to renounce all claims to temporal power, conducted to Florence, and thence to Savona. In 1812 he was removed to Fontainebleau, but was released in 1814 and restored to the possession of the Papal territories. Pope Pius IX., the present Pontiff, left Rome on the evening of the 24th of Nov., 1848, and arrived at Gaeta, in the Neapolitan territory, on the evening of the 25th, where, at the latest news, he was still stopping.

After the departure of the Pope in 1798, the Cardinals, "with melancholy voice, pronounced their absolute renunciation of the temporal government." And now the people of Rome have "proclaimed the temporal deposition of the Pope," so that he can now bear only the title of Pope Bishop of Rome.

This subject furnishes a theme for comment by nearly all the secular as well as the religious press. Jerrold's Weekly Paper, a London journal of some celebrity, has the following:—

"The flight of temporal princes from their capitals has ceased to be a nine days' wonder. Louis Philippe has rendered the practice fashionable. When the quiet citizens of London take up their morning paper, the announcement of fugitive royalty does not disturb the ordinary routine of their breakfast, and if the event serves as a topic of conversation in the early city omnibus, it is felt that no permanent derangement of Consuls will be the effect of royal abdications. Compared with past times, this is a wonderful proof of the stability of British credit and confidence; monarchies fall, and the public securities remain firm, because faith in the people survives the prostration of thrones. We have been taught to feel that the principle of order is perfectly compatible with republican institutions, and that the payment of dividends is not wholly dependent on the existence of coronets or crowns. The people are no longer looked upon as mere cyphers; their voice is heard, listened to, and respected. It is admitted that they may be entrusted with power as safely as a Guizot or a Metternich; that they are sensible to justice, are ready to perform their duty as citizens, when their rights, as men, are recognized and guarantied.

"The flight of the Pope, however, is a peculiarly significant sign of the times, because he is not only a temporal sovereign, but a spiritual prince, the religious chief of a large portion of Christendom. They who have never resided in Rome cannot perhaps fully appreciate this startling event. It is astonishing that a Pontiff, to whom every hat was raised when he appeared in public, to whom every knee was bent, and before whom tens of thousands prostrated themselves to beseech his benediction, should have been compelled to flee the Eternal City stealthily, and in disguise, where, a few months since, his person was held sacred as holding the keys of heaven. He was popular withal as a temporal prince, having announced himself as a Progressionist and a Reformer. Why, then, did he fall? Because he halted in his career, equivocated in his policy, thought more of the states of the church than of the independence of Italy, and perished the victim of half measures. Now, considering the religious reverence in which the Pope is held by his immediate subjects, we can only conclude from his precipitate flight, that he is himself convinced that even the prestige which surrounded his spiritual throne has vanished, and if this be so, the Papacy itself may terminate with Pius the Ninth."

MAJOR NOAH AND THE TEMPLE.

We gave, some few weeks since, some extracts from the address of Mr. NOAH, in which he attempted to show the failure of the prediction of the SAVIOR, that in the destruction of the Temple, not one stone should be left upon another. On this claim of a failure, the Louisville Journal, in a long article, remarks as follows:—

"We shall now show that the prediction of the SAVIOR was fulfilled in the most literal sense. The prediction was, that the building upon which the disciples were then looking should be utterly destroyed. The address was made in reference to what was a matter of sight, not to underground arches. See Matt. xxiv. 2; Mark. xiii. 2. The language is plain, and easily understood. It was also promised, in the same connection, that Jerusalem should be laid even with the ground, and that not one stone should be left upon another.—These things were fulfilled in the most exact sense. Titus did all in his power to save the Temple, but could not. The Jews set fire to the porticos, and the infuriated Romans completed the work of ruin, while Titus was making personal exertions to save it. Josephus says the Temple was burned against the will of Cæsar. Titus then gave orders to demolish the foundations of the Temple and of the city, with the exception of three towers. All the other buildings were levelled with the ground. Maimonides and the Jewish Talmud give the name of the Roman who tore up the foundations of Herod's Temple, with a ploughshare, and this is a fact as well attested as the fact of the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus is. And so utter was the destruction of the city, that those who went to look governed"—they have all forgotten. Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

THE FLIGHT OF THE POPE.

In speaking of this event, the Christian Chronicle enumerates the following instances of previous flights:—

"The famous Hildebrand, Gregory VII., by the hostility of the Romans, was compelled (A. D. 1018) to forsake Rome, and died the following year at Salerno. Paschal II. was driven into exile at Benevento, by Henry V., and died there A. D. 1117, the year after his expulsion. His successor, Gelasius II., was also forced to fly, and died at Clugny; though in this case, Gregory VIII., a contemporary Pope, remained at Rome to administer its affairs. In A. D. 1130, Innocent II. fled to France, leaving also a rival, Anacletus II., in possession of the chair at Rome. True, he returned again, but the spreading sentiments of Arnold of Brescia, opposing the assumption of temporal power by the clergy, raised a revolt in A. D. 1143, which embittered the last hours of Innocent II., and were the cause of a popular insurrection, in which his successor, Lucius II., was slain. In A. D. 1146, Eugenius III. found it impossible to maintain the strife in which his predecessor had fallen, and fled to France, where he spent three years, until led back by the king of Sicily. During seven years, from A. D. 1181 to A. D. 1188, the tumults at Rome compelled three Popes—Lucius III., Urban III., and Gregory VIII.,—to absent themselves, and wander to and fro in the world. In A. D. 1215, Innocent IV. deemed it wise to flee from Rome, and to take up his abode at Lyons, where he tarried for seven years. The conduct of Boniface VIII. made it necessary for him to seek a shelter at Anagni, where he was followed by two of his bitter political enemies. He was delivered by the people of Anagni from their assaults and insults, but died a few weeks after, in A. D. 1303, from a fever brought on by their attack. These are some incidents in the lives of the Popes. They certainly had the effect of causing people to look with suspicion on the assumption of political power by the Papacy. Yet, after a lapse of five centuries, we find the same struggles of the people with the Pope, their political head, renewed."

In addition to the above, we may add the flight of Pope Pius VI., who left Rome Feb. 15th, 1798, at 4 A. M.,—the day of Berthier's (the French General) entry. He retired first to Sienna, and afterwards "to a small country place, called by the name of Hell, which gave rise to the sarcasms of the undevout." He was subsequently removed to several other places, till he died a few months afterwards, a prisoner, at Valence, Aug. 29th, 1799. In 1809, July 6th, Pope Pius VII. was arrested in his chamber by the French troops, and, on refusing to renounce all claims to temporal power, conducted to Florence, and thence to Savona. In 1812 he was removed to Fontainebleau, but was released in 1814 and restored to the possession of the Papal territories. Pope Pius IX., the present Pontiff, left Rome on the evening of the 24th of Nov., 1848, and arrived at Gaeta, in the Neapolitan territory, on the evening of the 25th, where, at the latest news, he was still stopping.

After the departure of the Pope in 1798, the Cardinals, "with melancholy voice, pronounced their absolute renunciation of the temporal government." And now the people of Rome have "proclaimed the temporal deposition of the Pope," so that he can now bear only the title of Pope Bishop of Rome.

This subject furnishes a theme for comment by nearly all the secular as well as the religious press. Jerrold's Weekly Paper, a London journal of some celebrity, has the following:—

"The flight of temporal princes from their capitals has ceased to be a nine days' wonder. Louis Philippe has rendered the practice fashionable. When the quiet citizens of London take up their morning paper, the announcement of fugitive royalty does not disturb the ordinary routine of their breakfast, and if the event serves as a topic of conversation in the early city omnibus, it is felt that no permanent derangement of Consuls will be the effect of royal abdications. Compared with past times, this is a wonderful proof of the stability of British credit and confidence; monarchies fall, and the public securities remain firm, because faith in the people survives the prostration of thrones. We have been taught to feel that the principle of order is perfectly compatible with republican institutions, and that the payment of dividends is not wholly dependent on the existence of coronets or crowns. The people are no longer looked upon as mere cyphers; their voice is heard, listened to, and respected. It is admitted that they may be entrusted with power as safely as a Guizot or a Metternich; that they are sensible to justice, are ready to perform their duty as citizens, when their rights, as men, are recognized and guaranteed."

"The flight of the Pope, however, is a peculiarly significant sign of the times, because he is not only a temporal sovereign, but a spiritual prince, the religious chief of a large portion of Christendom. They who have never resided in Rome cannot perhaps fully appreciate this startling event. It is astonishing that a Pontiff, to whom every hat was raised when he appeared in public, to whom every knee was bent, and before whom tens of thousands prostrated themselves to beseech his benediction, should have been compelled to flee the Eternal City stealthily, and in disguise, where, a few months since, his person was held sacred as holding the keys of heaven. He was popular withal as a temporal prince, having announced himself as a Progressionist and a Reformer. Why, then, did he fall? Because he halted in his career, equivocated in his policy, thought more of the states of the church than of the independence of Italy, and perished the victim of half measures. Now, considering the religious reverence in which the Pope is held by his immediate subjects, we can only conclude from his precipitate flight, that he is himself convinced that even the prestige which surrounded his spiritual throne has vanished, and if this be so, the Papacy itself may terminate with Pius the Ninth."

MAJOR NOAH AND THE TEMPLE.

We gave, some few weeks since, some extracts from the address of Mr. NOAH, in which he attempted to show the failure of the prediction of the SAVIOR, that in the destruction of the Temple, not one stone should be left upon another. On this claim of a failure, the Louisville Journal, in a long article, remarks as follows:—

"We shall now show that the prediction of the SAVIOR was fulfilled in the most literal sense. The prediction was, that the building upon which the disciples were then looking should be utterly destroyed. The address was made in reference to what was a matter of sight, not to underground arches. See Matt. xxiv. 2; Mark. xiii. 2. The language is plain, and easily understood. It was also promised, in the same connection, that Jerusalem should be laid even with the ground, and that not one stone should be left upon another.—These things were fulfilled in the most exact sense. Titus did all in his power to save the Temple, but could not. The Jews set fire to the porticos, and the infuriated Romans completed the work of ruin, while Titus was making personal exertions to save it. Josephus says the Temple was burned against the will of Cæsar. Titus then gave orders to demolish the foundations of the Temple and of the city, with the exception of three towers. All the other buildings were levelled with the ground. Maimonides and the Jewish Talmud give the name of the Roman who tore up the foundations of Herod's Temple, with a ploughshare, and this is a fact as well attested as the fact of the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus is. And so utter was the destruction of the city, that those who went to look at it could scarcely believe that the place had ever been inhabited. The amount of riches found by the Romans among the ruins of the Temple and city, constitutes an ample reason for the destructive digging that took place among the foundations of the Temple and city; and thus the prophecy was literally fulfilled. It is rather too late in the day for Major Noah to contradict facts that were never contradicted by those who were contemporaries of the events. The Major is behind the times.

"There is one prophecy of the Savior, on the occasion of the one which Major Noah impugns, which has been literally fulfilled, and which the Major felt sensibly, at the very moment he was endeavoring to blow away the character of its author. It was more remarkable than the one that has excited the Major's Jewish doubts. We allude to the prediction that 'Judea should be trodden down by the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled.' This was literally fulfilled, and is still in course of fulfillment. The land was sold by VESPASIAN to the Gentiles; and from the time of the destruction of Jerusalem to the present moment, the Jews have never had possession of Judea, nor of the city of Jerusalem. Various nations have held it, but the Jews have never recovered it, and never will, until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled. With this standing monument before his eyes, we cannot but wonder at the Major's blindness and prejudice."

CALIFORNIA.

A curious motley of human beings are fast congregating in that region. According to all accounts, the white men of all nations, who have been residing in various islands in the Pacific, many of them deserters from ships, adventurers and vagabonds of every description, are hastening by hundreds or thousands to California. If we add to these, the emigrants from Oregon and the various ports in South America—the adventurers now hastening from the western and south-western States overland through the South Pass, and those who are about to double Cape Horn, from the Atlantic States, also in quest of gold, to say nothing of the many thousands who are preparing to leave different ports in Europe, impelled by a similar motive, in a few months we shall find in California a large and strange population, an incongruous mass of human beings, but all stimulated by one desire—to obtain gold.

Commodore JONES, of the U. S. Navy, writes from the Pacific, Oct. 25th, that "nothing can exceed the deplorable state of things in Upper California at this time, growing out of the maddening effect of the gold mania. For the present, and I fear for some years to come, it will be impossible for the United States to maintain any naval or military establishment in California; as at present no hope of reward nor fear of punishment is sufficient to make binding any contract between man and man upon the soil of California."

The accounts respecting the abundance of gold there, it seems have not been exaggerated. But on the other hand, it seems that sickness and destitution prevail at the mines, notwithstanding the abundance of gold, and a heterogeneous mass of human beings is rapidly pouring into the country, each of whom being a consumer of provisions, and a producer only of gold, will still further exhaust the supplies of provisions. We shall probably soon have still further and more alarming accounts of suffering and want at the gold placers.—Ex. paper.

AN AWFUL STATE OF THINGS.—We take the following from the Boston Post of Tuesday. It is over the signature of "J. Parker," and is an extract from a letter received by him from his brother in California. His brother writes:—"A state of distress and suffering prevails here such as the world probably never before saw—People were so eager to get gold, that they only thought how to get here. Thousands upon thousands have rushed here, bringing no provisions with them, trusting wholly for their supplies from what could be obtained here. There was none raised here. All rushed to the mines. The supply brought from abroad is mostly exhausted, and hundreds have already died, and thousands more will die from starvation and by the hand of each other. Sickness rages as famine increases, and men have become demons, goaded to insanity by hunger; and if you have any regard for a brother, for God's sake ship me some provisions to San Francisco soon as possible, or I die of starvation."—Advent Herald.

☞ A crazy man in Philadelphia was lately heard to remark as follows:—

"That this is the age of universal rascality—that the merchant sells you adulterated goods, the lawyer lies for money, the minister peddles false religions, the doctor poisons you with medicine he knows nothing about—the editor sells himself to electioneer for Governor Mammon! There is no one honest but me. Look at that beautiful lady—she thinks she has cheated us into the notion that she is real. But she isn't. I could tell you all about it if I pleased. Her teeth were bought at the dentist's—her curls at the wig-maker's—her beautiful bust is made of cotton and whalebone—the rosy color of her cheeks is nothing but red paint. Everything and everybody, I tell you, is false but me."

☞ T. W. Nixon, of whom we spoke a few weeks since, we are informed, continued to uphold prophet Strang until he received that notice, upon which he took a very short turn, and avows the intention of doing the cause all the injury he can. We are perfectly satisfied with this result, persuaded that he will injure the cause less as an enemy than as a friend. Nor does it surprise us in the least that one of his character should pretend to either believe or not to believe from day to day, just as their interest seems to lead them. We have been cursed quite enough by such men, and hope never to see another of the kind.

☞ The gold fever continues, and is on the increase. It is next to certain that as many as 25,000 will be assembled at Independence, Mo., to start as soon as grass grows, and not less than 200,000 are likely to assemble at the digging during the next summer. Reports arrive occasionally that the gold extends to the Brighamite settlement in the salt land. If this is true the rush of emigrants will swallow up their feeble numbers. If false, those there will push on in search of gold, and materially diminish even their present numbers.

☞ Our thanks to the Hon. Senator Walker for Fremont's Map of California and Oregon, and the accompanying geographic memoir, a valuable work, published by order of the United States Senate.

☞ Bro. D. F. Bottsford has come up and had an informal investigation of the complaints some time since brought up against him. Some things are explained, and others reconciled. He is, therefore, restored to the fellowship of the saints.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a regular Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Voree, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of April next; and also on Beaver Island on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of July next. It is expected that every member of the First Presidency and of the Twelve will attend one or both of these Conferences. By the President.

GILBERT WATSON, RECORDER.

at it could scarcely believe that the place had ever been inhabited. The amount of riches found by the Romans among the ruins of the Temple and city, constitutes an ample reason for the destructive digging that took place among the foundations of the Temple and city; and thus the prophecy was literally fulfilled. It is rather too late in the day for Major Noah to contradict facts that were never contradicted by those who were contemporaries of the events. The Major is behind the times.

"There is one prophecy of the Savior, on the occasion of the one which Major Noah impugns, which has been literally fulfilled, and which the Major felt sensibly, at the very moment he was endeavoring to blow away the character of its author. It was more remarkable than the one that has excited the Major's Jewish doubts. We allude to the prediction that 'Judea should be trodden down by the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled.' This was literally fulfilled, and is still in course of fulfillment. The land was sold by VESPASIAN to the Gentiles; and from the time of the destruction of Jerusalem to the present moment, the Jews have never had possession of Judea, nor of the city of Jerusalem. Various nations have held it, but the Jews have never recovered it, and never will, until the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled. With this standing monument before his eyes, we cannot but wonder at the Major's blindness and prejudice."

CALIFORNIA.

A curious motley of human beings are fast congregating in that region. According to all accounts, the white men of all nations, who have been residing in various islands in the Pacific, many of them deserters from ships, adventurers and vagabonds of every description, are hastening by hundreds or thousands to California. If we add to these, the emigrants from Oregon and the various ports in South America—the adventurers now hastening from the western and south-western States overland through the South Pass, and those who are about to double Cape Horn, from the Atlantic States, also in quest of gold, to say nothing of the many thousands who are preparing to leave different ports in Europe, impelled by a similar motive, in a few months we shall find in California a large and strange population, an incongruous mass of human beings, but all stimulated by one desire—to obtain gold.

Commodore JONES, of the U. S. Navy, writes from the Pacific, Oct. 25th, that "nothing can exceed the deplorable state of things in Upper California at this time, growing out of the maddening effect of the gold mania. For the present, and I fear for some years to come, it will be impossible for the United States to maintain any naval or military establishment in California; as at present no hope of reward nor fear of punishment is sufficient to make binding any contract between man and man upon the soil of California."

The accounts respecting the abundance of gold there, it seems have not been exaggerated. But on the other hand, it seems that sickness and destitution prevail at the mines, notwithstanding the abundance of gold, and a heterogeneous mass of human beings is rapidly pouring into the country, each of whom being a consumer of provisions, and a producer only of gold, will still further exhaust the supplies of provisions. We shall probably soon have still further and more alarming accounts of suffering and want at the gold placers.—Ex. paper.

AN AWFUL STATE OF THINGS.—We take the following from the Boston Post of Tuesday. It is over the signature of "J. Parker," and is an extract from a letter received by him from his brother in California. His brother writes:—"A state of distress and suffering prevails here such as the world probably never before saw—People were so eager to get gold, that they only thought how to get here. Thousands upon thousands have rushed here, bringing no provisions with them, trusting wholly for their supplies from what could be obtained here. There was none raised here. All rushed to the mines. The supply brought from abroad is mostly exhausted, and hundreds have already died, and thousands more will die from starvation and by the hand of each other. Sickness rages as famine increases, and men have become demons, goaded to insanity by hunger; and if you have any regard for a brother, for God's sake ship me some provisions to San Francisco soon as possible, or I die of starvation."—Advent Herald.

☞ A crazy man in Philadelphia was lately heard to remark as follows:—

"That this is the age of universal rascality—that the merchant sells you adulterated goods, the lawyer lies for money, the minister peddles false religions, the doctor poisons you with medicine he knows nothing about—the editor sells himself to electioneer for Governor Mammon! There is no one honest but me. Look at that beautiful lady—she thinks she has cheated us into the notion that she is real. But she isn't. I could tell you all about it if I pleased. Her teeth were bought at the dentist's—her curls at the wig-maker's—her beautiful bust is made of cotton and whalebone—the rosy color of her cheeks is nothing but red paint. Everything and everybody, I tell you, is false but me."

☞ T. W. Nixon, of whom we spoke a few weeks since, we are informed, continued to uphold prophet Strang until he received that notice, upon which he took a very short turn, and avows the intention of doing the cause all the injury he can. We are perfectly satisfied with this result, persuaded that he will injure the cause less as an enemy than as a friend. Nor does it surprise us in the least that one of his character should pretend to either believe or not to believe from day to day, just as their interest seems to lead them. We have been cursed quite enough by such men, and hope never to see another of the kind.

☞ The gold fever continues, and is on the increase. It is next to certain that as many as 25,000 will be assembled at Independence, Mo., to start as soon as grass grows, and not less than 200,000 are likely to assemble at the digging during the next summer. Reports arrive occasionally that the gold extends to the Brighamite settlement in the salt land. If this is true the rush of emigrants will swallow up their feeble numbers. If false, those there will push on in search of gold, and materially diminish even their present numbers.

☞ Our thanks to the Hon. Senator Walker for Fremont's Map of California and Oregon, and the accompanying geographic memoir, a valuable work, published by order of the United States Senate.

☞ Bro. D. F. Bottsford has come up and had an informal investigation of the complaints some time since brought up against him. Some things are explained, and others reconciled. He is, therefore, restored to the fellowship of the saints.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a regular Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Voree, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of April next; and also on Beaver Island on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of July next. It is expected that every member of the First Presidency and of the Twelve will attend one or both of these Conferences. By the President.

GILBERT WATSON, RECORDER.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 49.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY, FEB. 22, 1849. [WHOLE No. 113.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 7.

Voree, February 22d, 1849.

MR. BURGESS:—I closed my last article rather abruptly, and without going through the particular branch of the subject I had in hand. I shall, therefore, resume where I left off. In paragraph 81, to get over the force of the fact that the most intelligent animals have a regular government as well as men, and the conclusion that therefore you was wrong in your position that intelligence superceded government, you say, "they do not select their governors from other species, or those endowed with supernatural revelations."

187. If it was so, what of it? What has it to do with the issue? Your position was not that it was unlikely that one species should govern another, but that it was unlikely that government should exist with high intelligence. I answered this point by showing that among both men and animals government was in proportion to intelligence, very nearly.

188. But following you in your new issue, the facts are against you. True, the horse and the elephant is governed by one of his own kind. Not so the bee and the ant. They are governed by one in another state of existence, perhaps as unlike the governed as the angel is unlike the man, though he has not attained to immortality.

189. At par. 89 I find you railing against the character of God's government. I beg to remind you again that this is not in issue.—The question at issue is not whether God is an almighty tyrant, or a just ruler. I am not one of those who think God would have been just in sending the Israelites away empty, after several centuries of unrequited bondage. Nor can I discover by what process of reasoning it is worse to overrun and destroy the Canaanites according to the judgment of God for their abominations, than it is for modern christian and infidel nations to do similar acts as they shall severally see fit, without waiting for God's judgment. I have no objection to debating this question with you. But it would not be convenient to mix up both issues.

190. In par. 93 you make a false issue by misapplying a very awkward and perhaps ambiguous expression of mine. My intention was not that "you cannot introduce one fact to prove" a negative, but that you cannot introduce one fact to prove the existence of St. Petersburg or the Pope by your rule of evidence, which is that all testimony must be discarded unless it is proved true. And as this second testimony introduced to prove the truth of the former would be liable to the same objection and so on ad infinitum, nothing could be proved; no fact could be introduced. I submit that this process of thought reduces your main position to an absurdity.

191. Doubtless you will fall back on your old position, that testimony which tends to prove the supernatural should be discarded, while that which proves the natural is retained. But you have given no reason for such a distinction. You have not shown why the testimony is more credible in one case than the other. You will perhaps say the testimony in one case is contrary to experience and reason. But individually we have experienced very little even of the natural, and as far as other people's experience is involved we can only know it by this testimony which you discard. And as for reason, it only applies to facts ascertained.

192. If you intend your remark that "the testimony admits of proof by comparison with the things spoken of" as a reason for receiving testimony of the natural and not of the supernatural, the facts are against you. In the simple case of St. Petersburg and the Pope you can come to a knowledge of the truth of men's testimony by comparison with the thing itself, if you have faith in those who instruct you. Otherwise you cannot.

193. That this fact may be perfectly clear, I shall make rather a particular illustration of its truth. Suppose I were to make an assertion that there was a Pope, an intelligent Bishop of the Roman church and governor of that church, and some person should deny his existence and maintain that denial with the obstinate pertinacity which characterizes yours of a God. I then offer the testimony of the Rt. Rev. Bishop of Milwaukee, who has seen him and touched him. My opponent reminds me that men are great liars, especially in the case of lawyer Bond, and that the Bishop makes money by his pretensions of a great Pope, the vicegerent of God, and if the people should once learn that there was no Pope, but that all the Bishops and priests were merely guming them, they would lose their salaries. All this seems plausible. So, though Bishops, Priests and many of their followers have testified there was a Pope for many ages, we are not to believe their testimony until we prove it true by comparison with the thing.

194. The next step then is to bring my opponent into the presence of the Pope. But though the Pope is doubtless quite anxious that men should believe both his existence and his power, it is hardly probable he will come here to exhibit himself to the unbelieving revilers who deny his existence solely to convict them. But if I should happen to get him along, my infidel opponent would reply, "how do I know but this is some man or automaton you have tricked out for the purpose? Jugglery is a very pretty and very necessary foundation of religious faith."

195. But suppose the Pope chose to attend to the government of the Roman church rather than come to Racine to convince some skeptic of his being. Then I must take the skeptic to the Pope.—But how shall I make him go? Having no faith in my teachings he will not obey me, and I cannot get him in the presence of the Pope. And if I should get him to the city of Rome, very likely he would conduct in such a manner as to be more fit for the asylum for the insane than the presence. If actually brought into the presence he would very likely think the pretended Pope an impostor, fixed up for my particular convenience. Even if he should see the Pope signing concordats, decrees of councils, letters apostolic, patents of religious orders, &c., ordaining bishops, presiding in councils and over the college of cardinals, how am I to show him that all this is

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 49.] [illegible] THURSDAY, FEB. 22, 1849. [WHOLE No. 113.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY [illegible] CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER [illegible] SAINTS

[illegible] TERMS

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYAB[illegible] VARIABLY IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications mu[illegible] JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not b[illegible] the post office.

EXISTENC[illegible] GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR [illegible] RGESS.—No. 7.

[illegible], February 22d, 1849.

MR. BURGESS:—I closed my [illegible] rather abruptly, and without going through the particu[illegible] of the subject I had in hand. I shall, therefore, resume w[illegible] I left off. In paragraph 81, to get over the force of the fac[illegible] the most intelligent animals have a regular government as well as men, and the conclusion that therefore you was wrong in your position that intelligence superceded government, you say, "they do not select their governors from other species, or those endowed with supernatural revelations."

187. If it was so, what of it? What has it to do with the issue? Your position was not that it was unlikely that one species should govern another, but that it was unlikely that government should exist with high intelligence. I answered this point by showing that among both men and animals government was in proportion to intelligence, very nearly.

188. But following you in your new issue, the facts are against you. True, the horse and the elephant is governed by one of his own kind. Not so the bee and the ant. They are governed by one in another state of existence, perhaps as unlike the governed as the angel is unlike the man, though he has not attained to immortality.

189. At par. 89 I find you railing against the character of God's government. I beg to remind you again that this is not in issue.—The question at issue is not whether God is an almighty tyrant, or a just ruler. I am not one of those who think God would have been just in sending the Israelites away empty, after several centuries of unrequited bondage. Nor can I discover by what process of reasoning it is worse to overrun and destroy the Canaanites according to the judgment of God for their abominations, than it is for modern christian and infidel nations to do similar acts as they shall severally see fit, without waiting for God's judgment. I have no objection to debating this question with you. But it would not be convenient to mix up both issues.

190. In par. 93 you make a false issue by misapplying a very awkward and perhaps ambiguous expression of mine. My intention was not that "you cannot introduce one fact to prove" a negative, but that you cannot introduce one fact to prove the existence of St. Petersburg or the Pope by your rule of evidence, which is that all testimony must be discarded unless it is proved true. And as this second testimony introduced to prove the truth of the former would be liable to the same objection and so on ad infinitum, nothing could be proved; no fact could be introduced. I submit that this process of thought reduces your main position to an absurdity.

191. Doubtless you will fall back on your old position, that testimony which tends to prove the supernatural should be discarded, while that which proves the natural is retained. But you have given no reason for such a distinction. You have not shown why the testimony is more credible in one case than the other. You will perhaps say the testimony in one case is contrary to experience and reason. But individually we have experienced very little even of the natural, and as far as other people's experience is involved we can only know it by this testimony which you discard. And as for reason, it only applies to facts ascertained.

192. If you intend your remark that "the testimony admits of proof by comparison with the things spoken of" as a reason for receiving testimony of the natural and not of the supernatural, the facts are against you. In the simple case of St. Petersburg and the Pope you can come to a knowledge of the truth of men's testimony by comparison with the thing itself, if you have faith in those who instruct you. Otherwise you cannot.

193. That this fact may be perfectly clear, I shall make rather a particular illustration of its truth. Suppose I were to make an assertion that there was a Pope, an intelligent Bishop of the Roman church and governor of that church, and some person should deny his existence and maintain that denial with the obstinate pertinacity which characterizes yours of a God. I then offer the testimony of the Rt. Rev. Bishop of Milwaukee, who has seen him and touched him. My opponent reminds me that men are great liars, especially in the case of lawyer Bond, and that the Bishop makes money by his pretensions of a great Pope, the vicegerent of God, and if the people should once learn that there was no Pope, but that all the Bishops and priests were merely guming them, they would lose their salaries. All this seems plausible. So, though Bishops, Priests and many of their followers have testified there was a Pope for many ages, we are not to believe their testimony until we prove it true by comparison with the thing.

194. The next step then is to bring my opponent into the presence of the Pope. But though the Pope is doubtless quite anxious that men should believe both his existence and his power, it is hardly probable he will come here to exhibit himself to the unbelieving revilers who deny his existence solely to convict them. But if I should happen to get him along, my infidel opponent would reply, "how do I know but this is some man or automaton you have tricked out for the purpose? Jugglery is a very pretty and very necessary foundation of religious faith."

195. But suppose the Pope chose to attend to the government of the Roman church rather than come to Racine to convince some skeptic of his being. Then I must take the skeptic to the Pope.—But how shall I make him go? Having no faith in my teachings he will not obey me, and I cannot get him in the presence of the Pope. And if I should get him to the city of Rome, very likely he would conduct in such a manner as to be more fit for the asylum for the insane than the presence. If actually brought into the presence he would very likely think the pretended Pope an impostor, fixed up for my particular convenience. Even if he should see the Pope signing concordats, decrees of councils, letters apostolic, patents of religious orders, &c., ordaining bishops, presiding in councils and over the college of cardinals, how am I to show him that all this is not a raree show, got up for the special purpose of decieving him?

196. The documents will be Latin, and he cannot read them.—And if he could, he would not believe any body's word that they were real. However real things might appear, without his having some faith in men's testimony, he cannot be convinced even that he is in the Vatican or the city of Rome, but suspects that he is in some neighboring theatre with dramatis personæ, scenery and all fixed up for the occasion. Apply the same rules of incredulity therefore to the existence of the Pope that you do to that of God, and you cannot bring one fact to prove it. You cannot compare the testimony with the facts to prove it true, because the FACTS equally rest on testimony.

197. In par. 94 you raise an impertinent issue as to the parallelism of the case of the queen of Great Britain and that of God, and suggest that lords, commons, &c., &c., are part of the governing power. Undoubtedly. But does it take any more or any less evidence to the existence of the queen, or that she is the governor of the empire, because she has assistance and coadjutors in the government? By the way, I did not undertake to show that God had no officers, counsellors, messengers and assistants in his government.

198. I have gone over this enumeration with reluctance. I cannot expect to debate all questions at once. You will perceive that I have not objected to any argument because it is far fetched, but only to such as appear not to have any connection whatever with the matter in issue. If you will supply any intervening link of argument so as to give them even an apparent connection with the point in issue, I shall be happy to review them. I proceed to answer what you really have said on the subject.

199. At par. 53 you say, "if testimony proves facts, how can it leave them in doubt?" It does not when it proves them. It only leaves them in doubt when, from being deficient or contradictory, it fails to prove them. Again you ask, "if authority is contradictory, how can it establish principles?" The higher prevails. Any judge could tell you that.

200. Again you say, "we generally appeal to facts to prove testimony." This is contrary to my experience, and consequently to my reason founded thereon. When a man is tried for murder he is tried on the testimony of witnesses. And we never test the truth of that testimony by having the murder committed over before their eyes. So too if in a marine trial the question is as to the existence of a particular reef in a certain part of the sea, the fact is proved either by witnesses who have seen it, or by charts made by those who have surveyed it. And charts in good repute are received as evidence, without proving the authorship. If we had the facts in hand we should have no occasion to look for testimony at all.

201. In the same paragraph you say, principles should establish authority. Let us try it. It is a principle in law that a vote or bill running to the bearer is negotiable by delivery merely. How will a lawyer prove it before a judge who is ignorant of it? By the decisions of the superior courts, the authority in the premises.

202. I have looked over your remarks at length against the reception of testimony. It seems to sum itself up in this: that men have lied a great many times on various subjects, particularly law, physics and DIVINITY, therefore on divinity they ought never to be credited. On all other subjects I suppose we are to go on as heretofore, weighing men's testimony by old and long established tests of truth.

203. In the same connection it is not amiss to reply to your remarks that I have introduced only historic testimony, which you call weakest of all evidence. This was true when you had but one of my articles. I had had such bad luck in discussion by every man backing out at the first encounter that I thought it best not to put the best foot forward. Your complaint would be better timed when you have made a good answer to that. Possibly when I have got through you may not repeat this complaint. I shall devote another number to the review of your replies, when I hope to strike out again in the affirmative. Truly and sincerly, JAMES J. STRANG.

THE ADVENT HERALD AND MORMONISM.

The Advent Herald is the organ of the original and true order of Millerites, or Adventists. Mr. Himes stands at the head of the paper, as he does at the head of the church. Not that he has any particular priesthood more than any other of their Elders, but by dint of perseverance and enterprise he has pushed himself forward till he is the actual and acknowledged leader. Well, these people claim to be great lovers of plain scriptural truths. Having a better understanding of the prophecies than most other sectaries, with much devotion to their cause, they have become numerous, and have made sad inroads into many Protestant churches. As they have got a little nearer the true interpretation of the scriptures than others, they are very generally hated. The other sects get up all manner of scandal on them. Hardly one of their Elders is detected in any vile crime, but they publish him as an Adventist—a Millerite. The Herald is out on them from time to time for their base slanders on the devoted Adventists. But Mr. Himes has never learned to do as he would be done by. He can afford to treat the other sects courteously, because he can defy them on argument. But when he meets the Mormons, having the same dread of their arguments that other sectarians have of his, he, like the other pious christians, resorts to lies, abuse and every manner of falsehood. We have tried from time to time to call him out in an encounter between Millerism and Mormonism. Finally he has come out with the following "big gun," which, however, we do not give him the credit of writing.—It is probably the work of an apostate we wot of in that vicinity:—

"THE DISGUISED MORMON.—Our friends in Baltimore, whom G. J. ADAMS attempted to palm himself off upon, in connection with T. G. CLAYTON, as an Adventist, were correct in supposing him a Mormon in disguise; for in the Mormon Herald, of Jan. 11th, he is recognized as being in full fellowship. Mr. STRANG, the editor, claims to be a prophet, and the successor of JOSEPH SMITH, Jr., and in that number gives what he claims as a revelation received from heaven on the 7th of Jan. 1849, from which we make the following extract:—

"'And if my servant George J. Adams will be his counsellor, let him come and dwell near unto my servant James, and assist him in presiding, and in the school of the prophets, and in carrying my word to the saints, and to the nations, and to far countries. But let his dwelling be in the inheritance of the saints. If he will do this, I sustain him, and will make him a host, and the head of nations.'

"This is the same Adams who was excommunicated by Joseph Smith, for an unnameable offence, and then baptized for the remission of his sins, and restored to the eldership; who afterwads preached here in Boston to the Mormons, on the Sabbath, and practiced on the stage in the theatre during the week; and who publicly cowhided an editor in the street, for a satirical description of his theatrical performances. After going to Baltimore and claiming to be an Adventist, it seems that the Mormon God still recognizes him as counsellor to the Mormon head prophet."

So far the Advent Herald. As far as it involves the moral character of G. J. Adams, we are content to pass it silently by, knowing that the time is not far distant when the accuser of our brethren will be cast down. Rev. xii. 10. It is not impossible that what Himes says immediately above of one of his accusers is true in this case. "What he says of others is true of himself."

Passing that question by, does Mr. Himes think this unnameable offence worse than that of Judah? Gen. xxxviii. Yet Judah was a patriarch afterwards. The Messiah came in his lineage, and in not a raree show, got up for the special purpose of decieving him?

196. The documents will be Latin, and he cannot read them.—And if he could, he would not believe any body's word that they were real. However real things might appear, without his having some faith in men's testimony, he cannot be convinced even that he is in the Vatican or the city of Rome, but suspects that he is in some neighboring theatre with dramatis personæ, scenery and all fixed up for the occasion. Apply the same rules of incredulity therefore to the existence of the Pope that you do to that of God, and you cannot bring one fact to prove it. You cannot compare the testimony with the facts to prove it true, because the FACTS equally rest on testimony.

197. In par. 94 you raise an impertinent issue as to the parallelism of the case of the queen of Great Britain and that of God, and suggest that lords, commons, &c., &c., are part of the governing power. Undoubtedly. But does it take any more or any less evidence to the existence of the queen, or that she is the governor of the empire, because she has assistance and coadjutors in the government? By the way, I did not undertake to show that God had no officers, counsellors, messengers and assistants in his government.

198. I have gone over this enumeration with reluctance. I cannot expect to debate all questions at once. You will perceive that I have not objected to any argument because it is far fetched, but only to such as appear not to have any connection whatever with the matter in issue. If you will supply any intervening link of argument so as to give them even an apparent connection with the point in issue, I shall be happy to review them. I proceed to answer what you really have said on the subject.

199. At par. 53 you say, "if testimony proves facts, how can it leave them in doubt?" It does not when it proves them. It only leaves them in doubt when, from being deficient or contradictory, it fails to prove them. Again you ask, "if authority is contradictory, how can it establish principles?" The higher prevails. Any judge could tell you that.

200. Again you say, "we generally appeal to facts to prove testimony." This is contrary to my experience, and consequently to my reason founded thereon. When a man is tried for murder he is tried on the testimony of witnesses. And we never test the truth of that testimony by having the murder committed over before their eyes. So too if in a marine trial the question is as to the existence of a particular reef in a certain part of the sea, the fact is proved either by witnesses who have seen it, or by charts made by those who have surveyed it. And charts in good repute are received as evidence, without proving the authorship. If we had the facts in hand we should have no occasion to look for testimony at all.

201. In the same paragraph you say, principles should establish authority. Let us try it. It is a principle in law that a vote or bill running to the bearer is negotiable by delivery merely. How will a lawyer prove it before a judge who is ignorant of it? By the decisions of the superior courts, the authority in the premises.

202. I have looked over your remarks at length against the reception of testimony. It seems to sum itself up in this: that men have lied a great many times on various subjects, particularly law, physics and DIVINITY, therefore on divinity they ought never to be credited. On all other subjects I suppose we are to go on as heretofore, weighing men's testimony by old and long established tests of truth.

203. In this connection it is not amiss to reply to your remarks that I have adduced only historic testimony, which you call weakest of all evidence. This was true when you had but one of my articles. I received such bad luck in discussion by every man backing out at the first encounter that I thought it best not to put the best foot foremost. Your complaint would be better timed when you [illegible] a good answer to that. Possibly when I have got through [illegible] repeat this complaint. I shall devote another number to [illegible] view of your replies, when I hope to strike out again in the affirmative. Truly and sincerly, JAMES J. STRANG.

THE ADVENT HERALD AND MORMONISM.

The Advent Herald is the organ of the original and true order of Millerites, or Adventists. Mr. Himes stands at the head of the paper, as he does at the head of the church. Not that he has any particular priesthood more than any other of their Elders, but by dint of perseverance and enterprise he has pushed himself forward till he is the actual and acknowledged leader. Well, these people claim to be great lovers of plain scriptural truths. Having a better understanding of the prophecies than most other sectaries, with much devotion to their cause, they have become numerous, and have made sad inroads into many Protestant churches. As they have got a little nearer the true interpretation of the scriptures than others, they are very generally hated. The other sects get up all manner of scandal on them. Hardly one of their Elders is detected in any vile crime, but they publish him as an Adventist—a Millerite. The Herald is out on them from time to time for their base slanders on the devoted Adventists. But Mr. Himes has never learned to do as he would be done by. He can afford to treat the other sects courteously, because he can defy them on argument. But when he meets the Mormons, having the same dread of their arguments that other sectarians have of his, he, like the other pious christians, resorts to lies, abuse and every manner of falsehood. We have tried from time to time to call him out in an encounter between Millerism and Mormonism. Finally he has come out with the following "big gun," which, however, we do not give him the credit of writing.—It is probably the work of an apostate we wot of in that vicinity:—

"The Disguised Mormon.—Our friends in Baltimore, whom G. J. Adams attempted to palm himself off upon, in connection with T. G. Clayton as an Adventist, were correct in supposing him a Mormon in disguise; for in the Mormon Herald, of Jan. 11th, he is recognized as being in full fellowship. Mr. Strang, the editor, claims to be a prophet, and the successor of Joseph Smith, Jr., and in that number gives what he claims as a revelation received from heaven on the 7th of Jan. 1849, from which we make the following extract:—

"'And if my servant George J. Adams will be his counsellor, let him come and dwell near unto my servant James, and assist him in presiding, and in the school of the prophets, and in carrying my word to the saints, and to the nations, and to far countries. But let his dwelling be in the inheritance of the saints. If he will do this, I sustain him, and will make him a host, and the head of nations.'

"This is the same Adams who was excommunicated by Joseph Smith, for an unnameable offence, and then baptized for the remission of his sins, and restored to the eldership; who afterwads preached here in Boston to the Mormons, on the Sabbath, and practiced on the stage in the theatre during the week; and who publicly cowhided an editor in the street, for a satirical description of his theatrical performances. After going to Baltimore and claiming to be an Adventist, it seems that the Mormon God still recognizes him as counsellor to the Mormon head prophet."

So far the Advent Herald. As far as it involves the moral character of G. J. Adams, we are content to pass it silently by, knowing that the time is not far distant when the accuser of our brethren will be cast down. Rev. xii. 10. It is not impossible that what Himes says immediately above of one of his accusers is true in this case. "What he says of others is true of himself."

Passing that question by, does Mr. Himes think this unnameable offence worse than that of Judah? Gen. xxxviii. Yet Judah was a patriarch afterwards. The Messiah came in his lineage, and in the lineage produced by this offence too. Matt. i. 3. Was G. J. Adams thereby any less fit to be baptized for the remission of sins and restored to the Eldership than Paul, who persecuted the saints unto death, giving his voice against them, and holding the clothes of those that shed the blood of martyrs? Is this unnameable offence worse than murder?

We are no advocates for theatricals, but we should like to know if he made a more lewd or unchristian appearance on the stage than king David dancing naked before the maids of Israel. Cowhiding a vile hypocritical editor may be very unchristian like now a day, but we recollect of reading in an old book of a certain Mormon of former days, who made a scourge of small cords and whipped a whole lot of hypocrites out of the Temple of God. Possibly Mr. Himes may plead that his provocation was the greatest. It is not clear however in our mind that it is a worse crime to buy and sell fruits, cakes and uncurrent money in the courts of the Temple than to lie against the Lord's anointed. He was hardly used for it however; for, a short time after, the righteous people of that day nailed him to a tree and killed him. If such men as Himes have their way brother Adams may come to the same fate.

It is true that the Mormon God, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob, yet recognizes G. J. Adams as a counsellor unto the prophet. We don't doubt that Mr. Himes' God is more particular about who he employs in his business. But ours was always just so. He has not made us his keeper. A long time past there was a certain king, a Mormon prophet and a poet too, a man of very considerable parts, though truly his conduct was in some respects scandalous. Well, he committed an offence which shall also be nameless, and instead of being cut off by the Mormons of that day, he actually managed to get the man killed whom he had injured. It was a dreadful thing. Mr. Himes will find the full account of it in the eleventh chapter of second Samuel. If we had anything to do with it we might have done different. But the Mormon God was very powerful then. The child died, and David kept his kingdom. God not only recognized him yet as a king, but actually promised him:—

"The enemy shall not exact upon him, nor the son of wickedness afflict him. And I will beat down his foes before his face, and plague them that hate him. But my faithfulness and my mercy shall be with him; and in my name shall his horn be exalted. I will set his hand also in the sea, and his right hand in the rivers.—He shall cry unto me, Thou art my Father, my God, and the rock of my salvation. Also I will make him my first born, higher than the kings of the earth. My mercy will I keep for him for evermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him. His seed also will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven."—Ps. lxxxix. 22 to 30. "My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that has gone out of my lips. Once I have sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me." 34 to 37.

This conduct in David and the other prophets was very erroneous. We disapprove of it greatly. Nevertheless such men have been occasionally in our church in all ages. Our God has recognized them from time to time. We did not do it, and cannot help it. When God speaks men must obey, knowing that rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft. We know that Mr. Himes is not like us in this respect. HE DOES NOT BELIEVE IN ANY PROPHET, PRIEST OR KING WHO EVER COMMITTED ANY SUCH SIN. AND HE DOES NOT BELIEVE IN A GOD WHO EVER SPOKE TO SUCH AN ONE, OR RECOGNIZED HIM IN ANY AUTHORITY.

☞ Minutes of the Westford Conference in our next.

IF WE SHALL SAY IT WAS FROM MEN, ALL THE PEOPLE WILL STONE US.

MR. EDITOR:—It appears to me that something is contained in the above text worthy to be brought before this generation, and especially before the teachers, that they may see the perfect similarity or likeness they bear to their fathers, who questioned Christ's authority, while, at the same time, they professed to be teachers, were forced to acknowledge ignorance to get rid of an investigation which secretly they saw would lead them to a manifest exposure before the public of their former errors and present condemnation. No doubt but John's baptism had been repeatedly set at naught by them when it first made its appearance, and until the popular current was changed by its many adherents, but now for fear of being stoned they could not tell. What courage to propagate the truth!

Should I wonder if such fathers have a posterity still living? Is it not a greater wonder that so many lovers of truth should venture to be led by men who fear the light of investigation? Now as there are many able writers at the present day, I cannot expect to have much room, but offer a hint to more talented men that are able to give this subject its full weight. For I desire that the gospel glass might be held up before the face of this generation, that they may, if they will, be saved. It is not now the baptism of John nor the authority of Christ, for they are now both popular and acknowledged, but a new dispensation, even the fullness of times and its precedents, that men oppose, yet dare not openly investigate.

The Book of Mormon is held to be of men, and not from God, by all the sects, save a dispersed few called of God to be saints in these latter days. And it requires hardly a prophet to understand that at no distant period the same result will appear when the adherents of the Book of Mormon shall ask these, the children of their fathers, whence the record of Ephraim contained in said book, and methinks rather than humble themselves to confess the truth, will acknowledge ignorance. This law of God they never obeyed, nor would not, viz., prove all things. Consequently they must perish for lack of knowledge. And O the amount of guilt for their influence upon others! And how much pity can such men expect from a righteous judge, who professed to teach divinity and could not tell human from divine knowledge? especially that they reject, but dare not investigate, or will not?

For some, who are thus led,
Perhaps many tears may be shed;
But willful blind teachers, alas!
I fear they'll all be damned in mass.

I wish now to change the subject, and say a few words expressly for the benefit of the saints, or in reference to some who are among the saints. And choose as a foundation these words, viz: Let us draw near to God, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water. Dear brethren and sisters, in this age of spiritualizing the scriptures I was led by these of whom I have been speaking until I was at a loss to know what the word water meant, when I found it in that mystified book, the Bible. I did not however lose my desire to know, until I experienced some of its healing influence upon my body. I now am persuaded that water in the text I have chosen means water, pure means pure, bodies mean bodies, washed means washed, &c. And the duty enjoined is plain and easy to be understood and practiced, and experiment will prove its healthful and happy results. And if the inquiry arises, how often shall this washing be necessary? the answer is plain—as often as is necessary to preserve the body clean—as often as we draw near to God. God always required cleanliness in his people. When the people drew near to God in Moses' day, God commanded them to wash their clothes. And even now God requires not only cleanliness in our persons or bodies, but that our

the lineage produced by this offence too. Matt. i. 3. Was G. J. Adams thereby any less fit to be baptized for the remission of sins and restored to the Eldership than Paul, who persecuted the saints unto death, giving his voice against them, and holding the clothes of those that shed the blood of martyrs? Is this unnameable offence worse than murder?

We are no advocates for theatricals, but we should like to know if he made a more lewd or unchristian appearance on the stage than king David dancing naked before the maids of Israel. Cowhiding a vile hypocritical editor may be very unchristian like now a day, but we recollect of reading in an old book of a certain Mormon of former days, who made a scourge of small cords and whipped a whole lot of hypocrites out of the Temple of God. Possibly Mr. Himes may plead that his provocation was the greatest. It is not clear however in our mind that it is a worse crime to buy and sell fruits, cakes and uncurrent money in the courts of the Temple than to lie against the Lord's anointed. He was hardly used for it however; for, a short time after, the righteous people of that day nailed him to a tree and killed him. If such men as Himes have their way brother Adams may come to the same fate.

It is true that the Mormon God, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob, yet recognizes G. J. Adams as a counsellor unto the prophet. We don't doubt that Mr. Himes' God is more particular about who he employs in his business. But ours was always just so. He has not made us his keeper. A long time past there was a certain king, a Mormon prophet and a poet too, a man of very considerable parts, though truly his conduct was in some respects scandalous. Well, he committed an offence which shall also be nameless, and instead of being cut off by the Mormons of that day, he actually managed to get the man killed whom he had injured. It was a dreadful thing. Mr. Himes will find the full account of it in the eleventh chapter of second Samuel. If we had anything to do with it we might have done different. But the Mormon God was very powerful then. The child died, and David kept his kingdom. God not only recognized him yet as a king, but actually promised him:—

"The enemy shall not exact upon him, nor the son of wickedness afflict him. And I will beat down his foes before his face, and plague them that hate him. But my faithfulness and my mercy shall be with him; and in my name shall his horn be exalted. I will set his hand also in the sea, and his right hand in the rivers.—He shall cry unto me, Thou art my Father, my God, and the rock of my salvation. Also I will make him my first born, higher than the kings of the earth. My mercy will I keep for him for evermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him. His seed also will I make to endure forever, and his throne as the days of heaven."—Ps. lxxxix. 22 to 30. "My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that has gone out of my lips. Once I have sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me." 34 to 37.

This conduct in David and the other prophets was very erroneous. We disapprove of it greatly. Nevertheless such men have been occasionally in our church in all ages. Our God has recognized them from time to time. We did not do it, and cannot help it. When God speaks men must obey, knowing that rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft. We know that Mr. Himes is not like us in this respect. HE DOES NOT BELIEVE IN ANY PROPHET, PRIEST OR KING WHO EVER COMMITTED ANY SUCH SIN. AND HE DOES NOT BELIEVE IN A GOD WHO EVER SPOKE TO SUCH AN ONE, OR RECOGNIZED HIM IN ANY AUTHORITY.

☛ Minutes of the Westford Conference in our next.

IF WE SHALL SAY IT WAS FROM MEN, ALL THE PEOPLE WILL STONE US

Mr. Editor:—It appears to me that something is contained in the above text worthy to be brought before this generation, and especially before the teachers, that they may see the perfect similarity or likeness they bear to their fathers, who questioned Christ's authority, while, at the same time, they professed to be teachers, were forced to acknowledge ignorance to get rid of an investigation which secretly they saw would lead them to a manifest exposure before the public of their former errors and present condemnation. No doubt but John's baptism had been repeatedly set at naught by them when it first made its appearance, and until the popular current was changed by its many adherents, but now for fear of being stoned they could not tell. What courage to propagate the truth!

Should I wonder if such fathers have a posterity still living? Is it not a greater wonder that so many lovers of truth should venture to be led by men who fear the light of investigation? Now as there are many able writers at the present day, I cannot expect to have much room, but offer a hint to more talented men that are able to give this subject its full weight. For I desire that the gospel glass might be held up before the face of this generation, that they may, if they will, be saved. It is not now the baptism of John nor the authority of Christ, for they are now both popular and acknowledged, but a new dispensation, even the fullness of times and its precedents, that men oppose, yet dare not openly investigate.

The Book of Mormon is held to be of men, and not from God, by all the sects, save a dispersed few called of God to be saints in these latter days. And it requires hardly a prophet to understand that at no distant period the same result will appear when the adherents of the Book of Mormon shall ask these, the children of their fathers, whence the record of Ephraim contained in said book, and methinks rather than humble themselves to confess the truth, will acknowledge ignorance. This law of God they never obeyed, nor would not, viz., prove all things. Consequently they must perish for lack of knowledge. And O the amount of guilt for their influence upon others! And how much pity can such men expect from a righteous judge, who professed to teach divinity and could not tell human from divine knowledge? especially that they reject, but dare not investigate, or will not?

For some, who are thus led,
Perhaps in my tears may be shed;
But willful blind teachers, alas!
I fear they'll all be damned in mass.

I wish now to change the subject, and say a few words expressly for the benefit of the saints, or in reference to some who are among the saints. And choose as a foundation these words, viz: Let us draw near to God, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water. Dear brethren and sisters, in this age of spiritualizing the scriptures I was led by these of whom I have been speaking until I was at a loss to know what the word water meant, when I found it in that mystified book, the Bible. I did not however lose my desire to know, until I experienced some of its healing influence upon my body. I now am persuaded that water in the text I have chosen means water, pure means pure, bodies mean bodies, washed means washed, &c. And the duty enjoined is plain and easy to be understood and practiced, and experiment will prove its healthful and happy results. And if the inquiry arises, how often shall this washing be necessary? the answer is plain—as often as is necessary to preserve the body clean—as often as we draw near to God. God always required cleanliness in his people. When the people drew near to God in Moses' day, God commanded them to wash their clothes. And even now God requires not only cleanliness in our persons or bodies, but that our hearts be sprinkled from an evil conscience, which command I deem cannot be obeyed by those who so grossly neglect the word of wisdom as to fill the place appointed for divine worship with the smoke of the poison weed tobacco, or any other custom that would render the social circle unpleasant. I forbear to name cases wherein I have known not only violations of God's law by professed saints, but also violations of common rules of politeness in good moral society, in consequence of which, if there is not a reform, I am sure there will be death.

JOHN S. COMSTOCK.

FANCY Vs. FAITH.

Much of the theology of the present day is based on mere fancy; this is the only foundation of much of the miscalled faith of self-styled "liberal Christianity." Its votaries go not to the word of God for the ground of their teachings; but giving a loose rein to their imaginations, they reason respecting the past, present, and future, not from the clearly enunciated declarations of God's holy word, but as their own unguided fancies may lead them into truth or error.

Such teachers are exceedingly popular with the crowd, who seek mere mental pleasure. That which falls sweetly on the ear, and presents scenes of beauty and joyousness to the imagination, is easily mistaken for truth. Men receive it as such because it is palatable to the unrenewed mind; forgetting that the carnal heart is enmity against God. They say to the prophets, "speak unto us smooth things; prophecy deceits;" (Isa. xxx. 10;) and when gratified in this respect, the "people love to have it so." Knowing the fondness of multitudes for this kind of stimulant, there will not be wanting teachers to administer to their gratification; and "like priest like people" is as true now as in the days of the prophet.—The speaker who can paint the imagery of his ideality in the most pleasing colors, who can deck his thoughts with the most brilliant gems, and array them in the most attractive dress, is sure to draw the largest auditory. A contemporary, eulogizing a speaker of this class—one who has gone back to the old heathen notion that "all we are God,"—speaks of him as "dropping nectar, chipping out sparks, exhaling odors, letting off mental sky rockets and fire works, spouting fire," &c. He calls him "a spirit of whom one just hears the rustle of his wings, a vitalized speculation, a talking essence, a sort of celestial emanation, a bit of transparency broken from the spheres, a spiritual prism, through which we see all beautiful rays of immaterial existences." He says, "his leaping fancy mounts upward like an India rubber ball, and drifts and falls like a snow flake or a feather. He moves in the regions of similitudes. He comes through the air like a cherubim with a golden trumpet in his mouth, out of which he blows tropes, and figures, and gossamer transparencies of suggestive fancies. He takes high flights, and sustains himself without ruffling a feather. He inverts the rainbow, and uses it for a swing—now sweeping the earth, and now clapping his hands among the stars."

We do not dissent from the above, as a very good description of the speaker's style; but we fearlessly affirm, that whoever seeks only to delight and enrapture his audience by honied words and golden sentences, will fearfully fail of effecting any spiritual good. Indeed, to such speakers that object is not one of the motives that actuate his hearers; they are attracted by the beautiful pictures he is enabled to delineate—the coruscations of sparkling diamond gems, glittering like dew drops in the sun light, with which the speaker dazzles their mental vision. But the utterance of Scriptural truth requires something more than a tinkling sound of words.—It may be beautifully expressed; but unless it causes the sinner to feel the turpitude of his guilt, and enables him to repent in dust and ashes, trusting in Jesus as his only and all sufficient Savior, he will have lived in vain, and the preacher will have spent his strength for nought. All beautiful thoughts are not necessarily truth: all is not gold that glitters. And the creation of the fancy should never be substituted for Scriptural faith.—Adv. Herald.

DISCUSSION.

The present is an age of inquiry, and no less of discussion. And among the subjects on which the spirit of inquiry is employed, none is more prominent or important than that of theology. Unfortunately, however, this subject has not always been discussed in that fair and honest manner which its serious character demands, nor in a manner best calculated to yield profitable results to community. This fact has led many candid and honest people to discard discussions, as unprofitable and injurious. We should, however, in this, as in all other matters, carefully distinguish between the use and the abuse. Discussion not unfrequently leads to important truths, that nothing but the conflict of mind with mind would have disclosed. And even with all the bitterness and uncharitable feeling that have sometimes, perhaps generally, been associated with theological discussions, there can be no reasonable doubt that much good has resulted from them.

The New Covenant has sometimes been spoken of with approbation, on the ground that we avoided religious controversy. We would not, however, have our friends feel too much favor for us on this account. We are not opposed to controversy. Our columns are open for discussion. We would be glad, if some of our Orthodox brethren, who feel competent to sustain their favorite doctrine of endless punishment, would give us a chance to show their arguments to our readers, alongside of some that we have on hand on the other side of the question. We should endeavor to express our views, and urge our arguments, in the right kind of spirit, and we think we could succeed in this; nor do we believe we could be provoked to use an unkind or an uncharitable word; but in this we may be mistaken. At all events, we would like to try it; and we believe that good would grow out of it, in the further advancement of the cause of truth.

☛ We find the foregoing in the New Covenant, (a paper however with which we are unable to get an exchange,) and respond that we are ready to take up the gauntlet, if we are considered sufficiently orthodox. We do not claim a vast amount of that charity which has no indignation for vanity and folly, and will not promise to always use soft words. If Elder Manley does not deem us sufficiently orthodox to be opposed by him, we can only leave him to contend with those he is able to meet.

☛ Letters from our correspondents and reports of visitors and traveling Elders show a very general revival of faith, and a far better spirit among the saints than at any time within two years and a half.

☛ We are indebted to some one of the Wisconsin delegation in Congress for the patent office report and other Congressional documents. The name was gone from the envelopes before we saw them, and we cannot give our thanks individually.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a regular Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Voree, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of April next; and also on Beaver Island on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of July next. It is expected that every member of the First Presidency and of the Twelve will attend one or both of these Conferences. By the President.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

hearts be sprinkled from an evil conscience, which command I deem cannot be obeyed by those who so grossly neglect the word of wisdom as to fill the place appointed for divine worship with the smoke of the poison weed tobacco, or any other custom that would render the social circle unpleasant. I forbear to name cases wherein I have known not only violations of God's law by professed saints, but also violations of common rules of politeness in good moral society, in consequence of which, if there is not a reform, I am sure there will be death. JOHN S. COMSTOCK.

FANCY Vs. FAITH.

Much of the theology of the present day is based on mere fancy; this is the only foundation of much of the miscalled faith of self-styled "liberal Christianity." Its votaries go not to the word of God for the ground of their teachings; but giving a loose rein to their imaginations, they reason respecting the past, present, and future, not from the clearly enunciated declarations of God's holy word, but as their own unguided fancies may lead them into truth or error.

Such teachers are exceedingly popular with the crowd, who seek mere mental pleasure. That which falls sweetly on the ear, and presents scenes of beauty and joyousness to the imagination, is easily mistaken for truth. Men receive it as such because it is palatable to the unrenewed mind; forgetting that the carnal heart is enmity against God. They say to the prophets, "speak unto us smooth things; prophecy deceits;" (Isa. xxx. 10;) and when gratified in this respect, the "people love to have it so." Knowing the fondness of multitudes for this kind of stimulant, there will not be wanting teachers to administer to their gratification; and "like priest like people" is as true now as in the days of the prophet.—The speaker who can paint the imagery of his ideality in the most pleasing colors, who can deck his thoughts with the most brilliant gems, and array them in the most attractive dress, is sure to draw the largest auditory. A contemporary, eulogizing a speaker of this class—one who has gone back to the old heathen notion that "all we are God,"—speaks of him as "dropping nectar, chipping out sparks, exhaling odors, letting off mental sky rockets and fire works, spouting fire," &c. He calls him "a spirit of whom one just hears the rustle of his wings, a vitalized speculation, a talking essence, a sort of celestial emanation, a bit of transparency broken from the spheres, a spiritual prism, through which we see all beautiful rays of immaterial existences." He says, "his leaping fancy mounts upward like an India rubber ball, and drifts and falls like a snow flake or a feather. He moves in the regions of similitudes. He comes through the air like a cherubim with a golden trumpet in his mouth, out of which he blows tropes, and figures, and gossamer transparencies of suggestive fancies. He takes high flights, and sustains himself without ruffling a feather. He inverts the rainbow, and uses it for a swing—now sweeping the earth, and now clapping his hands among the stars."

We do not dissent from the above, as a very good description of the speaker's style; but we fearlessly affirm, that whoever seeks only to delight and enrapture his audience by honied words and golden sentences, will fearfully fail of effecting any spiritual good. Indeed, to such speakers that object is not one of the motives that actuate his hearers; they are attracted by the beautiful pictures he is enabled to delineate—the coruscations of sparkling diamond gems, glittering like dew drops in the sun light, with which the speaker dazzles their mental vision. But the utterance of Scriptural truth requires something more than a tinkling sound of words.—It may be beautifully expressed; but unless it causes the sinner to feel the turpitude of his guilt, and enables him to repent in dust and ashes, trusting in Jesus as his only and all sufficient Savior, he will have lived in vain, and the preacher will have spent his strength for nought. All beautiful thoughts are not necessarily truth: all is not gold that glitters. And the creation of the fancy should never be substituted for Scriptural faith.—Adv. Herald.

DISCUSSION.

The present is an age of inquiry, and no less of discussion. And among the subjects on which the spirit of inquiry is employed, none is more prominent or important than that of theology. Unfortunately, however, this subject has not always been discussed in that fair and honest manner which its serious character demands, nor in a manner best calculated to yield profitable results to community. This fact has led many candid and honest people to discard discussions, as unprofitable and injurious. We should, however, in this, as in all other matters, carefully distinguish between the use and the abuse. Discussion not unfrequently leads to important truths, that nothing but the conflict of mind with mind would have disclosed. And even with all the bitterness and uncharitable feeling that have sometimes, perhaps generally, been associated with theological discussions, there can be no reasonable doubt that much good has resulted from them.

The New Covenant has sometimes been spoken of with approbation, on the ground that we avoided religious controversy. We would not, however, have our friends feel too much favor for us on this account. We are not opposed to controversy. Our columns are open for discussion. We would be glad, if some of our Orthodox brethren, who feel competent to sustain their favorite doctrine of endless punishment, would give us a chance to show their arguments to our readers, alongside of some that we have on hand on the other side of the question. We should endeavor to express our views, and urge our arguments, in the right kind of spirit, and we think we could succeed in this; nor do we believe we could be provoked to use an unkind or an uncharitable word; but in this we may be mistaken. At all events, we would like to try it; and we believe that good would grow out of it, in the further advancement of the cause of truth.

☞ We find the foregoing in the New Covenant, (a paper however with which we are unable to get an exchange,) and respond that we are ready to take up the gauntlet, if we are considered sufficiently orthodox. We do not claim a vast amount of that charity which has no indignatiou for vanity and folly, and will not promise to always use soft words. If Elder Manley does not deem us sufficiently orthodox to be opposed by him, we can only leave him to contend with those he is able to meet.

☞ Letters from our correspondents and reports of visitors and traveling Elders show a very general revival of faith, and a far better spirit among the saints than at any time within two years and a half.

☞ We are indebted to some one of the Wisconsin delegation in Congress for the patent office report and other Congressional documents. The name was gone from the envelopes before we saw them, and we cannot give our thanks individually.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a regular Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Voree, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of April next; and also on Beaver Island on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of July next. It is expected that every member of the First Presidency and of the Twelve will attend one or both of these Conferences. By the President.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 50.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. MARCH 1, 1849. [WHOLE No. 114.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 8.

Voree, March 1st, 1849.

MR. BURGESS :—Since my last, in glancing over your third letter, par. 52, I observed the following rather singular remark: "We generally appeal to facts to prove testimony, and testimony to prove opinions, in the order in which they are formed. So I think principles should establish "authority," not authority principles. The invariable be the test of the variable, not the reverse. If you said a hog weighed 100 lbs. and I denied it, I presume we should weigh it, referring to the fact to prove the testimony, rather than the testimony, which could not possibly prove the fact. If testimony and authority are contradictory, the effect is to leave both in doubt, as well as the fact in question."

205. Let us analyze your instance. The disagreement between us is not in testimony, but opinion. When we have weighed the hog so as to give testimony, we testify to the same thing, or if one testifies falsely others weigh it, and they testify, and by that means TESTIMONY PROVES the FACT. In this experiment we trust also the mere implied testimony of another set of witnesses, to wit, the steelyard and balance makers. When they make and sell these instruments they give their testimony (by implication, if not by express word) that the instruments conform to the standard or principle of weights, which is that 1,000 ounces are equal to the weight of one cubic foot of pure water, weighed in atmospheric air, at the level of the sea.

206. Whence originated this principle in weights? this standard to which all weights must conform? The AUTHORITY ESTABLISHED IT. But for the authority no principle would have existed in the premises. And the authority might have established any other principle as well as this, if they had seen fit. And no matter what amount of testimony may be against the authority, it does not leave the authority in doubt. For if ten thousand witnesses were to testify that the cubic foot of water weighed but five hundred ounces, it would neither make it so or raise a doubt in the premises. There is a natural impossibility in making an issue between authority and testimony. The elements of antagonism are not in them.

207. All I have to say in answer to what you say of knaves, dupes, &c., (par. 53,) is that I know of no greater dupe than he who thinks no body honest, wise or true but himself, and gives precedence to the common thief over the learned professions and the science and talent of the age and race. If Mr. Burgess thinks thieves the best men, he may keep them company, I will not.

208. I have two or three times alluded to your case of lawyer Bond, which you bring forward with so much consequence to show that testimony is never to be relied on. But on looking into it, like every thing else, it is against you. It proves simply that a very shrewd dishonest man could lie, but that very simple men overhauled him in it, and got him degraded and punished.

209. In par. 56 I find your definition of "SELF-EVIDENT," which I have treasured up as a scientific curiosity. Until reading that I had always supposed that that truth was self-evident which contained in itself the evidence of its truth. It is perfectly apparent to all men that two and two are equal to four, and that part of a thing is less than the whole. These truths are as apparent as any truth can by possibility be. No evidence can be presented to the mind which will make their truth more apparent than the very propositions themselves. So men of science formerly considered them self-evident, that is, evidently true in and of themselves. We must now change that definition and say that is self-evident which is evident to yourself, or myself, or some other self.

210. At par. 59 you inquire "what would be good evidence to prove the existence of limestone, but a lump of it made perceptible to the mind." If you mean literally made PERCEPTIBLE to the MIND, nothing short would be satisfactory. But if you mean made perceptible to the eye, then I say the knowledge of the existence of limestone is as certain which is attained by hearing and reading.—Consequently we have no more doubt of the existence of the rock of Gibralter, the plaster quarries of Paris, and the chalk cliffs of England, of which we have heard much and seen nothing, than of the lumps of limestone which we daily see scattered about Wisconsin. If your idea of a truth made perceptible to the mind conforms to this, you will see it yields the point; if not, it is contrary to all experience.

211. In the same paragraph you make a distinction between science and law. I always supposed law was a science, very imperfectly understood to be sure, but no less a science than chemistry and geology. In carrying out this supposed distinction, you say the rotundity of the earth can only be proved by demonstration, not by testimony. What is it to prove by demonstration, but to demonstrate by proof? That is, simply to prove. I confess myself annoyed by such nonsense, and would not debate with one who indulged in it, but that the atheists who know enough to avoid it, know too much to debate at all.

212. Again you say, "the rotundity of the earth can only be proved by demonstration, not by testimony." I confess I cannot understand this language at all. I cannot make English of it, except by reading it the rotundity of the earth can only be proved by proof, or can only be demonstrated by demonstration. Passing that member of the sentence as part of the unknown tongue, and of which I have not the interpretation, if it is not proved by testimony it cannot be at all. Your demonstration is no more than a scientific conclusion on facts, which rest in testimony.

213. The rotundity of the earth is demonstrated by the testimony of great numbers of witnesses, who have sailed round it in different directions and observed a variety of facts, both terrestrial and astronomic, and by arraying these facts together in proper order and making proper scientific deductions from them. If the testimony is false, the conclusions fall to the ground. Nearly the entire circle of scientific truth rests on a similar foundation. Yet experience has

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 50.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. MARCH 1, 1849. [WHOLE No. 114.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 8.

Voree, March 1st, 1849.

MR. BURGESS:—Since my last, in glancing over your third letter, par. 52, I observed the following rather singular remark: "We generally appeal to facts to prove testimony, and testimony to prove opinions, in the order in which they are formed. So I think principles should establish "authority," not authority principles. The invariable be the test of the variable, not the reverse. If you said a hog weighed 100 lbs. and I denied it, I presume we should weigh it, referring to the fact to prove the testimony, rather than the testimony, which could not possibly prove the fact. If testimony and authority are contradictory, the effect is to leave both in doubt, as well as the fact in question."

205. Let us analyze your instance. The disagreement between us is not in testimony, but opinion. When we have weighed the hog so as to give testimony, we testify to the same thing, or if one falsifies falsely others weigh it, and they testify, and by that means TESTIMONY PROVES the FACT. In this experiment we trust also the mere implied testimony of another set of witnesses, to wit, the steelyard and balance makers. When they make and sell these instruments they give their testimony (by implication, if not by express word) that the instruments conform to the standard or principle of weights, which is that 1,000 ounces are equal to the weight of one cubic foot of pure water, weighed in atmospheric air, at the level of the sea.

206. Whence originated this principle in weights? this standard to which all weights must conform? The AUTHORITY ESTABLISHED for. But for the authority no principle would have existed in the premises. And the authority might have established any other principle as well as this, if they had seen fit. And no matter what amount of testimony may be against the authority, it does not leave the authority in doubt. For if ten thousand witnesses were to testify that the cubic foot of water weighed but five hundred ounces, it would neither make it so or raise a doubt in the premises. There is a natural impossibility in making an issue between authority and testimony. The elements of antagonism are not in them.

207. All I have to say in answer to what you say of knaves, dupes, &c., (par. 53,) is that I know of no greater dupe than he who thinks no body honest, wise or true but himself, and gives precedence to the common thief over the learned professions and the science and talent of the age and race. If Mr. Burgess thinks believes the best men, he may keep them company, I will not.

208. I have two or three times alluded to your case of lawyer and, which you bring forward with so much consequence to show that testimony is never to be relied on. But on looking into it, like every thing else, it is against you. It proves simply that a very shrewd dishonest man could lie, but that very simple men overhauled him in it, and got him degraded and punished.

209. In par. 56 I find your definition of "SELF-EVIDENT," which I have treasured up as a scientific curiosity. Until reading that I had always supposed that that truth was self-evident which contained in itself the evidence of its truth. It is perfectly apparent to all men that two and two are equal to four, and that part of a thing is less than the whole. These truths are as apparent as any truth can by possibility be. No evidence can be presented to the mind which will make their truth more apparent than the very propositions themselves. So men of science formerly considered them self-evident, that is, evidently true in and of themselves. We must now change that definition and say that is self-evident which is evident to yourself, or myself, or some other self.

210. At par. 59 you inquire "what would be good evidence to prove the existence of limestone, but a lump of it made perceptible to the mind." If you mean literally made PERCEPTIBLE to the MIND, nothing short would be satisfactory. But if you mean made perceptible to the eye, then I say the knowledge of the existence of limestone is as certain which is attained by hearing and reading.—Consequently we have no more doubt of the existence of the rock of Gibralter, the plaster quarries of Paris, and the chalk cliffs of England, of which we have heard much and seen nothing, than of the lumps of limestone which we daily see scattered about Wisconsin. If your idea of a truth made perceptible to the mind conforms to this, you will see it yields the point; if not, it is contrary to all experience.

211. In the same paragraph you make a distinction between science and law. I always supposed law was a science, very imperfectly understood to be sure, but no less a science than chemistry and geology. In carrying out this supposed distinction, you say the rotundity of the earth can only be proved by demonstration, not by testimony. What is it to prove by demonstration, but to demonstrate by proof? That is, simply to prove. I confess myself annoyed by such nonsense, and would not debate with one who indulged in it, but that the atheists who know enough to avoid it, know too much to debate at all.

212. Again you say, "the rotundity of the earth can only be proved by demonstration, not by testimony." I confess I cannot understand this language at all. I cannot make English of it, except by reading it the rotundity of the earth can only be proved by proof, or can only be demonstrated by demonstration. Passing that member of the sentence as part of the unknown tongue, and of which I have not the interpretation, if it is not proved by testimony it cannot be at all. Your demonstration is no more than a scientific conclusion on facts, which rest in testimony.

213. The rotundity of the earth is demonstrated by the testimony of great numbers of witnesses, who have sailed round it in different directions and observed a variety of facts, both terrestrial and astronomic, and by arraying these facts together in proper order and making proper scientific deductions from them. If the testimony is false, the conclusions fall to the ground. Nearly the entire circle of scientific truth rests on a similar foundation. Yet experience has proved that a vast proportion of it rests on a solid basis.

214. However limited your discoveries in the field of truth may be, the great body of men who love and seek after truth have learned that it contains the elements of self-vindication; that it is a healthy child, perfectly safe out of doors; abundantly able to take care of itself; that it carries in itself the elements of indestructibility and eternity; and there is in it such a self-consistent propriety that the man who seeks for it will recognize it when found.

215. In par. 60 you have got up a distinction which I did not look for. You denied largely human testimony, but particularly applied your remarks to travelers. I presumed however that this was only because the testimony of travelers was then the subject in hand, and that you really intend to discard human testimony generally. I am happy to be corrected, however, and to learn that once in your life you did not discard all human testimony, but only set down travelers as liars, leaving preachers, doctors and lawyers to tell the truth.

216. In par. 62 you ask, "are there twenty persons in this country in the present age who have seen a supernatural being?" Yes. So far as my acquaintance goes a majority profess to have seen and received communications from such. I have considerable acquaintance with men of all ranks in a majority of the States of the Union from a President of the United States to the most oppressed of the slaves, and I have never yet known a community in which a majority from the age of sixteen years upwards professed no personal knowledge of the supernatural.

217. Such I also find to be the experience of other men, taking their words for it. And such the experience of other ages and countries, taking their histories for it. And the testimony thus given by spoken word and by history I judge by the ordinary rules of evidence applicable.

218. It is not logical, as you alledge, (par. 63,) that if the absence of all doubt proves truth, therefore doubting proves falsehood. Doubt exists till evidence is both given and appreciated. While the evidence of truth remains latent the truth itself is in doubt. But it is not the less true. Men were willing to investigate the truth of an Antartic Continent. They had no vested interests or deep rooted prejudices in opposition to that truth. Consequently when given they examined and appreciated the evidence. So to your question, "what comes of the Mormon doctrine?" I reply, it is believed by those who examine its evidence, because they cannot fail to appreciate its evidences, unless they are deeply interested in opposition.

219. I know nothing of the premium on seeing you speak of.—So far as history goes the seers have not had the premium. That class of teachers who have no seeing, and deny it, at least in their own age, have the premium. I have had a fair share of the seeing, but none of the premium you speak of, but scoffing, buffetings, persecutions, perils by sea and land, and toils and sufferings such as few but seers ever knew.

220. I have not proved "the concurring testimony of mankind by additional examples of difference." I have exposed the absurdity of your grounds of doubt, by showing that the most certain facts in history and science are no better proved, and as much doubted. (See par. 78) What you say in par. 68 would be well if there was but one doubtful witness of God. As it is, it is trfling with evidence and logic. Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

MINUTES OF A CONFERENCE AT WESTFORD, OTSEGO CO., N. Y., FEB. 3D AND 4TH, 1849.

Met at the house of brother Lyman Hewitt at two o'clock, Saturday. After prayer, organized by voting Elder Ebenezer Page, one of the Twelve, President, Elder Dennis Chidester Clerk. Elder Page made some remarks, and read a letter from brother Strang upon the subject of translating the remaining plates, and laid the subject before the brethren, and requested them to hold a council and see what they would be able to do to forward the publication of the same. Report of branches and official members present. One of the quorum of the Twelve, one High Priest, four Elders, one Priest, one Teacher. Branches. The Ilion branch, by Elder England, contains five members, two Elders. Nicholas P. Steele President. Milford Centre branch, by Elder Chidester, contains six members, including one Elder, one Teacher. D. Chidester Pres. Westford branch, by Elder A. Hewitt, contains fifteen members, one Elder, one Priest. A. Hewitt Pres. Scattering, five members near Cooperstown, including one High Priest, one Elder. The saints are all very much engaged upon the subject of the gathering, and will emigrate in the spring, extaordinaries excepted. Elder Page made some remarks upon the advantages of chartering a boat to carry a company of saints to Buffalo, and being united in all our efforts, and look to the Lord to guide us right. Appointed Bros. England, Lyman Hewitt and E. Page a committee to secure a boat for the company. Adjourned to early candlelight. Benediction by Elder Bacon.

Evening session. Singing. Prayer by Elder England, and a short discourse on the faith of the primitive saints and gifts of the spirit by Elder England, followed by Elder Page, showing the contrast between the believer and unbeliever; also by Elder Bacon on the subject of the Book of Mormon. Sung a hymn. Prayer by Elder Stevens. Adjourned to ten o'clock, A. M., Sunday.

Met pursuant to adjournment. Singing. Prayer by Elder Bacon. Singing. Sermon by Elder Page upon the fulfillment of prophecy and the necessity of firm and decided obedience to the law of God. Singing. Proceeded to business. After some remarks by Elder Page it was resolved that brother Edward Chidester be ordained an Elder; that brother Lyman Hewitt (a Priest) have the ordination of an Elder; that Elder Alanson Hewitt be ordained an High Priest. After some remarks by the candidates the ordinations were postponed till after an intermission. Adjourned for half an hour. Benediction by Elder Page.

Met pursuant to adjournment. Singing. Prayer by Elder Hewitt. Attended to ordinations, Elders Page and Bacon administering. Administered to the sick. Partook of the sacrament. Blessed little children. The brethren and sisters spent a short season in speaking and exhorting to faithfulness. The gifts of tongues and interpretations filling the hearts of the saints with joy. Resolved, that we express our sincere thanks to brother Strang for the advice and caution in the Herald concerning Theopholis W. Nixon, he having proved himself a worthless scamp and a gross impostor by visiting brother England at Ilion and calling his name HENSHAW, and brother Page at Milford Centre, and there giving his name as Nixon, and other things, among which is improper advances to females. Adjourned till candlelight. Prayer by Elder England. Benediction by Elder Page.

Met in the evening. Singing. Prayer by Elder Page. Singing. Discourse by Elder Bacon. Subject, the gifts of the spirit, followed by a season of social prayer and speaking; the spirit of God being manifest to the congregation in the gift of tongues and interpretations. Minutes of Conference read, approved and ordered that they be transcribed and forwarded for publication in the Herald.

The brethren return their hearty thanks to Bros. and sisters L. Hewitt and S. Babcock for their generous entertainment, and to brother L. Hewitt for opening his rooms for the meeting, the Gentiles having locked the school house against us. Adjourned sine die. Benediction by Elder Page. Adjourned.

P. S. After adjournment Elder Bacon says to the congregation that should there be any that wished to go forward in baptism there was an opportunity. Whereupon a young gentleman living some proved that a vast proportion of it rests on a solid basis.

214. However limited your discoveries in the field of truth may be, the great body of men who love and seek after truth have learned that it contains the elements of self-vindication; that it is a healthy child, perfectly safe out of doors; abundantly able to take care of itself; that it carries in itself the elements of indestructibility and eternity; and there is in it such a self consistent propriety that the man who seeks for it will recognize it when found.

215. In par. 60 you have got up a distinction which I did not look for. You denied largely human testimony, but particularly applied your remarks to travelers. I presumed however that this was only because the testimony of travelers was then the subject in hand, and that you really intend to discard human testimony generally. I am happy to be corrected, however, and to learn that once in your life you did not discard all human testimony, but only set down travelers as liars, leaving preachers, doctors and lawyers to tell the truth.

216. In par. 62 you ask, "are there twenty persons in this country in the present age who have seen a supernatural being?" Yes. So far as my acquaintance goes a majority profess to have seen and received communications from such. I have considerable acquaintance with men of all ranks in a majority of the States of the Union from a President of the United States to the most oppressed of the slaves, and I have never yet known a community in which a majority from the age of sixteen years upwards professed no personal knowledge of the supernatural.

217. Such I also find to be the experience of other men, taking their words for it. And such the experience of other ages and countries, taking their histories for it. And the testimony thus given by spoken word and by history I judge by the ordinary rules of evidence applicable.

218. It is not logical, as you alledge, (par. 63.) that if the absence of all doubt proves truth, therefore doubting proves falsehood. Doubt exists till evidence is both given and appreciated. While the evidence of truth remains latent the truth itself is in doubt. But it is not the less true. Men were willing to investigate the truth of an Antartic Continent. They had no vested interests or deep rooted prejudices in opposition to that truth. Consequently when given they examined and appreciated the evidence. So to your question, "what comes of the Mormon doctrine?" I reply, it is believed by those who examine its evidence, because they cannot fail to appreciate its evidences, unless they are deeply interested in opposition.

219. I know nothing of the premium on seeing you speak of.—So far as history goes the seers have not had the premium That class of teachers who have no seeing, and deny it, at least in their own age, have the premium. I have had a fair share of the seeing, but none of the premium you speak of, but scoffing, buffetings, persecutions, perils by sea and land, and toils and sufferings such as few but seers ever knew.

220 I have not proved "the concurring testimony of mankind by additional examples of difference." I have exposed the absurdity of your grounds of doubt, by showing that the most certain facts in history and science are no better proved and as much doubted. (See par. 78) What you say in par. 68 would be well if there was but one doubtful witness of God. As it is, it is trfling with evidence and logic. Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

MINUTES OF A CONFERENCE AT WESTFORD, OTSEGO CO., N. Y., FEB. 3D AND 4TH, 1849.

Met at the house of brother Lyman Hewitt at two o'clock, Saturday. After prayer, organized by voting Elder Ebenezer Page, one of the Twelve, President, Elder Dennis Chidester Clerk. Elder Page made some remarks, and read a letter from brother Strang upon the subject of translating the remaining plates, and laid the subject before the brethren, and requested them to hold a council and see what they would be able to do to forward the publication of the same. Report of branches and official members present. One of the quorum of the Twelve, one High Priest, four Elders, one Priest, one Teacher. Branches. The Ilion branch, by Elder England, contains five members, two Elders. Nicholas P. Steele President. Milford Centre branch, by Elder Chidester, contains six members, including one Elder, one Teacher. D. Chidester Pres. Westford branch, by Elder A. Hewitt, contains fifteen members, one Elder, one Priest. A. Hewitt Pres. Scattering, five members near Cooperstown, including one High Priest, one Elder. The saints are all very much engaged upon the subject of the gathering, and will emigrate in the spring, extaordinaries excepted. Elder Page made some remarks upon the advantages of chartering a boat to carry a company of saints to Buffalo, and being united in all our efforts, and look to the Lord to guide us right. Appointed Bros. England, Lyman Hewitt and E. Page a committee to secure a boat for the company. Adjourned to early candlelight. Benediction by Elder Bacon.

Evening session. Singing. Prayer by Elder England, and a short discourse on the faith of the primitive saints and gifts of the spirit by Elder England, followed by Elder Page, showing the contrast between the believer and unbeliever; also by Elder Bacon on the subject of the Book of Mormon. Sung a hymn. Prayer by Elder Stevens. Adjourned to ten o'clock, A. M., Sunday.

Met pursuant to adjournment. Singing. Prayer by Elder Bacon. Singing. Sermon by Elder Page upon the fulfillment of prophecy and the necessity of firm and decided obedience to the law of God. Singing. Proceeded to business. After some remarks by Elder Page it was resolved that brother Edward Chidester be ordained an Elder; that brother Lyman Hewitt (a Priest) have the ordination of an Elder; that Elder Alanson Hewitt be ordained an High Priest. After some remarks by the candidates the ordinations were postponed till after an intermission. Adjourned for half an hour. Benediction by Elder Page.

Met pursuant to adjournment. Singing. Prayer by Elder Hewitt. Attended to ordinations, Elders Page and Bacon administering. Administered to the sick. Partook of the sacrament. Blessed little children. The brethren and sisters spent a short season in speaking and exhorting to faithfulness. The gifts of tongues and interpretations filling the hearts of the saints with joy. Resolved, that we express our sincere thanks to brother Strang for the advice and caution in the Herald concerning Theopholis W. Nixon, he having proved himself a worthless scamp and a gross impostor by visiting brother England at Ilion and calling his name HENSHAW, and brother Page at Milford Centre, and there giving his name as Nixon, and other things, among which is improper advances to females. Adjourned till candlelight. Prayer by Elder England. Benediction by Elder Page.

Met in the evening. Singing. Prayer by Elder Page. Singing. Discourse by Elder Bacon. Subject, the gifts of the spirit, followed by a season of social prayer and speaking; the spirit of God being manifest to the congregation in the gift of tongues and interpretations. Minutes of Conference read, approved and ordered that they be transcribed and forwarded for publication in the Herald.

The brethren return their hearty thanks to Bros. and sisters L. Hewitt and S. Babcock for their generous entertainment, and to brother L. Hewitt for opening his rooms for the meeting, the Gentiles having locked the school house against us. Adjourned sine die. Benediction by Elder Page. Adjourned.

P. S. After adjournment Elder Bacon says to the congregation that should there be any that wished to go forward in baptism there was an opportunity. Whereupon a young gentleman living some twenty miles distant declared his faith and wished baptism, which was administered the same hour of the night, (11½ o'clock,) making nine since last summer Conference. At confirmation the brothers and sisters then had a season of social converse, and held their second part of Conference till two, and then retired to rest and met in the morning, but the spirit which was enjoyed could hardly be induced to consent to a separation of brothers and sisters when their own affairs called for their attendance at home. They all feel that this has been the greatest Conference in this region.

DENNIS CHIDESTER, Clerk. EBENEZER PAGE, PRES.

☞ We have taken the liberty to strike out from the foregoing minutes what pertains to the publication of the newly translated records. We say to the brethren, however, that they have manifested the proper spirit in the matter, and if they continue of the same spirit, the work will not drag. We felicitate the brethren in their good riddance of Nixon, and in the spirit in which they receive our counsel. What we said was very pointedly and plainly spoken, and most truly received. The brethren have proved themselves men and saints by being willing to be rebuked. It is a most painful and usually thankless task to tell men of their faults. There is no greater evidence of a good man than that he will bear that his brethren tell him his faults, and not take offence. Such an one will grow in grace and in favor with our heavenly Father. God bless the saints of the Otsego Conference.

We hope this will be a warning to the saints everywhere. Many bad men have come into the church at different times. The discipline of the church is abundantly sufficient to rid us of all such, if that and that only is relied on. But when men, members of the church, undertake to say, "I will not fellowship such an one, or such an one," who is in good standing in the church, and yet will not bring the discipline to bear on him, such brethren are destroying instead of preserving the purity, sanctity and holiness of the church. Equally when they undertake to fellowship and sustain men whom the church has cast out are they destroying the holiness of the church. Our only safety is in a thorough application of the law of God in the church, and an unhesitating reliance thereon.—If we expect to always abide a law, come what may, we are apt to take pains to have it well administered. But when we calculate to do just as we please, walking in our own eyes and disregarding our obligations to others, we care very little about laws.

Some have feared that the church would obstinately retain evil men, and reject good men. Such a supposition is not only unreasonable, but is derogatory to the dignity of God. Things may be ill done in the church, but a tribunal exists for the correction of all errors. Never yet was any good accomplished by resisting the authority which God has set in the church. No, not in one single instance since the world began. In this case the discipline of the church has been justly vindicated, and its holiness preserved. Good would it have been for thousands had they done as well as the Otsego brethren.

From the Advent Herald.

MAJOR M. NOAH AND SOLOMON'S TEMPLE.

BY J. LITCH.

DEAR BRO. HIMES:—Whatever concerns the truth or falsity of Scripture, especially whatever affects the veracity of Christ and the truth of his predictions, concerns all who hope for eternal life through him.

Major Noah is a Jew, and of course must regard Christ as an impostor;* otherwise he would be compelled to acknowledge his Messiahship. There is no medium ground. Either he was what he claimed to be, the son of David and king of Israel, or he was one of the wickedest of men.† It is no wonder, then, that Major Noah has seized so favorable an opportunity as was afforded him by Mr. Nathan's account of his underground researches on Mount Moriah, to overthrow the claims of Christ. Mr. Nathan's account is, that in 1846 he was in Jerusalem, and having learned that there were underground ruins or remains under the Mosque El Aksa, on Mount Moriah, he obtained a clandestine entrance, and in company with a German gentleman, examined the remains.

He first found a splendid arched gateway, at the south entrance, with a beautiful marble pillar on either side. Within this gateway, he found a spacious room, 40 feet from east to west, 37½ feet from south to north. At the north side of this front department, he found a flight of nine steps, of the whole width of this porch, 40 feet. The hall continued northward from the steps 150 feet; making 187½ feet from the arched gateway to the north end of the hall. This both Mr. Nathan and Major Noah profess to believe to be the remains of the Temple. If true, Christ is proved a false prophet, unless his prediction referred to the end of the world and his second coming.‡

But as we have data for comparing notes, we can easily test this thing.

1. The Temple of Solomon.—Its dimensions were as follows: "And the house which king Solomon built for the Lord, the length thereof was threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits. And the porch before the temple of the house, twenty cubits was the length thereof, according to the breadth of the house; and ten cubits was the breadth thereof, before the house." 1 Kings vi. 2, 3.

A cubit is from the elbow to the end of the longest finger; usually about eighteen inches. The sacred cubit is a double cubit, about one yard. Which cubit is used here we are not told, but probably the sacred.

The Temple was twenty cubits wide from east to west, that is, if common cubits, thirty feet; if sacred cubits, sixty feet. Mr. Nathan's temple is forty feet; and is, therefore, either fifteen feet wider or narrower than Solomon's temple.‖ Quite a difference. But Solomon's temple was seventy cubits long, including the porch; which is either one hundred and five, or two hundred and ten feet. Mr. Nathan's temple is one hundred and eighty-seven and a half feet, including the porch. The difference is either eighty-two and a half, or twenty-two and a half feet. Solomon built a stairway from the basement of his temple, on the right side of the house.—Mr. Nathan found one on the left, or west side.

But suppose we call it Zerubbabel's temple, the dimensions of which are given, Ezra vi. 3, "In the first year of Cyrus the king, the same Cyrus the king made a decree concerning the house of God at Jerusalem, Let the house be builded, the place where they offered sacrifices, and let the foundations thereof be strongly laid; the height thereof threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof threescore cubits." This temple was sixty cubits, or ninety feet wide, making fifty feet at least more than Mr. Nathan's temple. But Herod's temple was the last Jewish temple built on Mount Moriah; and according to Josephus, his object in re-building was to build a larger and more magnificent temple than Zerubbabel's. The remains, therefore, under El Aksa, whatever they may be, are not the remains of either of the three temples of God built for the Jews.—And it is surprising that a man of Major Noah's ability should commit himself on a subject so grave, without asking the simple question, "How do these remains correspond with the temple of God?" The authority of Christ, therefore, stands unimpeached. Not so, however, with Major Noah; he stands committed a careless and partial judge.

It will now be seen, that by a comparison of the dimensions of the remains found by Mr. Nathan on Mount Moriah, and the dimen-

twenty miles distant declared his faith and wished baptism, which was administered the same hour of the night, (11½ o'clock,) making nine since last summer Conference. At confirmation the brothers and sisters then had a season of social converse, and held their second part of Conference till two, and then retired to rest and met in the morning, but the spirit which was enjoyed could hardly be induced to consent to a separation of brothers and sisters when their own affairs called for their attendance at home. They all feel that this has been the greatest Conference in this region.

DENNIS CHIDESTER, Clerk. EBENEZER PAGE, PRES.

☞ We have taken the liberty to strike out from the foregoing minutes what pertains to the publication of the newly translated records. We say to the brethren, however, that they have manifested the proper spirit in the matter, and if they continue of the same spirit, the work will not drag. We felicitate the brethren in their good riddance of Nixon, and in the spirit in which they receive our counsel. What we said was very pointedly and plainly spoken, and most truly received. The brethren have proved themselves men and saints by being willing to be rebuked. It is a most painful and usually thankless task to tell men of their faults. There is no greater evidence of a good man than that he will bear that his brethren tell him his faults, and not take offence. Such an one will grow in grace and in favor with our heavenly Father. God bless the saints of the Otsego Conference.

We hope this will be a warning to the saints everywhere. Many bad men have come into the church at different times. The discipline of the church is abundantly sufficient to rid us of all such, if that and that only is relied on. But when men, members of the church, undertake to say, "I will not fellowship such an one, or such an one," who is in good standing in the church, and yet will not bring the discipline to bear on him, such brethren are destroying instead of preserving the purity, sanctity and holiness of the church. Equally when they undertake to fellowship and sustain men whom the church has cast out are they destroying the holiness of the church. Our only safety is in a thorough application of the law of God in the church, and an unhesitating reliance thereon.—If we expect to always abide a law, come what may, we are apt to take pains to have it well administered. But when we calculate to do just as we please, walking in our own eyes and disregarding our obligations to others, we care very little about laws.

Some have feared that the church would obstinately retain evil men, and reject good men. Such a supposition is not only unreasonable, but is derogatory to the dignity of God. Things may be ill done in the church, but a tribunal exists for the correction of all errors. Never yet was any good accomplished by resisting the authority which God has set in the church. No, not in one single instance since the world began. In this case the discipline of the church has been justly vindicated, and its holiness preserved. Good would it have been for thousands had they done as well as the Otsego brethren.

From the Advent Herald.

MAJOR M. NOAH AND SOLOMON'S TEMPLE.

BY J. LITCH.

DEAR BRO. HIMES:—Whatever concerns the truth or falsity of Scripture, especially whatever affects the veracity of Christ and the truth of his predictions, concerns all who hope for eternal life through him.

Major Noah is a Jew, and of course must regard Christ as an impostor;* otherwise he would be compelled to acknowledge his Messiahship. There is no medium ground. Either he was what he claimed to be, the son of David and king of Israel, or he was one of the wickedest of men.† It is no wonder, then, that Major Noah has seized so favorable an opportunity as was afforded him by Mr. Nathan's account of his underground researches on Mount Moriah, to overthrow the claims of Christ. Mr. Nathan's account is, that in 1846 he was in Jerusalem, and having learned that there were underground ruins or remains under the Mosque El Aksa, on Mount Moriah, he obtained a clandestine entrance, and in company with a German gentleman, examined the remains.

He first found a splendid arched gateway, at the south entrance, with a beautiful marble pillar on either side. Within this gateway, he found a spacious room, 40 feet from east to west, 37½ feet from south to north. At the north side of this front department, he found a flight of nine steps, of the whole width of this porch, 40 feet. The hall continued northward from the steps 150 feet; making 187½ feet from the arched gateway to the north end of the hall. This both Mr. Nathan and Major Noah profess to believe to be the remains of the Temple. If true, Christ is proved a false prophet, unless his prediction referred to the end of the world and his second coming.‡

But as we have data for comparing notes, we can easily test this thing.

1. The Temple of Solomon.—Its dimensions were as follows: "And the house which king Solomon built for the Lord, the length thereof was threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits. And the porch before the temple of the house, twenty cubits was the length thereof, according to the breadth of the house; and ten cubits was the breadth thereof, before the house." 1 Kings vi. 2, 3.

A cubit is from the elbow to the end of the longest finger; usually about eighteen inches. The sacred cubit is a double cubit, about one yard Which cubit is used here we are not told, but probably the sacred.

The Temple was twenty cubits wide from east to west, that is, if common cubits, thirty feet; if sacred cubits, sixty feet. Mr. Nathan's temple is forty feet; and is, therefore, either fifteen feet wider or narrower than Solomon's temple.‖ Quite a difference. But Solomon's temple was seventy cubits long, including the porch; which is either one hundred and five, or two hundred and ten feet. Mr. Nathan's temple is one hundred and eighty-seven and a half feet, including the porch. The difference is either eighty-two and a half, or twenty-two and a half feet. Solomon built a stairway from the basement of his temple, on the right side of the house.—Mr. Nathan found one on the left, or west side.

But suppose we call it Zerubbabel's temple, the dimensions of which are given, Ezra vi. 3, "In the first year of Cyrus the king, the same Cyrus the king made a decree concerning the house of God at Jerusalem, Let the house be builded, the place where they offered sacrifices, and let the foundations thereof be strongly laid; the height thereof threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof threescore cubits." This temple was sixty cubits, or ninety feet wide, making fifty feet at least more than Mr. Nathan's temple. But Herod's temple was the last Jewish temple built on Mount Moriah; and according to Josephus, his object in re-building was to build a larger and more magnificent temple than Zerubbabel's. The remains, therefore, under El Aksa, whatever they may be, are not the remains of either of the three temples of God built for the Jews.—And it is surprising that a man of Major Noah's ability should commit himself on a subject so grave, without asking the simple question, "How do these remains correspond with the temple of God?" The authority of Christ, therefore, stands unimpeached. Not so, however, with Major Noah; he stands committed a careless and partial judge.

It will now be seen, that by a comparison of the dimensions of the remains found by Mr. Nathan on Mount Moriah, and the dimensions of Solomon's and Zerubbabel's temples, that they cannot be either of these; and according to Josephus, Herod's temple was to be larger than Zerubbabel's, and of course it cannot be its remains. But it is always easier to pull down the house of our neighbor than to build for him a better. It may be asked, if these remains are not those of the Jewish temple of the time of Christ, what are they?

Although I am not able to give any positive answer to this question, yet I think I can give a more plausible theory than the Major's.

According to his own showing, that prince of modern travelers, Mr. Catherwood, decided the architecture, in part at least, to be Roman. If this is true, and I do not know why we should doubt it, then there is a very rational solution of the difficulty. The utter and continued destruction of the temple, is one of the perpetual monuments of the truth of the gospel, and divine mission of its Author. It is on this account the enemies of Christ have always endeavored to overthrow that prediction, found in the 21st chapter of Luke.—But the attempt is vain.

The emperor Julian, an apostate from Christianity, in the fourth century, determined to disprove the truth of Christ's prediction, and undertook to re-build the temple of God at Jerusalem, and restore the Mosaic rites.

The apostate emperor was about to start on a campaign to Persia, and having failed in all his attempts to overthrow Christianity, he imagined he should, by the united zeal of Jews and Christians, succeed in this. Accordingly he appointed Alypius, his intimate friend, formerly a lieutenant in Britain, to superintend the enterprise. The Jews flocked to the scene with the greatest eagerness; the rich pouring out their treasures for the costly work, and the poor offering the labor of their hands. A vast amount of building materials was collected, and great numbers of workmen assembled for the accomplishment of the undertaking. And, as if he who putteth on the armor had the same right to boast as he who putteth it off, the Jews were so confident of success, that they began to scoff at the followers of Christ, and ask if they would not lend a helping hand to this glorious enterprise.

The sequel is related by both Pagans and Christians; but the most unexceptionable testimony, and that relied on by all parties, is that of Ammianus Marcellinus, the intimate friend and favorite of both the emperor Julian, and Alypius, the chief architect. This eminent writer says—"Horrible balls of fire breaking out near the foundations, with frequent and reiterated attacks, rendered the place, from time to time, inaccessible to the scorched workmen, and drove them to a distance; hence, the work was abandoned."

And as Julian never returned from his Persian war, of course the enterprise was not renewed. Is it not probable, the remains are those of Julian's temple, rather than that of Solomon?

It is now about fifteen hundred years since this defiance of Jesus Christ was made, and his honor and integrity vindicated in the most signal manner; since which, no attempt has been made to rebuild the Jewish temple at Jerusalem.

Concerning the daring blasphemer who undertook the defeat of his prediction, it is related, that being mortally wounded in battle, in Persia, he took handsful of blood and threw toward heaven, saying, "Thou hast conquered, O Galilean;" and thus died.

These facts are recorded by nearly all civil and ecclesiastical historians; and the testimony is so ample and unexceptionable, that the Jews themselves are compelled to admit it. And even the infidel Gibbon is forced to bow to the force of testimony as to the fact, while he sneers at the miracle.

The prophecy is that of Jesus Christ, the Messiah of Israel, and the Savior of the lost,—"The same yesterday, to day, and forever." Blessed are all they who trust in him; for his word cannot be broken.

Philadelphia, Jan. 1849.

*No, he regards him as a warm hearted and perhaps fanatical political reformer, and believes the idea of a new faith founded on his teachings originated after his death.

†Yet Mr. Litch does not recognize him as descended from David, but from the Holy Ghost.

‡Certainly not. An entire throwing down does not involve the idea of digging out foundations, or a basement below ground.

‖Ten feet too wide, or twenty too narrow.

PHENOMENON.—The New York "Journal of Commerce" contains an account of a strange phenomenon in the heavens, which has been seen by several gentlemen in that city and vicinity, and among others, by the editor of that paper. It is described in a communication from Stonington, where it was seen by three individuals, as twinkling at first like a fixed star. It increased to three or four times its original size, and then changed color, from yellow to a bright red. It then gradually decreased, like a revolving light in a light-house, to the size of a star of the 4th and 5th magnitude, and then again increased. Subsequently, while two persons were looking at the phenomenon, it moved slowly towards the South, then returned to the North, and then like a pendulum, swung back to its centre, moving over "several feet" of sky. The editor of the Athens (Ga.) Banner" also notices the same phenomenon as having appeared in that quarter, and gravely inquires if it is a planet on fire. —Journal.

☞ Missouri is a nice place, according to Gov. Edwards, who has just gone out of office. In his farewell address, he tells the Legislature, that almost every Governor has fallen before the envy, malice and hatred heaped upon him. "One—a good man and a patriot," says Gov. E., "resigned and left his post before his time expired; the next left before his term was out, and not in good odor; the next committed suicide a year in advance of the close of his four years; and the next has moved at all times prepared to meet the assassin, during at least three and a half years out of the four of his administration. If a man is not driven to do it, he must at least be willing to fight his way, if he does his duty to his country and his constituents as an Executive of this State. And the matter is not better now than it was formerly, but it is worse."

A SECTARIAN MILLENIUM.

It is an old adage, "that coming events cast their shadows before them." This occurred to my mind as true when I cast my eyes upon a large pictorial representation of the "storming of the Castle of Chapultepec, by the American army under General Scott, Sept. 13th, 1847." The picture referred to I do think is not only a fair representation of the national spirit of christianity, but also of the spiritual union of this (so called) christian age, and a foreboding sign of the sudden ushering in of a sectarian millenium. All observing persons see clearly that the love of military glory and achievments are equally rooted in the hearts and affections of the principal leaders in sectarian christianity, as in the professed deists or atheists.

JOHN E. PAGE.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a regular Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Voree, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of April next; and also on Beaver Island on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of July next. It is expected that every member of the First Presidency and of the Twelve will attend one or both of these Conferences. By the President.

GILBERT WATSON, RECORDER.

ESTRAY.

Came into the inclosure of the subscriber about the 25th Feb. last an iron gray steer; will be two years old next spring. The owner is requested to pay expenses and take him away.

Voree, March 1st, 1849. JAMES J. STRANG.

sions of Solomon's and Zerubbabel's temples, that they cannot be either of these; and according to Josephus, Herod's temple was to be larger than Zerubbabel's, and of course it cannot be its remains. But it is always easier to pull down the house of our neighbor than to build for him a better. It may be asked, if these remains are not those of the Jewish temple of the time of Christ, what are they?

Although I am not able to give any positive answer to this question, yet I think I can give a more plausible theory than the Major's.

According to his own showing, that prince of modern travelers, Mr. Catherwood, decided the architecture, in part at least, to be Roman. If this is true, and I do not know why we should doubt it, then there is a very rational solution of the difficulty. The utter and continued destruction of the temple, is one of the perpetual monuments of the truth of the gospel, and divine mission of its Author. It is on this account the enemies of Christ have always endeavored to overthrow that prediction, found in the 21st chapter of Luke.—But the attempt is vain.

The emperor Julian, an apostate from Christianity, in the fourth century, determined to disprove the truth of Christ's prediction, and undertook to re-build the temple of God at Jerusalem, and restore the Mosaic rites.

The apostate emperor was about to start on a campaign to Persia, and having failed in all his attempts to overthrow Christianity, he imagined he should, by the united zeal of Jews and Christians, succeed in this. Accordingly he appointed Alypius, his intimate friend, formerly a lieutenant in Britain, to superintend the enterprise. The Jews flocked to the scene with the greatest eagerness; the rich pouring out their treasures for the costly work, and the poor offering the labor of their hands. A vast amount of building materials was collected, and great numbers of workmen assembled for the accomplishment of the undertaking. And, as if he who putteth on the armor had the same right to boast as he who putteth it off, the Jews were so confident of success, that they began to scoff at the followers of Christ, and ask if they would not lend a helping hand to this glorious enterprise.

The sequel is related by both Pagans and Christians; but the most unexceptionable testimony, and that relied on by all parties, is that of Ammianus Marcellinus, the intimate friend and favorite of both the emperor Julian, and Alypius, the chief architect. This eminent writer says—"Horrible balls of fire breaking out near the foundations, with frequent and reiterated attacks, rendered the place, from time to time, inaccessible to the scorched workmen, and drove them to a distance; hence, the work was abandoned."

And as Julian never returned from his Persian war, of course the enterprise was not renewed. Is it not probable, the remains are those of Julian's temple, rather than that of Solomon?

It is now about fifteen hundred years since this defiance of Jesus Christ was made, and his honor and integrity vindicated in the most signal manner; since which, no attempt has been made to rebuild the Jewish temple at Jerusalem.

Concerning the daring blasphemer who undertook the defeat of his prediction, it is related, that being mortally wounded in battle, in Persia, he took handsful of blood and threw toward heaven, saying, "Thou hast conquered, O Galilean;" and thus died.

These facts are recorded by nearly all civil and ecclesiastical historians; and the testimony is so ample and unexceptionable, that the Jews themselves are compelled to admit it. And even the infidel Gibbon is forced to bow to the force of testimony as to the fact, while he sneers at the miracle.

The prophecy is that of Jesus Christ, the Messiah of Israel, and the Savior of the lost,—"The same yesterday, to day, and forever." Blessed are all they who trust in him; for his word cannot be broken.

Philadelphia, Jan. 1849.

*No, he regards him as a warm hearted and perhaps fanatical political reformer, and believes the idea of a new faith founded on his teachings originated after his death.

†Yet Mr. Litch does not recognize him as descended from David, but from the Holy Ghost.

‡Certainly not. An entire throwing down does not involve the idea of digging out foundations, or a basement below ground.

‖Ten feet too wide, or twenty too narrow.

PHENOMENON.—The New York "Journal of Commerce" contains an account of a strange phenomenon in the heavens, which has been seen by several gentlemen in that city and vicinity, and among others, by the editor of that paper. It is described in a communication from Stonington, where it was seen by three individuals, as twinkling at first like a fixed star. It increased to three or four times its original size, and then changed color, from yellow to a bright red. It then gradually decreased, like a revolving light in a light-house, to the size of a star of the 4th and 5th magnitude, and then again increased. Subsequently, while two persons were looking at the phenomenon, it moved slowly towards the South, then returned to the North, and then like a pendulum, swung back to its centre, moving over "several feet" of sky. The editor of the Athens (Ga.) Banner" also notices the same phenomenon as having appeared in that quarter, and gravely inquires if it is a planet on fire. —Journal.

☞ Missouri is a nice place, according to Gov. Edwards, who has just gone out of office. In his farewell address, he tells the Legislature, that almost every Governor has fallen before the envy, malice and hatred heaped upon him. "One—a good man and a patriot," says Gov. E., "resigned and left his post before his time expired; the next left before his term was out, and not in good odor; the next committed suicide a year in advance of the close of his four years; and the next has moved at all times prepared to meet the assassin, during at least three and a half years out of the four of his administration. If a man is not driven to do it, he must at least be willing to fight his way, if he does his duty to his country and his constituents as an Executive of this State. And the matter is not better now than it was formerly, but it is worse."

A SECTARIAN MILLENIUM.

It is an old adage, "that coming events cast their shadows before them." This occurred to my mind as true when I cast my eyes upon a large pictorial representation of the "storming of the Castle of Chapultepec, by the American army under General Scott, Sept. 13th, 1847." The picture referred to I do think is not only a fair representation of the national spirit of christianity, but also of the spiritual union of this (so called) christian age, and a foreboding sign of the sudden ushering in of a sectarian millenium. All observing persons see clearly that the love of military glory and achievments are equally rooted in the hearts and affections of the principal leaders in sectarian christianity, as in the professed deists or atheists.

JOHN E. PAGE.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a regular Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Voree, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of April next; and also on Beaver Island on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of July next. It is expected that every member of the First Presidency and of the Twelve will attend one or both of these Conferences. By the President.

GILBERT WATSON, RECORDER.

ESTRAY.

Came into the inclosure of the subscriber about the 25th Feb. last an iron gray steer; will be two years old next spring. The owner is requested to pay expenses and take him away.

Voree, March 1st, 1849. JAMES J. STRANG.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 51.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. MARCH 8, 1849. [WHOLE No. 115.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

January 15th, 1849.

PRES. STRANG:—The all absorbing topic of the age is, change, under the names of improvement, progression, revolution and conversion, as it applies to politics or religion. Assuming that religion covers the whole ground of man's duty, makes full provision for the outer and the inner man, or the soul, for time as well as eternity; and whereas the so called religious world attempt to discharge that duty by ministering to the mental or spiritual man, to the "neglect of the body;" and for as much as the ragged and hungry cannot thank God for food and raiment, it follows that such have performed but half their duty at best. So it is but rational if we, at heart, adopt the prayer of Agar, for convenience or competence, that we use our hands to acquire it. And as there are no prescribed rules or method, it seems impolitic to dig potatoes in preference to "gold," when we, as the blood of Ephraim, inherit the "blessings of the deep that lieth under," "the chief things of the ancient mountains," and "the precious things of the lasting hills."

In the building up of Zion, next to righteousness, gold is one of the chief ornaments; shall take the place of brass, and silver that of iron; "they shall bring gold and incense." Now where is all this gold to come from? Why, out of the "deep," "the lasting hills," and "the ancient mountains." And, now, who shall disgorge the "deep" of its hidden treasures for the use of Zion, but those who labor for Zion? And now I come to the pith of the subject of this letter. Would it not be proper for some of us to try our hand at the gold fountains of California? If so, I would be one of the number associated in good faith for that purpose, with an understanding that a certain proportion of the proceeds go to the Temple fund and for building the Tower of Strength, &c. If this project, upon mature consideration, is deemed proper and practicable, I think there would be little trouble in procuring volunteers and an outfit against the season of departure. Yours seriously, J. W. B.

☞ That abundance of gold properly used is a blessing to a people is a clear fact. But none of the modern nations have been benefited by the possession of gold mines. Spain, with three-fourths the gold of the earth, became the poorest country in Europe. Norway, lying on the barren crags of the Scandanavian mountains, in sixty degrees of latitude, is a richer country than Spain, with one of the finest climates on earth, and the gold of two continents. The rush to California at this time consists of the most abandoned of men, with here and there a sprinkle of a different cast. There is no law there, and cannot be for about a year to come at best. The probability is that there will be no regular government capable of protecting life and property for many years to come. Filled with desperadoes from the four quarters of the earth, more men will seek for gold in blood than in the "everlasting hills." Those who go out with the most honest intentions, finding themselves surrounded by desperadoes, where the rifle and the bowie knife are the only protection to life, will necessarily and inevitably fall into the same practices. The country will have more gold robbers than gold diggers. We have not the slightest doubt of the abundance of gold in California, yet we verily believe that more money can be made either by digging marble in Voree, or potatoes at Beaver, than by digging gold there. Many men will get fortunes by digging, and many more by various modes of robbery, direct and indirect, but few will ever bring them away and very few enjoy them there.

It is beyond doubt in our mind that (excepting Ephraim, the Indians) ten men will leave their bones there unburied or hidden by the manslayer to every one who will get a competence either by digging or any honest means. We look forward with confidence to the time when the chosen ones of God shall possess not merely the placers where men wash sands for hidden gold dust, but the mines, the mountain masses from which these particles have been abraded. But if we dig our potatoes at hoeing time we lose the crop. It is matter of satisfaction to us that the gold fever has seized on so very few of the saints. We understand that the brother who wrote the foregoing took a different view of the matter before his communication reached us, which was only a few days since. In one other case only have we been applied to on the subject, and that merely to fit out a small party to dig for the benefit of the whole church.—But as there may be some carried away with the delusion of Mammon, we have thought it not amiss to raise again our voice against the universal gold mania. Avarice is almost the sole passion made active by it. And this is so strongly prevalent that however just views one might set out with the prevailing avarice and the age and place would swallow up every other feeling. It is difficult to conceive that the best bred and most moral young man should in a few short weeks become a mere heartless mountain robber. But when men depend on violence alone for personal security from day to day, how soon will they resort to it for aggression! The thirst for gold has desolated many a people, and will make California a charnel house.

From the Southport Telegraph.

☞ The Western Star (Elkhorn,) has the following:—

"We are in favor of a Tariff, not only for revenue, but for protection. We are opposed to Slavery in every form," &c.

This is a tolerable manifestation of the popular view of slavery. The opinion seems to be prevalent that slavery owes its existence entirely to certain provisions in the statutes of southern States; and out of the influence of these statutes there is no slavery. Men will talk long and loud, and convulse themselves and the country, not unfrequently, in inveighing against an evil, and hug its twin brother to their very hearts, at the same time. In our view, this is precisely the position of those men who are opposed to slavery, and in favor of tariffs, whether for revenue or protection.

Slavery is not the creature of statute law; on the contrary, the statute law on the subject is the creature of slavery, and it does not follow as a matter of course, that where there is no direct statute law on the subject there is no slavery. England boasts that slavery does not exist upon her soil, and yet, in truth, her slaves far outnumber her freemen. If we admitted the popular idea that there was no slavery except that which had originated the chattel laws on the subject, then the boast of England has truth and merit; but if slavery exists where men are plundered of all their earnings, and robbed of every right, then it exists the world over, not less in the northern States of this Union than the southern, and certainly not less in England than in other portions of the earth. If this be the case, it behooves all who are placed in the position of teachers to examine well their ground, to the end that they may not on one hand be inveighing against evils which with the other they are strengthening.

Now it seems to us it will not be denied that in Europe, and particularly in Great Britain, men are plundered of their earnings and robbed of their rights; and it is equally clear, and will not probably be denied, that they are enslaved. The magnitude and character of the slavery must be judged of by its results. And where, let us ask, does chattel slavery present a picture equal in hideousness to that presented by the slavery of Europe. We wish to call attention to the principles or causes at the bottom of this, and moreover wish to show that all slavery is the offspring of a common principle, the principle of taking from the people the products of their hands without remuneration.

We assert, then, that a tariff, whether for protection or revenue, is a prolific parent of slavery; and he who advocates such tariff is a champion of slavery. A tariff from its nature, and from very necessity, is a tax upon the many for the benefit of the few. It is a tax upon the poorer class of people for the benefit of the richer; and its inevitable tendency is to make the rich richer, and the poor poorer; to create extremes of wealth and poverty, and to make those hideous social inequalities which peculiarly mark European society. And it is the same whether it be a tariff for revenue or protection, for they are but different degrees of the same principle, and will work in the lapse of time corresponding results.

It is a system which robs the laborer of his hard earned wages; it takes from him the means of life, and reduces him to the condition of not of the chattel slave, a condition equally productive of evil results, that of a hired slave. We know of no evils of chattel slavery, which do not exist quite as hideously and forcibly in wages slavery; and as a tariff is the chief parent of wages slavery, we would not give one fig for the anti-slavery feeling which, confined alone to chattel slavery, advocates such a system of slavery as a tariff for revenue and protection. C. L. S.

Good! Why don't the Telegraph exchange with us?—A man that can write such an article ought to read the writings of prophets.

From the Southport Telegraph.

The principal obstruction now to the liberty and happiness of man, is the great struggle for wealth and property. Society as it is, might be compared to a crowd of people climbing a steep hill, when those who got up first should have the others to work for them; then the strong would pull back the weak and trample them under foot, and when two of equal strength would come in contact in their struggle for advantage, both would come to the bottom. Such is society; that the strong is always running over the weak, and a constant struggle with all, who shall get the most and give the least for it; and when they have enough to entitle them to be enrolled in the list of the upper ten, then the others are compelled to work for them. While such matters are held out to man society cannot be otherwise than it is. Every man has the fear of toil and the hope of ease; the fear of want and the hope of plenty; the fear of poverty and the hope of riches; the fear of being a slave and the hope of being a master, before him. These hopes and fears meet man in every transaction of life, and have considerable agency in all the evils that afflict society, and are a reasonable apology, or at least a sufficient cause, for almost any thing he may do.

Those who pretend to argue against giving the public land in small quantities, to actual settlers only, admit that they have a right to produce, but deny that they have any right to the soil because they do not produce it. Now if this can be called an argument at all, it must come with double force against those who monopolize the soil which they have not produced, nor bought from any one who did produce it. The first title of all land was usurpation and robbery; and I am not certain, even by our present laws, but possession is the very best title. If any should claim to have a better, we ask, from whom did you buy? The answer is, from government. From whom did government buy? From Virginia. From whom did Virginia buy? From the King of England. From whom did the King buy? Why he robbed and murdered the natives and took it as the feudal lords of Europe did, and as England has done with Ireland, America, and other nations, and as all tyrants have done.

Now I believe that this kind of title will not pass as valid in any court in this country, [we have no doubt it would pass perfectly current in any Gentile court. Ed.,] if it will we can murder some of the large speculators and take their land, and when it is sold a time or two the title will be clear.

It is absurd to talk of human rights if a man has no right to any spot on this earth to stand, sit, lie or to live or die on. The right to life is an empty title, without a place to live. Without this right the Declaration of Independence is a tantalizing lie.

It is much harder to get right after a wrong commencement, than it is to begin right at first. Suppose that all the people of the United States were coming into the country together; and admitted to have equal rights; would any one have the presumption to propose so absurd a measure, as that a few should be allowed, under any circumstances, to hold all the land as their own, while the great majority should be without any, and become rent slaves like the inhabitants of Ireland. No man dare propose such a thing. How few they are who know their rights, and fewer still who dare maintain them.

REFORM.

Porter, Wis., February 20th, 1849.

Bro. James J. Strang:—Having been solicited by Bro. Wright and the rest of the brethren, I will proceed and make a statement of my labors and also of my brethren in this part of God's vineyard.—If you think proper to insert it in your valuable paper, you will show to the brethren abroad that God's arm is not shortened that he cannot save. The first winter after I came to a knowledge that you was the true and lawful successor of Joseph Smith, I went to school and wrote to the brethren abroad with whom I was acquainted. I being young was drawn into young company, and attended parties and neighborhood dances. I soon learned that this thing begat darkness, and wallowed in darkness and in sin until the next July. The next winter I went to Koskonong to teach school, and commenced preaching the word, God blessed me with his holy spirit, and some (that is four) during the winter and spring were obedient to the faith. I again went home to work on my farm until winter, when I went back to Koskonong and commenced preaching again, and God blessed my labors and I baptized seven more. I organized a branch called the Koskonong branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, and ordained one Elder and Teacher. I then went to Voree, as you know, and brother John E. Page came out here and preached in Koskonong, and I baptized some more, and then we went from there to the Porter branch, which we organized with about ten members, brother Nathan Foster being the presiding Elder, and brother Barker Clerk. Last summer I preached at Kosknong and at Porter some, and this winter I commenced preaching again, and brother Foster assisted me in preaching the word and bearing our testimony by the spirit and power of Israel's God, and we have baptized six more into the Koskonong branch. We now number in that branch about twenty two members, Elders and all. We have some noble hearts in the branch who are willing to forsake all for Christ.

We all believe that James J. Strang is the prophet of the most high God, and successor to Joseph Smith. We enjoy the gifts of the spirit. Some the gift of tongues, some the interpretation of tongues, and the most powerful manifestation of the gift of healing I ever saw. The sick are healed immediately by the laying on of hands according to the law of God, and my brother Richard was healed a few nights ago of a pain in the breast immediately, and he does not belong to the church. God has blessed us wonderfully. Almost the entire neighborhood are obedient to the faith. There are several more believing, and I anticipate baptizing one of superior talent, if it is God's will so to be.

We have ordained in our branch four Elders, one Priest and one Teacher, who are bound, if faithful, to make this generation tremble under the word of the Lord. I feel clear that I have done my duty, God bearing me witness; I have not failed to declare the full counsel of God, according to the intelligence given me. I have always tried to prepare their minds to receive truth. I have always first learned a thing and then have taught them, and never have I adopted the principle of guess work. I have prepared their minds to receive and keep the word of wisdom. I have always, since I have had any knowledge of the Order of Enoch, been preparing their minds to become one in all things. May God forgive my enemies, and those that have said I did not preach all parts of the gospel when I understood it. I have come to the conclusion to obey God in all things, and the authority of his church never to oppose, come what may. The brethren tender their sincere thanks to you for sending brother Phineas Wright out here to instruct us in the way of the Lord more perfectly. We were glad to see him, and cordially recommend him to the fellowship of the saints. Give my love to all the saints at Voree. Brother Wright and myself have had a protracted meeting here just after a Methodist excitement, and we have had a large school house crowded full for eight meetings. The people listened with profound silence and wonder while we laid before them the gospel of Jesus Christ in its fulness. They want to hear, and manifest a believing and inquiring spirit. I hope to baptize some more in this place. May God bless our works here. Your brother in the gospel,

H. P. BROWN.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE UNIVERSALISTS CONSIDERED.

As I understand the doctrine of a certain sect called "Universalists," it is that, some how or other, the whole human family are yet to be saved, and finally to be made happy, by being exalted to the favor of God through the saving efficacy of the redeeming love of Jesus Christ, by the grace of God, the Father. No doubt they will admit, as a historical fact, that not one of a thousand of the whole Adamic family, for six thousand years past, ever heard of Jesus Christ in the flesh. If so, that nine hundred and ninety nine to one can be glorified independent of a preached gospel, why not all? For the sake of the argument, suppose that Jesus Christ and all the Apostles were Universalist preachers, and all that ever dissented from their doctrine were heretics, what proportion of the Adamic family have believed and subscribed to the true doctrine? And if not one of a thousand have stood subscribed to that truth, and yet all the rest, as heretics, can be saved in the same measure of glory, does it not argue that heresy is equivalent to truth? It is one thing to believe an event will take place, and another thing to know how it is to be effected. The Apostle tells us, "that by grace we are SAVED through FAITH," and "faith comes by hearing the word of God," and "how shall they hear without a preacher?" Then, as Universalists are the only true preachers of gospel truth, and only a few ever heard them preach, and a less number ever believed them, and yet all are to be indiscriminately saved, admitting all this, I must say that the nice shade of difference between Universalism and Deism is scarcely discernible. For it does appear to me that if the God of heaven had ordained that the vast many could be saved without a preached gospel, the same measures could reach the scanty few as well as the great mass, and thus saved the spilling of oceans of martyrs' blood. Will some one reply to the above through the press, and send a copy to the "Herald" office. More at another time.

JOHN E. PAGE.

Belvidere, Ill., February 1st, 1849.

DEAR BROTHER STRANG:—I take this opportunity to drop you a line by a brother going up to Voree. I thought I would send you two dollars. You may apply it as you think proper. If you have need of it you may keep it, or you may put it to the Temple. As soon as I can I will send you a little more. I wish to do all I can for Zion. I do long to be up there this spring, but my son has been sick most all summer, and it has got him into debt. We are poor, and I am a cripple. I have to walk with two sticks, and am getting old. If I live till July I shall be seventy-seven. I make two flour barrels a day. You must continue to send the papers. Give our best respect to all the brethren and sisters, and we want their prayers, that the Lord would open a way for us to come up to Zion, for I long to be there. Your brother and sister in tribulation,

JOHN AND MELINDA TYSON.

☞ We put this on record as a memorial that wheresoever this gospel is preached, there it may be had in remembrance forever.—The case of the widow's mite is not more worthy of remembrance. This is rather an extreme case, but the many similar to it constantly occurring are the most conclusive evidence that the faith of the saints is renewed, and that the days of renewed favor from God are at the door. We place the two dollars in the Temple funds, that some of the stones thereof may be as a monument of the faith of these saints. God bless them, and bless the church with more of such faith.

OPINION THAT CHRISTIANS HAVE OF ONE ANOTHER.

The Albany Evening Journal thus points out the moderate requests of the slaveholders of the South, when they insist upon carrying slavery into the new territories:—

"Those who seek to carry Slavery into the new territories, also ask to take the Slave Code with it. The former cannot exist securely without the latter. They are inseparable. Where the one goes the other must follow. Hence, if Congress permits slavery to go to California or New Mexico, it must allow that law to go with it which provides thirty lashes for the negro, whether bond or free, who has the hardihood to preach the Gospel; which secures one year's imprisonment for any one who shall teach a slave to read, and twenty lashes for the slave who is found at a school learning to read; and which provides the enormous penalty of six months' imprisonment and $500 fine for whipping a slave to death!

It must do more even than all this. It must provide for the imprisonment of every dark skinned sailor who visits either New Mexico or California! Virginia and South Carolina have not only shown us the practical workings of such a law, but have declared it indispensible to the safety of every commonwealth where slavery exists. Every northern ship, therefore, which shall visit any harbor in either of those territories, after slavery shall have become one of their legalized institutions, must purge itself of colored sailors, cooks and cabin boys, or abide the consequences. Congress must also provide in the event that New York or Massachusetts shall send on a grey-headed commissioner to protest against the imprisonment of their free citizens, that such commissioners shall be supplied with a coat of tar and feathers at the public expense.

It would be folly to sanction slavery in these new territories, unless such sanction was accompanied with these essential accompaniments. Slavery must have its code, or it becomes as helpless as a hyena with out claws or teeth. The question, therefore, is not merely whether they shall be allowed to take their slaves into New Mexico, but whether they shall be allowed to dictate the color of our seamen, imprison our citizens, punish the preaching of the gospel, and whip men for learning to read."

Too Much of Good (?) Thing.—It is said that John Randolph once predicted that the slaveholders of Virginia would one day run away from their slaves, and that the slaves would advertise them in the newspapers. The following from a Miss. newspaper is an indication that Randolph's prophecy is about to be fulfilled:—

"An immediate and extra session of the Legislatnre of Mississippi is demanded by the citizens of Hancock county, in that State, for the purpose of prohibiting the further ingress of slaves from the border States of the South. In their petition to the Governor, they represent the States of Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky and Missouri, where slavery has ceased to be profitable, from the uncertain tenure by which slaves are held, are now throwing an immense black population on the extreme Southern States which is destined to increase with immense rapidity. To avoid this result, they propose to compel the more northern of the slaveholding States to retain their slaves within their own borders."

The Mobile (Ala.) Tribune expresses the same sentiments.

Brighton, Pa., February 7th, 1849.

Pres. Strang—Dear Brother:—After so long an interval I resume my pen, for the double purpose of transacting some business, giving you some information relative to our little branch, and of expressing my own feelings. * * I have been preaching regularly this winter, and expect to baptize some four or five next Sunday. We have had some Twelvites, a hard and ungodly people, and poverty to contend against, with a large family and our aged parents upon our backs, but we intend to sing westward ho next spring, if the Lord wills it so to be. I shall continue to exert myself for the Herald and truth. God bless you all.

JAMES M. GREIG.

Monday, the 12th. Dear Brother:—I have only to add in haste that we had a good meeting yesterday. Many are giving serious attention to the gospel. A number profess to believe, and are preparing for baptism. Your affectionate brother, J. M. GREIG.

☞ Money received.

St. Louis, February 11th, 1849.

To President James J. Strang:—

Dear Brother,—I inclose you one dollar for the Voree Herald. You will be kind enough to direct it to me at this place. I should like some of the back numbers, if you have them. * * I will only say at this time that my prayer to God is, that the truth may be made manifest to those who are willing to receive it, and treasure it up in good and honest hearts; and though the night may be dark, my faith is strong that the dawn will surely come. Even so. Amen. Yours in the bonds of the new and everlasting covenant,

HENRY CLIFFORD.

☞ Thank God that it has come, and the light begins to shine.

Do as You Promise.—There is no necessity of breaking your word. In the first place, never promise any thing unless you know it to be in your power to fulfill—and in the second place, make up your mind, before you promise, that whatever you do promise, you will fulfill. By so doing, you will gain and enjoy the confidence of those around you. When such a character is established, it will be of more value than ermine gold, or princely diadems.

A Good Mother.—She is a good mother who brings up her children to work—to work in the kitchen if you please. We shall never have good puddings and pies, chowders and fricasees, while the ladies are taught that it is a disgrace to learn to cook. The time may come when the daughters of wealth shall be obliged to take their stand in the kitchen, but should they not know how to bake and wash? What is a young woman fit for, to a mechanic especially, whose mother allows her to be in bed till ten o'clock, and who, when she rises, sings a song or two and sits down to the last new novel? She may answer for the wife of a wealthy fop; and a miserable life—miserable indeed will she live. Far better for her, no matter what her condition may be, if she is brought up to work.

Central America.—A late arrival at New Orleans from Honduras brings gloomy intelligence from the interior. The whole country was in an unsettled state, and was unsafe traveling, robberies and murders are of frequent occurrence; all, without discrimination, were the victims of the Indians. The road from Ysabal to Guatamala was filled with Bandits. Yucatan is in a most deplorable condition. The Indians conquered wherever they went, and a gentleman informed the captain of the vessel that he saw a large number of murdered Spaniards, strewed in every direction in the neighborhood of Bacular, no one daring to bury them. Nothing had recently been heard of the American Regiment.

☞ The reader will receollect that this is the country that the Indians overran last year.

The Laws of Health.—In the regimen that prize fighters submitted themselves to, says the Philadelphia Ledger, we may see the secret of acquiring the greatest strength and power of endurance. It is to be strictly temperate in all things, to avoid all debilitating stimulants, such as alcoholic drinks, tea and coffee, tobacco, &c., to rise early, to take an abundance of exercise in the open air, to bathe often, and observe the most rigid system of cleanliness, and abstain from all licentious practices. Those noted for pedestrian feats submit themselves to the same kind of regimen. If it may be done from such ignoble motives, how much easier should it be to practice the same system for the greatest of all blessings—health.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a regular Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Voree, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of April next; and also on Beaver Island on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of July next. It is expected that every member of the First Presidency and of the Twelve will attend one or both of these Conferences. By the President.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

ESTRAY.

Came into the inclosure of the subscriber about the 25th Feb. last an iron gray steer; will be two years old next spring. The owner is requested to pay expenses and take him away.

Voree, March 1st, 1849. JAMES J. STRANG.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 52.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. MARCH 15, 1849. [WHOLE No. 116.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 9.

Voree, March 8th, 1849.

MR. EDWIN BURGESS:—I again resume the discussion between us, though not at the point I hoped to have arrived at by this time. At par. 70 you accuse me of holding that men are to be punished for unbelief, as though they could believe or disbelieve at pleasure, and there was turpitude in the want of an unsupported faith. I beg to remind you that the saints of God do not subscribe to this article of sectarian faith. Such a doctrine is not found among us.

222. I have objected to your doctrine that the different parts of the material world govern each other. And in par. after alluding to the long established doctrine in astronomy of the universality of the law of attraction, I inquire "what part of nature governs that star which has none beyond it," and therefore can be attracted but one way? Now it is very obvious that unless it has some governing power it will move in the direction to which it is attracted, to the common centre; and ceasing to exercise its attractive power on those that are next to it, they too will move in the same direction, by which means all nature would concentrate into one solid mass, chaotic, lifeless and silent.

223. You ask, "to what star do I allude?" To any one that has none beyond it; because such, and such only, are attracted but one way. Again you say, "better take our illustrations where we can best examine them." We can only take them where they are. It is not possible that an example should exist nearer.

224. In the same paragraph you go on to say that "lighter bodies revolve around the heavier," and therefore the equilibrium. This then I understand to be your reason why distant stars and planets do not rush by the power of attraction to one common mass. You say, also, in the same connection, "the cold and heavy seeks an equilibrium with the warm and light;" and you have so connected these ideas together as to convey the idea that planets and stars being warm and light float in a cold and heavy atmosphere, at an immense distance from the earth, sun or something else, just as the balloon does from the earth. You will please excuse me from answering this. I make no war on sucklings. If you are in the right, it accounts for the fact that the sun, being very warm, runs high; whereas the wan cold moon runs quite near the earth.

225. In answer to par. 77, I reply that I find the facts just opposite to your inference. That the nearest approach in ordinary matter to unchangeability and indestructibility is in the organic and not the unorganized, I cannot distinguish between the natural and the supernatural, except by the popular distinction, or by saying that which is highest is super.

226. You inquire (par. 83) the object of the angel in laying the plates of the Book of Mormon before the witnesses of it, of the angels conferring the priesthood on me, and of my seeing the Lord of the universe in the exercise of his power. I answer the interrogatories in their order. 1st. To make them witnesses that the book came forth by the power of God. 2d. To give me a priesthood above all others on earth, which none on earth could give, because none can give a higher power than he has. 3d. He exercised the power to keep order in the universe. I saw him to receive communications from him in reference to my office and duty, and that I might be an Apostle from him and a witness of his name.

227. Speaking of Ex. iii. 2, 3, 4, 6, you attempt to make a point of the fact that the angel and God are mentioned in different verses, and ask how such evidence would be received at present? I answer, if the man was dead who gave it, I doubt not it would be well received. If living, generally rejected. But I have no thought that his death would add anything to the credibility of the testimony.

228. I shall not go minutely through your letter No. 4, containing, as it does, very little but a repetition of the mere opinion that man learned language from geese, snakes and various natural sounds. And to prove it you interrogatively assert that it is natural for the thirsty to drink out of a jug, the hungry to eat with a knife and fork, and for ladies to talk.

229. If you could be understood that it was natural for ladies to communicate ideas of their sensations by such means of expression as they possess, it would be a true saying. But if we understand you, as we must, that it is natural for them to speak articulate sounds for that purpose, then, in nature, the offspring of a hound uses the language of a hound, and the offspring of a spaniel uses the language of a spaniel, so the offspring of the English will use the language of the English, and the offspring of the Dutch will use the language of the Dutch. Your whole argument overlooks the force of these facts, 1st, that whatever language or habit is natural to any living creature, every one of the species possesses untaught; 2d, that articulate language is possessed by no human being except it is taught him. No, not to the extent of one single word, and the conclusion is clear as any demonstration in Euclid that, therefore, articulate language is not natural to man.

230. In reply to my remark that "no man has ever spoken one single articulate word till it was taught him," you ask, "how do I prove it?" And by your rule, that there is to be neither faith in testimony nor logic in argument, it might be difficult in this instance. If, after some thousand years experience with some hundred millions of inhabitants, the white faith of history does not tell of one single instance of a child's talking untaught, is not the evidence therefore conclusive that there are no such instances? Do you think you can find as many persons living to testify of hearing untaught children speak articulate language, as I can of conversing with spirits? or can find it as often recorded in history?

231. You inquire why we cannot teach other animals to talk as well as children? We cannot teach them to speak as WELL as an infant, because they are inferior in many points of physical organization. Some that have good vocal organs can be taught fully up to the standard of their mental capacity, as the parrot and the crow.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. III. No. 52.] VOREE, WIS., THURSDAY. MARCH 15, 1849. [WHOLE No. 116.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 9.

Voree, March 8th, 1849.

MR. EDWIN BURGESS:—I again resume the discussion between us, though not at the point I hoped to have arrived at by this time. At par. 70 you accuse me of holding that men are to be punished for unbelief, as though they could believe or disbelieve at pleasure, and there was turpitude in the want of an unsupported faith. I beg to remind you that the saints of God do not subscribe to this article of sectarian faith. Such a doctrine is not found among us.

222. I have objected to your doctrine that the different parts of the material world govern each other. And in par. after alluding to the long established doctrine in astronomy of the universality of the law of attraction, I inquire "what part of nature governs that star which has none beyond it," and therefore can be attracted but one way? Now it is very obvious that unless it has some governing power it will move in the direction to which it is attracted, to the common centre; and ceasing to exercise its attractive power on those that are next to it, they too will move in the same direction, by which means all nature would concentrate into one solid mass, chaotic, lifeless and silent.

223. You ask, "to what star do I allude?" To any one that has none beyond it; because such, and such only, are attracted but one way. Again you say, "better take our illustrations where we can best examine them." We can only take them where they are. It is not possible that an example should exist nearer.

224. In the same paragraph you go on to say that "lighter bodies revolve around the heavier," and therefore the equilibrium. This then I understand to be your reason why distant stars and planets do not rush by the power of attraction to one common mass. You say, also, in the same connection, "the cold and heavy seeks an equilibrium with the warm and light;" and you have so connected these ideas together as to convey the idea that planets and stars being warm and light float in a cold and heavy atmosphere, at an immense distance from the earth, sun or something else, just as the balloon does from the earth. You will please excuse me from answering this. I make no war on sucklings. If you are in the right, it accounts for the fact that the sun, being very warm, runs high; whereas the wan cold moon runs quite near the earth.

225. In answer to par. 77, I reply that I find the facts just opposite to your inference. That the nearest approach in ordinary matter to unchangeability and indestructibility is in the organic and not the unorganized, I cannot distinguish between the natural and the supernatural, except by the popular distinction, or by saying that which is highest is super.

226. You inquire (par. 83) the object of the angel in laying the plates of the Book of Mormon before the witnesses of it, of the angels conferring the priesthood on me, and of my seeing the Lord of the universe in the exercise of his power. I answer the interrogatories in their order. 1st. To make them witnesses that the book came forth by the power of God. 2d. To give me a priesthood above all others on earth, which none on earth could give, because none can give a higher power than he has. 3d. He exercised the power to keep order in the universe. I saw him to receive communications from him in reference to my office and duty, and that I might be an Apostle from him and a witness of his name.

227. Speaking of Ex. iii. 2, 3, 4, 6, you attempt to make a point of the fact that the angel and God are mentioned in different verses, and ask how such evidence would be received at present? I answer, if the man was dead who gave it, I doubt not it would be well received. If living, generally rejected. But I have no thought that his death would add anything to the credibility of the testimony.

228. I shall not go minutely through your letter No. 4, containing, as it does, very little but a repetition of the mere opinion that man learned language from geese, snakes and various natural sounds. And to prove it you interrogatively assert that it is natural for the thirsty to drink out of a jug, the hungry to eat with a knife and fork, and for ladies to talk.

229. If you could be understood that it was natural for ladies to communicate ideas of their sensations by such means of expression as they possess, it would be a true saying. But if we understand you, as we must, that it is natural for them to speak articulate sounds for that purpose, then, in nature, the offspring of a hound uses the language of a hound, and the offspring of a spaniel uses the language of a spaniel, so the offspring of the English will use the language of the English, and the offspring of the Dutch will use the language of the Dutch. Your whole argument overlooks the force of these facts, 1st, that whatever language or habit is natural to any living creature, every one of the species possesses untaught; 2d, that articulate language is possessed by no human being except it is taught him. No, not to the extent of one single word, and the conclusion is clear as any demonstration in Euclid that, therefore, articulate language is not natural to man.

230. In reply to my remark that "no man has ever spoken one single articulate word till it was taught him," you ask, "how do I prove it?" And by your rule, that there is to be neither faith in testimony nor logic in argument, it might be difficult in this instance. If, after some thousand years experience with some hundred millions of inhabitants, the white faith of history does not tell of one single instance of a child's talking untaught, is not the evidence therefore conclusive that there are no such instances? Do you think you can find as many persons living to testify of hearing untaught children speak articulate language, as I can of conversing with spirits? or can find it as often recorded in history?

231. You inquire why we cannot teach other animals to talk as well as children? We cannot teach them to speak as WELL as an infant, because they are inferior in many points of physical organization. Some that have good vocal organs can be taught fully up to the standard of their mental capacity, as the parrot and the crow.

Again you say, "children ought not to learn at all, because, not having a language, they cannot know the use of it." Exactly; and therefore they do not try to learn. But parents and nurses seizing on their natural imitativeness, teach them some sounds, of which, from use and laborious instruction, they gradually learn the meaning.

232. From one to three years of life, during which they are constantly uttering sounds and hearing language, elapse before they get even a few of the most common place words. But becoming once able to talk, they press on rapidly and get an extensive vocabulary in a few months.

233. You might as well express your own opinion and offer that for testimony, as to refer to A. J. Davis. (Par. 116.) Though the name Divine Revelations is stamped on the back of the book, the veil that covers it is too thin for any one to offer it seriously. You would doubtless feel mocked should I offer you one of Scott's novels for history. I am sometimes tart, but don't wish to be mocked.

234. In answer to your question, how so many languages came into existence? &c., I reply, language, existing, it is very easy for it to change by accident. No two persons pronounce all words precisely alike, and long separate use would make such changes very great. For many ideas, the representative of sound, was lost in the general ignorance which, like tides in the sea, comes and goes in all parts of the earth. New combinations of sound are made to represent these as they are brought into use again. Hence the varieties in language. Thus have I reviewed your answer to the first and second division of my argument. Your answer to the third has just come to hand, and goes before the public with this. Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. BURGESS TO MR. STRANG.—No. 5.

Racine, March 6th, 1849.

MR. JAMES J. STRANG,—SIR:—I received your No. 5, which I perceive nearly a copy of an article which appeared in the Democratic Review of August, 1847, under the signature of A. Arrington. This is quite a novel, and easy way of sustaining a debate.—I regret I have not a ready-made answer to send you in return.

119. You say, par. 129, "I undertake to demonstrate in an absolute manner, not only the being, but the ever present agency of God in ALL the phenomena of the material universe. I profess to solve the old problem that puzzled philosophy in every age, ever uttered by human curiosity, but perhaps never as yet answered by pure reason, what is the nature of causation." Here we have philosophy personified and puzzled, but from which puzzling position you are about to extricate her by the aid of your pure reason, where I suppose the impure reason of others has failed. And you will likewise show the true nature of causation, in opposition to the false nature of causation shown by others.

120. You continue, "unless the true nature of causation be comprehended, nothing else can possibly be understood." What "the false solution" is which produced so many pestilential heresies in philosophy and religion I know not, unless it be the factless supposition of the supernatural.

121. You say, (par. 13,) "to this mighty question, what is causation, four different answers, and no more, can be given." First, "the skeptical," which I understand is but affirming a state of mind, without conclusive evidence of the nature or essentials of "causation." Second, "the material," by which I understand the invariable succession of antecedent and consequent, in the material and mental phenomena. Third, "Pantheism," by which I understand that one thing emenates from, grows out of, or is generated by another; that power by which vegetable and animal organization is continued. And what do we here perceive, but the invariable antecedent and consequent, where living organizations produce their like, return to their elementary condition, thence to new organic existence? thus preserving a continual change of life, youth, beauty, maturity, decline and death, or disorganization, which is necessary to new birth or regeneration and progressive development.

122. First, the skeptic doubts for want of evidence, the Materialist affirms succession, and the Pantheist succession by emenation or generation, which includes materialism. Thus far we have but one answer, the skeptical being no answer at all.

123. Now for the "rational or philosophic," that causation resides in mind. (Par. 136.) Here mind is a sort of habitation in which causation resides. I presume the author means that mind is causation, for he would hardly say that mind resides in itself.

124. You continue, "every phenomena in the universe is, and ever must be, but the effect of intellectual force, exerted by pure volition." Then the action of light, heat, cold, electricity, the winds, waves, volcanoes, planetary motion, &c., can be shown to be the effect of mind. When you have shown this you will have a deity as diffusive as nature, of whom others may know as much as priests, and no temple less than the universe can contaim him.

125. You say, par. 127, matter both in molecules and masses is absolutely inert. This I deny. Matter is positively and relatively active, whether in the planetary, elementary or organic condition. And I deny that there is any power, human or superhuman, that can make it otherwise. Nature, in every known part, moves on in stern denial of the "vis inertia" and demonstration of eternal force.—The indestructible must ever be. That which must ever be, could it begin? Every part of nature presses with its own weight, on other parts, contiguous to themselves.

126. To say that matter did not move till put in action by mind, appears to me more than our minds can determine, unless guided by fancy, rather than facts. Mind! of which we never see a manifestation but through the agency of active organized matter, which organism is itself an evidence of anterior action. Shall mind say to the organization, I, the active, material or immaterial, put you, the inert elements, in motion, and organized you? But by what force can the immaterial move the inert material? Where in the universe is a fact, an example, on which to found our philosophy? And if the mind is material, what becomes of the inertia of matter?

127. Let us suppose mind existing prior to motion in the elements, how could mind know there was no motion? Simply that it did not perceive motion, a negative or no evidence. Mind must exist before motion to cause motion, and be co-extensive with matter to know that all matter was inert, which the mind of man is not. Therefore your assumption is not self-evident, nor is it sustained by proof.

128. For what fact shows mind to be the cause of all motion?—To cause motion, pre-existence is necessary. What fact, then, shows the pre-existence of mind, when organization is necessary for its every manifestation? Whoever undertakes to prove the pre-existence of mind must look before all organic existence for the first fact, or make a factless theory.

129. To suppose organization prior to motion in matter, would, I presume, be too great an absurdity for even those who say mind is the cause of matter as well as motion.

130. You say, par. 137, "the inertia of matter is now admitted by ALL scientific writers on general physics; as many of the atheistical school still affect to DENY IT," &c. Mackintosh, in his "Electural Theory of the Universe," denies it, page 47. And I think Sir Richard Philipps also, but the contradiction shows the state of the author's mind.

Again you say, "children ought not to learn at all, because, not having a language, they cannot know the use of it." Exactly; and therefore they do not try to learn. But parents and nurses seizing on their natural imitativeness, teach them some sounds, of which, from use and laborious instruction, they gradually learn the meaning.

232. From one to three years of life, during which they are constantly uttering sounds and hearing language, elapse before they get even a few of the most common place words. But becoming once able to talk, they press on rapidly and get an extensive vocabulary in a few months.

233. You might as well express your own opinion and offer that for testimony, as to refer to A. J. Davis. (Par. 116.) Though the name Divine Revelations is stamped on the back of the book, the veil that covers it is too thin for any one to offer it seriously. You would doubtless feel mocked should I offer you one of Scott's novels for history. I am sometimes tart, but don't wish to be mocked.

234. In answer to your question, how so many languages came into existence? &c., I reply, language, existing, it is very easy for it to change by accident. No two persons pronounce all words precisely alike, and long separate use would make such changes very great. For many ideas, the representative of sound, was lost in the general ignorance which, like tides in the sea, comes and goes in all parts of the earth. New combinations of sound are made to represent these as they are brought into use again. Hence the varieties in language. Thus have I reviewed your answer to the first and second division of my argument. Your answer to the third has just come to hand, and goes before the public with this. Truly and sincerely,

JAMES J. STRANG.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. BURGESS TO MR. STRANG.—No. 5.

Racine, March 6th, 1849.

Mr. James J. Strang,—Sir:—I received your No. 5, which I perceive nearly a copy of an article which appeared in the Democratic Review of August, 1847, under the signature of A. Arrington. This is quite a novel, and easy way of sustaining a debate.—I regret I have not a ready made answer to send you in return.

119. You say, par. 129, "I undertake to demonstrate in an absolute manner, not only the being, but the ever present agency of God in ALL the phenomena of the material universe. I profess to solve the old problem that puzzled philosophy in every age, ever uttered by human curiosity, but perhaps never as yet answered by pure reason, what is the nature of causation." Here we have philosophy personified and puzzled, but from which puzzling position you are about to extricate her by the aid of your pure reason, where I suppose the impure reason of others has failed. And you will likewise show the true nature of causation, in opposition to the false nature of causation shown by others.

120. You continue, "unless the true nature of causation be comprehended, nothing else can possibly be understood." What "the false solution" is which produced so many pestilential heresies in philosophy and religion I know not, unless it be the factless supposition of the supernatural.

121. You say, (par. 13,) "to this mighty question, what is causation, four different answers, and no more, can be given." First, "the skeptical," which I understand is but affirming a state of mind, without conclusive evidence of the nature or essentials of "causation." Second, "the material," by which I understand the invariable succession of antecedent and consequent, in the material and mental phenomena. Third, "Pantheism," by which I understand that one thing emenates from, grows out of, or is generated by another; that power by which vegetable and animal organization is continued. And what do we here perceive, but the invariable antecedent and consequent, where living organizations produce their like, return to their elementary condition, thence to new organic existence? thus preserving a continual change of life, youth, beauty, maturity, decline and death, or disorganization, which is necessary to new birth or regeneration and progressive development.

122. First, the skeptic doubts for want of evidence, the Materialist affirms succession, and the Pantheist succession by emenation or generation, which includes materialism. Thus far we have but one answer, the skeptical being no answer at all.

123. Now for the "rational or philosophic," that causation resides in mind. (Par. 136.) Here mind is a sort of habitation in which causation resides. I presume the author means that mind is causation, for he would hardly say that mind resides in itself.

124. You continue, "every phenomena in the universe is, and ever must be, but the effect of intellectual force, exerted by pure volition." Then the action of light, heat, cold, electricity, the winds, waves, volcanoes, planetary motion, &c., can be shown to be the effect of mind. When you have shown this you will have a deity as diffusive as nature, of whom others may know as much as priests, and no temple less than the universe can contain him.

125. You say, par. 127, matter both in molecules and masses is absolutely inert. This I deny. Matter is positively and relatively active, whether in the planetary, elementary or organic condition. And I deny that there is any power, human or superhuman, that can make it otherwise. Nature, in every known part, moves on in stern denial of the "vis inertia" and demonstration of eternal force.—The indestructible must ever be. That which must ever be, could it begin? Every part of nature presses with its own weight, on other parts, contiguous to themselves.

126. To say that matter did not move till put in action by mind, appears to me more than our minds can determine, unless guided by fancy, rather than facts. Mind! of which we never see a manifestation but through the agency of active organized matter, which organism is itself an evidence of anterior action. Shall mind say to the organization, I, the active, material or immaterial, put you, the inert elements, in motion, and organized you? But by what force can the immaterial move the inert material? Where in the universe is a fact, an example, on which to found our philosophy? And if the mind is material, what becomes of the inertia of matter?

127. Let us suppose mind existing prior to motion in the elements, how could mind know there was no motion? Simply that it did not perceive motion, a negative or no evidence. Mind must exist before motion to cause motion, and be co-extensive with matter to know that all matter was inert, which the mind of man is not. Therefore your assumption is not self-evident, nor is it sustained by proof.

128. For what fact shows mind to be the cause of all motion?—To cause motion, pre-existence is necessary. What fact, then, shows the pre-existence of mind, when organization is necessary for its every manifestation? Whoever undertakes to prove the pre-existence of mind must look before all organic existence for the first fact, or make a factless theory.

129. To suppose organization prior to motion in matter, would, I presume, be too great an absurdity for even those who say mind is the cause of matter as well as motion.

130. You say, par. 137, "the inertia of matter is now admitted by ALL scientific writers on general physics;" as many of the atheistical school still affect to DENY IT," &c. Mackintosh, in his "Electural Theory of the Universe," denies it, page 47. And I think Sir Richard Philipps also, but the contradiction shows the state of the author's mind.

131. You say that no unintelligent body can, under any circumstances, originate its own motion, or will ever move at all without the application of some extraneous impulse. Is the stone pressing on the earth, a proof of intelligence? or the air pressing on the stone, a proof of intelligence, innate or derived? or by what extraneous impulses are they moved, tracing the same to mind as the cause of their motion? In short, are attraction and repulsion or contraction and expansion entirely extraneous forces? or are they co-existent with, and inseparable from, matter?

132. How, from a negative condition of matter, can you infer, or that indicate, that mind is the cause of motion in matter? Are you not continually trying to prove a negative, which you told me did not admit of proof? How can active mind and passive matter unite to sustain harmonious action in life.

133. You continue, thus is the passivity of matter demonstrated as clearly as any problem in Euclid. (Par. 140.) You have only shown the relative or mechanical passivity of matter, not the passivity of matter in nature.

134. You say, par. 142, if the molecules tend in themselves to motion, such motion must be in one direction, north, south or some other course, or in all directions at once. As you would say, "a most sage conclusion." That if matter moves, it must move some way.

135. In par. 142 you speak of "free motion." How attraction and repulsion can co-exist with free motion, I leave you to explain. Is it not necessary nonsense?

136. You say, par. 144, "but if the tendency to move in the molecules be in all directions at the same time." Can a molecule contract and expand at the same time? the surface go to and from the centre at once? Philosophers are funny fellows sometimes.—Your billiard ball does not illustrate a force in all directions at the same time.

137. In reply to par. 145, why, "if the tendency to motion is among the masses, must indefinite expansion follow as a necessary consequence," I think, until you can make the surface and centre of a mass, or molecule, of the same temperature at the same time, contraction and expansion must continue eternally.

138. In reference to par. 146, why, if all matter was active, would all motion be of inconceivable velocity, and no resistance to retard it?

139. It has been suggested to me that if attraction did not influence matter, that no portion of matter could receive momentum.—Consequently no object could be made to go further than it was pushed or carried, and could not by any means be thrown, according to your theory, in par. 149. If so, your conclusion, in par. 150, will be equally false.

140. Whoever contended that change could be produced without motion? Your defiance, in par. 153, appears to me like Quixotic bombast.

141. In par. 154 you repeat, "matter cannot move itself, and therefore cannot move other matter without moving itself first of all.—Second, there can be no effect without motion. Then doth it follow irresistibly that every effect must be produced by mind?"—First, you affirm a negative which you say does not admit of proof, but from which you infer that mind does move matter. I think it would first be necessary to prove another negative, that nothing but mind and matter existed, so the conclusion does not follow.

142. You say, will, knowledge and desire are necessary to action. (Par. 156 and 157.) When you have shown it in wind, waves, planetary motion, oxidation, electricity, chemical affinity, &c., I shall be happy to admit the force of your arguments, but my belief requires evidence, not assertion, to sustain it. Your pen illustration only represents animal action and does not in any way explain the cause of motion in inanimate matter. You appear to me to confound the motion of the universe with mechanical motion and animal action, and suppose that you can explain one by the other, which I deny until sustained by positive evidence. So the conclusion falls with the premises.

143. In par. 159 you jump from an "intellectual force" to some indefinite intelligent being. Thence to the definite. This being, governing the universe, is whom we call God. With all the facility of a theological mountebank, for which you may have "supernatural authority," but certainly no natural.

And those who boast such high pretence,
Soar far above all common sense.

144. In par. 86 you say, "spirits are actually material." Then God is material, and consequently matter is active, and not inert.

Yours for the truth, EDWIN BURGESS.

MUSINGS.

MONEY.

Much of fear is often expressed that money, designed for the use of the church, will be misapplied. And as a reason for this fear, we are told that it was misapplied among the Brighamites. There is a great difference between the Brighamites and the saints.—There has not been lost one dollar of church funds during the administration of Pres. Strang, by any person whatever. Wm. Smith and Wm. Backenstos each took up subscriptions for the Herald, and kept back the money. But none have succeeded in doing it with church funds, and but two or three have sought to. The saints have some of them acted most strangely in this matter. God has commanded them to bring in their tithes and offerings to build a house unto him, &c., and they are just watching to see the work done, and standing by in fear, doing nothing right for fear somebody else will do something wrong.

A QUESTION.

Suppose all the saints withhold their tithes and offerings for fear they will not be properly applied, when will the Temple be built?

THE SIN.

Which is the greatest sin, for you to withhold from the Lord, or for another to waste that which is consecrated to him? Will you commit sin to prevent another man's doing it? Is it thus that you are your brother's keeper?

THE PROSPECT.

Backsliding saints! Thou who art afraid to trust those that the Lord sets up! God's work shall be done without you. While the faithful are enthroned in power, you shall have YOUR PART with the fearful and unbelieving, where you have chosen your companions. Faithful and believing servant of God! Brother of Jesus, fear not, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.

WHY HAVE WE LIVED ON HOPE DEFERRED?

Because we were unwilling that the Lord God Omnipotent should reign. Because we have had our own ways marked out, and were resolved to walk therein. Men have made themselves wise above God. They have feared continually, lest obedience to him should destroy those he promised to save.

By the way, what a broken reed we are willing to lean upon rather than on God! What a picture too we paint of our faith when expressing fears that some of the servants of God will go astray from righteousness; we say, but if he does "I will be a rebuker, and will cry aloud, and will not spare," as though a poor frail man, out of the purview of his priesthood, was more likely to keep himself pure, possibly from his own besetting sins, than one inspired with a holy calling, chosen of God for an example and rebuker, who has kept himself in all his life unspotted from the world. It is folly enough to prefer man before God. But lest our folly should not be manif est before all men, we are apt (if we go wrong) to prefer him

131. You say that no unintelligent body can, under any circumstances, originate its own motion, or will ever move at all without the application of some extraneous impulse. Is the stone pressing on the earth, a proof of intelligence? or the air pressing on the stone, a proof of intelligence, innate or derived? or by what extraneous impulses are they moved, tracing the same to mind as the cause of their motion? In short, are attraction and repulsion or contraction and expansion entirely extraneous forces? or are they co-existent with, and inseparable from, matter?

132. How, from a negative condition of matter, can you infer, or that indicate, that mind is the cause of motion in matter? Are you not continually trying to prove a negative, which you told me did not admit of proof? How can active mind and passive matter unite to sustain harmonious action in life.

133. You continue, thus is the passivity of matter demonstrated as clearly as any problem in Euclid. (Par. 140.) You have only shown the relative or mechanical passivity of matter, not the passivity of matter in nature.

134. You say, par. 142, if the molecules tend in themselves to motion, such motion must be in one direction, north, south or some other course, or in all directions at once. As you would say, "a most sage conclusion." That if matter moves, it must move some way.

135. In par. 142 you speak of "free motion." How attraction and repulsion can co-exist with free motion, I leave you to explain. Is it not necessary nonsense?

136. You say, par. 144, "but if the tendency to move in the molecules be in all directions at the same time." Can a molecule contract and expand at the same time? the surface go to and from the centre at once? Philosophers are funny fellows sometimes.—Your billiard ball does not illustrate a force in all directions at the same time.

137. In reply to par. 145, why, "if the tendency to motion is among the masses, must indefinite expansion follow as a necessary consequence," I think, until you can make the surface and centre of a mass, or molecule, of the same temperature at the same time, contraction and expansion must continue eternally.

138. In reference to par. 146, why, if all matter was active, would all motion be of inconceivable velocity, and no resistance to retard it?

139. It has been suggested to me that if attraction did not influence matter, that no portion of matter could receive momentum.—Consequently no object could be made to go further than it was pushed or carried, and could not by any means be thrown, according to your theory, in par. 149. If so, your conclusion, in par. 150, will be equally false.

140. Whoever contended that change could be produced without motion? Your defiance, in par. 153, appears to me like Quixotic bombast.

141. In par. 154 you repeat, "matter cannot move itself, and therefore cannot move other matter without moving itself first of all.—Second, there can be no effect without motion. Then doth it follow irresistibly that every effect must be produced by mind?"—First, you affirm a negative which you say does not admit of proof, but from which you infer that mind does move matter. I think it would first be necessary to prove another negative, that nothing but mind and matter existed, so the conclusion does not follow.

142. You say, will, knowledge and desire are necessary to action. (Par. 156 and 157.) When you have shown it in wind, waves, planetary motion, oxidation, electricity, chemical affinity, &c., I shall be happy to admit the force of your arguments, but my belief requires evidence, not assertion, to sustain it. Your pen illustration only represents animal action and does not in any way explain the cause of motion in inanimate matter. You appear to me to confound the motion of the universe with mechanical motion and animal action, and suppose that you can explain one by the other, which I deny until sustained by positive evidence. So the conclusion falls with the premises.

143. In par. 159 you jump from an "intellectual force" to some indefinite intelligent being. Thence to the definite. This being, governing the universe, is whom we call God. With all the facility of a theological mountebank, for which you may have "supernatural authority," but certainly no natural.

And those who boast such high pretence,
Soar far above all common sense.

144. In par. 86 you say, "spirits are actually material." Then God is material, and consequently matter is active, and not inert.

Yours for the truth, EDWIN BURGESS.

MUSINGS.

MONEY.

Much of fear is often expressed that money, designed for the use of the church, will be misapplied. And as a reason for this fear, we are told that it was misapplied among the Brighamites. There is a great difference between the Brighamites and the saints.—There has not been lost one dollar of church funds during the administration of Pres. Strang, by any person whatever. Wm. Smith and Wm. Backenstos each took up subscriptions for the Herald, and kept back the money. But none have succeeded in doing it with church funds, and but two or three have sought to. The saints have some of them acted most strangely in this matter. God has commanded them to bring in their tithes and offerings to build a house unto him, &c., and they are just watching to see the work done, and standing by in fear, doing nothing right for fear somebody else will do something wrong.

A QUESTION.

Suppose all the saints withhold their tithes and offerings for fear they will not be properly applied, when will the Temple be built?

THE SIN.

Which is the greatest sin, for you to withhold from the Lord, or for another to waste that which is consecrated to him? Will you commit sin to prevent another man's doing it? Is it thus that you are your brother's keeper?

THE PROSPECT.

Backsliding saints! Thou who art afraid to trust those that the Lord sets up! God's work shall be done without you. While the faithful are enthroned in power, you shall have YOUR PART with the fearful and unbelieving, where you have chosen your companions. Faithful and believing servant of God! Brother of Jesus, fear not, it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom.

WHY HAVE WE LIVED ON HOPE DEFERRED?

Because we were unwilling that the Lord God Omnipotent should reign. Because we have had our own ways marked out, and were resolved to walk therein. Men have made themselves wise above God. They have feared continually, lest obedience to him should destroy those he promised to save.

By the way, what a broken reed we are willing to lean upon rather than on God! What a picture too we paint of our faith when expressing fears that some of the servants of God will go astray from righteousness; we say, but if he does "I will be a rebuker, and will cry aloud, and will not spare," as though a poor frail man, out of the purview of his priesthood, was more likely to keep himself pure, possibly from his own besetting sins, than one inspired with a holy calling, chosen of God for an example and rebuker, who kept himself in all his life unspotted from the world. It is folly enough to prefer man before God. But lest our folly should not be to manif est before all men, we are apt (if we go wrong) to prefer him who has been found in the fault to him who has not. To borrow a homely saying from every body's mouth, the best way is just as good as any.

TALE BEARING.

It is a common practice with apostates (and with many who would not like to be called so) to tell all manner of tales, both true and false, upon those who are and have been Mormons. The saints do a most foolish thing when they return them in kind. Some Elders have gone from branch to branch of the church telling the faults and immoralities, real or supposed, of the Brighamites. What good has it ever done? Has it inspired one soul with faith? If any one will not believe in the Lord's anointed upon the direct and positive evidence of his authority, without reference to any body's moral character, he will not believe by proving that somebody else is a scamp. And if he did, such faith would not save him. He is no better than the salt which has lost its savor. We get enough poor material in the church at the best, and do not need to seek especially for that which is fit only to be trodden under foot of men.

THE CONSEQUENCE.

Men of the world make no distinction between saints and apostates. They know us all by the name Mormon. Whatever character we give to each other, they will give to the whole of us. If we convince them for instance that the Brighamites are a vicious, abandoned race, they will believe that all Mormons are such. Thus the infamy we prepare for them, we must, in a large degree, suffer ourselves. Brighamite Elders throughout the land have striven to scandalize us by the vilest means, and have continually met with the taunt, "Mormon! Mormon! when rogues fall out, honest men learn the truth." Shall we, by imitating so vicious an example, draw upon ourselves the same mischieveous results? God forbid.

CALIFORNIA.

The New York Herald gives a list of forty-seven associations formed in the United States for emigration to the gold regions.—The members of these forty-seven companies number two thousand five hundred. Other companies are organizing almost daily in all parts of the Union. Most of them adopt strict regulations, which, if adhered to, will be likely to insure salutary results.

In the papers we received to-day we find a few lines in relation to California and its gold which may prove interesting to many of our readers. Mr. Ten Eyck, American commissioner at the Sandwich Islands, writes home as follows as to the state of society in the gold region in a letter dated 6th August :—

"I have visited the diggings, some forty miles along what is called the American Fork of the Sacramento; almost every yard is occupied, and all are getting out quantities of ore. I have about five dollars worth of gold dust, which I washed out myself in the course of two or three hours. I shall keep it of course, as a momento of what I myself have done in gold digging. The effect of this discovery will be bad for the morals of the country, and will ruin all its prospects as an agricultural and farming country. I would not go through what I have to see the country, and I would not settle down to live in it for all the gold in the mines. The mode of life is horrible, and a more dissipated and immoral set of people I never saw. People are flocking in here from all parts of the coast, and as soon as the news reaches foreign ports the worst of their population will emigrate hither. I pity any decent white man who may live in this region six months hence."

The Kennebec Journal is indebted to a friend for the following list of necessaries with which a Salem gentleman, now in California, writes that each individual proceeding to that country, by way of Cape Horn, should be provided on his passage.

List of necessaries for each individual for one year.

Ten bbls. bread, or equivalent of crackers, in tins if possible, or in spirit casks; 10 lbs salt, 40 lbs butter, well worked or good cheese, well put up in brandy; coffee, sugar, tea, and spices, &c., as if for a long voyage at sea; 3 pairs of coarse cotton pantaloons, 3 pairs of coarse woolen pantaloons; 2 coarse woolen coats; 2 coarse woolen overcoats; 2 coarse cotten coats; half dozen pair of common boots, packed so as to exclude sea air, which moulds them. Other clothing mostly thin, for a year's wearing. Take some simple house furniture if possible.

The New York Globe of the 24th inst., has the following notice of a volunteer California regiment, which, it is evident, assumes a military organization for no other purpose than to get itself sent out to the Gold region at the expense of the government :—

The largest movement for California which we have yet noticed is a regiment now being organized, and who intend to offer themselves to government for the term of three years to serve in the gold regions of California, with a view of preserving public order. They propose to clothe themselves and take their pay from the mines, but to be sent to California at the public expense and found in arms, medicines and munitions of war by the government. Gen. McLellan, of Texas, has been elected Colonel, and Gen. James Arlington Bennet, of Long Island, lieut. colonel; both unanimously. The roll and memorial to congress is being signed at the Exchange Hotel, 133 Fulton street, and is fast filling up.

A New York letter of the 24th has the following notice of the intended movement of a band of ruffians, and blackguards towards El Dorado. It is stated that about fifty prize fighters and other characters of that class are to leave this port for California in two weeks after the fight between Hyer and Sullivan, and that they are loud in their boastings of what they will do when they arrive at the 'diggins.' They will find plenty of respectable men there who will not suffer them to do as they please

ICE.—The intrinsic value of ice, like that of metals, depends on the investigation of an answer. That is to say, a cubic foot of Lower Canada ice, is infinitely more cold than a cubic foot of Upper Canada ice, which contains more cold than a cubic foot of Wenham ice, which contains infinitely more cold than a cubic foot of English ice; and thus, although each of those four cubic feet of ice has precisely the same shape, as summer approaches, diminish in value; that is to say, they each gradually lose a proportion of their cold, until, long before the Lower Canada ice has melted, the English ice has been converted into luke warm water.—Ex. Paper.

☞ Somebody, who writes more truthfully than poetically, says: "An angel without money is not thought so much of now a days as a devil with a bag full of guineas."

☞ Order is the sanity of the mind, the health of the body, the peace of the city, the security of the State. As the beams to a house, as the bones to the microcosm of man, so is order to all things.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a regular Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Voree, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of April next; and also on Beaver Island on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of July next. It is expected that every member of the First Presidency and of the Twelve will attend one or both of these Conferences. By the President.

GILBERT WATSON, RECORDER.

ESTRAY.

Came into the inclosure of the subscriber about the 25th Feb. last an iron gray steer; will be two years old next spring. The owner is requested to pay expenses and take him away.

Voree, March 1st, 1849. JAMES J. STRANG.

who has been found in the fault to him who has not. To borrow a homely saying from every body's mouth, the best way is just as good as any.

TALE BEARING.

It is a common practice with apostates (and with many who would not like to be called so) to tell all manner of tales, both true and false, upon those who are and have been Mormons. The saints do a most foolish thing when they return them in kind. Some Elders have gone from branch to branch of the church telling the faults and immoralities, real or supposed, of the Brighamites. What good has it ever done? Has it inspired one soul with faith? If any one will not believe in the Lord's anointed upon the direct and positive evidence of his authority, without reference to any body's moral character, he will not believe by proving that somebody else is a scamp. And if he did, such faith would not save him. He is no better than the salt which has lost its savor. We get enough poor material in the church at the best, and do not need to seek especially for that which is fit only to be trodden under foot of men.

THE CONSEQUENCE.

Men of the world make no distinction between saints and apostates. They know us all by the name Mormon. Whatever character we give to each other, they will give to the whole of us. If we convince them for instance that the Brighamites are a vicious, abandoned race, they will believe that all Mormons are such. Thus the infamy we prepare for them, we must, in a large degree, suffer ourselves. Brighamite Elders throughout the land have striven to scandalize us by the vilest means, and have continually met with the taunt, "Mormon! Mormon! when rogues fall out, honest men learn the truth." Shall we, by imitating so vicious an example, draw upon ourselves the same mischieveous results? God forbid.

CALIFORNIA.

The New York Herald gives a list of forty-seven associations formed in the United States for emigration to the gold regions.—The members of these forty-seven companies number two thousand five hundred. Other companies are organizing almost daily in all parts of the Union. Most of them adopt strict regulations, which, if adhered to, will be likely to insure salutary results.

In the papers we received to-day we find a few lines in relation to California and its gold which may prove interesting to many of our readers. Mr. Ten Eyck, American commissioner at the Sandwich Islands, writes home as follows as to the state of society in the gold region in a letter dated 6th August:—

"I have visited the diggings, some forty miles along what is called the American Fork of the Sacramento; almost every yard is occupied, and all are getting out quantities of ore. I have about five dollars worth of gold dust, which I washed out myself in the course of two or three hours. I shall keep it of course, as a momento of what I myself have done in gold digging. The effect of this discovery will be bad for the morals of the country, and will ruin all its prospects as an agricultural and farming country. I would not go through what I have to see the country, and I would not settle down to live in it for all the gold in the mines. The mode of life is horrible, and a more dissipated and immoral set of people I never saw. People are flocking in here from all parts of the coast, and as soon as the news reaches foreign ports the worst of their population will emigrate hither. I pity any decent white man who may live in this region six months hence."

The Kennebec Journal is indebted to a friend for the following list of necessaries with which a Salem gentleman, now in California, writes that each individual proceeding to that country, by way of Cape Horn, should be provided on his passage.

List of necessaries for each individual for one year.

Ten bbls. bread, or equivalent of crackers, in tins if possible, or in spirit casks; 10 lbs salt, 40 lbs butter, well worked or good cheese, well put up in brandy; coffee, sugar, tea, and spices, &c., as if for a long voyage at sea; 3 pairs of coarse cotton pantaloons, 3 pairs of coarse woolen pantaloons; 2 coarse woolen coats; 2 coarse woolen overcoats; 2 coarse cotten coats; half dozen pair of common boots, packed so as to exclude sea air, which moulds them. Other clothing mostly thin, for a year's wearing. Take some simple house furniture if possible.

The New York Globe of the 24th inst., has the following notice of a volunteer California regiment, which, it is evident, assumes a military organization for no other purpose than to get itself sent out to the Gold region at the expense of the government:—

The largest movement for California which we have yet noticed is a regiment now being organized, and who intend to offer themselves to government for the term of three years to serve in the gold regions of California, with a view of preserving public order. They propose to clothe themselves and take their pay from the mines, but to be sent to California at the public expense and found in arms, medicines and munitions of war by the government. Gen. McLellan, of Texas, has been elected Colonel, and Gen. James Arlington Bennet, of Long Island, lieut. colonel; both unanimously. The roll and memorial to congress is being signed at the Exchange Hotel, 133 Fulton street, and is fast filling up.

A New York letter of the 24th has the following notice of the intended movement of a band of ruffians, and blackguards towards El Dorado. It is stated that about fifty prize fighters and other characters of that class are to leave this port for California in two weeks after the fight between Hyer and Sullivan, and that they are loud in their boastings of what they will do when they arrive at the 'diggins.' They will find plenty of respectable men there who will not suffer them to do as they please

ICE.—The intrinsic value of ice, like that of metals, depends on the investigation of an answer. That is to say, a cubic foot of Lower Canada ice, is infinitely more cold than a cubic foot of Upper Canada ice, which contains more cold than a cubic foot of Wenham ice, which contains infinitely more cold than a cubic foot of English ice; and thus, although each of those four cubic feet of ice has precisely the same shape, as summer approaches, diminish in value; that is to say, they each gradually lose a proportion of their cold, until, long before the Lower Canada ice has melted, the English ice has been converted into luke warm water.—Ex. Paper.

☞ Somebody, who writes more truthfully than poetically, says: "An angel without money is not thought so much of now a days as a devil with a bag full of guineas."

☞ Order is the sanity of the mind, the health of the body, the peace of the city, the security of the State. As the beams to a house, as the bones to the microcosm of man, so is order to all things.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a regular Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Voree, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of April next; and also on Beaver Island on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of July next. It is expected that every member of the First Presidency and of the Twelve will attend one or both of these Conferences. By the President.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

ESTRAY.

Came into the inclosure of the subscriber about the 25th Feb. last an iron gray steer; will be two years old next spring. The owner is requested to pay expenses and take him away.

Voree, March 1st, 1849. JAMES J. STRANG.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 1.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, MARCH 22, 1849. [WHOLE No. 117.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 10.

Voree, March 21st, 1849.

SIR:—Your letter number five came duly to hand, in which you call my number five nearly a copy, &c., as though that was an important discovery. If you will take pains to look back to paragraph nine you will find that I stated the same thing in advance. There are many hundreds who have heard all this from me, before it was ever printed. But you will readily understand that the question between us is not the authorship, but the validity of the argument.

236. Your regret that you have not a ready made answer is quite unavailing. And it always will be. Like the demonstrations in Euclid, it will forever remain unanswered. Even Mr. Burgess seems to feel the force of this truth, for he has not made the slightest efforts to answer the argument contained therein.

237. In that article I have shown by a set of demonstrations as clear and as certain as ever were produced in MATHEMATICAL SCIENCE, 1st, that MATTER BOTH IN MOLECULES AND IN MASSES IS ABSOLUTELY INERT, (par. 137 to 150;) 2d, that NO EFFECT CAN OCCUR IN THE MATERIAL WORLD WITHOUT MOTION, (par. 151 to 153;) 3d, that MIND AND NOTHING ELSE CAN PRODUCE MOTION, (par. 155 to 158.)—And as motion does truly and undeniably exist throughout the universe, the CONCLUSION IS IRRESISTIBLE THAT MIND GOVERNS ALL. The word God admits of no better definition than "the almighty mind," or "the mind which governs all."

238. Not a single one of these points have you attempted to answer. You have passed the argument as a vast and impregnable fortress, not to be assaulted, besieged or mined, but convenient to throw a few squibs at as you pass on at a respectful distance.

239. As a debater you are bound to show either, 1st, that matter has the power to set itself in motion, or, 2d, that effects can occur in the material world without motion, or, 3d, that something else both can and does produce the motions of the material world besides mind, or, 4th, that some inferior mind, which is not almighty, is capable of producing the motions actually occuring in the material world; or, failing to do either of these, as an honest man, SEEKING FOR TRUTH, YOU ARE BOUND TO YIELD THE POINT IN ISSUE.

240. True, you have ASSERTED (par. 125) that "matter is positively and relatively active." But you have not proved or attempted to prove either that it did or that it could have originated its own motion, or that its motion could originate in aught but mind.

241. In the same paragraph you say, "every part of nature presses with its own weight on other parts contiguous." For the sake of the argument allow it. How long will one part of nature press upon another contiguous part which bears it without being moved, before this pressure will produce motion? Forever. Therefore this pressure, if it really exists according to your idea, can never produce motion.

242. In the preceding paragraph you have objected that if mind is the true causation. then the action of light, heat, cold, electricity, the wind, waves, volcanoes, planetary motion, &c., can be shown to be the effect of mind. True, I have already shown it by showing that mind, and nothing else, is capable of producing such effects.—And I expect in the further progress of this discussion to go more particularly into additional proof of the same truths, though what I have given remains unanswered.

243. In par. 131 you ask, "are attraction and repulsion, or contraction and expansion entirely extraneous forces? or are they co-existent with, and inseparable from, matter?" It is often easier to ask questions than to answer them. You are now on ground where it behooves you to show some fact or principle, rather than to merely interrogate.

244. However if it is any satisfaction to you I have no objection to answer. It is a rule generally subscribed to among the learned, that matter cannot act where it is not. Yet matter, either by innate or by extraneous force, does attract where it is not. If you say it is by innate force, it behooves you to show how it can act where it is not. If you say by extraneous force, what does that force reside in?

245. Again, if repulsion is an innate quality of matter, it behooves you to show how light passes through transparent bodies, or more particularly how it exists where other matter is. For if repulsion be an innate property of matter, then glass and all other matter must repel light, so that it could only pass as does water through the pores.

246. If attraction is an essential or innate property of matter, light would be subject to its operation as well as air, earth and water. There could be no imponderable elements.

247. I do not infer that mind is the cause of motion from a negative condition of matter, as you charge in par. 132. I prove it by showing that nothing but mind can produce motion, and that mind can. You ask me, "are you not continually trying to prove a negative, which you told me did not admit of proof?" I do not recollect of telling you any such thing. Most negatives do not admit of proof, but some do; as that part is not equal to the whole, and that three times three are not equal to ten.

248. In par. 133 and 142 you claim a distinction between animal and inanimate motion, which you have not proved, but what conclusions you draw from it I cannot understand. In 133 you certainly concede the point of the mechanic passivity of matter. In 142 you also yield the point as to animal motion, and say I have confounded these with the motions of the universe. Perhaps you will undertake to unravel this mystery and show how motion exists without the exercise of intellectual, animal or mechanical power.

249. The "necessary nonsense" you speak of in par. 135 all belongs to you, and in my opinion is not likely to pine for want of company. I have not spoken of "free motion," "co-existent with attraction." A very near neighbor to your necessary nonsense is the next paragraph, where you suppose that an object to move in all directions must both contract and expand at the same time. If it

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 1.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, MARCH 22, 1849. [WHOLE No. 117.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 10.

Voree, March 21st, 1849.

SIR:—Your letter number five came duly to hand, in which you call my number five nearly a copy, &c., as though that was an important discovery. If you will take pains to look back to paragraph nine you will find that I stated the same thing in advance. There are many hundreds who have heard all this from me, before it was ever printed. But you will readily understand that the question between us is not the authorship, but the validity of the argument.

236. Your regret that you have not a ready made answer is quite unavailing. And it always will be. Like the demonstrations in Euclid, it will forever remain unanswered. Even Mr. Burgess seems to feel the force of this truth, for he has not made the slightest efforts to answer the argument contained therein.

237. In that article I have shown by a set of demonstrations as clear and as certain as ever were produced in MATHEMATICAL SCIENCE, 1st, that MATTER BOTH IN MOLECULES AND IN MASSES IS ABSOLUTELY INERT, (par. 137 to 150;) 2d, that NO EFFECT CAN OCCUR IN THE MATERIAL WORLD WITHOUT MOTION, (par. 151 to 153;) 3d, that MIND AND NOTHING ELSE CAN PRODUCE MOTION, (par. 155 to 158.)—And as motion does truly and undeniably exist throughout the universe, the CONCLUSION IS IRRESISTIBLE THAT MIND GOVERNS ALL. The word God admits of no better definition than "the almighty mind," or "the mind which governs all."

238. Not a single one of these points have you attempted to answer. You have passed the argument as a vast and impregnable fortress, not to be assaulted, beseiged or mined, but convenient to throw a few squibs at as you pass on at a respectful distance.

239. As a debater you are bound to show either, 1st, that matter has the power to set itself in motion, or, 2d, that effects can occur in the material world without motion, or, 3d, that something else both can and does produce the motions of the material world besides mind, or, 4th, that some inferior mind, which is not almighty, is capable of producing the motions actually occuring in the material world; or, failing to do either of these, as an honest man, SEEKING FOR TRUTH, YOU ARE BOUND TO YIELD THE POINT IN ISSUE.

240. True, you have ASSERTED (par. 125) that "matter is positively and relatively active." But you have not proved or attempted to prove either that it did or that it could have originated its own motion, or that its motion could originate in aught but mind.

241. In the same paragraph you say, "every part of nature presses with its own weight on other parts contiguous." For the sake of the argument allow it. How long will one part of nature press upon another contiguous part which bears it without being moved, before this pressure will produce motion? Forever. Therefore this pressure, if it really exists according to your idea, can never produce motion.

242. In the preceding paragraph you have objected that if mind is the true causation, then the action of light, heat, cold, electricity, the wind, waves, volcanoes, planetary motion, &c., can be shown to be the effect of mind. True, I have already shown it by showing that mind, and nothing else, is capable of producing such effects.—And I expect in the further progress of this discussion to go more particularly into additional proof of the same truths, though what I have given remains unanswered.

243. In par. 131 you ask, "are attraction and repulsion, or contraction and expansion entirely extraneous forces? or are they co-existent with, and inseparable from, matter?" It is often easier to ask questions than to answer them. You are now on ground where it behooves you to show some fact or principle, rather than to merely interrogate.

244. However if it is any satisfaction to you I have no objection to answer. It is a rule generally subscribed to among the learned, that matter cannot act where it is not, Yet matter, either by innate or by extraneous force, does attract where it is not. If you say it is by innate force, it behooves you to show how it can act where it is not. If you say by extraneous force, what does that force reside in?

245. Again, if repulsion is an innate quality of matter, it behooves you to show how light passes through transparent bodies, or more particularly how it exists where other matter is. For if repulsion be an innate property of matter, then glass and all other matter must repel light, so that it could only pass as does water through the pores.

246. If attraction is an essential or innate property of matter, light would be subject to its operation as well as air, earth and water. There could be no imponderable elements.

247. I do not infer that mind is the cause of motion from a negative condition of matter, as you charge in par. 132. I prove it by showing that nothing but mind can produce motion, and that mind can. You ask me, "are you not continually trying to prove a negative, which you told me did not admit of proof?" I do not recollect of telling you any such thing. Most negatives do not admit of proof, but some do; as that part is not equal to the whole, and that three times three are not equal to ten.

248. In par. 133 and 142 you claim a distinction between animal and inanimate motion, which you have not proved, but what conclusions you draw from it I cannot understand. In 133 you certainly concede the point of the mechanic passivity of matter. In 142 you also yield the point as to animal motion, and say I have confounded these with the motions of the universe. Perhaps you will undertake to unravel this mystery and show how motion exists without the exercise of intellectual, animal or mechanical power.

249. The "necessary nonsense" you speak of in par. 135 all belongs to you, and in my opinion is not likely to pine for want of company. I have not spoken of "free motion," "co-existent with attraction." A very near neighbor to your necessary nonsense is the next paragraph, where you suppose that an object to move in all directions must both contract and expand at the same time. If it moves from its centre out every way, that is motion in every direction.

250. In par 137 you have attempted to attribute motion to change in heat and cold. But you have not accounted for these changes. You have not told by what means the motion that produces them was produced. In answer to your question, why, if inertia be denied, would all motion be of inconceivable velocity? I answer, because there would be no resistance to it.

251. The conclusion, in my par. 150, does not in any sense depend on the theory in par. 149. But the theory in 149 is well sustained, and you have not given and cannot give one reason against it. The very idea of inertia involves that of the continuation of unresisted motion. This idea is so very clear that I did not expect even the dogmatic and skeptical Mr. Burgess to deny it. And as you have thrown yourself behind a cover, by saying, "it has been suggested," possibly you do not expect a doubt that you dare not embrace, to count as an argument in your favor.

252. I have a remark to make on par. 141 which the printer reminds me there is not room for now, but it will come in good time hereafter. Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

TO THE PROPHET JAMES J. STRANG—A QUESTION.

How am I to understand these words of Jesus Christ, viz: Matt. xxi. 21? Or, more particularly, I want an answer to these words, which I will now name. What did Christ mean when he said to his disciples, "If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye should say unto this sycamore tree, Be thou plucked up by the roots, and be planted in the sea, and it should obey you?" Am I to understand that, if by faith I cannot pluck up a tree by the roots with a word and plant it in the sea, that therefore I am to conclude that my faith is less than a grain of mustard seed in size, weight, or value, or power, or perfection? It appears to me that reference must be had to the perfection of the seed. And if so, I do not understand in what its perfection consists, unless in its being a perfect product of nature, or nature's God, brought about by certain fixed laws, without a mixture of art. And if so, as art cannot originate a mustard seed, but only prepare the soil and prevent the weeds, &c., so faith, being the free gift of God, is it not as perfect in its first bestowment and smallest part as in its increase? I confess I do not understand the expression. I do not know as I have the least particle of that faith which was once delivered to the saints, by this rule of testing it. I have learned a very little in the things of this world, such as are common, but how to work by the word of faith which was with the ancients a principle of power, to me remains to be learned. I can ask the Lord to increase my faith, if I have any true faith in possession, whereby I can believe that he will do it.—But how can I ask in faith if I have no faith given to me without asking, or previous to my asking? I think I can see how the first rays of light get into the soul, whereby conviction is produced in the mind, the very nature of which is to produce credence or belief. I can conceive that a ray of light is just as natural and as perfect, but far smaller than a mustard seed, else it could not steal through the pores of window glass. I am prepared to believe also that light can be astonishingly increased, even to ineffable or inexpressible, and its effect with the honest produce correct knowledge and consequent power. But how an ignorant man can work miracles by faith—no science—but that which is superhuman can solve—truly this belongs to the mystery of godliness. And who can believe that such things ever were performed by men, and still deny the same to be possible now and claim consistency, OR EVEN SOUND SENSE?

ON FAITH.

BY JOHN E. PAGE.

Answer to the foregoing.

SIR:—I begin with the idea presented in your last sentence: "And who can believe that such (miraculous) things ever were performed by men, and still deny the same to be possible now and claim consistency, OR EVEN SOUND SENSE?" True, it is inconsistent to pretend to believe in the existence of the God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, the Prophets and Apostles, and not to believe he possesses the same perfections and power now that he ever did. It is also inconsistent to believe that it requires anything less to constitute a saint, or saints, or a christian church, now than was required in the days of the ancient saints, or that any other faith will constitute a saint or church now than then.

You ask, "Am I to understand that, if, by faith, I cannot pluck up a tree by the roots with a word and plant it in the sea, that therefore I am to conclude that my faith is less than a grain of mustard seed in size, weight, or value, or power, or perfection?" Sir,—It implies that your faith is so much less than a grain of mustard seed, that you have just no faith at all in that thing. Christ says that "all things are possible to them that believe." Faith is always based on intelligence. Where there is intelligence, there is faith. Where there is no intelligence, there is no faith. Consequently you, having acquired the art of reading or writing, do both read and write. And if you had never had faith to believe you could acquire that art, you would not have tried to obtain it; but having faith to try, you made the necessary effort and prevailed in obtaining your object. Although you had faith in that, you may not have even one jot of faith to pluck up a tree by the roots. And why, you may ask? Because you have not acquired the necessary intelligence to know how it is done.

As far as "size" is concerned in the principle of faith, as yet I know of no rule by which its square or cube is ascertained, it being a principle entertained in our mental (not our physical) powers.—Undoubtedly Christ referred his disciples to a mustard seed by the way of comparison, signifying that if they had any faith at all in any matter or thing, that thing they could do. But one thing is certain, and that is this: where there is no intelligence or understanding how a thing is possible, that thing is impossible to him that lacks that intelligence.

It is equally certain that all men perform all and every thing that they have faith to believe is possible to them. But the grand difficulty with the most of men is to understand what is possible. By faith Noah built an ark, believing it was possible for him to do so. By faith an Alexander conquered the world, believing it possible for him to do so. The eleventh chapter of Hebrews gives us numerous examples of men who "subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword," &c., &c. And all this because they had intelligence enough to understand how it was possible to do so. Men sow because they have intelligence enough to understand that by doing so they shall in due time reap, if they faint not; therefore they sow in faith, believing they shall reap. And, finally, men do all things that they have an interest in, that they believe is possible for them to do. And never yet did a sane man undertake to do that which he did not have intelligence enough to believe was possible for him to do.

As far as the "weight" of faith is concerned I have not intelligence enough to know that gravity has anything to do with it, consequently I never had faith enough to try to weigh faith in the scales of apothecary or averdepois standards.

As far as "value" is concerned, the value is incalculable, I have not intelligence enough to find names enough for numerical figures expressive of pounds, shillings and pence to express its value.—Therefore I never undertook to count its value in gold coin. Sufficient for me to believe that there is nothing in heaven, earth or hell worth anything without it. God works by faith, himself believing moves from its centre out every way, that is motion in every direction.

5331

250. In par 137 you have attempted to attribute motion to change in heat and cold. But you have not accounted for these changes. You have not told by what means the motion that produces them was produced. In answer to your question, why, if inertia be denied, would all motion be of inconceivable velocity? I answer, because there would be no resistance to it.

251. The conclusion, in my par. 150, does not in any sense depend on the theory in par. 149. But the theory in 149 is well sustained, and you have not given and cannot give one reason against it. The very idea of inertia involves that of the continuation of unresisted motion. This idea is so very clear that I did not expect even the dogmatic and skeptical Mr. Burgess to deny it. And as you have thrown yourself behind a cover, by saying, "it has been suggested," possibly you do not expect a doubt that you dare not embrace, to count as an argument in your favor.

252. I have a remark to make on par. 141 which the printer reminds me there is not room for now, but it will come in good time hereafter. Truly and sincerely, JAMES J. STRANG.

TO THE PROPHET JAMES J. STRANG—A QUESTION.

How am I to understand these words of Jesus Christ, viz.: Matt. xxi. 21? Or, more particularly, I want an answer to these words, which I will now name. What did Christ mean when he said to his disciples, "If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye should say unto this sycamore tree, Be thou plucked up by the roots, and be planted in the sea, and it should obey you?" Am I to understand that, if by faith I cannot pluck up a tree by the roots with a word and plant it in the sea, that therefore I am to conclude that my faith is less than a grain of mustard seed in size, weight, or value, or power, or perfection? It appears to me that reference must be had to the perfection of the seed. And if so, I do not understand in what its perfection consists, unless in its being a perfect product of nature, or nature's God; brought about by certain fixed laws, without a mixture of art. And if so, as art cannot originate a mustard seed, but only prepare the soil and prevent the weeds, &c., so faith, being the free gift of God, is it not as perfect in its first bestowment and smallest part as in its increase? I confess I do not understand the expression. I do not know as I have the least particle of that faith which was once delivered to the saints, by this rule of testing it. I have learned a very little in the things of this world, such as are common, but how to work by the word of faith which was with the ancients a principle of power, to me remains to be learned. I can ask the Lord to increase my faith, if I have any true faith in possession, whereby I can believe that he will do it.—But how can I ask in faith if I have no faith given to me without asking, or previous to my asking? I think I can see how the first rays of light get into the soul, whereby conviction is produced in the mind, the very nature of which is to produce credence or belief. I can conceive that a ray of light is just as natural and as perfect, but far smaller than a mustard seed, else it could not steal through the pores of window glass. I am prepared to believe also that light can be astonishingly increased, even to ineffable or inexpressible, and its effect with the honest produce correct knowledge and consequent power. But how an ignorant man can work miracles by faith—no science—but that which is superhuman can solve—truly this belongs to the mystery of godliness. And who can believe that such things ever were performed by men, and still deny the same to be possible now and claim consistency, OR EVEN SOUND SENSE?

ON FAITH.

BY JOHN E. PAGE.

Answer to the foregoing.

SIR:—I begin with the idea presented in your last sentence: "And who can believe that such (miraculous) things ever were performed by men, and still deny the same to be possible now and claim consistency, OR EVEN SOUND SENSE?" True, it is inconsistent to pretend to believe in the existence of the God of Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, the Prophets and Apostles, and not to believe he possesses the same perfections and power now that he ever did. It is also inconsistent to believe that it requires anything less to constitute a saint, or saints, or a christian church, now than was required in the days of the ancient saints, or that any other faith will constitute a saint or church now than then.

You ask, "Am I to understand that, if, by faith, I cannot pluck up a tree by the roots with a word and plant it in the sea, that therefore I am to conclude that my faith is less than a grain of mustard seed in size, weight, or value, or power, or perfection?" Sir,—It implies that your faith is so much less than a grain of mustard seed, that you have just no faith at all in that thing. Christ says that "all things are possible to them that believe." Faith is always based on intelligence. Where there is intelligence, there is faith. Where there is no intelligence, there is no faith. Consequently you, having acquired the art of reading or writing, do both read and write. And if you had never had faith to believe you could acquire that art, you would not have tried to obtain it; but having faith to try, you made the necessary effort and prevailed in obtaining your object. Although you had faith in that, you may not have even one jot of faith to pluck up a tree by the roots. And why, you may ask? Because you have not acquired the necessary intelligence to know how it is done.

As far as "size" is concerned in the principle of faith, as yet I know of no rule by which its square or cube is ascertained, it being a principle entertained in our mental (not our physical) powers.—Undoubtedly Christ referred his disciples to a mustard seed by the way of comparison, signifying that if they had any faith at all in any matter or thing, that thing they could do. But one thing is certain, and that is this: where there is no intelligence or understanding how a thing is possible, that thing is impossible to him that lacks that intelligence.

It is equally certain that all men perform all and every thing that they have faith to believe is possible to them. But the grand difficulty with the most of men is to understand what is possible. By faith Noah built an ark, believing it was possible for him to do so. By faith an Alexander conquered the world, believing it possible for him to do so. The eleventh chapter of Hebrews gives us numerous examples of men who "subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword," &c., &c. And all this because they had intelligence enough to understand how it was possible to do so. Men sow because they have intelligence enough to understand that by doing so they shall in due time reap, if they faint not; therefore they sow in faith, believing they shall reap. And, finally, men do all things that they have an interest in, that they believe is possible for them to do. And never yet did a sane man undertake to do that which he did not have intelligence enough to believe was possible for him to do.

As far as the "weight" of faith is concerned I have not intelligence enough to know that gravity has anything to do with it, consequently I never had faith enough to try to weigh faith in the scales of apothecary or averdepois standards.

As far as "value" is concerned, the value is incalculable, I have not intelligence enough to find names enough for numerical figures expressive of pounds, shillings and pence to express its value.—Therefore I never undertook to count its value in gold coin. Sufficient for me to believe that there is nothing in heaven, earth or hell worth anything without it. God works by faith, himself believing he can work, therefore the world on which we stand was framed, and the planets which bespangle the heavens are the works of the Almighty's faith. Without faith God, angels nor men could not act. Therefore all the importance there is in all things owes its origin to faith and intelligence, they being inseparably connected.—Without intelligence there can be no faith, and without faith there cannot anything be done. Therefore it would require an eternity of figures to express its value.

As far as the "power" of faith is concerned, that cannot be tested only by those who have it in exercise; it always being limited by the amount of intelligence each person possesses. I had faith to believe I could build a house, therefore I made the necessary effort and did so. I do not possess faith enough to try to make a watch, because I do not possess the necessary amount of intelligence to understand how to do it. I have faith enough to preach what is called "Mormonism," because I have intelligence enough to know that it has reduced Bible intelligence to an exact inductive science, and the whole book is understood by first acquiring a correct understanding of its first principles or rudiments. By faith I believe that by progression I can add to the stock of my intelligence until I can understand how, by faith, Moses divided the waters of the Red Sea, or how Joshua threw down the walls of Jericho, or how to call fire from heaven to consume a sacrifice, when necessary.

The power of faith is like its value; it is unbounded in its nature. All things that are done by God, men or angels are done by it, and nothing without it. As far as the "perfection" of faith is concerned, the principle itself is as perfect in a small degree as in a larger. For an illustration, the fact that two and two make four is as perfect an idea, as far as it goes, in the science of mathematics as the idea that twice five hundred thousand make a million, although the former number is easier comprehended by the less intelligent mind than the latter.

An imperfect or false faith is always founded in ignorance, or the want of true intelligence. Consequently an imperfect faith arose in our world which caused a great alarm among the ignorant, they believing the world would come to an end in 1843. Therefore, for the want of true biblical intelligence, thousands, yea millions worth of time and money was expended to but little avail for the good of mankind.

He that has any true faith at all, has as true faith as God. The only difference is in the amount. He that carries one sixpence may carry as perfect a coin and as perfect metal as he that carries a million of dollars. The only difference is in the amount obtained.—Where there is the most intelligence there is the soil for the greatest product of faith. And as all intelligence emenates from God, so faith is the "gift of God."

There is such a thing as an abuse of faith. The thief and robber do their villainous acts, because they have faith to believe they can do so. They also believe at the same time that they could devote their mental and physical power to some laudible avocation for a livelihood. So that faith, whether applied to good or bad purposes, nevertheless is a principle of power, and perfect or imperfect only in regard to its associated handmaid, intelligence or ignorance.

You say, "you do not know as you have the least particle of that faith which was once delivered to the saints." If you believe in the God of those saints, why you have so much of their faith, or like faith. If you do not believe in the same God those saints did, I do not know what to do for you better than to refer you to your own senses of seeing, hearing, smelling, tasting, feeling and thinking, and suggest to you to apply those acute senses to the works of creation, and ask yourself the question, if you can admit that any higher source of intelligence exists than yourself or any other man, or created thing. If you can, then you will admit the existence of the God of the saints, from which Intelligence or God those saints derived all their several degrees of intelligence and accompanying faith. And as all and every degree of true intelligence and faith is acquired by man by revelation in the first instance, only seek to add intelligence to the present stock which you have acquired, believing more can be gained, and you may yet pluck up a sycamore tree and plant it in the sea, or remove mountains.

Faith being bounded by our intelligence in the things of God and his word, we cannot exercise faith that is effectual in things we do not in some degree understand. Consequently many mistake and take to themselves credit of having great faith, when, in fact, they only possess great gullability. True faith must be founded on things that are true in the mind of God, otherwise it is mere presumption, and that only. There being a fitness of things in all things that pertains to godliness and God, and that fitness must in some degree be understood or our faith is only a fool's credence, subject to be tossed about by every wind of doctrine that carries with it some degree of plausibility.

I thought to have carried this topic at length into the scriptural illustration of the subject, but by poring over a number of the first pages of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints I find the subject there fully carried out with superior talent. I dare not, or I have not faith enough to attempt to make a better treatise on the subject. I shall leave it entirely to the election of the editor of the Herald to copy it for the benefit of those readers of the Herald who may not have in possession said book, or write a better treatise, if he has faith to believe he can do so.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

We have not heretofore been in the habit of publishing receipts of money on subscription for the Herald. That our subscribers may know who have paid up, and at what time their subscriptions expire, we publish the following list showing the names of all who have paid in advance for Vol. 4, or any part of it, and at what number their several subscriptions will expire:—

Names.	When subscriptions expire. Vol.	IV.	No.
William Skimmings,	"	"	" 19
Nathaniel Holmes,	"	"	" 24
Joseph George,	"	"	" 13
Joseph W. Wade,	"	"	" 9
Lydia Bennett,	"	"	" 13
Chauncey Jennings,	"	"	" 1
Abiah Higley,	"	"	" 22
Nanford Cooper,	"	"	" 24
George England,	"	"	" 20
Mary Demary,	"	"	" 4
Ralph Otis,	"	"	" 4
Loraney Hammon,	"	"	" 17
Abel Ingraham,	"	"	" 24
Mrs. W. Carter,	"	"	" 13
Wm. Harrison,	"	"	" 13
James Smith, (four copies,)	"	"	" 3
Adam Long,	"	"	" 4
Mrs. Eckell,	"	"	" 4
Mr. Bates,	"	"	" 4
A. Blake,	"	"	" 21
Henry Clifford,	"	"	" 22
Lorenzo Tubbs,	"	"	" 20
Tobias McNutt,	"	"	" 6
John S. Comstock,	"	"	" 13
R. F. Mills,	"	"	" 20
H. G. Hall,	"	"	" 20
Reuben Field,	"	"	" 20
Thos. Horton,	"	"	" 20
Elias Rice,	"	"	" 20
Samuel Graham,	"	"	" 20
O. W. Perry,	"	"	" 20
Walter Ostrander,	"	"	" 6

5331

he can work, therefore the world on which we stand was framed, and the planets which bespangle the heavens are the works of the Almighty's faith. Without faith God, angels nor men could not act. Therefore all the importance there is in all things owes its origin to faith and intelligence, they being inseparably connected.—Without intelligence there can be no faith, and without faith there cannot anything be done. Therefore it would require an eternity of figures to express its value.

As far as the "power" of faith is concerned, that cannot be tested only by those who have it in exercise; it always being limited by the amount of intelligence each person possesses. I had faith to believe I could build a house, therefore I made the necessary effort and did so. I do not possess faith enough to try to make a watch, because I do not possess the necessary amount of intelligence to understand how to do it. I have faith enough to preach what is called "Mormonism," because I have intelligence enough to know that it has reduced Bible intelligence to an exact inductive science, and the whole book is understood by first acquiring a correct understanding of its first principles or rudiments. By faith I believe that by progression I can add to the stock of my intelligence until I can understand how, by faith, Moses divided the waters of the Red Sea, or how Joshua threw down the walls of Jericho, or how to call fire from heaven to consume a sacrifice, when necessary.

The power of faith is like its value; it is unbounded in its nature. All things that are done by God, men or angels are done by it, and nothing without it. As far as the "perfection" of faith is concerned, the principle itself is as perfect in a small degree as in a larger. For an illustration, the fact that two and two make four is as perfect an idea, as far as it goes, in the science of mathematics as the idea that twice five hundred thousand make a million, although the former number is easier comprehended by the less intelligent mind than the latter.

An imperfect or false faith is always founded in ignorance, or the want of true intelligence. Consequently an imperfect faith arose in our world which caused a great alarm among the ignorant, they believing the world would come to an end in 1843. Therefore, for the want of true biblical intelligence, thousands, yea millions worth of time and money was expended to but little avail for the good of mankind.

He that has any true faith at all, has as true faith as God. The only difference is in the amount. He that carries one sixpence may carry as perfect a coin and as perfect metal as he that carries a million of dollars. The only difference is in the amount obtained.—Where there is the most intelligence there is the soil for the greatest product of faith. And as all intelligence emenates from God, so faith is the "gift of God."

There is such a thing as an abuse of faith. The thief and robber do their villainous acts, because they have faith to believe they can do so. They also believe at the same time that they could devote their mental and physical power to some laudible avocation for a livelihood. So that faith, whether applied to good or bad purposes, nevertheless is a principle of power, and perfect or imperfect only in regard to its associated handmaid, intelligence or ignorance.

You say, "you do not know as you have the least particle of that faith which was once delivered to the saints." If you believe in the God of those saints, why you have so much of their faith, or like faith. If you do not believe in the same God those saints did, I do not know what to do for you better than to refer you to your own senses of seeing, hearing, smelling, tasting, feeling and thinking, and suggest to you to apply those acute senses to the works of creation, and ask yourself the question, if you can admit that any higher source of intelligence exists than yourself or any other man, or created thing. If you can, then you will admit the existence of the God of the saints, from which Intelligence or God those saints derived all their several degrees of intelligence and accompanying faith. And as all and every degree of true intelligence and faith is acquired by man by revelation in the first instance, only seek to add intelligence to the present stock which you have acquired, believing more can be gained, and you may yet pluck up a sycamore tree and plant it in the sea, or remove mountains.

Faith being bounded by our intelligence in the things of God and his word, we cannot exercise faith that is effectual in things we do not in some degree understand. Consequently many mistake and take to themselves credit of having great faith, when, in fact, they only possess great gullability. True faith must be founded on things that are true in the mind of God, otherwise it is mere presumption, and that only. There being a fitness of things in all things that pertains to godliness and God, and that fitness must in some degree be understood or our faith is only a fool's credence, subject to be tossed about by every wind of doctrine that carries with it some degree of plausibility.

I thought to have carried this topic at length into the scriptural illustration of the subject, but by poring over a number of the first pages of the Book of Doctrine and Covenants of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints I find the subject there fully carried out with superior talent. I dare not, or I have not faith enough to attempt to make a better treatise on the subject. I shall leave it entirely to the election of the editor of the Herald to copy it for the benefit of those readers of the Herald who may not have in possession said book, or write a better treatise, if he has faith to believe he can do so.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

We have not heretofore been in the habit of publishing receipts of money on subscription for the Herald. That our subscribers may know who have paid up, and at what time their subscriptions expire, we publish the following list showing the names of all who have paid in advance for Vol. 4, or any part of it, and at what number their several subscriptions will expire:—

Names.	When subscriptions expire.
William Skimmings,	Vol. IV. No. 29
Nathaniel Holmes,	" " " 36
Joseph George,	" " " 12
Joseph W. Wade,	" " " 9
Lydia Bennett,	" " " 12
Chauncey Jennings,	" " " 3
Abiah Higley,	" " " 26
Sanford Cooper,	" " " 24
George England,	" " " 30
Mary Demary,	" " " 4
Ralph Otis,	" " " 4
Lorancy Hammon,	" " " 47
Abel Ingraham,	" " " 26
Mrs. W. Carter,	" " " 13
Wm. Harrison,	" " " 43
James Smith, (four copies,)	" " " 3
Adam Long,	" " " 4
Mrs. Eckell,	" " " 4
Mr. Bates,	" " " 4
A. Blake,	" " " 31
Henry Clifford,	" " " 20
Lorenzo Tubbs,	" " " 26
Tobias McNutt,	" " " 8
John S. Comstock,	" " " 13
R. F. Mills,	" " " 39
H. G. Hall,	" " " 30
Reuben Field,	" " " 39
Thos. Horton,	" " " 30
Elias Rice,	" " " 33
Samuel Graham,	" " " 39
O. W. Perry,	" " " 29
Walter Ostrander,	" " " 8

Nancy Tibbitts,	"	"	"	14
Ichabod B. Gifford,	"	"	"	4
Daniel S. Carpenter,	"	"	"	4
Mary J. Gilbert,	"	"	"	30
Arnold Healey,	"	"	"	4
John Gregg,	Vol.	V.	No.	4
Thompson Rude,	Vol.	IV.	No.	26
William Marks,	"	"	"	26
Ludlow Hill,	"	"	"	52
Ansel Lake,	"	"	"	52
Dewitt Scribner,	"	"	"	30
William Johnston,	"	"	"	30
Joseph Rice,	"	"	"	30
Abiel Cook,	"	"	"	13
Sylvenus Pease,	"	"	"	8
Nancy Lisk,	"	"	"	33
Henry Moon,	"	"	"	20
Daniel Fillmore,	"	"	"	3
Israel Duty,	"	"	"	14
W. Banks,	"	"	"	13
Franklin Bevier,	"	"	"	17
Betsey Pratt,	"	"	"	26
William Barker,	"	"	"	26
Clark Clauson,	"	"	"	12
Otis R. Bass,	"	"	"	42
John Muckle,	"	"	"	4

The following persons had paid to the end of Vol. 3:—Benjamin Dexter, Thomas R. Hicks, J. L. Wait, R. G. Steele, Moses Chidister, Alanson Hewitt, Josiah Tyler, Increase Van Dusen, Peter Conklin, Sarah Wardell, Mrs. E. Wallace, Geo. Walters, Dwight Webster, Elisha Pearsons, Ira Agan, J. Chase, Stratton Rogers, Galen Cole, Mary Leatherby, Hiram Jaques, Orrin Hill, Samuel Williams, Geo. Rarick, John Tyson.

All mail subscribers who do not find their names in one or the other of the foregoing lists, will understand that they are in arrears. We have very little to say to them on the subject. Our wants have been concisely stated heretofore. They know what justice requires. It is impossible for us to send bills to them. We shall hereafter publish the weekly receipts by mail, and after a sufficient time for all to respond we propose to publish lists of delinquent subscribers, as we have now of those in advance. If any are really unable to pay, they can inform us of that fact in lieu of making payment, and we shall send them the paper gratuitous. But we hope none will pretend to be unable to pay us who are able to use constantly those things which God has said are not good.

☞ Reader, this number commences the fourth volume of the Herald. And for once we can say the morning dawns brightly.—The paper commenced with the year 1846, and when the first number issued we had less than a dozen subscribers. In the midst of toils, sufferings and struggles we have kept it up through the darkest period which the church was ever called to pass, and now with brighter prospects ahead, and strong confidence in its permanance, commence volume fourth, thanking God that he has cast our lot in pleasant places.

Few, very few, can rejoice with us in our dawning hopes; for few, very few, have toiled with us in our struggles. Hopes and fears are the lot of all men in all undertakings. But in keeping up this publication we have hoped against hope, with much of confidence and little of promise, relying on Him who is our continual support to buoy us up when all other hopes failed. This, our faith, has not been vain. Assured at all times that in God's time and in his own way he would accomplish the work, we have not faltered when all earthly appearances were that we could not continue one day longer, because we knew the importance of this publication to the great work.

For three years the Herald has been the only Mormon paper on earth. It is true that several have attempted what they please to call Mormon papers, but all have failed, unless we except a small monthly sheet irregularly issued at Kirtland, by the followers of J. C. Brewster. The Nauvoo Neighbor failed late in 1845, and the Times and Seasons a few weeks after. In the summer following Rigdon's Messenger stopped. The apostates in Voree started one in Jan., 1847, got out two numbers, and advertised a great Conference, which not one soul attended. W. E. McLellin attempted a publication in Kirtland, which lived through four or five numbers. Orson Hyde last fall published a prospectus and canvassed the United States for subscribers and we presume got a few, but we cannot learn that he has issued a paper, and presume he never will. We understand that the Millenial Star has not been published for some two years. Isaac Sheen, Wm. Smith, and we believe two or three others, have attempted to start publications, which have entirely failed. The Herald, alone of all papers, has stood, the bulwark of the church of God, and the "defender of the faith." With but one font of type we cannot make a display. The mechanical work is necessarily plain for want of the meager sum of $100 to improve our establishment. If our subscribers who are in arrears would pay up promptly we could fit up the office with new and varied type, and get a larger and greatly improved paper with greater ease than we now find in keeping it up as it is. Our thanks to those who have sustained us. Remember there are better times ahead, and they are not far off.

An Impostor.—An inferior looking and unprepossessing fellow calling himself Worrel, one of the publishers of the "Herald of the Prairies," is traveling through the country making collections and taking up subscriptions for that paper. We caution the public against him as a suspicious man, and probably an impostor. The grounds of our suspicion are these: We met him accidentally in the Burlington P. O., where he paid us the most obsequious attentions; desired to cultivate a particular acquaintance; spoke highly of our paper; condemned severely the unfounded prejudices against our church and people; deprecated in strong terms the cruel persecutions we have suffered. Yet the very minute we entered he was engaged in a tirade of the vilest kind of slang upon the Mormons, from which he broke off in the middle of a sentence at our coming in. We are unwilling to believe that a respectable religious denomination would patronize a paper published by so vile a scamp, and caution the public against receiving or dealing with this traveling "Mr. Worrel" as the real Mr. Worrel, of the "Herald of the Prairies."

☞ Some months since a gentleman calling himself editor of the People's Atheneum, visited us and asked an exchange. We have sent the Herald a long time and got nothing in exchange.—Has the Dr. forgotten?

☞ Winter is effectually gone. The singing birds are here, the ground settling, vegetation starting, and there can be no better weather for spring work. The winter has been intensely cold, and there has been more snow in this one than in the previous five winters. The streams have been high, & some damage has been done in the destruction of dams on Fox River.

Ice at Mackinac.—The Cleveland Hearald learns by a letter from Mackinac, dated Feb. 3d, that the ice in the Bay was then but three inches thick, and the ice dealers had not filled their ice houses on account of its thin quality.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a regular Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Voree, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of April next; and also on Beaver Island on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 6th of July next. It is expected that every member of the First Presidency and of the Twelve will attend one or both of these Conferences. By the President.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

533

Nancy Tibbitts,	"	"	"	14
Ichabod B. Gifford,	"	"	"	4
Daniel S. Carpenter,	"	"	"	4
Mary J. Gilbert,	"	"	"	30
Arnold Healey,	"	"	"	4
John Gregg,	Vol.	V.	No.	4
Thompson Rude,	Vol.	IV.	No.	26
William Marks,	"	"	"	26
Ludlow Hill,	"	"	"	52
Ansel Lake,	"	"	"	52
Dewitt Scribner,	"	"	"	30
William Johnston,	"	"	"	30
Joseph Rice,	"	"	"	30
Abiel Cook,	"	"	"	13
Sylvenus Pease,	"	"	"	8
Nancy Lisk,	"	"	"	33
Henry Moon,	"	"	"	20
Daniel Fillmore,	"	"	"	3
Israel Duty,	"	"	"	14
W. Banks,	"	"	"	13
Franklin Bevier,	"	"	"	17
Betsey Pratt,	"	"	"	26
William Barker,	"	"	"	26
Clark Clauson,	"	"	"	12
Otis R. Bass,	"	"	"	42
John Muckle,	"	"	"	4

The following persons had paid to the end of Vol. 3:—Benjamin Dexter, Thomas R. Hicks, J. L. Wait, R. G. Steele, Moses Chidister, Alanson Hewitt, Josiah Tyler, Increase Van Dusen, Peter Conklin, Sarah Wardell, Mrs. E. Wallace, Geo. Walters, Dwight Webster, Elisha Pearsons, Ira Agan, J. Chase, Stratton Rogers, Galen Cole, Mary Leatherby, Hiram Jaques, Orrin Hill, Samuel Williams, Geo. Rarick, John Tyson.

All mail subscribers who do not find their names in one or the other of the foregoing lists, will understand that they are in arrears. We have very little to say to them on the subject. Our wants have been concisely stated heretofore. They know what justice requires. It is impossible for us to send bills to them. We shall hereafter publish the weekly receipts by mail, and after a sufficient time for all to respond we propose to publish lists of delinquent subscribers, as we have now of those in advance. If any are really unable to pay, they can inform us of that fact in lieu of making payment, and we shall send them the paper gratuitous. But we hope none will pretend to be unable to pay us who are able to use constantly those things which God has said are not good.

☞ Reader, this number commences the fourth volume of the Herald. And for once we can say the morning dawns brightly.—The paper commenced with the year 1846, and when the first number issued we had less than a dozen subscribers. In the midst of toils, sufferings and struggles we have kept it up through the darkest period which the church was ever called to pass, and now with brighter prospects ahead, and strong confidence in its permanance, commence volume fourth, thanking God that he has cast our lot in pleasant places.

Few, very few, can rejoice with us in our dawning hopes; for few, very few, have toiled with us in our struggles. Hopes and fears are the lot of all men in all undertakings. But in keeping up this publication we have hoped against hope, with much of confidence and little of promise, relying on Him who is our continual support to buoy us up when all other hopes failed. This, our faith, has not been vain. Assured at all times that in God's time and in his own way he would accomplish the work, we have not faltered when all earthly appearances were that we could not continue one day longer, because we knew the importance of this publication to the great work.

For three years the Herald has been the only Mormon paper on earth. It is true that several have attempted what they please to call Mormon papers, but all have failed, unless we except a small monthly sheet irregularly issued at Kirtland, by the followers of J. C. Brewster. The Nauvoo Neighbor failed late in 1845, and the Times and Seasons a few weeks after. In the summer following Rigdon's Messenger stopped. The apostates in Voree started one in Jan., 1847, got out two numbers, and advertised a great Conference, which not one soul attended. W. E. McLellin attempted a publication in Kirtland, which lived through four or five numbers. Orson Hyde last fall published a prospectus and canvassed the United States for subscribers and we presume got a few, but we cannot learn that he has issued a paper, and presume he never will. We understand that the Millenial Star has not been published for some two years. Isaac Sheen, Wm. Smith, and we believe two or three others, have attempted to start publications, which have entirely failed. The Herald, alone of all papers, has stood, the bulwark of the church of God, and the "defender of the faith." With but one font of type we cannot make a display. The mechanical work is necessarily plain for want of the meager sum of $100 to improve our establishment. If our subscribers who are in arrears would pay up promptly we could fit up the office with new and varied type, and get a larger and greatly improved paper with greater ease than we now find in keeping it up as it is. Our thanks to those who have sustained us. Remember there are better times ahead, and they are not far off.

An Impostor.—An inferior looking and unprepossessing fellow calling himself Worrel, one of the publishers of the "Herald of the Prairies," is traveling through the country making collections and taking up subscriptions for that paper. We caution the public against him as a suspicious man, and probably an impostor. The grounds of our suspicion are these: We met him accidentally in the Burlington P. O., where he paid us the most obsequious attentions: desired to cultivate a particular acquaintance; spoke highly of our paper; condemned severely the unfounded prejudices against our church and people; deprecated in strong terms the cruel persecutions we have suffered. Yet the very minute we entered he was engaged in a tirade of the vilest kind of slang upon the Mormons, from which he broke off in the middle of a sentence at our coming in. We are unwilling to believe that a respectable religious denomination would patronize a paper published by so vile a scamp, and caution the public against receiving or dealing with this traveling "Mr. Worrel" as the real Mr. Worrel, of the "Herald of the Prairies."

☞ Some months since a gentleman calling himself editor of the People's Atheneum, visited us and asked an exchange. We have sent the Herald a long time and got nothing in exchange.—Has the Dr. forgotten?

☞ Winter is effectually gone. The singing birds are here, the ground settling, vegetation starting, and there can be no better weather for spring work. The winter has been intensely cold, and there has been more snow in this one than in the previous five winters. The streams have been high, & some damage has been done in the destruction of dams on Fox River.

Ice at Mackinac.—The Cleveland Hearald learns by a letter from Mackinac, dated Feb. 3d, that the ice in the Bay was then but three inches thick, and the ice dealers had not filled their ice houses on account of its thin quality.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a regular Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Voree, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of April next; and also on Beaver Island on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of July next. It is expected that every member of the First Presidency and of the Twelve will attend one or both of these Conferences. By the President.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 2.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, MARCH 29, 1849. [WHOLE No. 118.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

FAITH AND INTELLIGENCE.

In reading the proof of the article "on faith," in our last No., we were struck with the remarks on the necessity of intelligence in order to work by faith. The question immediately raised, what kind of intelligence is necessary that we may work by faith? We should have added a note at the time in answer to the question, but it was too late to do so in that paper. It is very certain that men do constantly, through faith, do work, not having intelligence to understand the working. We sow grain in faith of reaping a crop by the germination and growth of that we sow. But not one of us has the slightest knowledge of the law of germination—of the immediate means by which kernels of wheat, sown in a soil, will rot away and yet grow up and extract from that soil and the atmosphere and actually form anew forty times as many more similar kernels. The wheat grower has intelligence to know the external act, but not the secret working. He knows that he should put his wheat in the soil, but the only reason he can give for doing so is that others have done it before him successfully. But as to any positive intelligence upon the reason for doing it, he cannot tell why it will not grow as well in water or a bank of mere sand. He only knows it will not. Yet men, with their want of intelligence of the law of germination, are able to produce germination of nearly all seeds. All the animals (and man with them) are profoundly ignorant of the law of animal life. Yet can they produce it. As ignorant of the principle of life as is the unhatched gosling of the keys of the resurrection, by knowing the external act by which it is produced, they are abundantly able to multiply beings like themselves.

If we turn to the ordinances of God's house we shall find many parallel examples:—

"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him." James v. 14, 15.

This rule has been practiced by many thousand persons during the last nineteen years, and, to say the least of it, with better success than has attended any system of medical treatment whatever. The same system has been constantly resorted to for the removal of every bodily disease that man is subject to, from crushed flesh and broken bones to the merest casual pain, and by men of every grade of intelligence, from the most skillful physician to him who had never felt a disease or listened to any remedy but this, and in every class of disease, and by every grade of intelligence has it been attended with the same results.

It would appear therefore that the intelligence necessary to the healing of disease by faith is not a knowledge of the nature of disease, nor of the scientific workings of the remedy. The intelligence necessary to work by faith in that case is a knowledge simply of the ordinance of administering to the sick. If we possessed direct scientific intelligence of the means by which the anointing and the hands remove the disease, we should not be left to exercise it in the name of a superior. We could use it in our own names; communicate the intelligence and with it the power to others without reference to the priesthood; and the system of healing, as practiced by the saints, would pass into the body of medical science.—For it is very evident that if our intelligence extends behind the external ordinance of healing, to the nature of the disease, and the workings by which the anointing and the hands remove it, we have then the same knowledge that God has, and therefore can exercise it in our own name as well as he can in his, and can delegate others to exercise it in our names as well as he can to exercise it in his.—The intelligence therefore necessary to exercise effectual faith for the healing of the sick is merely a knowledge of the ordinance, coupled of course with the authority to administer it. And this authority may be given to one who is ignorant of disease, and yet be effectual. Or it may be refused to those who are well acquainted with disease, and their intelligence will not answer in place of authority.

By faith Moses lifted his hand over the Red Sea that it divided, so that all Israel passed through. This was a miraculous exercise of power on the part of Moses. It is very true that with a well grounded faith a good engineer, having plenty of means, may go there now and build a dry passage through. The difference in their faith is this, Moses' faith was grounded on the power of God, which he exercised by his intelligence of the external ordinance, without any knowledge of its secret workings. But the engineer who should build a road across equally passable, would ground his faith upon his own power to do that kind of work, and his knowledge of all the ways and means by which it was accomplished.

Consequently the engineer would not work in the name of God, but in his own name, or that of any persons to whom he saw fit to sell his service and the benefit of his intelligence. Moses, as a man, had no more power over the waters of the Red Sea than Pharaoh. The scriptures do not show or suggest that he had any more intelligence or scientific knowledge of the cause of motion in water. But he had intelligence of an ordinance by which the power of God, who holds it as in his hand, could be brought to bear upon it. And, possessing that power by priesthood, and having faith to exercise it, he brought the intelligence of God, who does understand the secret means, to bear upon the waters.

An exact parallel to this is the case in the question presented by our inquiring brother in the last number. If we had intelligence of an ordinance by which we could say to a sycamore tree, "be plucked up, and be cast into the sea," and it should be done, and had faith in the ordinance, we could do that by as simple external means as that used in healing the sick, and with as little intelligence as to actual application of force to the tree as we have of the application of healing to the diseased. But not having intelligence of any ordinance by which the power of God is brought to bear upon the tree, by his servants, the priesthood, we may still do it in our own name,

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 2.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. MARCH 29, 1849. [WHOLE No. 118.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

FAITH AND INTELLIGENCE.

In reading the proof of the article "on faith," in our last No., we were struck with the remarks on the necessity of intelligence in order to work by faith. The question immediately raised, what kind of intelligence is necessary that we may work by faith? We should have added a note at the time in answer to the question, but it was too late to do so in that paper. It is very certain that men do constantly, through faith, do work, not having intelligence to understand the working. We sow grain in faith of reaping a crop by the germination and growth of that we sow. But not one of us has the slightest knowledge of the law of germination—of the immediate means by which kernels of wheat, sown in a soil, will rot away and yet grow up and extract from that soil and the atmosphere and actually form anew forty times as many more similar kernels. The wheat grower has intelligence to know the external act, but not the secret working. He knows that he should put his wheat in the soil, but the only reason he can give for doing so is that others have done it before him successfully. But as to any positive intelligence upon the reason for doing it, he cannot tell why it will not grow as well in water or a bank of mere sand. He only knows it will not. Yet men, with their want of intelligence of the law of germination, are able to produce germination of nearly all seeds. All the animals (and man with them) are profoundly ignorant of the law of animal life. Yet can they produce it. As ignorant of the principle of life as is the unhatched gosling of the keys of the resurrection, by knowing the external act by which it is produced, they are abundantly able to multiply beings like themselves.

If we turn to the ordinances of God's house we shall find many parallel examples:—

"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: And the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins they shall be forgiven him." James v. 14, 15.

This rule has been practiced by many thousand persons during the last nineteen years, and, to say the least of it, with better success than has attended any system of medical treatment whatever. The same system has been constantly resorted to for the removal of every bodily disease that man is subject to, from crushed flesh and broken bones to the merest casual pain, and by men of every grade of intelligence, from the most skillful physician to him who had never felt a disease or listened to any remedy but this, and in every class of disease, and by every grade of intelligence has it been attended with the same results.

It would appear therefore that the intelligence necessary to the healing of disease by faith is not a knowledge of the nature of disease, nor of the scientific workings of the remedy. The intelligence necessary to work by faith in that case is a knowledge simply of the ordinance of administering to the sick. If we possessed direct scientific intelligence of the means by which the anointing and the hands remove the disease, we should not be left to exercise it in the name of a superior. We could use it in our own names: communicate the intelligence and with it the power to others without reference to the priesthood; and the system of healing, as practiced by the saints, would pass into the body of medical science.—For it is very evident that if our intelligence extends behind the external ordinance of healing, to the nature of the disease, and the workings by which the anointing and the hands remove it, we have then the same knowledge that God has, and therefore can exercise it in our own name as well as he can in his, and can delegate others to exercise it in our names as well as he can to exercise it in his.—The intelligence therefore necessary to exercise effectual faith for the healing of the sick is merely a knowledge of the ordinance, coupled of course with the authority to administer it. And this authority may be given to one who is ignorant of disease, and yet be effectual. Or it may be refused to those who are well acquainted with disease, and their intelligence will not answer in place of authority.

By faith Moses lifted his hand over the Red Sea that it divided, so that all Israel passed through. This was a miraculous exercise of power on the part of Moses. It is very true that with a well grounded faith a good engineer, having plenty of means, may go there now and build a dry passage through. The difference in their faith is this, Moses' faith was grounded on the power of God, which he exercised by his intelligence of the external ordinance, without any knowledge of its secret workings. But the engineer who should build a road across equally passable, would ground his faith upon his own power to do that kind of work, and his knowledge of all the ways and means by which it was accomplished.

Consequently the engineer would not work in the name of God, but in his own name, or that of any persons to whom he saw fit to sell his service and the benefit of his intelligence. Moses, as a man, had no more power over the waters of the Red Sea than Pharaoh. The scriptures do not show or suggest that he had any more intelligence or scientific knowledge of the cause of motion in water. But he had intelligence of an ordinance by which the power of God, who holds it as in his hand, could be brought to bear upon it. And, possessing that power by priesthood, and having faith to exercise it, he brought the intelligence of God, who does understand the secret means, to bear upon the waters.

An exact parallel to this is the case in the question presented by our inquiring brother in the last number. If we had intelligence of an ordinance by which we could say to a sycamore tree, "be plucked up, and be cast into the sea," and it should be done, and had faith in the ordinance, we could do that by as simple external means as that used in healing the sick, and with as little intelligence as to actual application of force to the tree as we have of the application of healing to the diseased. But not having intelligence of any ordinance by which the power of God is brought to bear upon the tree, by his servants, the priesthood, we may still do it in our own name, if we have a well grounded faith in our own intelligence. However it may have been in the time of Christ, it is certain that there are now many men who understand well how to remove a sycamore or any other tree, of any size whatever, from any place to any other, and even to preserve it alive and its growth unimpaired. And if the distance was not very great, the removal might be made instantaneous. The removal would be made by mechanical power, and any man, to exercise it with success, must either have intelligence to entirely understand the operation of it in all its bearings, or must act in strict obedience to one that does. Unless he understands all things in that particular business, in all their bearings, the moment he brings in his own discretion he is liable to go wrong. The very thing which he thinks essential may be ruinous. Thus it is in all cases, when we act in the name of another.

To return to the ordinance for the healing of the sick. The command is to anoint. We may surmise that an ablution is better.—And we may have many reasons for it, which seem to us conclusive. Indeed, we may have no doubt that we KNOW it would be better. Acting on this suggestion, a man can exercise his own power, and bring to bear all his own intelligence, with all the faith he has in himself. But keeping strictly to the ordinance which God has appointed, he will exercise the power of God, and bring to bear the intelligence of God, with all the faith he has in God.

The prophet Elijah called down fire from heaven, by which he consumed his sacrifice. To do so he required the knowledge of the proper ordinance, faith in it, and to have the priesthood, which authorized him to use it. In other words, it was necessary to know how to do what God had appointed in the premises; to believe enough in the ordinance to truly execute it, and to be authorized to do so.—Possessing all this, the intelligence of God was brought into exercise, and his intelligence of the secret means by which fire is gathered in the deep blue sky, and guided, easy as a plaything, to the appointed place, was put in requisition.

Not so when Franklin called a shaft from heaven to slay an ox.—He needed no priesthood; no power from God; no faith in any but himself. He had studied the secret means of calling fire from heaven. He had got the intelligence in his own mind; not of an ordinance by which to exercise the power of God, but of the secret means by which he could guide the fires from the blue ethereal.—True, he worked by faith. But it was by faith in the intelligence by which Benjamin Franklin possessed power, and not in that by which the Lord God Almighty possesses it.

Franklin's intelligence was communicable, and has been communicated to many others, each of whom, being possessed of the same intelligence, can do the same things. Had he seen fit to keep his knowledge a secret, still others could have produced the same results without any intelligence whatever of the principles involved, by a strict obedience to his commands. But stepping aside from a most strict obedience to each and every command, (and some of them would seem very insipid and extremely unreasonable,) he would fail altogether of producing any result, or perhaps bring the fire upon himself instead of the sacrifice. So we, when we attempt to exercise the power of God in any case, as often as we attempt to exercise our own judgment in derogation of God's commandments, no matter how much the most reasonable our course may appear to be, either fail altogether or bring evils on ourselves.

It is worthy of remark, too, that if we had the same intelligence which God has concerning fire, we should not need to pray to God as Elijah did. We could then call it down by our own power.—Understanding the ways and means, we should have nothing to do but use them, thanking nobody. And upon this exists the distinction between "faith toward God" and faith in ourselves. By faith Alexander conquered the world. Faith in whom? In himself.—The soil for that faith to produce in was his own intelligence. If he had not had faith in himself, he could not have brought that intelligence into active and efficient exercise. His faith terminating in himself, he looked to no superior for aid. By his intelligence he provided the material for war, both men and munitions, and arranged them with proper skill. His intelligence being sufficient to accomplish the end with the means within his reach, his faith in himself was well founded. Through faith, in himself, he subdued kingdoms.

But those servants of God who, through faith, obtained a good report, must have rested their faith on a higher object than themselves. Accordingly there is a marked difference in the means by which they subdued kingdoms and those used by him. He used the strategy of war with skill. They the ordinances of God in the strictest obedience. His acts were the consummation of human wisdom, the admiration of the warriors of all ages. Theirs was the very mockery of human folly; the laughing stock of every military man, and of all who have not faith towards God. So unreasonable did their conduct and commands appear, that no man could follow them a single step unless he was prepared to swallow anything, however ridiculous. Indeed, the only reason any man on earth can give for the most brilliant acts in their career of conquest is, simply, "Moses said so, Joshua said so," or, "Gideon said so."

As these ideas are somewhat out of the course of ordinary thought, we have thought fit to illustrate them by a few strong examples:—

"Then came Amalek, and fought with Israel in Rephidim. And Moses said unto Joshua, Choose us out men, and go out, fight with Amalek; to-morrow I will stand on the top of the hill, with the rod of God in my hand. So Joshua did as Moses had said to him, and fought with Amalek: and Moses, Aaron, and Hur, went up to the top of the hill. And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed; and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed. But Moses' hands were heavy; and they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun. And Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword." Exodus xvii. 8 to 13.

Certainly no man can give any reason why Israel should prevail when Moses, who was far from the battle field, held up his hands, or why Amalek should when he held them down. And no man has intelligence enough to know what connection "the rod" had with the fate of the battle. Yet it was by faith in so extraordinary and apparently unreasonable an act that "Joshua put Amalek and his people to flight by the edge of the sword." Had he waited for Moses to give a reason satisfactory to human intelligence for such an act, he would never through faith subdued a kingdom. Joshua and Israel had intelligence enough to know what Moses, the prophet of God, told them to do. With Moses they had faith enough to do it, asking no questions. They had no more intelligence of the means by which the position of Moses' hands affected the fate of the day than we have. But their faith rested upon God, who did understand that matter perfectly. And by that faith they subdued. And it is by such faith that they obtained a good report. There is no merit in the faith which believes with a reason. Only in that which believes because of a mandate.

At the sixth chapter of Joshua is an account of another feat of arms, so perfectly contrary to all human sense and intelligence that it is difficult to believe otherwise than that if the most popular General of the age should undertake to imitate it, he would be deserted by his soldiers and imprisoned by his officers as a maniac. The victory won over Jericho was won by men who had intelligence enough to understand orders, and faith enough to obey them. And if we have a well grounded faith in our own intelligence. However it may have been in the time of Christ, it is certain that there are now many men who understand well how to remove a sycamore or any other tree, of any size whatever, from any place to any other, and even to preserve it alive and its growth unimpaired. And if the distance was not very great, the removal might be made instantaneous. The removal would be made by mechanical power, and any man, to exercise it with success, must either have intelligence to entirely understand the operation of it in all its bearings, or must act in strict obedience to one that does. Unless he understands all things in that particular business, in all their bearings, the moment he brings in his own discretion he is liable to go wrong. The very thing which he thinks essential may be ruinous. Thus it is in all cases, when we act in the name of another.

To return to the ordinance for the healing of the sick. The command is to anoint. We may surmise that an ablution is better.—And we may have many reasons for it, which seem to us conclusive. Indeed, we may have no doubt that we KNOW it would be better. Acting on this suggestion, a man can exercise his own power, and bring to bear all his own intelligence, with all the faith he has in himself. But keeping strictly to the ordinance which God has appointed, he will exercise the power of God, and bring to bear the intelligence of God, with all the faith he has in God.

The prophet Elijah called down fire from heaven, by which he consumed his sacrifice. To do so he required the knowledge of the proper ordinance, faith in it, and to have the priesthood, which authorized him to use it. In other words, it was necessary to know how to do what God had appointed in the premises; to believe enough in the ordinance to truly execute it, and to be authorized to do so.—Possessing all this, the intelligence of God was brought into exercise, and his intelligence of the secret means by which fire is gathered in the deep blue sky, and guided, easy as a plaything, to the appointed place, was put in requisition.

Not so when Franklin called a shaft from heaven to slay an ox.—He needed no priesthood; no power from God; no faith in any but himself. He had studied the secret means of calling fire from heaven. He had got the intelligence in his own mind; not of an ordinance by which to exercise the power of God, but of the secret means by which he could guide the fires from the blue ethereal.—True, he worked by faith. But it was by faith in the intelligence by which Benjamin Franklin possessed power, and not in that by which the Lord God Almighty possesses it.

Franklin's intelligence was communicable, and has been communicated to many others, each of whom, being possessed of the same intelligence, can do the same things. Had he seen fit to keep his knowledge a secret, still others could have produced the same results without any intelligence whatever of the principles involved, by a strict obedience to his commands. But stepping aside from a most strict obedience to each and every command, (and some of them would seem very insipid and extremely unreasonable,) he would fail altogether of producing any result, or perhaps bring the fire upon himself instead of the sacrifice. So we, when we attempt to exercise the power of God in any case, as often as we attempt to exercise our own judgment in derogation of God's commandments, no matter how much the most reasonable our course may appear to be, either fail altogether or bring evils on ourselves.

It is worthy of remark, too, that if we had the same intelligence which God has concerning fire, we should not need to pray to God as Elijah did. We could then call it down by our own power.—Understanding the ways and means, we should have nothing to do but use them, thanking nobody. And upon this exists the distinction between "faith toward God" and faith in ourselves. By faith Alexander conquered the world. Faith in whom? In himself.—The soil for that faith to produce in was his own intelligence. If he had not had faith in himself, he could not have brought that intelligence into active and efficient exercise. His faith terminating in himself, he looked to no superior for aid. By his intelligence he provided the material for war, both men and munitions, and arranged them with proper skill. His intelligence being sufficient to accomplish the end with the means within his reach, his faith in himself was well founded. Through faith, in himself, he subdued kingdoms.

But those servants of God who, through faith, obtained a good report, must have rested their faith on a higher object than themselves. Accordingly there is a marked difference in the means by which they subdued kingdoms and those used by him. He used the strategy of war with skill. They the ordinances of God in the strictest obedience. His acts were the consummation of human wisdom, the admiration of the warriors of all ages. Theirs was the very mockery of human folly; the laughing stock of every military man, and of all who have not faith towards God. So unreasonable did their conduct and commands appear, that no man could follow them a single step unless he was prepared to swallow anything, however ridiculous. Indeed, the only reason any man on earth can give for the most brilliant acts in their career of conquest is, simply, "Moses said so, Joshua said so," or, "Gideon said so."

As these ideas are somewhat out of the course of ordinary thought, we have thought fit to illustrate them by a few strong examples:—

"Then came Amalek, and fought with Israel in Rephidim. And Moses said unto Joshua, Choose us out men, and go out, fight with Amalek; to-morrow I will stand on the top of the hill, with the rod of God in my hand. So Joshua did as Moses had said to him, and fought with Amalek: and Moses, Aaron, and Hur, went up to the top of the hill. And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hand, that Israel prevailed; and when he let down his hand, Amalek prevailed. But Moses' hands were heavy; and they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun. And Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword." Exodus xvii. 8 to 13.

Certainly no man can give any reason why Israel should prevail when Moses, who was far from the battle field, held up his hands, or why Amalek should when he held them down. And no man has intelligence enough to know what connection "the rod" had with the fate of the battle. Yet it was by faith in so extraordinary and apparently unreasonable an act that "Joshua put Amalek and his people to flight by the edge of the sword." Had he waited for Moses to give a reason satisfactory to human intelligence for such an act, he would never through faith subdued a kingdom. Joshua and Israel had intelligence enough to know what Moses, the prophet of God, told them to do. With Moses they had faith enough to do it, asking no questions. They had no more intelligence of the means by which the position of Moses' hands affected the fate of the day than we have. But their faith rested upon God, who did understand that matter perfectly. And by that faith they subdued. And it is by such faith that they obtained a good report. There is no merit in the faith which believes with a reason. Only in that which believes because of a mandate.

At the sixth chapter of Joshua is an account of another feat of arms, so perfectly contrary to all human sense and intelligence that it is difficult to believe otherwise than that if the most popular General of the age should undertake to imitate it, he would be deserted by his soldiers and imprisoned by his officers as a maniac. The victory won over Jericho was won by men who had intelligence enough to understand orders, and faith enough to obey them. And the faith that would obey such orders, must be near neighbor to what men call gullibility. But if they had got beyond that, to the knowledge of the science of throwing down walls by the sound of ram's horns, it is at least fortunate that the science was so soon lost. It would be dangerous in the hands of most men. And with that intelligence they could have subdued kingdoms, merely by faith in themselves, which would not have obtained to them "a good report" before God.

Faith is the gift of God; that is, true faith: faith toward God.—God by the spirit gives it to every one as he will. 1 Cor. xii. 9, 11. He gives it to us to profit with, not to abuse. And consequently he will give us as much faith as we will profit with. The ministry of very few persons requires such extraordinary works as removing trees and mountains by the word of faith. To all others it would be unprofitable and could not be given. If any who had such a ministry have ways and means of their own devising, in which they have faith, then though God should give them this faith also, it would be a mixed faith resting on two objects, God and man; producing its fruits by the exercise of two different intelligences, and in its fruits neither like the one nor the other; or, more likely, having no fruits at all, from the incongruous joining. Such faith it will be readily seen is not like a grain of mustard seed, which is a perfect mustard germ, and will not, by admixture, produce a mongrel of something else.

The faith, then, which is like a grain of mustard seed, and is sufficient to remove mountains, can be possessed only by those whose ministry may require the doing of such an act. It rests on God alone, without the slightest dependence on our power. It can only be exercised by those who have intelligence enough to understand the external ordinance by which we are authorized to put God's infinite intelligence in requsition. And the faith itself, to avail, must be strong enough to perform the ordinance, not doubting, but in every act thereof having perfect confidence, that through the ordinance the end will pe accomplished.

We are very well aware that the exercise of such faith as this cannot be expected of most men. Especially in the present age of the world, self-sufficiency is a prevailing characteristic. With the prevailing pride and arrogancy, it is indeed a meek man who is willing to yield up his individuality so as to be a mere member in the church of God in the same relation that the hand or the foot holds to the body, having no will of its own, but obeying invariably the dictate of the head. Christ teaches this humility in the following transaction:—

"At the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them, and said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven." Matt. xviii. 1 to 4.

The question arises, how does a little child humble himself? He relies implicitly on his parents or tutors. The end of his argument is, "my pa said so." Obedience is his rule. The knowledge of his parents is his dependence. He kindles the fire, ignorant of the occasion which demands it. He eats the bread of to-day, not troubling himself for the supply of to-morrow. He fears bears, panthers and other wild beasts, which he has never seen, because his parents call them dangerous. In brief, the simple authority of his superiors is the beginning and the end of his wisdom. He has found himself dependent on his parents. He knows their delegated authority in his teachers. He unhesitatingly submits to their ipsi dixit, not knowing why it is given. His faith is, that they know what ought to be done, and how to do it.

Accordingly the child, when he first goes to school, begins according to the direction of his teacher, to say, A, B, C, and neither knowing nor having any capacity to understand what good it will do him. Directly he is set to spelling words, knowing no reason for it except the mandate of his teacher. He cannot form the slightest idea what he is to learn by it, or what good the knowledge will ever do him. In mathematics, regarded as the most demonstrable science, he can see no reason why, after setting units under units, tens under tens, &c., he adds up one column of figures at a time, nor why he carries one for every ten and sets down the excess. Nor can he tell why he multiplies by one figure at a time, or why he sets the unit of each part of the product under the particular figure used in producing it. So of every act in the entire study of arithmetic.—The only reason that does or can exist in the mind of the child is, simply, "the master said so." True, in the end he may learn to understand all the reasons involved in these several processes.—But when he has advanced to this knowledge, he is perfect as his master is perfect, in that thing. Consequently his faith then centres on himself, and not on his master or parent, just as God's faith by which he works rests on his own power and intelligence; whereas faith towards God, rests on God's superior intelligence and power.

The conduct of Abraham in the sacrifice of Isaac is an eminent example of this child like faith. God had forbidden that man should slay his fellow man. Gen. ix. 5. He had also promised great blessings to Abraham's seed in the line of Isaac. Notwithstanding this law and these promises, God afterwards said to him, "Abraham, take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and offer him upon one of the mountains which I will tell the of."—Gen. xxii. Heb. xi. Abraham was a man of humility. He was like a child. His faith rested on the intelligence of God. Had it terminated on himself, Paul would not have written, "by faith Abraham offered up Isaac, accounting that GOD WAS ABLE TO RAISE HIM UP EVEN FROM THE DEAD," but would have said accounting that he was able to raise him up.

Moreover, had Abraham looked behind the command for a reason, he might have found some apparently strong reasons against obeying God at all. First, he might have replied to God, truly you have forbidden to shed blood; I would obey in anything reasonable, but I could not violate one of your laws. It would be difficult to answer such an objection. Further, he might have said, if I slay Isaac, the covenant you have made to me must fail. I cannot raise Isaac up, and if I slay him there will be no seed to inherit the promises. Abraham's intelligence did not extend to raising the dead.—Neither did it extend to a reconcilation of these apparently incongruous commands. But he understood perfectly well what God meant when he said, "offer Isaac for a burnt offering." "And he rose up early in the morning, and clave the wood for a burnt offering, and took Isaac, and went to the place which God had told him," asking no questions, but accounting that God's knowledge was sufficient for the emergency.

The very distintion between a miracle and a work of art rests upon this principle: What a man can do by the intelligence which man possesses of the principles involved, is no miracle, but a mere man's work. If offered as a miracle, it is a fraud. But God has a knowledge of the secret principles of nature, by means of which he has power to do many things impossible to man. This power he delegates to his servants as he will. It can only be exercised by implicit obedience to his mandates, and perfect faith in the sufficiency of his ordinances. The end is produced not by the intelligence of man, but of God.

☞ A man to make a reformation, must first reform himself.

the faith that would obey such orders, must be near neighbor to what men call gullibility. But if they had got beyond that, to the knowledge of the science of throwing down walls by the sound of ram's horns, it is at least fortunate that the science was so soon lost. It would be dangerous in the hands of most men. And with that intelligence they could have subdued kingdoms, merely by faith in themselves, which would not have obtained to them "a good report" before God.

Faith is the gift of God; that is, true faith: faith toward God.—God by the spirit gives it to every one as he will. 1 Cor. xii. 9, 11. He gives it to us to profit with, not to abuse. And consequently he will give us as much faith as we will profit with. The ministry of very few persons requires such extraordinary works as removing trees and mountains by the word of faith. To all others it would be unprofitable and could not be given. If any who had such a ministry have ways and means of their own devising, in which they have faith, then though God should give them this faith also, it would be a mixed faith resting on two objects, God and man; producing its fruits by the exercise of two different intelligences, and in its fruits neither like the one nor the other; or, more likely, having no fruits at all, from the incongruous joining. Such faith it will be readily seen is not like a grain of mustard seed, which is a perfect mustard germ, and will not, by admixture, produce a mongrel of something else.

The faith, then, which is like a grain of mustard seed, and is sufficient to remove mountains, can be possessed only by those whose ministry may require the doing of such an act. It rests on God alone, without the slightest dependence on our power. It can only be exercised by those who have intelligence enough to understand the external ordinance by which we are authorized to put God's infinite intelligence in requisition. And the faith itself, to avail, must be strong enough to perform the ordinance, not doubting, but in every act thereof having perfect confidence, that through the ordinance the end will pe accomplished.

We are very well aware that the exercise of such faith as this cannot be expected of most men. Especially in the present age of the world, self-sufficiency is a prevailing characteristic. With the prevailing pride and arrogancy, it is indeed a meek man who is willing to yield up his individuality so as to be a mere member in the church of God in the same relation that the hand or the foot holds to the body, having no will of its own, but obeying invariably the dictate of the head. Christ teaches this humility in the following transaction:—

"At the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, Who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven? And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them, and said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven." Matt. xviii. 1 to 4.

The question arises, how does a little child humble himself? He relies implicitly on his parents or tutors. The end of his argument is, "my pa said so." Obedience is his rule. The knowledge of his parents is his dependence. He kindles the fire, ignorant of the occasion which demands it. He eats the bread of to-day, not troubling himself for the supply of to-morrow. He fears bears, panthers and other wild beasts, which he has never seen, because his parents call them dangerous. In brief, the simple authority of his superiors is the beginning and the end of his wisdom. He has found himself dependent on his parents. He knows their delegated authority in his teachers. He unhesitatingly submits to their ipsi dixit, not knowing why it is given. His faith is, that they know what ought to be done, and how to do it.

Accordingly the child, when he first goes to school, begins according to the direction of his teacher, to say, A, B, C, and neither knowing nor having any capacity to understand what good it will do him. Directly he is set to spelling words, knowing no reason for it except the mandate of his teacher. He cannot form the slightest idea what he is to learn by it, or what good the knowledge will ever do him. In mathematics, regarded as the most demonstrable science, he can see no reason why, after setting units under units, tens under tens, &c., he adds up one column of figures at a time, nor why he carries one for every ten and sets down the excess. Nor can he tell why he multiplies by one figure at a time, or why he sets the unit of each part of the product under the particular figure used in producing it. So of every act in the entire study of arithmetic.—The only reason that does or can exist in the mind of the child is, simply, "the master said so." True, in the end he may learn to understand all the reasons involved in these several processes.—But when he has advanced to this knowledge, he is perfect as his master is perfect, in that thing. Consequently his faith then centres on himself, and not on his master or parent, just as God's faith by which he works rests on his own power and intelligence; whereas faith towards God, rests on God's superior intelligence and power.

The conduct of Abraham in the sacrifice of Isaac is an eminent example of this child like faith. God had forbidden that man should slay his fellow man. Gen. ix. 5. He had also promised great blessings to Abraham's seed in the line of Isaac. Notwithstanding this law and these promises, God afterwards said to him, "Abraham, take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and offer him upon one of the mountains which I will tell the of."—Gen. xxii. Heb. xi. Abraham was a man of humility. He was like a child. His faith rested on the intelligence of God. Had it terminated on himself, Paul would not have written, "by faith Abraham offered up Isaac, accounting that GOD WAS ABLE TO RAISE HIM UP EVEN FROM THE DEAD," but would have said accounting that he was able to raise him up.

Moreover, had Abraham looked behind the command for a reason, he might have found some apparently strong reasons against obeying God at all. First, he might have replied to God, truly you have forbidden to shed blood; I would obey in anything reasonable, but I could not violate one of your laws. It would be difficult to answer such an objection. Further, he might have said, if I slay Isaac, the covenant you have made to me must fail. I cannot raise Isaac up, and if I slay him there will be no seed to inherit the promises. Abraham's intelligence did not extend to raising the dead.—Neither did it extend to a reconcilation of these apparently incongruous commands. But he understood perfectly well what God meant when he said, "offer Isaac for a burnt offering." "And he rose up early in the morning, and clave the wood for a burnt offering, and took Isaac, and went to the place which God had told him," asking no questions, but accounting that God's knowledge was sufficient for the emergency.

The very distintion between a miracle and a work of art rests upon this principle: What a man can do by the intelligence which man possesses of the principles involved, is no miracle, but a mere man's work. If offered as a miracle, it is a fraud. But God has a knowledge of the secret principles of nature, by means of which he has power to do many things impossible to man. This power he delegates to his servants as he will. It can only be exercised by implicit obedience to his mandates, and perfect faith in the sufficiency of his ordinances. The end is produced not by the intelligence of man, but of God.

☞ A man to make a reformation, must first reform himself.

For the Gospel Herald.

Departed spirit of my sire,
Around whose grave my footsteps tread,
No more in council here I meet
He at whose tomb my tears are shed.

How transient and fading are all things here below! How short and how fleeting are all human joys! How tender the tie that binds us to earth! To-day we meet our friends enjoying in full fruition the choicest blessing of an indulgent God, to-morrow we follow them to the dark silent mansions of the dead. To-day we dream of bright prospects, of fadeless joys, to-morrow the dream vanishes, and we sleep the sleep of death in the narrow house appointed for all living. In the midst of life, when surrounded by all the ten thousand endearments of fond affection and kindred nature, we are in death. All that is lovely, all that is beautiful in earth, fades and dies away. The endearments of friendship and the hallowed ties of consanguinity are all severed at the touch of death. But there is a brighter world where death never comes, where parting scenes are never known, and where sad farewells are never spoken. And this world is our immortal home, the tearless land, the deathless clime. I have thought, when sitting by my aged pilgrim father, and fond though suffering brother, why do you look forward to the future with so much delight? Why do you, when life's short race is run, so composedly and resignedly lie down upon your couch and die? Ah! is it not the hope of heaven, the hope of that immortal existence where there are no care worn breasts, no tottering limbs, no hoary locks? Yes, this hope they had, and it grew brighter and clearer as they came nearer to the grim monster, death. It is but a few short years since our family numbered ten. Let those that are living ask where are the five, and then remember that—

On us life dawns—a fleeting hour—
Subjects of hope, and death's dread power.
Hope smiles with cheer, death palls with gloom;
Hope ends in heaven, death in the tomb.
Weep not, then, brother, sister, mother;
That heaven, our home, contains another,
That you have loved, who has passed the tomb,
Who has slept in death, with Christ to bloom.

Bath Mills, March 9th, 1849. SAMUEL GRAHAM.

MORMON MIRACLE.

Not long since brother Samuel Graham filled his office as a witness of the Lord Jesus in the presence of six sectarian priests. We take this to be, if not a real miracle, at least the next thing to it.—But there is one fact in connection with it which is not the least miraculous. That is, that they were all dumb dogs, that could not bark. Since then he attended a sectarian protracted meeting, and after hearing them speak after the manner of the scribes and pharisees, as men having no authority, he with great power proclaimed the way of salvation to them. The consequence was that the next evening they first forbade him to speak, and then commenced an outcry against him like that of the Ephesian silversmiths against Paul. Of course, though forbidden, he answered for himself. They next sent for the magistrates, who, though they attended, answered the priests of Baal that "if they would let Mr. Graham alone he would not be likely to disturb them." One of them then requested him to leave their meeting and stay away, because they could not make converts when he sat among them. But this he would not do, because even the unclean spirits trembled at his presence.

A CHEERFUL HOUSEHOLD.

Make home agreeable. While you enter your house with a frown, fret at one child, snap at another, and scold because your dinner is too cold or too hot, who but is sorry to see your face? Your home should be the abode of peace and pleasure; joy should light up every countenance; and love beam in every eye. Will you make it miserable by your wicked disposition? You are not fit to have a home of your own, unless you know how to prize it.

Make home agreeable. Carry into the domestic ark whatever will please, profit or instruct. Let your home be in reality your earthly paradise, whence spring all earthly affections. Seek your pleasure here and not abroad. The husband and father who discharges his duties aright will always find more attractions around his fire side, than any where else on earth. If he labors to make home agreeable, it will be the pleasantest, and the dearest spot in the world.

FEMALE SOCIETY.

You know my opinion of female society. Without it we should degenerate into brutes. This observation applies with tenfold force to young men and those who are in the prime of manhood. For, after a certain time of life the literary man may make a shift (poor one I grant) to do without the society of ladies. To a young man, nothing is so important as a spirit of devotion (next to his Creator) to some amiable woman, whose image may occupy his heart, and guard it from pollution, which besets it on all sides. A man ought to choose his wife, as Mrs. Primrose did her wedding gown, for qualities 'that wear well.' One thing at least is true, that if matrimony has its cares, celibacy has no pleasures. A Newton, or a mere scholar may find employment in study; a man of literary taste can receive in books a powerful auxiliary; but man must have a bosom friend, and children around him to cherish and support the dreariness of old age.—John Randolph.

☞ The condition of the French Republic is well hit off by Punch, whose broad grins are sometimes worth cartloads of grave homilies and profound state papers. In a late number we have "Young France's New Toy," where the rantipole GALLIC urchin is amusing himself with a pasteboard "jumping Jack" in the figure of Louis Napoleon, whose legs and arms are made to cut capers by pulling a string. We think Punch has the true creature this time. Louis possesses all the attraction of a new toy for the giddy harum-carum French multitude that gave him their votes, and if he does not turn out to be a pasteboard hero, the French people may thank their luck rather than their wisdom. They are now pulling the string and think it fine fun. When they get more in earnest, we may expect to see such twitching as will be too rough for pasteboard legs; the toy must soon fall to pieces.—Ex. Paper.

☞ It was one of the laws of LYCURGUS, that no portions should be given with young women in marriage. When this great lawgiver was called upon to justify this enactment, he observed, "That in the choice of a wife merit should only be considered; and that the law was made to prevent young women being chosen for their riches, or neglected for their poverty."

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD LAST WEEK.

N. Lisk, To Vol. V. No. 33. $2,00.

The widow's mite is received.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a regular Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Voree, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of April next; and also on Beaver Island on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of July next. It is expected that every member of the First Presidency and of the Twelve will attend one or both of these Conferences. By the President.

GILBERT WATSON, RECORDER.

For the Gospel Herald.

Departed spirit of my sire,
Around whose grave my footsteps tread.
No more in council here I meet
He at whose tomb my tears are shed.

How transient and fading are all things here below! How short and how fleeting are all human joys! How tender the tie that binds us to earth! To-day we meet our friends enjoying in full fruition the choicest blessing of an indulgent God, to-morrow we follow them to the dark silent mansions of the dead. To-day we dream of bright prospects, of fadeless joys, to-morrow the dream vanishes, and we sleep the sleep of death in the narrow house appointed for all living. In the midst of life, when surrounded by all the ten thousand endearments of fond affection and kindred nature, we are in death. All that is lovely, all that is beautiful in earth, fades and dies away. The endearments of friendship and the hallowed ties of consanguinity are all severed at the touch of death. But there is a brighter world where death never comes, where parting scenes are never known, and where sad farewells are never spoken. And this world is our immortal home, the tearless land, the deathless clime. I have thought, when sitting by my aged pilgrim father, and fond though suffering brother, why do you look forward to the future with so much delight? Why do you, when life's short race is run, so composedly and resignedly lie down upon your couch and die? Ah! is it not the hope of heaven, the hope of that immortal existence where there are no care worn breasts, no tottering limbs, no hoary locks? Yes, this hope they had, and it grew brighter and clearer as they came nearer to the grim monster, death. It is but a few short years since our family numbered ten. Let those that are living ask where are the five, and then remember that—

On us life dawns—a fleeting hour—
Subjects of hope, and death's dread power.
Hope smiles with cheer, death palls with gloom;
Hope ends in heaven, death in the tomb.
Weep not, then, brother, sister, mother;
That heaven, our home, contains another,
That you have loved, who has passed the tomb,
Who has slept in death, with Christ to bloom.

Bath Mills, March 9th, 1849. SAMUEL GRAHAM.

MORMON MIRACLE.

Not long since brother Samuel Graham filled his office as a witness of the Lord Jesus in the presence of six sectarian priests. We take this to be, if not a real miracle, at least the next thing to it.—But there is one fact in connection with it which is not the least miraculous. That is, that they were all dumb dogs, that could not bark. Since then he attended a sectarian protracted meeting, and after hearing them speak after the manner of the scribes and pharisees, as men having no authority, he with great power proclaimed the way of salvation to them. The consequence was that the next evening they first forbade him to speak, and then commenced an outcry against him like that of the Ephesian silversmiths against Paul. Of course, though forbidden, he answered for himself. They next sent for the magistrates, who, though they attended, answered the priests of Baal that "if they would let Mr. Graham alone he would not be likely to disturb them." One of them then requested him to leave their meeting and stay away, because they could not make converts when he sat among them. But this he would not do, because even the unclean spirits trembled at his presence.

A CHEERFUL HOUSEHOLD.

Make home agreeable. While you enter your house with a frown, fret at one child, snap at another, and scold because your dinner is too cold or too hot, who but is sorry to see your face? Your home should be the abode of peace and pleasure; joy should light up every countenance; and love beam in every eye. Will you make it miserable by your wicked disposition? You are not fit to have a home of your own, unless you know how to prize it.

Make home agreeable. Carry into the domestic ark whatever will please, profit or instruct. Let your home be in reality your earthly paradise, whence spring all earthly affections. Seek your pleasure here and not abroad. The husband and father who discharges his duties aright will always find more attractions around his fire side, than any where else on earth. If he labors to make home agreeable, it will be the pleasantest, and the dearest spot in the world.

FEMALE SOCIETY.

You know my opinion of female society. Without it we should degenerate into brutes. This observation applies with tenfold force to young men and those who are in the prime of manhood. For, after a certain time of life the literary man may make a shift (poor one I grant) to do without the society of ladies. To a young man, nothing is so important as a spirit of devotion (next to his Creator) to some amiable woman, whose image may occupy his heart, and guard it from pollution, which besets it on all sides. A man ought to choose his wife, as Mrs. Primrose did her wedding gown, for qualities 'that wear well.' One thing at least is true, that if matrimony has its cares, celibacy has no pleasures. A Newton, or a mere scholar may find employment in study; a man of literary taste can receive in books a powerful auxiliary; but man must have a bosom friend, and children around him to cherish and support the dreariness of old age.—John Randolph.

☞ The condition of the French Republic is well hit off by Punch, whose broad grins are sometimes worth cartloads of grave homilies and profound state papers. In a late number we have "Young France's New Toy," where the rantipole Gallic urchin is amusing himself with a pasteboard "jumping Jack" in the figure of Louis Napoleon, whose legs and arms are made to cut capers by pulling a string. We think Punch has the true creature this time. Louis possesses all the attraction of a new toy for the giddy harum-carum French multitude that gave him their votes, and if he does not turn out to be a pasteboard hero, the French people may thank their luck rather than their wisdom. They are now pulling the string and think it fine fun. When they get more in earnest, we may expect to see such twitching as will be too rough for pasteboard legs the toy must soon fall to pieces.—Ex. Paper.

☞ It was one of the laws of Lycurgus, that no portions should be given with young women in marriage. When this great lawgiver was called upon to justify this enactment, he observed. "That in the choice of a wife merit should only be considered; and that the law was made to prevent young women being chosen for their riches, or neglected for their poverty."

RECEIPTS FOR THE HERALD LAST WEEK.

N. Lisk, To Vol. V. No. 33. $2,00.

The widow's mite is received.

CONFERENCES.

There will be a regular Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints at Voree, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of April next; and also on Beaver Island on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the 6th, 7th and 8th of July next. It is expected that every member of the First Presidency and of the Twelve will attend one or both of these Conferences. By the President.

GILBERT WATSON, Recorder.

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 3.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 1849. [WHOLE No. 119.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 11.

Voree, March 24th, 1849.

DEAR SIR:—Having finished the review of all your responses, (except a single point, which will come up incidentally hereafter,) I proceed with the affirmative. And I beg to remind you that each of the different sets of evidence introduced by me are full and conclusive, of themselves, independent of any aid from any other; and, consequently, an answer to either one is no answer; that if a single one of them is truly logical, the truth is with me; and that to make good your negation you have to make a logical answer to every one.

254. I lay it down as a general proposition, that the perception of mathematical truth evinces a mind of a lofty order. It is for this reason the universal consent of mankind has placed Euclid and Plato, Archimedes and Kelper, Newton and La Place, among the very foremost of the species. I would not exalt, beyond due bounds, the dignity of mathematical studies. But in this age of light studies, not even Mr. Burgess will deny that the power to perceive mathematical truth is essentially an attribute of no mean intellect.

255. And it is clear as a self-evident corollary, that to evolve mathematical motion—that is, to work mathematically, evidences a mind of a still loftier order. For to evolve mathematical motions, unquestionably implies their perception. No person will assert, for a moment, that any one can reduce algebraic equations, or solve geometrical problems, and demonstrate theorems, without comprehending in one case the meaning of the terms, and in the other the axioms and definitions on which the operations hinge.

256. For example, suppose that John and James sit down to work out a knotty question in decimal fractions; John passes from one operation to another with the skillful rapidity of an accomplished arithmetician, adding and substracting swift as thought, and balancing tangled columns of vast numbers into one definite and accurate result; while James can understand the explanation when worked out to his hand and stated in luminous order on the sheet before his eyes, but finds it wholly impossible to accomplish the task for himself. Now which of the two manifests the superior intellect?—Even Mr. Burgess must answer—"He who has not only the penetration to perceive, but the mental power to perform the processes assigned him."

257. Thus undeniably to evolve mathematical motions implies not only their distinct perception, but the additional faculty of an active power also. Finally, I put the question home, and the entire controversy between Mr. Burgess and myself turns upon the answer—can any one work out the sublime problems of mathematics, from the simplest one in the first book of Euclid to the most complex in conic sections, without the mind to comprehend what he is doing? He who responds in the affirmative must crucify reason, and betake himself to utter insanity.

258. ALL THE MOTIONS OF THE MATERIAL UNIVERSE, IN ALL THEIR WONDROUS VARIETY AND UNITY, ARE STRICTLY MATHEMATICAL. This proposition is susceptible of proof by an immense induction. The field for its exercise has absolutely no other limits than the frontier line that encircles the domain of science. A hundred volumes might be filled with instances, and still the materials would remain unexhausted in their infinite richness. Every new discovery in the abyss of unfathomable nature adds to the store, which is as vast as the immensity of creation.

259. I have only room in this hasty discussion for a few, out of incalculable millions of examples. My choice will only be embarrassed by the teeming profusion that crowds upon the eye, and almost overwhelms every sense of the soul, from the circles of light that spread in decreasing intensity and augmented distance around the candle, near which I am now writing these paragraphs, to yonder remote pale star that twinkles through the window, from an incalculable distance in boundless space.

260. I survey my right hand; it has five fingers. I look at my left; it has five also. There is the other member of an algebraic equation. This is singular. I gaze at each foot, and on each behold five toes. There is another equation. This is still more singular. I then think of my bodily senses; there are five again.—The wonder is increasing.

261. And now all the millions of my fellow men rise up before the mind's eye—and in rapid succession. Lo! the countless millions of millions that have lived and died, passed along the great world-stage, in view of astonished meditation; and they all, with unimportant exceptions, possess the five fingers on each hand, five toes on each foot, and the five senses. If this be not a "God-announcing voice," then is human reason itself a dream, and all truth a worthless fiction!

262. But let me apply to myself the rigorous doctrine of the calculation of chances, lest the judgment be deceived by undue excitement of wonder. In this calculation of chances let me bear in mind that "the probability of any supposition is not to be established by itself singly, but by means of a comparison with each of its alternatives."

263. Now there are but two suppositions possible by which the number five is five times repeated, not only in myself, but in all the myriads of mankind. For these wondrous equations there must be a cause; and that cause, whatever may be its nature, and by whatsoever name you see fit to express its existence, be it necessity, law, order, physical force, or God, must either possess intelligence to perceive its own marvelous results, or else be destitute of such intelligence, and work blindly through all its processes.

264. There is no means to evade the force of this statement.—These two are positively the only alternatives which logic allows us. For in abstract, definite division, a perfect affirmation and negation always exhaust the subject divided. Every thing, in the whole compass of thought, must either be intelligent or non-intelligent; and as there is nothing that can be neither, so nothing can be both at the same time. Every cause or assemblage of causes must pos-

GOSPEL HERALD.

VOL. IV. No. 3.] VOREE, Wis., THURSDAY. APRIL 5, 1849. [WHOLE No. 119.

GOSPEL HERALD,

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED WEEKLY, FOR THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER DAY SAINTS.

TERMS:

TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM, PAYABLE, INVARIABLY, IN ADVANCE.

All letters and communications must be directed to JAMES J. STRANG, post paid, or they will not be taken from the post office.

EXISTENCE OF GOD.

MR. STRANG TO MR. BURGESS.—No. 11.

Voree, March 24th, 1849.

DEAR SIR:—Having finished the review of all your responses, (except a single point, which will come up incidentally hereafter,) I proceed with the affirmative. And I beg to remind you that each of the different sets of evidence introduced by me are full and conclusive, of themselves, independent of any aid from any other; and, consequently, an answer to either one is no answer; that if a single one of them is truly logical, the truth is with me; and that to make good your negation you have to make a logical answer to every one.

254. I lay it down as a general proposition, that the perception of mathematical truth evinces a mind of a lofty order. It is for this reason the universal consent of mankind has placed Euclid and Plato, Archimedes and Kelper, Newton and La Place, among the very foremost of the species. I would not exalt, beyond due bounds, the dignity of mathematical studies. But in this age of light studies, not even Mr. Burgess will deny that the power to perceive mathematical truth is essentially an attribute of no mean intellect.

255. And it is clear as a self-evident corollary, that to evolve mathematical motion—that is, to work mathematically, evidences a mind of a still loftier order. For to evolve mathematical motions, unquestionably implies their perception. No person will assert, for a moment, that any one can reduce algebraic equations, or solve geometrical problems, and demonstrate theorems, without comprehending in one case the meaning of the terms, and in the other the axioms and definitions on which the operations hinge.

256. For example, suppose that John and James sit down to work out a knotty question in decimal fractions; John passes from one operation to another with the skillful rapidity of an accomplished arithmetician, adding and substracting swift as thought, and balancing tangled columns of vast numbers into one definite and accurate result; while James can understand the explanation when worked out to his hand and stated in luminous order on the sheet before his eyes, but finds it wholly impossible to accomplish the task for himself. Now which of the two manifests the superior intellect?—Even Mr. Burgess must answer—"He who has not only the penetration to perceive, but the mental power to perform the processes assigned him."

257. Thus undeniably to evolve mathematical motions implies not only their distinct perception, but the additional faculty of an active power also. Finally, I put the question home, and the entire controversy between Mr. Burgess and myself turns upon the answer—can any one work out the sublime problems of mathematics, from the simplest one in the first book of Euclid to the most complex in conic sections, without the mind to comprehend what he is doing? He who responds in the affirmative must crucify reason, and betake himself to utter insanity.

258. ALL THE MOTIONS OF THE MATERIAL UNIVERSE, IN ALL THEIR WONDROUS VARIETY AND UNITY, ARE STRICTLY MATHEMATICAL. This proposition is susceptible of proof by an immense induction. The field for its exercise has absolutely no other limits than the frontier line that encircles the domain of science. A hundred volumes might be filled with instances, and still the materials would remain unexhausted in their infinite richness. Every new discovery in the abyss of unfathomable nature adds to the store, which is as vast as the immensity of creation.

259. I have only room in this hasty discussion for a few, out of incalculable millions of examples. My choice will only be embarrassed by the teeming profusion that crowds upon the eye, and almost overwhelms every sense of the soul, from the circles of light that spread in decreasing intensity and augmented distance around the candle, near which I am now writing these paragraphs, to yonder remote pale star that twinkles through the window, from an incalculable distance in boundless space.

260. I survey my right hand; it has five fingers. I look at my left; it has five also. There is the other member of an algebraic equation. This is singular. I gaze at each foot, and on each behold five toes. There is another equation. This is still more singular. I then think of my bodily senses; there are five again.—The wonder is increasing.

261. And now all the millions of my fellow men rise up before the mind's eye—and in rapid succession. Lo! the countless millions of millions that have lived and died, passed along the great world-stage, in view of astonished meditation; and they all, with unimportant exceptions, possess the five fingers on each hand, five toes on each foot, and the five senses. If this be not a "God-announcing voice," then is human reason itself a dream, and all truth a worthless fiction!

262. But let me apply to myself the rigorous doctrine of the calculation of chances, lest the judgment be deceived by undue excitement of wonder. In this calculation of chances let me bear in mind that "the probability of any supposition is not to be established by itself singly, but by means of a comparison with each of its alternatives."

263. Now there are but two suppositions possible by which the number five is five times repeated, not only in myself, but in all the myriads of mankind. For these wondrous equations there must be a cause; and that cause, whatever may be its nature, and by whatsoever name you see fit to express its existence, be it necessity, law, order, physical force, or God, must either possess intelligence to perceive its own marvelous results, or else be destitute of such intelligence, and work blindly through all its processes.

264. There is no means to evade the force of this statement.—These two are positively the only alternatives which logic allows us. For in abstract, definite division, a perfect affirmation and negation always exhaust the subject divided. Every thing, in the whole compass of thought, must either be intelligent or non-intelligent; and as there is nothing that can be neither, so nothing can be both at the same time. Every cause or assemblage of causes must possess intelligence or not.

265. Therefore this wonderful combination of fives must be produced either by a rational cause, or wholly irrational—by a cause that can perceive the relations of number, or that cannot—in fine, by a cause that can count five, or any other numerical amount whatever, or one that cannot count.

266. Let me now assume the first alternative. If the cause that arranged the relations of my several organs be sufficiently intelligent to understand the mathematical harmonies, then all is luminous. There is no chance to be calculated against their production, since he who comprehends the relations of number, can, of course, evolve such relations to any extent; and indefinitely, nay infinitely, if he be granted to be infinite himself.

267. But suppose that the cause, call it what you please, which produced this even combination of fives on my hands, feet, and in my corporeal senses, be not intelligent at all, but unconscious force—what, on such a supposition, are the chances against one single combination of fives, in a pair? Let the fixed laws of eternal mathematics answer the question.

268. Suppose we had two series of cards, each series marked in arithmetical order, one, two, three, four, five; we shake them in a box—now what are the chances against drawing two, each numbered five? Every gambler will answer, "the chances against such an event are twenty-four, one less than the square of the numbers in each series. The total number of ways in which two separate series of five can possibly be arranged is twenty-five. Either one defeats the combination of two fives.

269. Apply this analysis to the given case of human organism. If the cause which made me, man, be indeed destitute of mathematical reason, the chances against my possessing five fingers on each hand are twenty-four; add the five toes on each foot, and the chances are six hundred and twenty-four. Then incorporate into the calculation the five senses, and the chances are three thousand one hundred and twenty-four.

270. Now caculate the chances against this combination of fives in two men; they swell to the enormous sum of nine millions, seven hundred and sixty-five thousand, six hundred and twenty-four. Then calculate the chances for four men like myself.—They will be the square of the last number increased by one, and so on forever. But the immense sums overpower all the most magnificent processes of our algebra, and no logarithmic abbreviations can aid us to grasp what soon stretches into immensity.

271. The attempt to apply the calculation to all the innumerable millions of mankind now living, and all that have lived and passed away, were as idle as to essay the enumeration of sunbeams shed during sixty centuries of solar years. The algebra of an archangel, with infinite space for his balance sheet, and eternity for the period of solution, were insufficient, perhaps, for the overwhelming computation.

272. In relation to my single self, I might pursue the subject much farther. Throughout all the members of my body there runs a wonderful duality—in my eyes, arms, hands, feet, ribs, and convolutions of the brain, where equal numbers balance each other.—Indeed in the entire organism of the body, there is the same mathematical precision. The frame work and the covering of the man, both in the mass and in the detail, is formed in the same uniformity. With all the variations in size and external appearance of different men, with trifling exceptions, each has the same number of bones, the same of joints, the same of veins, both large and small, in every limb and member of the body.

273. And they are joined together in the same form of frame work, and with the same net work for a covering. A mathematical likeness extends through every part of the organization. What visible, obvious or familiar cause is there for all this? What reason can the atheist give for it? Aye, tell me, Mr. Burgess, why is it that each man has five fingers to each hand, five toes to each foot, two eyes, two ears, two nostrils, two hands, two arms, two feet, two legs, a certain unchanging number of bones, of tendons, of veins, of arteries, of nerves, of glands, of each and every thing that forms the man, so that in millions of specimens there is not one variation in the numbers?

274. Does the man who begets a son, or the woman who bears one, consider all this, and work it out with the skill of a mechanic's understanding? Does the embryo boy work it out with his own mind, as he does his playthings a few years after? Or does mere blind matter, the minute mite which germinates human existence, itself guide its own formation and produce a man so perfect that the skill and ingenuity of all the mechanics on earth can never make an automaton like it?

275. Tell me, Mr. Burgess, is the mite which begins the man in the womb of his mother, a more skillful mathematician than Newton, a better designer than Rafael, and a more ingenious workman than Power's? Can it do a work more complicated in numbers than Euclid, or La Place has assayed; so perfect in design that the greatest painters have only in some few points approximated to the natural sample, in their most successful efforts: and so ingeniously perfect in its workmanship that the wildest vagiary of the wildest dreamer on earth never hoped to imitate it? Until you find men that can at least dream of such a work by the exercise of their intelligence, will you pretend that the sensationless mote can?

276. The simple question that settles the controvesy on its true basis is this: Could any cause, without the intellect to perceive the reason to count produce this heavenly harmony, all these invariable equations? Shrink not from this simple problem. The infinite hopes hang upon it, all time and eternity—the life everlasting, and the imperishable loves dearer than life itself. Fly not for refuge to barren logomachies. It will not thus be resolved. Answer me not that these are only the effects of law! Say not, that "it is order which does all this!" That is no solution of the problem, only its statement in a different form. The enigma cannot be read by a mere repetition of the same idea couched in different words. The difficulty remains inexplicable as ever.

277. For these equations, this sublime, universal harmony is the order itself—neither more nor less. Could the order constitute istelf? Can there be any order without intellect? But even suppose we allow a reality to the abstractions. Let us admit, for the argument's sake, that law, or order, or any other idea you please, caused these mathematical harmonies of equalization, in every series and degree, the same question rebounds upon us with undiminished force: "is that wonderful order—that mysterious law, self-conscious? Knows it what it does? Can it count? Hath it mathematical reason?"

278. If you answer "Aye," very well; you believe in God, though you misname him. But if you say "No," "how then can blind force produce heavenly harmony, and midnight darkness gild all worlds with ineffable radiance? Whence came these iris winged splendors that flash up through immensity? Yonder are the haloes, but where is their sun?

279. I know the beggarly sophism to which the skeptic ever flies as his dernier resort. He will reply, "Suppose we acknowledge a God to account for this magnificent order, we only postpone the difficulty indefinitely, without attaining the required solution. For we must attempt the greater problem to account for the existence of Deity himself."

280. This objection is plausible only in appearance, and can never satisfy any but very shallow minds. The acute logician sees through it at a glance. It is founded on a total misapprehension sess intelligence or not.

265. Therefore this wonderful combination of fives must be produced either by a rational cause, or wholly irrational—by a cause that can perceive the relations of number, or that cannot—in fine, by a cause that can count five, or any other numerical amount whatever, or one that cannot count.

266. Let me now assume the first alternative. If the cause that arranged the relations of my several organs be sufficiently intelligent to understand the mathematical harmonies, then all is luminous. There is no chance to be calculated against their production, since he who comprehends the relations of number, can, of course, evolve such relations to any extent; and indefinitely, nay infinitely, if he be granted to be infinite himself.

267. But suppose that the cause, call it what you please, which produced this even combination of fives on my hands, feet, and in my corporeal senses, be not intelligent at all, but unconscious force—what, on such a supposition, are the chances against one single combination of fives, in a pair? Let the fixed laws of eternal mathematics answer the question.

268. Suppose we had two series of cards, each series marked in arithmetical order, one, two, three, four, five; we shake them in a box—now what are the chances against drawing two, each numbered five? Every gambler will answer, "the chances against such an event are twenty-four, one less than the square of the numbers in each series. The total number of ways in which two separate series of five can possibly be arranged is twenty-five. Either one defeats the combination of two fives.

269. Apply this analysis to the given case of human organism. If the cause which made me, man, be indeed destitute of mathematical reason, the chances against my possessing five fingers on each hand are twenty-four; add the five toes on each foot, and the chances are six hundred and twenty-four. Then incorporate into the calculation the five senses, and the chances are three thousand one hundred and twenty-four.

270. Now caculate the chances against this combination of fives in two men; they swell to the enormous sum of nine millions, seven hundred and sixty-five thousand, six hundred and twenty-four. Then calculate the chances for four men like myself.—They will be the square of the last number increased by one, and so on forever. But the immense sums overpower all the most magnificent processes of our algebra, and no logarithmic abbreviations can aid us to grasp what soon stretches into immensity.

271. The attempt to apply the calculation to all the innumerable millions of mankind now living, and all that have lived and passed away, were as idle as to essay the enumeration of sunbeams shed during sixty centuries of solar years. The algebra of an archangel, with infinite space for his balance sheet, and eternity for the period of solution, were insufficient, perhaps, for the overwhelming computation.

272. In relation to my single self, I might pursue the subject much farther. Throughout all the members of my body there runs a wonderful duality—in my eyes, arms, hands, feet, ribs, and convolutions of the brain, where equal numbers balance each other.—Indeed in the entire organism of the body, there is the same mathematical precision. The frame work and the covering of the man, both in the mass and in the detail, is formed in the same uniformity. With all the variations in size and external appearance of different men, with trifling exceptions, each has the same number of bones, the same of joints, the same of veins, both large and small, in every limb and member of the body.

273. And they are joined together in the same form of frame work, and with the same net work for a covering. A mathematical likeness extends through every part of the organization. What visible, obvious or familiar cause is there for all this? What reason can the atheist give for it? Aye, tell me, Mr. Burgess, why is it that each man has five fingers to each hand, five toes to each foot, two eyes, two ears, two nostrils, two hands, two arms, two feet, two legs, a certain unchanging number of bones, of tendons, of veins, of arteries, of nerves, of glands, of each and every thing that forms the man, so that in millions of specimens there is not one variation in the numbers?

274. Does the man who begets a son, or the woman who bears one, consider all this, and work it out with the skill of a mechanic's understanding? Does the embryo boy work it out with his own mind, as he does his playthings a few years after? Or does mere blind matter, the minute mite which germinates human existence, itself guide its own formation and produce a man so perfect that the skill and ingenuity of all the mechanics on earth can never make an automaton like it?

275. Tell me, Mr. Burgess, is the mite which begins the man in the womb of his mother, a more skillful mathematician than Newton, a better designer than Rafael, and a more ingenious workman than Power's? Can it do a work more complicated in numbers than Euclid, or La Place has assayed; so perfect in design that the greatest painters have only in some few points approximated to the natural sample, in their most successful efforts: and so ingeniously perfect in its workmanship that the wildest vagiary of the wildest dreamer on earth never hoped to imitate it? Until you find men that can at least dream of such a work by the exercise of their intelligence, will you pretend that the sensationless mote can?

276. The simple question that settles the controvesy on its true basis is this: Could any cause, without the intellect to perceive the reason to count produce this heavenly harmony, all these invariable equations? Shrink not from this simple problem. The infinite hopes hang upon it, all time and eternity—the life everlasting, and the imperishable loves dearer than life itself. Fly not for refuge to barren logomachies. It will not thus be resolved. Answer me not that these are only the effects of law! Say not, that "it is order which does all this!" That is no solution of the problem, only its statement in a different form. The enigma cannot be read by a mere repetition of the same idea couched in different words. The difficulty remains inexplicable as ever.

277. For these equations, this sublime, universal harmony is the order itself—neither more nor less. Could the order constitute istelf? Can there be any order without intellect? But even suppose we allow a reality to the abstractions. Let us admit, for the argument's sake, that law, or order, or any other idea you please, caused these mathematical harmonies of equalization, in every series and degree, the same question rebounds upon us with undiminished force: "is that wonderful order—that mysterious law, self-conscious? Knows it what it does? Can it count? Hath it mathematical reason?"

278. If you answer "Aye," very well; you believe in God, though you misname him. But if you say "No," "how then can blind force produce heavenly harmony, and midnight darkness gild all worlds with ineffable radiance? Whence came these iris winged splendors that flash up through immensity? Yonder are the haloes, but where is their sun?

279. I know the beggarly sophism to which the skeptic ever flies as his dernier resort. He will reply, "Suppose we acknowledge a God to account for this magnificent order, we only postpone the difficulty indefinitely, without attaining the required solution. For we must attempt the greater problem to account for the existence of Deity himself."

280. This objection is plausible only in appearance, and can never satisfy any but very shallow minds. The acute logician sees through it at a glance. It is founded on a total misapprehension of the true difficulty. The reason why we set about accounting for the present order and harmony of Nature is, because we see with our own eyes its finite evolutions passing immediately before us.—We see many millions of them begin; we watch their progress, as some gorgeous panorama; and we behold them terminate.

281. The flower puts forth in spring and perishes with the advance of autumn. The towering oak at my window was once a little acorn, and shall again be nothing as an organized form. The child is born to-day; last year it was not, and next summer it may die. We are made acquainted with indubitable tokens of a commencement in the whole material universe. We see these ineffable signs on the first leaf of the history of creation, scorched, as it were, among the primitive rocks, by the mighty fire-pen of world-volcanoes.—The star that dies out of the heaven's blue vault, with its last twinkle proclaims, "Look, mad atheist! Lo! I had a beginning once, and now I have an end!"

282. For this reason we seek to account for these passing, present events—these mathematical motions, which it were worse than lunacy to deny. We are irresistably forced to the prediction of a cause by a fixed necessity of our rational nature. Failing to do so, would be, not to over soar the condition of living men, but to sink below the intellect of a brute.

283. But the idea of a God presents no such problem. There this necessity of the intellect does not hold. There is not a token, in all time or throughout all space, of his commencement. He is not revealed to us by eternal reason in the character of an effect at all. In the mere conception of his whole being and attributes there is nothing whatsoever phenomenal.

284. Therefore, to assert for the divinity a producing cause, were as foolish as to affirm a like predicate of the infinite space, his everlasting and unchangeable habitation. I say, then, show me only the slightest proof that God ever began to be, and then, but not till then, can you demand of me to account for his being. Present me, then, some evidence that the Deity is a phenomenon, and I will hear you with patience, when you inquire for a pre-existent producing power.

285. Nothing but phenomena imply causation. No one thinks of proposing such a question in relation to any ETERNAL TRUTH. Who is so silly as to ask why the three angles of a triangle are always equal to two right angles? We have dunces enough in this world of ours, beyond all doubt, but the darkest of them all never conceived such a problem as that.

286. Give us the actual evolution of an undeniable effect, and its origin must be explained; some casual force is necessarily assigned. But to assert such an evolution, and then seek for the evolving power, is an act, not of philosophy, but madness. It is one of the thousand evidences that infidelity is more credulous than christianity; that atheism will believe greater improbabilities without evidence, than men of faith and philosophy do upon any evidence.

287. In the works of material nature the transient manifestations pass immediately before our eyes, and therefore we must, in spite of ourselves, attempt to account for them. No one but a fool will ever ask, "What was before the Eternal? What is greater than infinite?" But any one endowed with one pale ray of human reason cannot help asking, "What caused the transient? What is above the finite?"

288. I cannot answer for the experience of others. I believe, however, that most men are more consistent in their own investigations than in their disputations. Greatly do men in their ignorance mistake what is phenomenal, and what eternal; but no man (except for disputation) ever asked, "what caused the eternal?" "Who made the infinite?" None ever failed to ask, "what caused the transitory?" "Who made the finite?" None ever asked, "what sustains the infinite?" Not one but has asked, "what upholds the finite?" It is only in a disputation that we assume an origin for the eternal, or self-existence to the transitory. In disputation only do we require a foundation, for the infinite, or claim self-sufficiency for the finite.

